REPORTS OF CASES heard and determined

F. MOORE, Barrister-at-Law. Vol. VI.

SREEMUTTY RABUTTY DOSSEE,—Appellant; SIBCHUNDER MULLICK,—
Respondent * [Feb. 11, 14, 1854.]

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

A deed of arrangement and release in the English form, between members of a Hindoo family in respect of certain joint estate, claimed by a childless Hindoo widow of one of the co-heirs, in her character of heiress and legal personal representative of her deceased husband, declared that she was entitled to the sum therein expressed, as the share of her deceased husband, "for her sole absolute use and benefit."

Held (reversing the decree of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, that those words were not to receive the same interpretation as a Court of Equity in England would put upon them, as creating a separate estate in the widow; but that the deed must be construed with reference to the situation of the parties and the rights of the widow by the Hindoo law, and that, as the deed recited that she claimed and received the money as her husband's share in the joint estate in her character as his heiress and legal personal representative, such words must be construed to mean, that it was to be held by her in severalty from the joint estate; and as a Hindoo widow she had only a life estate in the corpus, the same at her death devolved as assets of her deceased husband upon his personal representative in succession.

In reversing such decree, the Judicial Committee directed that interest, at the usual rate allowed by the Supreme Court, should be allowed from the death of the widow.

Appellant's costs in the Court below allowed, and suit referred back to the Master of the Supreme Court to tax the same.

The Appellant was the mother and, as such, heiress-at-law and personal representative by the Hindoo law [2] of one Dwarkanauth Sain, a Hindoo inhabitant of Calcutta, deceased; she was also the widow of Bheemchurn Sain, the father of Dwarkanauth Sain. Bheemchurn Sain at his decease left Radanauth Sain, his grandson, and Ohhoychurn Sain, Sreenauth Sain and Dwarkanauth Sain, his sons, his joint heirs and legal personal representatives by the Hindoo law, him surviving.

Bheemchurn Sain was in his lifetime, and up to within a short period before his death, jointly seised in estate with his only brother, Bissumber Sain, since deceased. These two brothers mutually agreed to make a partition and division of all their joint, real and personal estate, property and effects, the particulars of which partition and division were then fully agreed upon and defined. The share of Bheemchurn Sain in the personal estate to be so held by him in severalty, amounted to Rs. 180,000, and in addition certain parcels of the joint real estate were at the same time apportioned to him, to be also held in severalty.

Before receiving actual possession in severalty of such real and personal estate, Bheemchurn Sain died, having first made his Will, whereof he appointed Bissumber Sain, his brother, sole executor; where-[3]-upon the Appellant, as the widow of Bheemchurn Sain, by the Hindoo law became entitled to maintenance out of and as a charge on the whole of the share apportioned to him of the joint estate and effects, and also, on a partition of such shares among the grandson and sons of Bheemchurn Sain, to a share, equal to the share of each of them as such heirs and personal representatives of Bheemchurn Sain, subject only to the provisions contained in the Will.

Bissumber Sain, in whose possession such share of the joint, real and personal estate had continued, paid to Radanauth Sain, Ohhoychurn Sain, and Sreenauth Sain respectively, as three of the heirs and personal representatives of Bheemchurn Sain deceased, one-fourth share each of the estate so apportioned to Bheemchurn Sain: but the payment and delivery of the remaining one-fourth, constituting the share of Dwarkanauth Sain, was postponed in consequence of his minority.

In 1841, Dwarkanauth Sain died intestate, without issue, and still a minor, leaving Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, his sole widow and immediate heiress-at-law and personal representative, him surviving. Some time in the year 1843, Bissumber Sain died intestate, leaving Gooroochurn Sain (who was also a son of Bheemchurn Sain) his adopted son, and as such his sole heir and personal representative. On his death, Gooroochurn Sain took possession of the whole of the estate, property and effects, including the share of Dwarkanauth Sain, which had remained in the possession of Bissumber Sain up to the time of his decease.

Some time after this event, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, [4] as the widow and heiress of Dwarkanauth Sain, applied to Gooroochurn Sain for payment and delivery of the share and proportion to which she, in right of her deceased husband, was entitled to out of the share and proportion belonging to Bheemchurn Sain. Disputes and differences took place between them as to the exact value of her share and proportion in right of her deceased husband in the joint estate, and she threatened to institute legal proceedings for the recovery thereof. With the view to avoid the expense and delay of legal proceedings, it was agreed by her and Gooroochurn Sain that it should be taken and admitted that she should be considered as entitled to the sum of Rs. 59,000 in full payment and discharge of all demands, legal and equitable, which she then had or could have against Gooroochurn Sain in respect of the joint estate, or her share therein in right of her deceased husband, and in consideration of such sum she agreed to waive the taking an account of the joint estate, and to forego all legal proceedings.

Accordingly, and in order to carry out and give effect to this agreement, an indenture of compromise and release in the English form, dated the 24th of April, 1849, was made by Zoahra Jeebun Dossee and Gooroochurn Sain, and in that indenture the representatives, immediate and in reversion of the several shares of Bheemchurn Sain and Bissumber Sain deceased, with the exception of the Appellant, joined as releasing and executing parties.

This deed, after reciting to the effect before mentioned, went on to recite, that Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, as the widow and heiress of Dwarkanauth Sain de-[5]-ceased, had applied to and requested Gooroochurn Sain to pay and deliver to her the share and proportion to which she in right of her deceased husband Dwarkanauth Sain was entitled to out of the share and proportion belonging to Bheemchurn Sain as aforesaid: that disputes and differences had taken place between Zoahra Jeebun Dossee and Gooroochurn Sain as to the exact amount in value of her share and proportion in right of her deceased husband, and she had threatened to institute legal proceedings for the recovery of her rights and interests in the premises; that with the view to avoid the expenses and delay of legal proceedings, it had been mutually proposed and agreed by and between Zoahra Jeebun Dossee and Gooroochurn Sain, that it should be taken and admitted on both sides respectively, that Zoahra Jeebun Dossee should be considered as entitled to the sum of Rs. 59,000 in full payment and discharge of all demands, legal and equitable, which she, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, then had, or could, should or might have against Gooroochurn Sain in respect of the joint estate, or her part and share or interest therein in right of her deceased husband; that in consideration of such sum of Company's Rs. 59,000, to be paid to her by Gooroochurn Sain as thereafter mentioned, she, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, had agreed to waive the taking of a full and general account of the joint estate, and to forego all legal proceedings; and it then went on to declare that Gooroochurn Sain, previously to the execution of these presents, had paid into the hands of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee the full sum of Rs. 59,000, which sum was thereby mutually declared and agreed by and between all the parties respectively to those presents to be [6] the sole and exclusive property of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, "for her own absolute and separate use"; and in consideration thereof she had agreed to execute such release, which was in the usual form of a mutual and general release of all claims.

The sum of Rs. 59,000 was paid to Zoahra Jeebun Dossee by Gooroochurn Sain.

On the 3rd of January 1850, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee died without issue, leaving the Respondent, her father, her heir and personal representative, who possessed himself of this sum of Rs. 59,000, claiming to be entitled thereto under a deed of gift made in his favour by Zoahra Jeebun Dossee.

In consequence of the claim of the Respondent, the Appellant, as the heiress-at-law and representative of Dwarkanauth Sain, filed a Bill against him in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, alleging that the sum of Rs. 59,000 was received by Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, as a Hindoo widow, to be held by her in such capacity, and not otherwise; that upon her death the Respondent claimed the same under a deed of gift from her, and wrongfully treating it as her absolute property, appropriated the same, and the securities upon which the same was invested; and the Bill prayed, that the Appellant might be declared to be entitled, as the mother and heir in reversion upon the death of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, to the sum of Rs. 59,000, and the Respondent decreed to account to her for the same.

The Respondent, by his answer, admitted possession of the sum in question, which he submitted was the absolute property of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee in her lifetime, under the deed of compromise and release, and formed no part of her deceased husband's estate, [7] and that the same had been assigned by her to him by a deed of gift, dated the 4th of December, 1849.

The suit came on for hearing on the 14th of January, 1852, together with another suit, in which the Respondent was the Plaintiff, and Sreemutty Rabutty Dossee, Gooroochurn Sain, Sreenauth Sain, and Radanauth Sain, were Defendants, and in which the Respondent, in the event of the money not being treated as being paid for her sole use and benefit, impeached the whole transaction as a fraud upon his daughter, and sought to re-open the accounts, when the Supreme Court dismissed both suits respectively, with costs.

A rehearing of the two suits was afterwards ordered. The suit of the Appellant was alone re-heard on the 14th of April, 1852, when the Supreme Court amended the decree of the 14th of January, and decreed separately in that suit.

The judgment of the Court upon the rehearing was delivered by the Chief Justice (Sir Lawrence Peel). The material part was in these terms: "It is insisted, that according to the Hindoo law, as laid down in this Court, and affirmed on appeal to the Privy Council, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee was competent to come to an account with the persons accountable for her husband's estate, and to receive and retain during her life, possession of that estate, and that the Plaintiff as reversioner is entitled to follow those assets in the hands of one claiming as done under, or as the representative of, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee. We do not dispute these general propositions, or deny that if, upon the construction of the deed and the other evidence in the cause, it appeared that the funds had come to the hands of Zoahra Jeebun Dos-

[8]-see, upon a fair accounting, or even upon a compromise which the Plaintiff saw fit to adopt, as assets of her husband, to be enjoyed by her as his widow and representative, this Bill might be rightly conceived, and the Plaintiff entitled to follow the funds in the hands of the Defendant. But if, upon the true construction of the deed and evidence, the monies must be taken to have been paid as the price of a compromise to and for the absolute use and benefit of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, then the further questions arise, whether the transaction be impeachable at all, and, if impeachable, whether the Plaintiff can impeach it in a suit constituted as this is. We are clearly of opinion that she cannot affirm the transaction for one purpose and impeach it for another. The construction of this deed is, therefore, the principal, if not the only, substantial question in the cause. The deed is made between Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, described as the sole widow, heiress and legal personal representative of Dwarkanauth Sain of the first part, the other co-heirs of Bheemchurn Sain of the second part, and Gooroochurn Sain of the third part. After reciting the circumstances of the family, and the devolution of the property according to the facts above stated, it recites, that disputes and differences had taken place between Zoahra Jeebun Dossee and Gooroochurn Sain, touching the amount in value of her share and proportion in right of her husband; that she had threatened legal proceedings for the recovery of her rights and interest in the premises; that to avoid the expense and delay of legal proceedings, it had been agreed that she should be considered as entitled to Rs. 59,000, in full payment and discharge of all demands, legal and equitable, " which [9] she then had or might have against Gooroochurn Sain in respect of the said joint estate, or her part or share or interest therein, in right of her husband "; that in consideration of that sum she had agreed to waive all accounts, and that Gooroochurn Sain had paid to her the Rs. 59,000, which it was agreed, not only by him but also by the parties to the deed of the second part, should be the sole and exclusive property of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, for her own absolute use and benefit; and that in consideration thereof she had agreed to execute the release thereafter contained. Then follows a recital, that the parties of the second part, having also received their respective shares, had agreed to execute the mutual releases thereafter contained; and the witnessing part, which, in the consideration clause, again expresses the agreement of all parties that the money was to be the sole, absolute, and proper monies of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, to her separate use, and contains the mutual releases of all parties to the deed, and also provisions, both empowering the other parties, jointly and severally, to use the name of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, as the widow and representative of her husband, in any suit that may be necessary for the recovery of the outstandings of the joint estate, and binding them to indemnify against the consequences of such use of her name. Various arguments, more or less ingenious, have been addressed to us to explain away or control the plain effect of the expressions used in this deed. One of the learned Counsel went so far as to contend, that a declaration that the monies were to be the sole, absolute, and proper monies of the lady to her separate use, might import only something like leave and license to reside and exercise the right of a [10] Hindoo widow in respect of her husband's property out of the house of and apart from her husband's family. It appears to us, however, that if there is to be any certainty of construction—if language is to be understood in its plain and natural sense—if the intention of parties is to be inferred from what they have said, and not from that which it is supposed they ought to have said—the conclusion is irresistible, that all the parties to this instrument intended the Rs. 59,000 to become the absolute property of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee; and that it was not the intention, either of him who paid, or of her who received, or of those who sanctioned the payment, that the money paid should vest in her only as the widow and representative of her husband, and as part of his estate. It was argued that, if this were the understanding, the parties of the second part (some of whom might reasonably expect to be the heirs of Dwarkanauth Sain, next in succession to his widows) would never have joined in releasing Gooroochurn from all that was coming to Dwarkanauth's estate. We, however, can see nothing in this release which is necessarily inconsistent with the construction derived from the plain expression of the other parts of the deed. There is no mention of what these parties as co-sharers in the estate of Bheemchurn had received from Bissumber in his lifetime, or from Gooroo-

churn since his death. They may have been overpaid, and may, therefore, have had a personal interest in preventing the widow of Dwarkanauth from unripping the accounts and asserting the legal rights to their full extent. Again, to what end do they join in declaring that the money is to be the sole and exclusive property of the widow, unless it be to bind, so [11] far as they can, their reversionary interest in it? If the transaction were merely that of a settlement of accounts between Gooroochurn and Dwarkanauth's estate, and payment over to his widow on the usual terms, this stipulation on their part seemed to be quite unnecessary. The power of attorney given by the widow, and the indemnity given to her also, fortify rather than militate against the construction which we put on the deed. These provisions imply that all the other parties were to remain interested in the outstandings (if any) of the joint estate, but she was to receive nothing beyond the sum for which she had sold her rights.

"Upon the whole, therefore, we see no ground whatever for departing from the construction which, upon the former hearing, we put upon this instrument, or from the conclusion that the money must be taken to have been received by the widow with the assent of the male members of her husband's family, to buy off her claims, and as her own absolute property.

"There is certainly far more difficulty in saying, that this is a valid transaction against the Plaintiff, who is not shown to have been a party to it. But the question is, against whom is her remedy? And in what form is she to seek it? An accounting party dealing with a Hindoo female has, without rendering an account, fixed the amount receivable by her in right of her husband at an arbitrary sum, and has paid it to her by way of compromise in a manner inconsistent with the title, by virtue of which alone she could call him to account. Such a settlement of accounts cannot bind; such a payment can hardly avail as between him and a reversioner. We are disposed to go further, and to concede that the whole [12] arrangement being, so far as it impresses a character on the funds other than that which they ought to bear, a fraud on the reversioners. The Plaintiff, if she does not elect to seek her remedy against Gooroochurn alone, treating the payment as one made in his own way, may be entitled to set aside the whole transaction, follow, if necessary, the money into the hands of the widow's representative, and compel a refund of so much of it as may be required to make good the corpus of Dwarkanauth's estate upon a proper adjustment of the accounts. But we are clear that this cannot and ought not to be done in this suit. Unless the accounts of Dwarkanauth's estate be properly taken, it is impossible to say what portion of this money may have been due to the widow in respect of the income of her husband's estate between the years 1841 and 1849, when she appears to have been in a manner excluded from her proper rights.

"The deed, moreover, though it may not be binding upon the Plaintiff in this suit, is unquestionably binding upon all the parties to it, and some of them are those who, upon the death of the Plaintiff, would be entitled to Dwarkanauth's estate. Whatever, then, be the rights of the Plaintiff in respect of this transaction, it is clear that they cannot be enforced with due regard either to the forms of law, or to the substantial justice of the case, except in a suit framed to impeach the transaction, and bringing all the parties to it, or their representatives, before the Court. The petition of rehearing must, therefore, we think, stand dismissed, so far as it seeks to set aside the decree for the dismissal of this suit, without prejudice to such other proceedings as the Appellant may take to impeach the transaction."

[13] Against this decree the present appeal was instituted.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant.—It is apparent, upon the face of the deed in question, that the late Zoahra Jeebun Dossee was made a party to it solely in her character of widow, and that she received the sum of Rs. 59,000 in her representative character and capacity, as the heiress and legal personal representative of Dwarkanauth Sain, her deceased husband. The money was paid to her as the admitted amount of the share of her husband in the estate of his father, Bheemchurn Sain. The subsequent declaration in the deed, that she was to hold the Rs. 59,000 as her own sole and exclusive property, "for her own absolute and separate use," must be understood only as signifying that she, in her representative character, was to hold that sum absolutely and in severalty, and not as part of the joint estate. Suppose the words, "as such sole widow, heiress, and representative, according to the Hindoo law," were added, after this declaration, all doubt would be then removed. It was, in fact, the description of character under which she received the money. By the Hindoo law, current in Bengal, a widow is entitled to succeed to property of her deceased husband. She has not, however, an absolute proprietary right, neither can she in strictness be called a tenant for life, for the law provides her successors, and restricts her use of the property to very narrow limits; she can be considered in no other light than a holder in trust for certain uses. 1 W. Mac. Princ. of Hindu Law, pp. 19, 27, Mussumat Jymunee Dibiah v. Ramoy Choe [14] dec (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 289), Rooder Chunder Choudhry v. Samblon Chunder Choudhry (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 106), Keerat Sing v. Koolahul Sing (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 331). So that, even if the construction we have submitted be inadmissible, the rights of the Appellant cannot be in any manner bound by the deed to which she was no party, or affected by such a declaration to the prejudice of her legal rights, which would operate unjustly towards her. The Appellant, as the heiress-at-law and personal representative in succession of Dwarkanauth Sain, is entitled to the Rs. 59,000. The deed of gift under which the Respondent claims was ultra vires the widow, as she at most had only a life estate in the corpus, and no power of disposal.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Richard Bethell), Mr. E. J. Lloyd, Q.C., and Mr. T. C. Morton, for the Respondent.—The argument for the Appellant is two-fold—First, she contends that the construction of the deed, according to its real meaning, gave Zoahra Jeebun Dossee a life interest only in the sum of Rs. 59,000, in her representative character of a Hindoo widow, and that she had no power of disposal of that sum; secondly, that the deed ought, at all events, to be so construed to avoid injustice, even if the parties thereto meant it to be the reverse. Now, we submit, that by the clear meaning of the words of the deed, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee took an absolute interest in the sum in question, and that under the deed of gift by her such interest vested in the Respondent. With regard to the intention of the parties, no words can be plainer to show that Zoahra Jeebun Dossee was to have an abso-[15]-lute interest in the Rs. 59,000, and an absolute power of disposal over that sum. The deed recites that such sum was "to be the sole and exclusive property of the said Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, for her own absolute and separate use and benefit." And such deed also contains mutual releases between her and the other parties, one or the other of whom would, in fact, have been heir in reversion to Dwarkanauth Sain's share, had the Appellant predeceased Zoahra Jeebun Dossee: all of which is utterly irreconcilable with the notion that she was intended to take a life interest only. We submit, that the transaction was plainly one of sale by her of her entire interest in her husband's estate for a fixed sum in solido.—[Mr. Pemberton Leigh: Must not this sum be treated as assets of the husband's estate? It is not in dispute that, by the Hindoo law, the widow is bound to pay her husband's debts out of his estate.] The deed of gift to the Respondent was an alienation, which required the sanction of the Appellant, the next entitled in succession to give it effect.] The money was the equivalent, not of her husband's estate, but of her share in his estate. Her interest in her husband's estate was an absolute interest in the accumulation or arrears, and a life interest in the corpus. The arrangement and the deed by which it was carried into effect, were consistent with her rights and powers as a Hindoo widow, and were no violation of the Appellant's rights as heir in reversion. A Hindoo widow has full power to dispose of the growing produce of the property. Dyalehund Addy v. Kishoorie Dossee (Morton's Dec. 83), Cossinauth Bysack v. Hurrosoondery Dossee (ib. 85), 2 W. Mac. Princ. of Hindu law, p. 258-9. Assuming that [16] her interest in her husband's estate could not be put higher than a life interest, there is nothing in the Hindoo law to prevent her selling that interest, and if made to a stranger he would have been entitled to the usufruct during her life, and upon her death have to surrender and account for the share to the heir in reversion, who could have no claim with the purchase money received by the widow. The mere circumstance of the sale being to co-sharers already in possession, we submit, makes no difference.

Second. With respect to the argument that the Court ought to put upon the deed the construction contended for, against the expressed words and apparent intention of the parties, in order to square with justice the Appellant's claim as Dwarkanauth Sain's reversioner; we submit such a mode of dealing with the deed is wholly opposed to precedent and principle. To ascribe to a deed an operation wholly contrary to its plain words and meaning, in order to avoid alleged injustice, is, in effect, to set it aside. A Court of Equity would not so construe a recital which related to the particular matter under the contemplation of the parties. Cole v. Gibson (1 Ves. Sen. 507), Ramsden v. Hylton (2 Ves. Sen. 310). Even if a case existed for setting aside the deed of arrangement, it could not be done without remitting Zoahra Jeebun Dossee to the full benefit of her original rights, which could not be done after her decease, especially when the party impeaching the deed has had the full benefit of the contingency.

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh.—We entertain the highest respect for the judgment of the Court which pronounced this decree, and that [17] respect has alone induced us to have any doubt upon the case. We have fully considered the arguments, and the conclusion we come to, is, that we feel it impossible to concur with the judgment of the Court below.

The situation of the parties must be looked at, and the deed must be construed with reference to the situation of the parties and their rights at the time the deed was executed.

Now, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, the widow of Dwarkanauth Sain, was one of four parties, entitled in her representative character as widow and heiress of her husband, to a certain portion of the property of a person of the name of Bheemchurn Sain, and to which Bheemchurn Sain was jointly entitled with his brother, Bissumber Sain; and it appears that Bissumber Sain agreed to a separation of their joint property, but that separation had not been carried into effect at the time when this deed was made. Dwarkanauth Sain, the husband of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, and the three brothers being entitled (it may have been, and probably was, a joint family) to share the estate of Bheemchurn Sain amongst them, there were two separations to be completed before the amount, which was payable to each party, was ascertained. First, the separation of the estate of Bissumber Sain from that of Bheemchurn Sain; and secondly, the division of the estate of Bheemchurn Sain which was to be distributed amongst the four parties entitled.

Now, I apprehend that the mere circumstance that some of these parties had received certain sums on account of that property, would not, of itself, amount to a separation. It appears from this deed that some lived after the death of Bissumber Sain, and some lived [18] after the death of Dwarkanauth Sain, and that the widow and representative of Dwarkanauth Sain had been unable to obtain possession of any portion of that share to which she was entitled. Now, in this state of circumstances, the deed was executed, which, when we come to examine its terms, the purpose appears to us to be obviously this: to settle the amount of the shares which each of the four persons was entitled to out of the estate of Bheemchurn Sain, and also as between each other, because, if the estate of Bheemchurn Sain descended as a joint property to four parties, there might be mutual accounts between those four parties, three of whom had received sums on account, as well as against the executors of Bheemchurn Sain, who had possession of the whole, and was liable to account for the whole.

These three brothers, then, having received what they were content to take as the amount of their shares, an arrangement is made, by which it appears to us, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee agreed to take a certain sum as her share, and to take that sum as a discharge, not only against the executors of Bheemchurn Sain, but a discharge also of all that she might be entitled to claim against the other brothers of Bheemchurn Sain. If that be so, let us see whether there is anything in the contents of this deed which is inconsistent with that supposition. In the first place, the deed is made between Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, who is described as the "sole widow, heiress and legal personal representative of Dwarkanauth Sain:" she is made a party only in the character of "sole widow, heiress and legal personal representative of Dwarkanauth Sain." The brothers of Dwarkanauth Sain are made parties, not as having any possible contin-[19]-gent interest in the property of Dwarkanauth Sain after the death of his widow, in the character of heiress of Dwarkanauth Sain, but they are made parties simply as being, as it appears to us from the contents of the deed, persons who are entitled, together with Dwarkanauth Sain's representatives, to the property of Bheemchurn Sain.

The deed, after referring to the death of Bissumber and the death of Dwarkanauth Sain, goes on to recite that "Whereas, after the death of Bheemchurn Sain, the said Bheemchurn Sain duly paid and transferred to Ohoychurn Sain, Seremauth Sain, and Radanauth Sain respectively, their respective parts and proportions of the share and proportion to which Bheemchurn Sain was entitled, of and in the joint estate; and the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, as the widow and heiress of the said Dwarkanauth Sain deceased, has applied to and requested Gooroochurn Sain to pay and deliver to her the share and proportion to which she, in right of her deceased husband, Dwarkanauth Sain, is entitled to out of the share and proportion belonging to the said Bheemchurn Sain as aforesaid." How is it possible upon these words to raise any question as to that which she had been applying for? The three brothers had received their shares, and she applied to receive her share; not to receive her life interest; not to receive a compensation for a life interest, but she was to receive, in her representative character of widow of Dwarkanauth Sain, that which his three brothers had received personally and individually. It then goes on to recite, "And whereas disputes and differences have taken place"—between whom?—between Zoahra Jeebun Dossee the wife of the one part, and the per-[20]sons liable to make payments of the other parts: and with respect to what?—"as to the exact amount in value of her share and proportion in right of her deceased husband,"—the share and proportion which is previously mentioned; the share and proportion which the brothers had received, and the share and proportion which she is to receive; and "she has threatened to institute legal proceedings for recovery of her rights and interests in the premises." What were her rights and interests in the premises in the character in which she is made a party to this deed? They were that which she had claimed, namely, the share and interest of her husband in the estate of Bheemchurn Sain, and she had threatened to institute proceedings for the purpose of recovering those rights. She could have made no claim, and could have instituted no suit to recover her life estate in the property. It then goes on to recite, "And whereas, with the view to avoid the expenses and delay of legal proceedings, it has been mutually proposed and agreed by and between the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee and the said Gooroochurn Sain, that it shall be taken and admitted on both sides respectively, that the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee shall be considered as entitled to the sum of Company's Rs. 59,000, in full payment and discharge of all demands, legal and equitable, which she the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee now has or can, shall, or may have, against the said Gooroochurn Sain in respect of the said joint estate, or her part and share, or interest therein, in right of her deceased husband."

It is absolutely impossible to raise any question as to the nature of the dispute. The nature of the dis-[21]pute was this: she claimed her share, and she was entitled, as I shall show presently, to receive that share; and the dispute was as to the amount of it; and to avoid a suit for the purpose of ascertaining that amount, or other legal proceedings, it was agreed to take it at Rs. 59,000. "And whereas, in consideration of such sum of Company's Rs. 59,000, to be paid to her by the said Gooroochurn Sain as hereinafter mentioned, she the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee has agreed to waive the taking of a full and general account of the said joint estate, and to forego all legal proceedings. And whereas, the said Gooroochurn Sain, previously to the execution of these presents, hath paid into the hands of Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee the full sum of Company's Rs. 59,000, which said sum of Company's Rs. 59,000 is hereby mutually declared and agreed by and between all the parties respectively to these presents, to be the sole and exclusive property of the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, for her own absolute and separate use; and in consideration thereof, she the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee hath agreed to execute such release as hereinafter mentioned." Well, now it is said, that in the ascertainment of this sum, and the agreement to accept such sum, and to give the release, that it is not confined to the agreement of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee and Gooroochurn Sain, but it is extended to the other persons, who are also parties to the release, and that it is a very strong circumstance to show, that they were concurring in this instrument for the purpose of releasing or remising the interest which they might have—a contingent interest as the heirs to this property.

But it is clear that they are not made parties in that cha-[22]-racter: there was only the possibility of their becoming heirs—they might become the heirs of Dwarakanauth Sain, but they are made parties as persons who had an interest in the joint property, which was to be divided: who had interests in the amount of the share which was to be divided; and who had interests in the amount of the share which was to be paid to this lady; because, if the accounts had been all taken, I apprehend the consequences would have been this: that if any of those brothers, in respect of this property, had received more than a fourth part, they might have been held liable to account to the widow for such fourth part; and, if she had consented to take less, and there had been no separation of the joint estate between them, she might have claimed the whole amount of her husband's share; and the principle upon which this agreement is made between the parties is consistent with the view which appears to us must necessarily be taken. Then it goes on—"Now this indenture witnesseth, that in consideration of the sum of Company's Rs. 59,000 in hand, well and truly paid to the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, at or before the execution of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged as well by these presents as by the receipt for the same hereupon endorsed, and which said sum of money is hereby declared and agreed by all and every the parties hereto to be the sole, absolute, and proper moneys of Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, to her separate use,"—not "to her separate use" in the sense in which we use that term in a Court of Equity; but to her separate use as distinguished from the joint estate, dividing that which was joint into separate estate, and treating her share as being that which she is to take for her [23] absolute use in her representative character, subject to any claims that may exist upon the same, for "her sole, absolute, and exclusive use" as against the parties to this deed,—“use and benefit” is the term used in the deed put in evidence, but you are to look at the words with reference to the parties who are using them. If it were a deed in which the recitals had reference to the life estate, and the reversioners had been parties, and the reversioners had agreed that she should hold this sum for “her absolute use and benefit,” those words would have had a totally different meaning. You must look at the words of the deed with reference to the parties who use them, and the grant must be consistent with that; consistent with the interests of those who make the grant. This is perfectly clear: for if we go a little lower we find, after mutual releases between the parties, there is this recital: “And whereas it has been considered, that although the estate of the said Bissumber Sain and Bheemchurn Sain hath been fully accounted for, divided, and paid as aforesaid, yet that by possibility the name of the said Sreemutty Zoahra Jeebun Dossee may be required to be used either as Plaintiff, Complainant or Defendant in some action or actions, suit or suits, or other proceedings arising out of it, or connected with, the said joint estate and effects.” Here is a distinct statement that the whole estate has been “divided, and paid as aforesaid.”

Now, it certainly does appear to us, upon the construction of this deed (and we agree with the judgment of the Court below upon this), that the parties treat it as being a deed intended to settle all accounts between them, and, as far as the widow could, to discharge and release the estate; for they say this: “The Plaintiff's Counsel insist that, according to the [24] Hindoo law as laid down in this Court, and affirmed on appeal to the Privy Council, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee was competent to come to an account with the persons accountable for her husband's estate, and to receive and retain, during her life, possession of that estate, and that the Plaintiff, as reversioner, is entitled to follow those assets in the hands of one claiming as donee under or as the representative of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee. We do not dispute these general propositions, or deny that, if, upon the construction of the deed, and the other evidence in the cause, it appeared that the funds had come into the hands of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee upon a fair accounting, or even upon a compromise, which the Plaintiff saw fit to adopt, as assets of her husband, to be enjoyed by her as his widow and representative, this Bill might be rightly conceived, and the Plaintiff entitled to follow the funds in the hands of the Defendant.”

Then, if that be admitted, I take it the Court proceeded upon that, and it has not been disputed here that these assets may be followed; the whole question is, whether this sum was paid to this lady as a part of the assets, and for the purpose of discharging the estate of Bheemchurn Sain as the executor of Bissumber Sain and the representatives of Bheemchurn Sain from all liability. It appears to us impossible to come to any other conclusion: that if these funds were assets, if they were paid as assets, and are assets in the hands of the Defendant, it seems necessarily to follow, that they must be handed over to the person who now represents the estate of Dwarkanauth Sain, subject to whatever claims there may be upon her; that she may hold them subject to the debts of Dwarkanauth Sain, whatever they may be.

Now, I do not understand the Court below to have [25] proceeded upon the notion that this was, as it has been contended at the Bar, a purchase of the life interest of Zoahra Jeebun Dossee. The whole deed is entirely inconsistent with any such interpretation, for there is no reference to her life interest; there is no reference to any accumulations, or anything which was due to her as distinct from capital. There is nothing but a claim to the amount of the assets, to her husband's share of these assets, which is ascertained by the deed: and in respect of those assets, in receiving that sum she discharges the executor from all further claim and demands; and the brothers, who may have claims against her, discharge her from all claims in respect of that sum, and she discharges them from all claims in respect of the sums they have received.

Then it occurred to their Lordships, that inasmuch as this sum was paid in respect of property which consisted also of the accumulations of interest during the interval between the husband's death and the date of the deed, it was possible she might be entitled to some claim in respect of those accumulations. But upon reference to the Hindoo law, and to what was said by the learned Judge in this case, it seems to us extremely doubtful whether any such claim can be maintained. The Court below said, in speaking of her claim to these accumulations, "The construction put by us upon the deed necessarily destroyed whatever 'shadow of a title' Sibchunder Mullick had to institute the suit, and, accordingly, that was also dismissed with costs. We say, 'shadow of a title,' for, adverting to what the Hindoo law says, of the course of devolution of the accumulations, even of her husband's estate on the death of a widow, we cannot but entertain grave doubts whether Sibchunder could make a title to such accumulations, unless by [26] way of charge on them, for moneys advanced for the use of the widow, for purposes recognised by the Hindoo law." But be that as it may, we think we must look to the terms of the deed, and see what it was in discharge of which Rs. 59,000 were agreed to be paid. Now, it does appear to us to be perfectly clear it was paid, as it has been stated, in discharge of the share which Zoahra Jeebun Dossee's husband had in the estate of Bheemchurn Sain; and though it is not necessary to concur in that, it is very difficult for the Respondent to set up any opposition to that construction, because the deed from Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, under which he claims, expressly declares, "That there is no other person more nearly related or affectionately attached to me than yourself; and as you have taken much pains on my account in the matter relative to my late husband's share of the property, and have, after a good deal of strife and contention with your own relatives, recovered that which was sunk, and made it over to me, concerning which I have already entered into an engagement with you, I make a gift of, and hereby absolutely convey unto you, my debts excepted, the whole of my moveable and immoveable property, Company's papers, outstanding dues and demands," and so on.

Upon the whole, therefore, it appears to their Lordships, with very great respect to the different opinion which has been formed in the Court below, that we must advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree, and order payment of this money to the Appellant, with the usual interest according to the course of the Court, together with the costs of the suit in the Court below.

The Order in Council made on the appeal was, [27] that the order and decree of the Supreme Court of Judicature, of the 14th of April, 1852, be reversed, and that the sum of Rs. 59,000 be paid to the Appellant, with interest at the usual rate allowed by the Supreme Court, from the date of the death of the widow, Zoahra Jeebun Dossee, and that the costs of the Appellant in the suit in the Court below be taxed by the Master of the Supreme Court, and paid by the Respondent to the Appellant.

On Appeal from the Supreme Court at Bombay.

A deed of sale conveying real estate, the property of a Defendant in a suit then pending in the Supreme Court at Bombay. Held, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of a bona fide consideration having been paid by the vendee, to be fraudulent and void, as against the creditors of the vendor, and to have been executed for the purpose of defeating a sequestration.

Held, also, that a party in possession under such a deed was not entitled to any allowance for sums expended by him for improvements upon the estate.

A sequestrator in possession is not to be disturbed by a claimant, without leave of the Court. The usual mode is to apply for permission to bring an action of ejectment, or to examine, pro interesse suo.

Under a writ of sequestration the sheriff seized a moiety of an estate in the possession of A.; A. presented a petition to the Court, entitled in a cause then pending, claiming the land under a deed of sale executed by the Defendant, pendente lite, praying to be put in possession, and to be allowed to go before the Master and examine witnesses, pro interesse suo. Proceedings were taken under this petition before the Master, but afterwards it was agreed by consent, that the matter of the petition should be tried by the Court, and the witnesses examined viva voce by the Court at the hearing of the cause in which the petition was entitled. Held, that there was nothing irregular in such a mode of proceeding.

By the constitution of the Supreme Courts in India, the Judges, for the purpose of the trial of an action, sit as a jury as well as Judges, and the same weight is to be given to a decision of the Judges, in such circumstances, as to the verdict of a jury in this country, in which the Judge who tries the cause makes no objection [6 Moo. Ind. App. 49, 50].

Semble. This Court will not disturb a judgment of a Court in India upon a question of the credibility of witnesses; unless it is manifestly clear from the probabilities attached to certain circumstances in the case, that the Court below was wrong in the conclusion drawn from such evidence.

This was an appeal from an order made in a cause, in which the Respondents were Plaintiffs, and Aga [28] Mahomed Rahim Sherazee and others, Defendants, dismissing a petition of the Appellant, who had petitioned in the cause, and prayed that certain property, seized under a writ of sequestration issued in that cause, as the property of the Defendant, Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, should be relinquished by the sequestrator, or that the Appellant should be examined, pro interesse suo.

The principal question raised by the appeal was, whether a deed of sale, dated the 30th of December, 1845, made by Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, conveying to the Appellant a moiety of a dock called Mazagon dock, together with a moiety of the buildings thereto belonging, was a bona fide conveyance for a valuable consideration, or whether it was not collusive between the parties, and intended to defraud the creditors of Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee.

The facts which gave rise to the appeal were these:—

On the 2nd of February, 1847, a writ of sequestration was issued in the above cause, commanding the Sheriff of Bombay to enter upon and sequester all the houses, lands, tenements, and the rents, issues, [29] and profits thereof, and all the personal estate, debts, and effects of the Defendant, Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, until he should perform an order made on the 7th of January, 1847, in that cause, for the payment of Rs. 100,000, being the amount of the first instalment directed by the decree made in the same cause on the 25th of November, 1846, to be paid by him to the Accountant-General of the Supreme Court. On the 4th of March, 1847, another writ of sequestration was issued in the same terms to enforce the payment of the further sum of Rs. 100,000.

On the 27th of March, 1847, the Sheriff certified to the Court, that he had sequestered the Mazagon docks, by virtue of these two writs of sequestration.

On the 8th of April, 1847, the Appellant filed a petition in the cause, alleging that he had, for many years before and since the year 1840, had commercial dealings with the Defendant, Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, to a large amount, in the course of which balances had been, from time to time, and in the Dewallee of each year, ascertained and stated, and that the last of such annual statements of account occurred on the 30th of October, 1845, on which occasion, Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee was found to be indebted to the Appellant in the sum of Rs. 172,900. 2q. 88r., which Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee acknowledged, by placing his signature at the foot of such account in the book of the Appellant, and that the Appellant after such adjustment pressed him for payment; but being unable to discharge the same, he proposed to sell and convey to the Appellant one moiety of the ground, buildings, and premises belonging to him, [30] situate at Mazagon, and called the Mazagon docks, which proposal the Appellant entertained, and it was agreed between the Appellant and Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, that the Appellant should purchase a moiety of the premises for the sum of Rs. 324,500; and, accordingly, in the month of December following such last-mentioned adjustment, the Appellant paid, from time to time, large sums of money to Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, which on the 30th day of that month amounted, inclusive of the balance of Rs. 172,900. 2q. 88r. due to the Appellant, to the sum of Rs. 324,500, whereupon Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, pursuant to such agreement, and in consideration of the sum of Rs. 324,500, by an indenture, dated the 30th of December, 1845, and made between Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, of the one part, and the Appellant of the other part, absolutely sold and released to the Appellant, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, an undivided moiety of him, Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, of the property therein described, and called the Mazagon dock, in the Island of Bombay, and that the Appellant entered into possession and became interested in the premises jointly and in equal shares with Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee; and the petition prayed that the Sheriff of Bombay might be ordered to withdraw the writs of sequestration, and relinquish one moiety of the dock to the Appellant, and that, if the Court should think fit, the Respondents (the Plaintiffs in the suit) might be directed to exhibit interrogatories in the Office of the Master of the Court, for the examination of the Appellant, and for the discovery of his interest in the dock, or that such other order should be made as [31] might be fit. The Appellant at the same time filed an affidavit of himself, reiterating the allegations contained in his petition.

On the 8th of April, 1847, the petition came on to be heard, when it was ordered, that the Appellant should come in and be examined, pro interesse suo, in the moiety of the Mazagon dock, and that the Respondents should file interrogatories for that purpose, before the Master, and if the Respondents should think fit to reply to the examination of the Appellant put in by him in answer to such interrogatories, either party should be at liberty to examine witnesses, viva voce, before the Master, touching the Appellant's claim, and that the Master should look into the examination and evidence of such witnesses, if any, and certify to the Court whether the Appellant had made out a title to the moiety of the dock and premises, or any and what part thereof, and the Master was to be at liberty to state any special circumstances, and the parties were to be at liberty to apply to the Court as they might be advised.

An interrogatory was accordingly exhibited by the Respondents before the Master, for the examination of the Appellant, and on the 21st of June, 1847, the Appellant filed his answer and examination, stating, amongst other things, that he was the bona fide owner of, and was entitled for his absolute and exclusive use and benefit to, one undivided moiety of the Mazagon dock, and he set forth a long statement of his business transactions with Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, and filed a schedule showing the balance alleged to be due to him.

The Respondents, by leave of the Court, afterwards exhibited a further interrogatory for the examination [32] of the Appellant, and the Appellant filed his answer to the further interrogatory, stating the payments made by him to Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, in the months of March, April, and May, 1843. The Respondents filed a replication to the Appellant's examination, and on the 4th of September, 1848, an order was made, by consent of the Appellant and Respondents, that so much of the order of the 8th of April, 1847, as directed that, if the Respondents should think fit to reply to the examination of the Appellant, put in by him in answer to the interrogatories in that order mentioned, then that either party was to be at liberty to examine witnesses, viva voce, before the Master, touching the Appellant's claim, and that the Master should look into the examination and evidence of such witnesses, if any, and certify to the Court whether the Appellant had made out a title to the moiety of the dock and premises, or any and what part thereof should be discharged, and that the matter of the Appellant's petition should be set down for hearing on the first day of the then next ensuing November term, and that the witnesses on both sides should be examined, viva voce, before the Court at the hearing.

The petition came on to be heard, pursuant to the preceding order, and witnesses were examined on behalf of the Appellant and the Respondents, from whose evidence the following circumstances appeared: that the suit in which the sequestrations issued had been for some years pending against Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, and that he was finally charged by the Master in Equity, to whom the cause had been referred, with the sum of seven or eight lacs of rupees, from which amount he endeavoured to discharge him-[33]-self without success; that on the 9th of April, 1845, he delivered to the Master in Equity a list of items in his discharge, which he abandoned, leaving him liable to a decree for payment of two-thirds of a considerable amount of the charge, which exceeded ten lacs of rupees, with a large arrear of interest thereon. That from the time of this proceeding it became evident, and was known to every one, that Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee must ultimately become liable to pay a considerable sum of money, which could not be less than several lacs of rupees. That on the 21st of November, 1846, a final decree was made in the cause against Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, ordering him to pay into Court, to the credit of the cause, 11 lacs of rupees, by instalments. It further appeared that, on the 30th of December, 1845, the deed conveying the moiety of the Mazagon docks to the Appellant was executed by Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, in the presence of Burn, an attorney of the Supreme Court at Bombay, for which he was paid his costs by Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, whom he considered his client; another attorney being employed by Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee in the suit. That Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee continued in possession of the docks as an ostensible owner, negotiating with persons who were engaged in improving and enlarging them, and superintending the conduct of all business in them, but evidence was adduced by the Appellant to show, that one Hajee Mahomed Ruzza, a nephew of the Appellant, attended at the dock in 1846, and conducted business there, and kept accounts on behalf of the Appellant. It also appeared, that for several years previous to the alleged sale, the Appellant had had commercial dealings with Aga Mahomed [34] Rahim Sherazee to a small extent, on account of which the latter was indebted, at the close of the native year, ending in 1842, in the sum of Rs. 10,947, and in the following year in the sum of Rs. 18,172. No evidence was adduced by the Appellant to explain how his transactions with Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee suddenly increased from dealings of comparatively small amount, to the alleged payment by the Appellant to Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, between the 31st of March and the 6th of May, 1845, of several sums amounting to Rs. 127,708, as shown in the schedule to the Appellant's second examination; nor was any proof given of the payment of those sums, beyond the evidence of a native clerk of the Appellant, named Jairam Eswar, who deposed in general terms, (reading from the Appellant's account book,) that the major part of the sums had been paid, some by himself, and some by one Narrow, and some by one Tulseydass, who were not called as witnesses, and chiefly into the hands of Meerza Mootalib, the son-in-law of Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee. Nor was any evidence, except that of Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee himself, adduced on behalf of the Appellant to show the payment between the 13th and 29th of December, 1845, of the several sums in cash, amounting to Rs. 149,743. 3 qrs. 9 reas, set forth in the schedule to the Appellant's first examination, and alleged to have been the balance of the consideration money for the purchase of the moiety of the docks claimed by the Appellant. Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, however, in his evidence for the Appellant, stated, that after the bargain for the purchase was completed, the money was gradually paid to Meerza Mootalib, and [35] when the whole consideration was paid, he executed the deed of conveyance to the Appellant: that during December, 1845, Mootalib brought him no money, and that Mootalib was in the habit of receiving it and paying it to different persons to whom he, Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, was indebted. But when cross-examined on behalf of the Respondents respecting Mootalib, he thus replied:—"I saw Meerza Mootalib about a month ago, and I have not seen him since. He never told me when he went away—I had not curiosity to ask my son-in-law where he was going. His family is here (Bombay)—they are all living in Mahomed Jaffer's house. My family is living there also." Several other witnesses were examined on behalf of the Appellant respecting two or three items in the account, of comparatively inconsiderable amount, but without making it clearly appear how Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee was bona fide indebted to the Appellant in respect of those items.

After a hearing which lasted several days, the Court, on the 14th of November, 1848, ordered that the Appellant's petition should be dismissed with costs. The judgment of the Court was delivered by the Chief Justice (Sir Erskine Perry) as follows (reported, nom. Mushedy Kazim's claim. "Oriental Cases," by Perry, p. 35):—

"This trial has lasted so many days, and has made us so familiar with the facts, that the conclusions in our minds are altogether clear and distinct, and it is unnecessary to defer giving judgment in order to put them in better language, or in more logical order. The question to be determined in this case is, whether the conveyance of a moiety of Aga Mahomed Rahim's dockyard, in December, 1845, to Musadee [36] Cazum, was a bona fide sale, or whether it was a simulated transaction between the parties for the purpose of defeating Rahim's creditors, and particularly his old opponent, Meerza Ally. In order to be in a condition to form an accurate judgment on this question, it is necessary to have a distinct picture before our eyes of the position of the principal actors in the transaction at the period when it occurred. And for this purpose it is only necessary, so far as the profession here is concerned, before whom this suit has been travelling its slow course during the whole of the career of nearly every practitioner now at the bar, to point out, that in November, 1845, the suit against Aga Rahim had reached its dénouement. That in November, 1845, a decree against Aga Mahomed Rahim for very many lacs of rupees was about to be given; that in the same month he was charged before the Court with an attempt to abscond, and to withdraw all his moveable property from the jurisdiction, in order to defeat the decree; that the Court believed the charge and ordered his arrest, although the Aga gave the Court to understand that it was wholly untrue, and that he was a man of very large property, and equal and willing to satisfy the claim of his creditor in the case. It is also necessary to observe that when this decree came on subsequently to be enforced, all the property which the Aga previously had sworn to, disappeared, and when execution issued against the greatest Mogul merchant of Bombay, one who had been the host of previous Governors, Judges, and all the society of the Island, who had been for many years the agent for the great Mussulman princes of Western Asia, and whose large possessions in landed property, in ships, and other sub-[37]-stantial indicia of wealth were patent to the eyes of all, not one single rupee was forthcoming, or voluntarily paid by him in satisfaction of the claim of the young man whose property had been in his hands for years, and which had been the foundation of all his prosperity.

"On legal inquiry, it turns out that the landed and other property, which was well known to belong to Aga Mahomed Rahim, has all been conveyed to other parties, and the question, therefore, arises on every such conveyance, whether there was really a bona fide transfer of property for good consideration, or whether a deep-laid scheme was concocted, for the purpose of defeating the course of law, for cheating the claimant, whom he had been keeping at arms' length for a course of years by harassing litigation, and by using those provisions in the English law which are intended for the relief of honest and unfortunate debtors, to withdraw all his property which could be realised from without the jurisdiction of the Court, and himself finally, as soon as he should have got his discharge under the Insolvent Act.

"This being the statement of the question before the Court, it is obvious that any claimant to property, conveyed by Aga Mahomed Rahim at the period of his difficulties, labours under the onus of having to maintain a case which is open to the gravest suspicions. The probabilities are all against the genuineness of such a transaction, for it does not require a very long experience in this Court, to be aware that fraudulent conveyances, tortuous courses, skilful deep-laid schemes, and most unblushing perjury, are constantly resorted to by persons in difficulties, whereas the same prudence in bona fide trans-[38]-actions, and the same care to make good bargains, and not to part with hard cash till a valid equivalent is obtained, are undoubtedly to be found amongst the natives of India to quite as great an extent as with any nation in the world.

"The conclusion which I desire to draw from this observation is, that as the Plaintiff's case is necessarily tainted with suspicion, it lies upon him, if the transaction be really a genuine one, to bring more than an ordinary amount of evidence to support it, and to rebut, by unimpeachable testimony, the prima facie incredibility which accompanies his tale. The large sum of money involved in this case (at least four lacs according to the Plaintiff, but probably not amounting, even with the arrears of rent, to more than two) affords quite sufficient motive to the Plaintiff to make every exertion to bring forward all the evidence which is capable of being given; and I have no doubt whatever in my own mind that the Plaintiff has brought forward all the evidence which was calculated to support his claim.

"Having thus stated the question for inquiry, and the position of the parties at the period of the transaction, and having pointed out how extremely suspicious a case the Plaintiff was coming forward to support, and the consequent burden upon him of furnishing the Court with a mass of irrefragable evidence, I make no hesitation in avowing, that directly I heard the speech of the learned counsel for the Plaintiff, and ascertained that a case, in itself suspicious, was accompanied with the most improbable details, and that these details had absolutely no witnesses at all to prove them, I felt no doubt whatever that the Defendant was entitled to a verdict, and [39] that the conveyance was altogether simulated and fraudulent; indeed, the impression on both our minds was so strong, that if it had not been intimated that an appeal to the Privy Council was intended, we should have probably thought it necessary for the ends of justice to have cut the matter short by pronouncing our conclusions at once, that a tale so improbable, and supported by no evidence, ought not to be allowed to take up any further time of a Court of justice; but as the impressions on our minds were formed on previous facts connected with the suit, the knowledge of which was necessary to enable any tribunal to form an accurate judgment, but which would not appear to the Privy Council unless given in evidence, it was essential to undergo the tedious inquiry of getting these different facts, so well known to all of us, on the records of the Court in this particular suit.

"These facts being now recorded, it is sufficient to say of them, that all those which make for the Plaintiff (except perhaps one) are neutral or irrelevant, or capable of easy explanation; that several facts are proved, which throw the gravest suspicion on the Plaintiff's title, and above all, that proof of those facts which were essential to the Plaintiff's claim is altogether wanting."

No appeal having been made from this judgment, and order of the Supreme Court made thereon, further proceedings were taken by the sequestrator, under the direction of the Court, and the docks were sold.

Musadee Mahomed Cazum Sherazee afterwards presented a petition to the Queen in Council, praying for leave to appeal from the Order of the Supreme [40] Court, dated the 14th of November, 1848, which their Lordships granted upon certain terms (for report of the case upon this petition, see Moore's Ind. App. Cases, vol. v., p. 196).

These terms having been complied with, the appeal now came on for hearing.

Mr. Lloyd, Q. C., and Mr. Forsyth, for the Appellant.—First. The evidence adduced by the Appellant sufficiently established that he was owner of an undivided moiety of the Mazagon docks and premises. He was in possession as a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, under the conveyance executed, in 1845, by Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee. The seizure, therefore, by the Sheriff of this property under writs of sequestration against the property of Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, was irregularly executed as against this moiety. The Court below viewed the case as a colourable sale without any consideration money having been paid by the Appellant to the vendor. The evidence, however, disproves such a conclusion. It was proved that he had ample means to effect the purchase by paying the balance, after deducting the debt due to him at that time by Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, and that after the agreement for the purchase had been made, he paid over the balance. It may be true, that, at the time when he purchased the moiety, he was aware of the existence of the suit by the residuary legatees of Mahomed Ally Khan against Aga Mahomed Shoostry, his executor, for an administration of his estate, yet, as he was ignorant of the state of the proceedings therein, whether [41] or not any sum was found due by him to the estate of the testator, it could not affect his title as a bona fide purchaser. Even if he had notice that the Master had found that he was indebted to the estate, we submit that that circumstance would in no respect have affected his right as a purchaser for a bona fide consideration. A sale of property for a good consideration is not, either at common law, or under the Statute, 13 Eliz., c. 5 (made perpetual by 29 Eliz., c. 5), fraudulent and void, merely because it is made with the intention to defeat the expected execution of a judgment creditor. Wood v. Dirie (7 Q.B. Rep. 892), Twyne's case (3 Coke, 80, b. 81 a; and see note, 1 Smith's L. Cases, p. 10, where all the authorities on this question are collected), Cudogan v. Kennett (2 Cowp. 432, 434), Riches v. Evans (9 Car. and Pay. 640). The learned Judge says, in his judgment, "that directly he heard the speech of the counsel for the Plaintiff, and ascertained that a case, in itself suspicious, was accompanied with most improbable details, and that these details had absolutely no witnesses at all to prove them, I felt no doubt whatever that the Defendant was entitled to a verdict, and that the conveyance was altogether simulated and fraudulent." Now it is clear, from these expressions, that the Appellant had to contend with unusual disadvantages in establishing his title to the property in question. The mind of the Judge was unfavourably disposed towards the case anterior to the Appellant's proofs and evidence being adduced. The adverse presumption of fraud which the Appellant had to combat from the beginning, was derived, not from the case of the Appellant himself, but from facts which it [42] is said had been established or were apparent in a suit, to which he was no party, and to the issues involved in which he was an entire stranger, and which he never had an opportunity of contesting. The whole proceedings are irregular. The Court ought to have directed an action of ejectment to try the validity of the conveyance.

Second. The order cannot stand, for if the Court below entertained so much doubt upon the evidence as to decline giving effect to the deed of purchase, yet the property ought, at all events, to have been treated as a security for the debt due to the Appellant, with interest. Assuming, therefore, that in a proceeding as the present it was competent to the Court, and proper, to set aside the deed for fraud, still, as the conveyance was rescinded, the ordinary rule of a Court of Equity ought to have been applied, and it ought to have directed that the Appellant should be paid the amount really due to him, and also the whole of his expenditure made by him in substantial improvements. Hamblyn v. Ley (3 Swans. 301, n.).

The Solicitor-General (Sir R. Bethell), and Mr. Ayrton, for the Respondents.—It is evident that the conveyance under which the Appellant claimed, was executed collusively, with the intention to delay, or defraud, the Respondent from enforcing any decree that might be pronounced against Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, in the suit then pending against him by the Respondents. Such conveyance was, therefore, fraudulent and void. The deed was not proved to be a bona fide conveyance for a valuable consideration, so as to be valid in equity against [43] the writs of sequestration under which the property was sequestered. Coulston v. Gardiner (3 Swans. n. 279), Mushedy Kazim's claim ("Oriental Cases," by Perry, p. 35). The objection now urged by the Appellant, that the order cannot stand, is founded on the sole ground, that the Court below improperly discredited the testimony of witnesses. Such objection is untenable, as this Court, upon a mere question of evidence, will not reverse a decision upon that ground alone. Santacana v. Arderol (1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 269). The Appellant was under the obligation of satisfactorily proving that his purchase of the property was bona fide, but this obligation was not discharged by the evidence he adduced. Lastly, there was no irregularity in the proceedings: if a sequestrator obtains possession of property, as belonging to the party against whom the process issued, and such property is claimed by a third person, the mode of trying the right is in the discretion of the Court. Empringham v. Short (3 Hare, 461).

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh (Feb. 15, 1854).—In this case, on the 2nd of February, 1847, a writ of sequestration was issued by the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay, on the Equity side of that Court, in a cause in which one Meerza Ally Mahomed Shoostry and Bebee Mariam Begum were Plaintiffs, and Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee and others, Defendants, for the payment of Rs. 100,000. On the 4th of March following, a second writ of sequestration also issued for the non-payment of a like sum of Rs. 100,000; and on the 27th of March, the Sheriff, to whom these writs were addressed, made his return [44] to the Court, by which he certified, that on the 18th of March instant he had seized and sequestered the Mazagon docks, under and by virtue of those two writs of sequestration. Now the terms of the writ of sequestration, addressed to the Sheriff, were these: he was commanded “to enter upon, take, and sequester all the houses, lands, and tenements, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and also all the personal estate, debts, and effects of the said Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, in your bailiwick, and to hold the same in your possession until the said Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee shall pay the said sum of Rs. 100,000.” Now, under the terms of this writ, what the Sheriff had to do was to receive the rents, issues, and profits of this property, which was at that time in the possession of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, as tenants, and to pay the amount of these rents into Court; so that any disposition of such rents, when paid in, would be the subject of a further application to the Court. All that the writ commanded, was a direction to the Sheriff to retain the property of Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee in his possession until the further order of the Court.

In this state of circumstances, it appears to us that, according to the rules of a Court of Equity, no proceedings could be taken against the sequestrator except by leave of the Court. If a person has a legal title to property seized by an ordinary trespasser, he can bring his action of ejectment to recover possession of such property; but where the property is in the custody of the Court, as when in the possession of a Receiver, the course pursued in our Courts, if it appears there is a legal title, has been to permit an [45] action of ejectment to be brought, to put the matter in the most convenient course of determination. That course was adopted by Lord Eldon, in the case of Angel v. Smith (9 Ves. 335), where, after much discussion, he permitted an action of ejectment to be brought against a Receiver. In Brooks v. Greathed (1 Jac. and Wal. 176), the Master of the Rolls says, “It was settled in Angel v. Smith, when the rule was laid down both with respect to Receivers and Sequestrators, that their possession is not to be disturbed without leave. But when a party is prejudiced by having a Receiver put in his way, the course has either been to give him leave to bring an action of ejectment, or permit him to be examined, pro interesse suo.” In this case, the Appellant set up a title to property that had been seized by the Sheriff, or, at least, to one moiety of property so seized, and he presented a petition to the Court, on the 8th of April, 1847, praying that the Sheriff might be ordered to withdraw the writs of sequestration and relinquish one moiety of the property, that is, the dock and premises, to the Appellant; thus, in truth, asking the same relief which he would have obtained if he had brought his action of ejectment, and had succeeded in that action; and he further prayed that, if the Court should think fit, the Respondents (the Complainants in the suit) might be directed to exhibit interrogatories in the office of the Master of the Court, for the examination of the Appellant and for the discovery of his interest in the premises, or that such other order should be made as might be fit. Now, instead of bringing this petition on to a hearing, in which case, inasmuch as his title appeared, on his own showing, to be a mere legal title, he [46] would merely have obtained liberty to bring an action of ejectment, he took an ex parte order of another sort, on the same day as that on which the petition was presented. The terms of the order were: that the Appellant should come in and be examined, pro interesse suo, in the moiety of the Mazagon docks and premises in the petition mentioned; and that the Respondents should file interrogatories for that purpose in a week, before the Master, and if the Respondents should think fit to reply to the examination of the Appellant, put in by him in answer to such interrogatories, either party should be at liberty to examine witnesses, viva voce, before the Master, touching the Appellant's claim; and that the Master should look into the examination and evidence of such witnesses, if any, and certify to the Court whether the Appellant had made out a title to the moiety of the dock and premises, or any and what part thereof; and the Master was to be at liberty to state any special circumstances, and the parties were to be at liberty to apply to the Court as they might be advised. Under this order the Petitioner went in to be examined. Interrogatories were filed for his examination, and he put in his answers to those interrogatories. From that examination it appeared, that he claimed a right to this property by what seemed to be a good legal title, namely, by purchase for a valuable consideration, paid when the conveyance was executed, and under which he was in possession of the property at the time of the seizure, he having received the rents, and made a considerable expenditure on the premises. On the other hand, it appeared, upon this examination, that the statements of the Petitioner were open to great suspicion. The sale, [47] to the last degree, was improbable, depending upon his own statement; while there were circumstances from which the Court might be led to conclude that the title so set up was only simulated, and that no real interest was vested in him. This being so, the Respondents filed a replication and examination. According to the terms of the order, they might have proceeded to the examination of witnesses before the Master, who would have made his report, and if the Respondents had been dissatisfied with that report, they might have excepted, and the case would have come before the Court on the exceptions, and a trial at law ordered to settle the question of title. In this state of things the parties appear to have come to an arrangement which seems to have been extremely reasonable and proper. If a trial had taken place, that trial would have taken place before the two Judges of the Court sitting on the plea side of the Court as a jury, and, at the same time, as Judges, for the purpose of delivering the verdict in the trial, in the form either of an action of ejectment, or an issue. If they had pursued the order, according to the terms of it, instead of adopting the course they did, they would have gone before the Master, attendant with all the expense and delay of an examination, report, and order, and then the Master would have reported on that examination, and it would, in all probability, have resulted in an order to try at law that question; to avoid which, on the 4th of September, 1848, an order was made, by consent, in these terms: "It is ordered, that so much of the order made in the above matter by this Honourable Court, on the 8th day of April, 1847, as directs, that if the said Meerza Ally Mahomed Shoostri and Bebee Mariam [48] Begum should think fit to reply to the examination of the Petitioner, put in by him in answer to the interrogatories in the order mentioned, then that either party was to be at liberty to examine witnesses, viva voce, before the Master, touching the Petitioner's claim; and that the Master should look into the examination and evidence of such witnesses, if any, and certify to the Court whether the Petitioner had made out a title to the moiety of the ground, buildings, dock, and premises, or any and what part thereof,—be, and it is hereby discharged; and it is further ordered, that the matter of the petition be set down on the board of causes for hearing on the first day of the next ensuing November term, and that the witnesses on both sides be examined viva voce, before the Court at the hearing." Now the question is, whether this is not intended to be substituted for a trial at law, on the plea side of the Court—the trying an action of ejectment, in substance, upon this petition, which prayed precisely the same relief that would have been had in an action of ejectment, and substituting these proceedings for such trial. That it was so, appears to us to be clear. In the first place, when the evidence is taken before the Court at this trial, all the documents that are produced are entered in the plea side of the Court, and signed by the officer, not as Registrar, but as Prothonotary; and, when the Judges are disposing of the case, Chief Justice Perry says, "I felt no doubt whatever that the Defendant was entitled to a verdict." Well, then, supposing that to be the case, the question was in fact tried in the most convenient form for the purpose of the action, namely to restore to the Petitioner that possession which alone he claimed by this peti-[49]tion. Upon that petition, witnesses were examined at great length; and the Court came to the conclusion that this transaction of the alleged purchase was a mere simulated and fraudulent transaction; that no money had ever been paid; that no possession had ever been delivered; but that, in truth, the alleged purchase and possession had been simulated for the purpose of defeating the sequestration and the claim of creditors in the suit which was then pending, and in which it was probable, or, rather, in which it was certain, that a very large balance would be found to be due from the estate. Being of that opinion, the Judges necessarily, and naturally, and properly, concluded that the deed, if it were a deed executed under those circumstances, was fraudulent as against creditors; and that the Plaintiff in an action of ejectment (the Petitioner standing in the position of a Plaintiff in an action of ejectment) must fail, and that the petition must be dismissed.

If they were right in law, the question is, whether they were right in fact. And upon that question the course which this Court always takes, in appeals from the inferior Courts of India, where the Judges are so much more familiar with the circumstances of the parties, the nature of the case, and the probabilities or improbabilities attached to certain states of circumstances, and the credibility of the witnesses, is, that although we by no means consider it conclusive, still great weight is to be given to their opinion, and this Court is not in the habit of disturbing a judgment founded upon a decision of those questions, unless their Lordships entertain a clear and strong opinion upon it. But where a judgment has been [50] pronounced, and a verdict found, and that judgment pronounced by the Judges of the Supreme Court, sitting as a Court for the purpose of the trial of an action, their Lordships will give, at least, the same weight to that decision as is given in this country to the verdict of a jury, to which the Judge who tries the cause makes no objection; and, where there are no reasonable grounds to suppose that the jury have come to a wrong conclusion, it is not sufficient to say that the Judge might, probably, if the case was res integra, have come to a different conclusion. We are far from saying here, if the case had been res integra, that we should have come to a different conclusion from that which the Judges of the Court below have come to, and we think their Order was perfectly right.

But then it is said, supposing this transaction to be fraudulent and void against creditors, still the party is entitled to the sums which he had been allowed to lay out upon the repairs of the property. Now, there is a case, Hamblyn v. Ley (3 Swan, 301, note), where a voluntary deed had been executed, under circumstances much resembling the present case, the deed having been executed for the purpose of defeating a sequestration. Lord Hardwicke set aside that deed, and made an allowance to the parties for what had been expended, both in the payment of interest on the mortgage, and for taxes and repairs. But, in the first place, that was a case in which only equitable relief could be administered, because it was a case of an equity of redemption; and in the next place, it was clear that there had been an actual possession, and a receipt of rents and profits. If in this case the [51] parties had prosecuted the matter before the Master, and it had appeared to the Master that this deed was good at law, but void in equity, then probably there might have been an account of the profits and of those sums that had been laid out in improvements. But the course that has been here taken rendered such an account impossible. No such account could have been directed in an action of ejectment brought for the recovery of the possession of the property, and, this being a mere legal title in which the Court was of opinion that there was no estate or interest in the Plaintiff against creditors, upon both grounds, it seems impossible that any such allowance could have been made; no claim for such allowance was made, nor was any demand of the kind brought before the Court below; and, even if it had been, in the view that the Judges took, it would have made no difference, because they considered the whole transaction, from the beginning to the end, as void. They considered that the possession never ought to have been changed. Mr. Justice Yardley, in referring to the grounds upon which he proceeded, says, "To the best of my recollection, aided by the notes I took at the hearing, the petition was dismissed because we thought that the conveyance of a moiety of the Mazagon dockyard by Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee to the Petitioner was merely colourable, and that the accounts, by which it was attempted to show that a large balance was due at the time, or immediately before the execution of the conveyance, from Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee to the Petitioner, were fictitious; and that the Petitioner entirely failed to prove to our satisfaction that the payments making [52] up the residue of the alleged purchase-money had been actually made, and that the possession of the dockyard only nominally passed to the Petitioner, Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee still continuing to be the real owner of it, and still continuing to exercise exclusive dominion over it, and that this was part of a concerted design by Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee and his friends, of whom the Petitioner was one, to make away with all the property and effects of the said Aga Mahomed Rahim Sherazee, in order to deprive Meerza Ally Mahomed Shoostry of the fruits of a decree."

It appears to their Lordships, upon every view of this case, that the Order pronounced by the Court below was perfectly right, and that it is their duty to recommend Her Majesty to affirm such Order, with costs.

[53] GOPEEKRIST GOSAIN,—Appellant; GUNGAPERSAUD GOSAIN.—

Respondent * [July 17 and 18, 1854].

On appeal from the Supreme Court of Calcutta.

The presumption of the Hindoo law, in a joint undivided family, is, that the whole property of the family is joint estate, and the onus lies upon a party claiming any part of such property as his separate estate, to establish that fact.

Where a purchase of real estate is made by a Hindoo in the name of one of his sons, the presumption of the Hindoo law is in favour of its being a benamee purchase, and the burthen of proof lies on the party in whose name it was purchased, to prove that he was solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in such purchased estate.

Purchase of a talook in Bengal by a Hindoo in his eldest son's name, the conveyance, though in the English form of lease and release, held to be a benamee purchase, and the son in whose name it was purchased declared to be a trustee for the father, and the talook part of the father's estate.

In reversing the judgment of the Court below, the Judicial Committee remitted the cause with certain directions, leaving the question of the allowance of costs in the discretion of the Court below.

The Appellant and Respondent in this case were brothers, and joint heirs by the Hindoo law of their deceased father, Rogoram Gosain. The question raised by the suit in the Court below and by the present appeal was, whether a talook called Gheritty, situate in the district of Hoogly, in Bengal, which was purchased by Rogoram Gosain many years before his death, and previously to the birth of the Appellant, in the name of the Respondent, did or did not, at the time of his death, form part of the real estate of [54] Rogoram Gosain, so as to pass to the Appellant and Respondent jointly under a general devise to them contained in his Will, or descended to them as joint heirs in case of intestacy. The case of the Appellant was, that the talook formed part of his father's real estate. The Respondent, on the contrary, insisted, that it was his separate property, having been bought by his father in his name, for his separate use and benefit.

The circumstances giving rise to this question were as follows:—

Rogoram Gosain, a Hindoo, of considerable property, was, up to the year 1831, jointly possessed with his brother, Ruggubram Gosain, of property derived from their father; of which a partition was in that year effected, and his share of the property ascertained. In the year 1825, Rogoram Gosain purchased, for the sum of

* Present: Members of the Judicial Committee,—The Right Hon. the Lord Justice Knight Bruce, the Right Hon. Sir Edward Ryan, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Turner, and the Right Hon. Sir John Patteson.

Rs. 64,000, the talook in question. The receipt for the purchase-money and the conveyance was taken in the name of the Respondent, who was then his only son, of the age of two years or thereabouts. The conveyance of the talook was in the English language and form, by lease and re-lease, dated the 12th and 13th of July, 1825, in which the Respondent was simply described as Zemindar of Serampore. As between himself and his brother, Rogoram Gosain debited himself with the purchase-money, but he shortly afterwards opened an account in his private books with the Respondent, and therein debited the Respondent with the purchase-money, and credited him from time to time with the rents of the talook; this account was continued down to the time of the death of Rogoram Gosain.

In the year 1832, subsequently to the birth of the [55] Appellant, and after the partition between Rogoram Gosain and Ruggubram Gosain had been effected, Rogoram Gosain bought another talook, called Chattra, the conveyance of which was taken in the name of the Appellant, and Rogoram Gosain debited the Appellant in another account, which he opened in his books in the Appellant's name, with the purchase-money of this talook, and credited him in the account, from time to time, with the rents, in like manner as he did in the account in respect of Gheritty with regard to the Respondent. This account was also continued down to the time of the death of Rogoram Gosain. He also made other purchases of land in the name of other members of his family.

Rogoram Gosain died in the year 1842, having executed an instrument purporting to be a Will, dated the 5th of November, 1841; by which he bequeathed the whole of his property, real and personal, whether Zemindary, or rent-free tenure, houses, Company's papers and other obligations, bonds, notes, etc., due to him, to his sons, Gungapersaud Gosain and Gopeekrist Gosain, in equal shares; and he gave also certain pecuniary legacies to his four daughters and their issue.

As this instrument contained no appointment of executors, the Appellant and Respondent did not consider it as a Will, and they accordingly, after taking the usual legal proceedings, were admitted to be the heirs and representatives of Rogoram Gosain; and acted as such, treating the instrument as of no effect as a Will. The rents of the two talooks, Gheritty and Chattra, were, after the death of Rogoram Gosain, generally received on the joint receipt of the Appellant and Respondent; but the rents of Gheritty were [56] carried in the joint books of the Appellant and Respondent to the credit of the Respondent.

In the year 1848, the Appellant, for the first time, set up a claim to have Gheritty treated as forming part of the real estate of Rogoram Gosain, and as such belonging to the Appellant and the Respondent jointly. The Respondent refused to recognise this claim, and insisted that Gheritty was his own separate property, being purchased in his name.

The Appellant took proceedings before the Magistrate of Serampore for the purpose of enforcing his right to a joint possession with the Respondent of Gheritty, but the Magistrate decided in favour of the Respondent. The Appellant then appealed to the Sessions Judge, who reversed the decision of the Magistrate, and directed that both the Appellant and Respondent should be put in possession of Gheritty. In consequence thereof, the Respondent, in May, 1849, brought an action of ejectment in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, on the plea side of the Court, against the Appellant, for the purpose of recovering possession of Gheritty, and the cause stood for trial, when the Appellant, on the 18th of July, 1849, brought the present suit on the equity side of the Supreme Court against the Respondent. The bill stated, that it was customary for Hindoos of property to purchase various parcels of real estate in the names of their different sons, but without any intention whatever of giving to such sons whose names were so used, the sole beneficial estate or interest therein, or any other beneficial estate or interest therein than what the son would or might ultimately take in the rest of the estate and property upon the father's death. That Rogoram Gosain took the two convey-[57]-ances in the names of the Appellant and Respondent respectively, in conformity with such custom, and without any intention whatever of altering the succession thereto; and that he intended that the Appellant and Respondent should hold the talooks respectively upon the same trusts and to the same uses as the rest of his estate and property. That in devising to the Appellant and Respondent jointly all his estate and property, he included and meant to include therein both of the talooks, as the Appellant had always admitted with respect to Chattra. That in the year 1825, when Rogoram Gosain so purchased Gheritty, he was joint with his brother, Ruggubram Gosain, as to a certain ancestral real property, and that his object in taking the same in the Respondent's name was to keep it separate from the joint ancestral estate in which Ruggubram Gosain was interested, and under colour of which Ruggubram Gosain set up a claim or joinder on the whole estate of Rogoram Gosain. That Rogoram Gosain purchased Chattra in the Appellant's name, because he at the time was alleged to be involved in the Calcutta Bank, in partnership with the late firm of Palmer and Co., which had failed in business. The bill then contained various allegations relative to the manner in which Rogoram Gosain and the Respondent and Appellant respectively had at different times acted in reference to Gheritty and Chattra; and after stating the legal proceedings which had taken place between the Appellant and Respondent, and the action of ejectment brought by the Respondent, prayed that the talooks of Gheritty and Chattra might be declared and decreed to have been parcels respectively of the real estate of Rogoram Gosain, deceased, and to have passed under [58] the general devise in his Will to the Appellant and Respondent, as joint devisees thereof; and that the Respondent might be declared to be a trustee for himself and the Appellant jointly, in respect of the Gheritty talook and premises, and might be decreed to execute such conveyance or other deed in respect thereof as might be necessary to secure to the Appellant his right and interest as such devisee as aforesaid in a moiety thereof; and that he might be restrained from further prosecuting the action of ejectment, and from commencing or proceeding with any other action of ejectment, in respect of the talook and premises, against the Appellant, either in that Court, or in the Mofussil Courts, or doing any other act to oust the Appellant, or to obtain exclusive possession of the talook and premises, or to prevent the Appellant from receiving his moiety of the rents and profits thereof.

Judgment in the action of ejectment was obtained by the Appellant, but execution was stayed pending the suit in Equity.

The Respondent, by his answer, admitted the death of Rogoram Gosain, and that in his lifetime he signed the instrument in writing, dated the 5th of November, 1841, as before-mentioned; and submitted to the Court the effect of such instrument, and whether the Appellant and Respondent were thereby constituted executors. The answer also admitted the purchase of Gheritty, and that the conveyance was by lease and release to and in the name of the Respondent, but not as the eldest son, and then the only son, Rogoram Gosain, he being described in the deeds respectively simply as Zemindar. And the Respondent, by his answer, further admitted [59] that Rogoram Gosain was at that time joint with his brother as to certain ancestral real estate, but denied that at the time of such purchase, Rogoram Gosain had a dispute with his brother, Ruggubram Gosain, as in the bill mentioned, or that there was any dispute between them as to their joint estate previous to the year 1828. And he admitted that Rogoram Gosain debited his own account in the joint books of himself and brother with the purchase-money, but under the head of Gungapersaud Gosain, as a transaction of Rogoram Gosain, by way of temporary loan to the Respondent; that, after separation from his brother thereafter mentioned, he transferred the purchase-money to separate accounts, which he opened under the separate head of the Respondent, who was debited therewith; and that in the year 1832, having previously in the year 1831, effected partition between himself and his brother, he debited another account, which he opened in his own separate books, under the head of the Appellant, with the purchase-money of the other talook, called Chattra; and the Respondent denied that Rogoram Gosain bought the same in the name of the Appellant, but as benamsee merely, and by his answer he further stated that Rogoram Gosain bought the same for the separate use and benefit of the Appellant in the same manner as he bought the talook of Gheritty, in the name and for the separate use and benefit of the Respondent. He also admitted that it was sometimes done, but denied that it was customary, for Hindoos of property to purchase various parcels of real estate in the names of different sons, but insisted that such practice was without any intention whatever of giving to such sons whose names were so used, the [60] sole beneficial estate or interest therein, or any other beneficial estate or interest therein than what the son would or might ultimately take in the rest of the estate and property upon the father's death; and the Respondent denied that Rogoram Gosain took the two conveyances respectively, in the names of the Appellant and Respondent respectively, in conformity with such alleged custom or any custom, or without any intention whatever of altering the succession thereto, or that he did, from the time of the purchase thereof up to his death, hold and enjoy the talook of Gheritty as part of his real estate, but stated that Rogoram Gosain, as the father and natural guardian of the Respondent till he was of proper age to act for himself, held the talook, and collected and received, and at his pleasure disposed of, the rents and profits thereof. And the Respondent denied that Rogoram Gosain intended that the Respondent and Appellant should respectively hold the talooks upon the same trusts and to the same uses as the rest of his estate and property; or, that in devising, by the before-mentioned instrument (if any devise were therein contained), jointly all his estate and property, he included or meant to include therein both the talooks; or that the Appellant had admitted the same as regarded Chattrra, save that when he found the same was not quite so valuable as the talook of Gheritty, by circumstances that happened after the purchase, he then set up the case made by the bill. And the Respondent denied that he and the Appellant had always held the talook of Chattrra jointly; and stated that since the beginning of the Bengally year 1255 (A.D. 1848), the Appellant had received and expended the [61] rents and profits, and entered the same in his separate books of account which he had kept since the last-mentioned period.

Both parties entered into evidence relative to the purchase of the talooks of Gheritty and Chattrra; and also relative to the manner in which the accounts of the purchase-moneys and of the rents of the two talooks were kept, both during the lifetime of Rogoram Gosain and subsequently to his death. The effect of this evidence is fully considered and commented upon in the judgment.

The cause was heard by the Supreme Court on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd days of August, 1850; and on the 13th of September in the same year judgment was delivered by Mr. Justice Colville, sitting for the Chief Justice, the material part of which was as follows:—

“The question in this cause is, whether a certain talook, purchased by Rogoram Gosain many years before his death, in the name of one of his sons, became the property of that son, or is to pass under a general devise of his estate to his two sons in equal shares. If the question had arisen between British subjects, the principles on which it would have to be decided are clearly defined, and not difficult of application. In ordinary cases, if an estate be purchased in the name of one, but by and with the money of another, there arises, by a presumption of law, a resulting trust in favour of that other. In the exceptional case, wherein the person who thus employs his money stands in the relation of parent to him in whose name the purchase is made, the law presumes an advancement, and the resulting trust does not arise. This presumption of advancement is, however, capable of being rebutted by evidence, showing that the real [62] intention of the parent was, that the purchase should enure for his benefit, and that the child should take only as trustee. Declarations by the parent, if contemporaneous with the purchase, are admissible to prove such an intention, but declarations subsequent are rejected. The reason of this distinction is obvious. A contemporaneous declaration is an indication of a present intention; a subsequent declaration is, at most, evidence of what a former intention was, and as such can rank no higher than any other declaration, which, unless against the interest of the party making it, is excluded by the known rules of evidence from judicial consideration. These principles and distinctions are established and enforced by a long course of decisions, beginning with Grey v. Grey (Cases temp. Finch 338); and going down to more recent cases, before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, the more leading authorities are Taylor v. Taylor (1 Atk. 386); Dyer v. Dyer (2 Cox. 92); Murless v. Franklin (1 Swanst. 13); Crabb v. Crabb (1 Myl. and K. 519); and Sidmouth v. Sidmouth (2 Beav. 447). This case, however, arises between Hindoos, and is one which the Hindoo law, so far as it is distinguishable from the English law must govern. ‘Benamie transactions’ are common against Hindoos; but I am not aware that there is any authority for applying to them the doctrine of resulting trust, as a presumption of law. On the other hand, the presumption of advancement does not necessarily arise upon a purchase by a father in the name of his son. There seems, then, to be nothing in the Hindoo law which is contrary to either the Plaintiff’s or the Defendant’s view in this case. And the Court must determine the case upon its own conviction, deduced from the [63] evidence of what the intention of Rogoram Gosain in this particular transaction was. We ought not, however, in dealing with this question, entirely to leave out of consideration the decisions of the English Courts, because, although the presumptions which I have mentioned are not to be applied as legal presumptions, the process of reasoning on which they are founded, so far as it rests on experience, or observation of the ordinary principles of human action, and is not repugnant to any of the peculiarities of Hindoo faith or customs, may, most legitimately and usefully, be applied to the construction of ambiguous acts, and to the deduction of a particular intention from them; and further, because in determining what is and what is not admissible to prove intention, we must in this, as in every other case, follow the English law of evidence.

" Now, although several witnesses have been examined, and a large mass of documentary evidence has been put in on both sides, we cannot say that the evidence on the one side or the other is conclusive upon the question of intention. A great portion of it relates to the purchase by Rogoram Gosain, in 1832, of another talook called Chattra, in the name of his younger son, the Plaintiff; but since it is admitted that his intention (whatever it was), with respect to the purchase of Gheritty in the name of the elder son, was the same with the intention afterwards manifested by him in the purchase of Chattra in the name of the younger son, this portion of the evidence ought, equally with the rest, to receive the careful consideration of the Court. Again, the evidence is divisible into proof of things done by Rogoram and his sons in the lifetime of the former, and proof of things done [64] by the sons after their father's death. The effect of these two classes of proofs it will be convenient to consider separately.

" The evidence shows that Gheritty was purchased when Rogoram was joint in estate with his brother Ruggubram. The conveyance is in the English form of lease and release, and direct from the vendor to the Defendant, Gungapersaud (then an infant). There can, therefore, be no doubt, that at law, the estate became vested in possession in the Defendant. There are, besides, some entries in the books of the charges for setting up a bamboo, which, it may be presumed, is some symbolical mode of taking possession. But this, considering the nature of the conveyance, could only import a possession taken in the name and on account of Gungapersaud, the nominal purchaser.

" There is no satisfactory evidence of any parol contemporaneous declaration by Rogoram, of his intention in respect of this purchase, whether it was to be for his own or for his son's benefit. Rustonjee Cowasjee says, generally, that he recollects the purchase; that it was in the name of the son; that Rogoram told him he bought it in the name of his son. Assuming this communication to have been contemporary with the purchase, it is ambiguous as respects the point in dispute. The conversations deposed to by Goberdone Sain, and the cashier in the official assignee's office, appear to have been conversations subsequent to the event, and they are hardly more conclusive of the question of intention than that deposed to by Rustonjee Cowasjee.

" The books seem to show that upon the purchase Rogoram debited himself in the joint books, as between himself and Ruggubram, with the purchase-money [65] of the estate, Rs. 61,000; and that he then, or shortly afterwards, opened an account between himself and his son, Gungapersaud, in which he debited his son with the principal purchase-money, and credited him with the net rents of the talook. This account, so opened, seems to have been continued on that footing, in one or other of the books, up to the time of Rogoram's death.

" It is further proved, that long after the purchase, in 1838 and 1839, upon an attempt being made to assess the Lakhiraj lands of Gheritty for Government revenue, Rogoram Gosain, in his memorials to the Deputy Collector, and to the then Deputy Governor of Bengal, treated this talook as the property of his son, and that he also treated it in a letter to Mr. Storm, who rented part of the estate.

" As to the general management of the estate during the life of Rogoram Gosain, the evidence, I think, pretty conclusively shows, that the ostensible ownership was in the son, that the estate stood in his name in the Collector's books, that leases were granted, and receipts for rent given to the tenants and Ryots, also in his name; but on the other hand, that the rents when collected were received by Rogoram Gosain, and the receipts for those collections given in his name; and that with the concurrence of the Defendant after he attained his majority. The books, however, show that the rents so received by Rogoram were duly carried to the account I have mentioned,—The account wherein the Defendant was credited with those rents, and debited with the principal purchase-money.

“The general management of Chattra appears to have been the same as that of Gheritty. There is, how-[66]ever, this further evidence as to the original purchase of Chattra, namely, that if the witness, Hurrochunder Lahoree, is believed, Rogoram expressed, at the time of that purchase, an intention to purchase for the benefit of his younger son, what he probably conceived would be equal in value to the purchase already made for the benefit of his elder son. The conversation spoken to by Rustonjee Cowasjee, which would imply an intention on the part of Rogoram to purchase Chattra in the name of the younger son, in order to prevent its falling into and becoming part of the estate wherein he was joint with Ruggubram, evidently relates, not to the actual purchase of Chattra, which was after the separation in estate of Rogoram and his brother's representatives, but to a former and ineffectual treaty for that purchase.

“The Plaintiff relies strongly on evidence of other purchases in the name of the Defendant, which are admitted to be part of the joint estate that passed by the Will of Rogoram, and upon one particular book, called the abstract account book of the estate of Rogoram Gosain, in which the rents of Gheritty and Chattra are entered with those of estates admitted to be the property of Rogoram.

“As to the first, the Defendant's answer is, and the books seem to support this view, that Rogoram Gosain, whether he had or had not any right so to do, did make a transfer to himself of other properties, particularly of the house in Calcutta, which he had purchased in the name of the Defendant, but that he did not so transfer the talook, Gheritty; but, on the contrary, continued up to the time of his death, to make a distinction between that and the transferred [67] property, crediting the Defendant with the rents, and debiting him with the principal purchase-money of the estate.

“As to the second, it is to be observed, that the book itself is of so late a date as 1837, and, therefore, the declaration, if one is to be implied from the ambiguous entry of the rents of these estates in such a book, that the beneficial interest in the estates was in the father, would not be admissible in evidence against the son. But if this be the meaning of these entries, it is difficult to reconcile them with the Exhibits, Nos. 11 and 12, proved by the Defendant, which show that at that time, and up to a later date, he continued to credit his sons respectively with the rents of Gheritty and Chattra.

“Upon the whole, therefore, the case would seem to stand thus:—the legal estate in Gheritty, and the ostensible ownership of it, were clearly vested in the Defendant. They were never vested in his father. The purchase was made by the father in the name of an infant son of tender years. Without applying the English doctrine of advancement, we may fairly consider an intention to benefit a son as prima facie more probable than a like intention in favour of a stranger in blood; and we may treat the age of the nominal purchaser as a circumstance contradictory of an intention on the part of the father to reserve the dominion over the estate to himself, or to make a trustee of one incapable of executing a trust. It is also more reasonable to suppose, that the intention was to provide for the son by a purchase made with money borrowed by the father from the joint estate, than to suppose that he intended to create a secret trust in favour of himself in fraud of the brother with whom [68] he was thus joint in estate. As to any declared intention, the evidence, unsatisfactory at best, seems to us to preponderate in favour of the Defendant. The perception of rents by the father in his lifetime is not inconsistent with the Defendant's claim. The reasoning of Lord Langdale, in Sidmouth v. Sidmouth (2 Beav. 457), concerning the receipt of the dividends by Lord Stowell, applies even more strongly to the case of an Hindoo parent and child living together as members of a joint family: the patria potestas, and the respect paid to the head of the family, being certainly at least as strong amongst Hindoos as amongst Englishmen. In this case, moreover, the receipt of the rents is fully explained by the manner in which they were dealt with, in being carried to the credit of his son, and set against the principal sum which the father obviously intended to be repaid to his estate. On other matters relied upon by the Plaintiff, we have already incidentally remarked. Upon the whole, therefore, we should have thought, had this case been submitted to the Court immediately after Rogoram's death, that the Plaintiff had failed to show, that the Gheritty talook was to be treated as part of the estate over which the Testator had a disposing power."

The Court further held that the Will raised no case of election as to these estates, and that, upon the whole case, the Plaintiff failed to show any sufficient ground why the Court should interfere with, or disturb, the legal title of this estate; and that the bill, being limited to that object, ought to be dismissed, without costs.

Against the decree made pursuant to this judgment, the present appeal was brought.

[69] Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., Mr. Leith, and Mr. Maude, for the Appellant.—The decree cannot stand. The Court founded its judgment on an assumption, that in the case of a purchase made by a father in the name of his son, the onus of proof that he was trustee only, rested on the Appellant; and dealt with the case as if he was bound to prove a joinder in estate in respect to this talook. On authority and principle, that was an erroneous view of the burthen of proof. Here the parties are brothers, and if the Court went on the English rules as to a purchase by a father for the benefit of a child, it was wrong, the legal presumption being clearly in favour of the children where there are more than one child. It was a benamtee transaction, very common in India, a purchase by the father in another's name, for his own benefit, and the validity of such a transaction is recognised by the Hindoo law and custom in Bengal. Amanee Tewaree v. Rai Rughoobun Suhai (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 363), Doe dem. Tilluck Seal v. Gour Hurry Day (Morton's Dec. 249), Maha Ranees Bussunt Comaree v. Bulloabdeb (Fulton's Rep. 383). —[The Lord Justice Knight Bruce: Is it your contention that a purchase by a father in name of son is in Hindoo law the same as a purchase by one person in the name of another is by the English law, so as to raise the question of a resulting trust?—Yes. And we submit that the Respondent was bound to prove the contrary, and to establish that he had the sole separate beneficial interest in the talook. It is a very strong circumstance, that at the time of this purchase, Rogoram Gosain and his brother constituted a joint undivided family, and [70] that any property they might have was joint estate. The presumption of the Hindoo law is, that the whole of the property of an undivided family belongs to the common stock, Lurimon Row Sadasew v. Mullar Row Bajee (2 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 60), Dhurum Das Pandey v. Mussumat Shama Soondri Dibiah (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 229, 240), Gour Chunder Rai v. Hurish Chunder Rai (4 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 162); and it probably was for that very reason that it was necessary to purchase this talook as "benamtee," to avoid disputes. The mere fact of entries in the books, of the profits of the talook which Rogoram Gosain debits himself with, prove nothing as to the sole beneficial interest of the Respondent.—[The Lord Justice Knight Bruce: It is admitted that the father received the rents: this by the English law would make no difference, but by the Hindoo law it may be different. There is no evidence during the father's life of any enjoyment of the profits by the Respondent.]—It was a benamtee transaction, and cannot defeat the right of the Appellant, either as devisee with his brother under the Will, or in case of intestacy, as having devolved upon them by the Hindoo law, as joint heirs and representatives. The same principle relating to a purchase in another's name is recognised by the Mahomedan law, called by that law "furzee," or fictitious name, Sheikh Bahauder Ali v. Sheikh Dhomun (1 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 250).

Mr. Rolt, Q.C. Mr. Dickens, and Mr. A. Gordon, for the Respondent.—The question is purely one of fact, and not of law. In such a case, therefore, the Court below is the best judge of the value of the testimony, and this Court [71] will not reverse a judgment founded upon facts only, unless the conclusion of the Court be palpably wrong. This is a simple purchase by a father in the name of his son. The conveyance is in the English form of lease and release, and direct from the vendor to the Respondent; a fact of considerable importance, as no case of "benamtee" can be referred to where the conveyance was by lease and release. The evidence in the case shows that the father intended and gave the Respondent by such deed the sole beneficial estate and interest in this talook. The entries in the books are strong proof of intention. It is a debtor and creditor account, the Respondent being credited with the profits. The fact of the father remaining in possession and receiving the rents is satisfactorily accounted for, as the Respondent was a minor. Whether the case be tried by the Hindoo or English law, the judgment appealed from is, we apprehend, correct. Such a gift was lawful by the Hindoo law, 2 W. H. Macnaughten's "Principles of Hindoo Law," pp. 243, 244, 250. But the fact of the conveyance being in the English form, shows that the father wished the English law to be applied to the case; if so, as the purchase is by the father in the name of his son, the presumption of advancement necessarily prevails, and the doctrine of resulting trusts does not arise; the English authorities, therefore, apply, Grey v. Grey (1 Cha. Ca. 296; S.C. Finch. 338), Ehrand v. Dancer (2 Cha. Ca. 26), Elliot v. Elliot (2 Cha. Ca. 231), Mumma v. Mumma (2 Vern. 19), Stileman v. Ashdown (2 Atk. 477, 480), Dyer v. Dyer (2 Cox. 92), Lamplugh v. Lamplugh (1 P. Will. 111).—[The Lord Justice [72] Knight Bruce: in Murless v. Franklin (1 Swanst. 13), the Court held that to rebut the presumption of advancement, evidence of the father's intention must be contemporaneous with the purchase.]—The Appellant, on whom the burthen rested, has failed to prove that the Respondent is not solely entitled to the legal and beneficial estate in this talook. There never has been any agreement express or implied between them to treat the talook as part of the joint estate.

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—In this appeal two questions of importance arise, one of fact, material only to the particular parties to this litigation: the other of law, interesting, not only to them, but to society at large among the natives of India, at least among the natives of Bengal. The questions arise in this way: A wealthy native of the name of Rogoram Gosain, employed as a Banian, at Calcutta, and having also mercantile concerns of his own, made at different periods of his life purchases of immovable property in other names than his own; some of these purchases being made in the names of his sons, and some in the name of his son-in-law and of his brother. It is very much the habit in India to make purchases in the names of others, and, from whatever cause or causes the practice may have arisen, it has existed for a series of years, and these transactions are known as "Benamtee transactions;" they are noticed, at least, as early as the year 1778, in Mr. Justice Hyde's notes, where, in a case that came before him in that year, Doe dem. Tilluck Seal v. Gour Hurry Day (Morton's Dec. 249), the practice is thus mentioned: "In mere personal demands, such as Ben-[73]-gal bonds, the Courts have upon consideration determined that the action may be brought in the name of the person whose name is on the instrument, though it should be proved that he had no real interest in it. And the Court has so far complied with the very general practice in this country of using the names of other persons in mere personal demands, that in many cases the Plaintiff had recovered on notes not in his own name, but in some other name, giving evidence that the transaction was really his; such for instance, that the money lent was his, and that he took the Bond in the name of another." Then he speaks thus in reference to real estate: "but it cannot be allowed to be both ways; in the case of a dispute of land, without directly contradicting those former decisions of the Court."

In a much more recent case, which occurred in Sir Edward Ryan's time, Maha Raneer Bussnut Comaree v. Bullohdeb and others, reported in Fulton, 383, which report Sir Edward Ryan informs us is substantially accurate, it is said, "As far as the evidence goes, for there was no proof of the deed, the transaction is a simply benamtee one, in the name of the complainant, but in truth for the benefit of Rajah Tez Chunder. It may be for religious purposes, but the question raised, whether the Court will recognise a benamtee trusteeship, or a trust upon a trust, does not arise. It being once established, then, that the transaction is 'benamtee,' the circumstance of the receipts being in the name of the complainant proves nothing, that being in accordance with benamtee usages. The complainant, therefore, has no title to call for the account, and the bill must be dismissed."

Other cases were mentioned in the course of the [74] argument, which came before the Sudder and other Courts, to the same effect. The law upon this subject was recognised by the Judicial Committee, in 1843, in the case of Dhurm Das Pandey v. Mussumat Shama Soondri Dibiah (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 229), where Lord Campbell, in delivering the opinion of the Court, at page 240, says, "We have heard from the highest authority, from the authority of Sir Edward East and Sir Edward Ryan (whose most valuable assistance we have in this case, and it gives me a confidence that I should not otherwise have felt), that the criterion in these cases in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid. Here there has been no evidence given that the Appellant had any separate property, or that it was from his funds that any part of the purchase money was paid; therefore, I think, that so far on this part of the case no difficulty can be entertained, and that the whole of the property must be considered as joint property."

It is clear, and their Lordships are confirmed by the opinion of Sir Edward Ryan, that the knowledge and assent of the person in whose name the purchase is made is immaterial: to repeat the language of Lord Campbell, the criterion is, the quarter from which the money comes, and in the greater number of instances of benamie purchases they are made in the names of persons ignorant at the time of their being so made. In the present instance there is no question but that all the money was provided by Rogoram Gosain: that is indisputable. I do not allude now to whether the money was the joint property of Rogoram Gosain and his brother. It is clear it was not the money of the individual in whose name the purchase was effected. [75] If then the person in whose name the purchase was effected had been a stranger in blood, or only a distant relative, no question could have arisen: he would have been prima facie a trustee, and if he desired to contend that the prima facie character of the transaction was not its real character, the burthen would have rested on him; but the individual in whose name the present purchase was effected was the son, and at that time the only son, of the person who made the purchase, and whose money it was, and it has been contended that that circumstance changes the presumption, and that what would be the presumption in the case of a stranger does not exist between father and son: that the presumption is advancement, and that, therefore, the burthen of proof is shifted. Now, on this, as far as their Lordships can learn, there is no authority in Indian law, no distinct case, or dictum, establishing or recognising such a principle, or such a rule. It is clear that in the case of a stranger the presumption is in favour of its being a benamie transaction, that is a trust: but it is clear also that in this country, where the person in whose name the purchase is made is one for whom the party making the purchase was under an obligation to provide, the case is different: and it is said that that ought to be deemed the law of India also, not because it is the law of England, but because it is founded on reason and the fitness of things, if I may use the expression, or natural justice, that on such grounds it ought to be considered the law of India. Now, their Lordships are not satisfied that this view of the rule is accurate, and that it is not one merely proprii juris. Probable as it may be, that a man may wish to pro-[76]-vide for his son to a certain extent, and though it may be his duty to do so, yet there are other considerations belonging to the subject; among others, a man may object to making his child independent of him in his lifetime, placing him in such a position as to enable him to leave his father's house and to die, leaving infant heirs, thus putting the property out of the control of the father. Various reasons may be urged against the abstract propriety of the English rule. It is merely one of positive law, and not required by any rule of natural justice to be incorporated in any system of laws, recognising a purchase by one man in the name of another, to be for the benefit of the real purchaser. Their Lordships, therefore, are not prepared to act against the general rule, even in the absence of peculiar circumstances; but in India there is what would make it particularly objectionable, namely, the impropriety or immorality of making an unequal division of property among children. This might be more striking where there were more sons than one; but if the objection exists, it does not become less where there is only one son, for the father may have others, and in such a case the same objectionable consequences would follow as where several sons were in being. The note on this subject is clearly stated in W. H. Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," which we learn from Sir Edward Ryan is cited as an authority in the Courts of Bengal. In the first volume, p. 2, he says, "The most approved conclusion appears to be, that the inchoate right arising from birth, and the relinquishment by the occupant (whether effected by death or otherwise) conjointly create this right, the inchoate right which previously existed becoming perfected by the removal of the obstacle, [77] that is, by the death of the owner (natural or civil).

or his voluntary abandonment. In ancestral real property the right is always limited, and the sons, grandsons, and greatgrandsons of the occupant, supposing them to be free from those defects, mental or corporal, which are held to defeat the right of inheritance, are declared to possess an interest in such property equal to that of the occupant himself; so much so, that he is not at liberty to alienate it, except under special and urgent circumstances, or to assign a larger share of it to one of his descendants than to another. With respect to personal property of every description, whether ancestral or acquired, and with respect to real property acquired or recovered by the occupant, he is at liberty to make any alienation or distribution which he may think fit, subject only to spiritual responsibility. The property of the father being thus restricted in respect of ancestral real property, and Wills and Testaments being wholly unknown to the Hindoo law, it follows, for the sake of consistency, that they must be set aside, where they are at variance with the law; otherwise, a person would be competent to make a disposition to take effect after his death, to which he could not have given effect during his lifetime. A Will is nothing more or less than the legal declaration of a man's intentions, which he wills to be performed after his death; but willing to do that which the law has prohibited, cannot be held to be a legal declaration of a man's intentions. There may be a gift in contemplation of death, but a Will in the sense in which it is understood in the English law, is wholly unknown to the Hindoo system; and such gift can only be held valid under the same circumstances as those under [78] which an ordinary gift would be considered valid. What may be done inter vivos may not be done by Will. Of this description is the unequal distribution of ancestral real property. There are certain acts prohibited by the law, which, however, if carried into effect, cannot, according to the law of Bengal, be set aside, and which, though immoral, and (in one sense of the word) illegal, cannot be held to be invalid. For instance, a father, though declared to have absolute power over property acquired by himself, is prohibited from making an unequal distribution of such property among his sons, by preferring one or excluding another, without sufficient cause. This has been declared in the Dáyabhaga to be a precept not a positive law; and it is therein laid down, that a gift or transfer under such circumstances is not null; for a fact cannot be altered by a hundred texts. There is nothing inconsistent in this, as the doctrine is rather confirmatory of the text, which declares the absolute nature of the father's power over such property; but it has been held to extend to the legalising of an unequal distribution of ancestral real property, and thereby interpreted in direct opposition to a positive law, which declares the ownership of the father and son to be equal with respect to this description of property. But it cannot legitimately bear such a construction. It cannot be held to nullify an existing law, though it may be construed as declaring a precept inoperative with reference to the power expressly conferred by the law, or, in other words, to signify that an act may be legally right though morally objectionable."

It is their Lordships' opinion, therefore, that notwithstanding the Respondent was the only son of [79] Rogoram Gosain when the purchase was made, the objection in point of morality and of religion was a circumstance of conduct so strong, according to Hindoo principles, that it is not lightly to be assumed; it forms an objection against importing into the Hindoo law that rule of positive law which exists in England. I have omitted to observe that benamée purchases in the names of children, without any intention of advancement, are frequent in India; that is recognised in many cases, and, among others, in that of Amaree Tewaree v. Rai Rughoo Bun Suhai (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 366), where may be found this statement: "The present case does not appear to be at all of a nature with those benamée transactions which are prohibited by the Regulations, as Sheo Suhai, in making the purchase in the name of his eldest son, acted only in conformity to the general usage and custom of the country, against which the prohibitory enactment was never intended to apply."

Their Lordships are, therefore, satisfied, that according to the law by which this case must be governed, the presumption in favour of its being a benamée transaction is different from that which would have existed by the law of England. It is, therefore, upon this point of view that their Lordships must look at the evidence, and to this test it must be submitted. In this case it is on the Respondent to prove whether what was prima facie the nature of the transaction, was really not so. It might, of course, be a very different thing if the burthen of proof were the other way, and the Appellant had to show the opposite state of the case. Now, the Supreme Court, without saying it, has held that the presumption was not against the Respondent, and has certainly not held that it [80] was in favour of the Appellant, and this is a position of law on which their Lordships find themselves compelled to differ from the able judgment under review. This relieves the case from the difficulty pressed, that the case ought to be very strong before, on a mere question of fact, a Court, constituted as this is, should dissent from the Court in India, before which the witnesses were examined, and which possessed such peculiar means for arriving at a correct conclusion. We have, as I have said, to look at the evidence from a different point, and to submit it to a different test. Now, on this evidence, their Lordships are not sure it would be right to dissent from the expressions on the subject in the very able judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Colvile, in the name of the whole Court; one is, that in which he speaks of the evidence as unsatisfactory at best, and the other is this: "Now, although several witnesses have been examined, and a large mass of documentary evidence has been put in on both sides, we cannot say that the evidence, on the one side or on the other, is conclusive upon the question of intention." If that is a correct view of the evidence, as it is likely to be, the result is favourable to the Appellant and not to the Respondent, because the burthen is on the Respondent, and the evidence being assumed to be correctly viewed in the passage I have just stated, he does not discharge himself of the burthen. To enter into the evidence a little more in detail, the grounds on which the Respondent relies, are the age of the Respondent at the time of the purchase, the English form of conveyance, the accounts kept by the father in his books, including particularly the debit of Rs. 64,000 in the name of the Respondent, the different mode in which this purchase with [81] the purchase of Chattra, were treated in the books of the father from purchases made in the names of other persons; a document submitted to him as a case in another cause, containing a statement of his title, though this is claimed on each side; certain letters relating to the property; certain memorials addressed, one to Mr. Thompson, the Deputy Collector of Hooghly, and another to the Deputy Governor of Bengal, relating to the tenure of the property, and parol evidence as to conversations; to which may be added the evidence of the conduct of the Respondent and Appellant after their father's death, which happened in 1842, the benefit of which is claimed on each side.

With regard to the age of the Respondent, their Lordships are of opinion, that no weight is to be attributed to it: they believe it to be as usual to buy in the names of minor children as of others, and in this particular family another purchase, the Buttollah house, was made in the name of this very child, the Respondent, when not much older than he was when the purchase in question was made. The form of the conveyance was insisted on to show that the father wished the English law to apply in this case; but their Lordships are of opinion, that though the observation was a fair one to make, it would not be right to give weight to a deduction which, if I may say so, seemed to be too far fetched. As to the books, it seems impossible to extract from them anything favourably to either side, for their Lordships are not satisfied that they are not kept irregularly. As to the price of Rs. 64,000 debited to the Respondent, it does not appear until some years after the purchase—a singular mode of keeping the [82] accounts in any event; but, considering the other entries in the books, the conclusion to which their Lordships would come, if obliged to come to any, would be, that it was an account of a transaction in the name of a person rather than an account with a person. As to these talooks being treated after a certain time in a different way to the other purchases, this might give rise to some observations, but when the question arises whether an estate prima facie belonging to one shall be taken from him on account of entries in ill kept books, which may be accounted for in many ways, and he whose books they were had gone to his grave, it appears too unsafe to give this particular explanation to a circumstance which is possibly unsusceptible of any explanation, and which the father, if living, would probably have not been able to explain. With regard to the evidence of Carter and Storm, and the letter to Storm, and the memorials to Mr. Thompson and Colonel Morison, their Lordships think they are explained by the legal nature of the title. In one case before Sir Edward Ryan, which I mentioned just now, the mode of giving receipts for rent and management was held to pass no legal ownership, and their Lordships think these documents are to be explained on that theory. Parol evidence is given of conversations during the life of the father, who died in 1842, but at this distance of time their Lordships think it would be unsafe to allow the title at law to be affected by them. Their Lordships having to consider the evidence from a different point of view to the Supreme Court, are of opinion, that if this were a time close on the death of the father, their view of the evidence would be rather unfavourable, than favourable, to the Respondent; but it is [83] sufficient that the evidence prove neither one thing nor the other. This, perhaps, was but a just estimate of it; but if not, the conclusions which I have before given would be.

We then come to the conduct of the brothers after the father's death—conduct to which much weight cannot be attributed either way; it would seem that parts of their mode of dealing with the property are in favour of the Respondent, and parts in favour of the Appellant, but no part of their conduct can be considered as wholly belonging to or supporting the theory of either party; they continued a considerable time after the death of the father, and after the Respondent came of age, to receive jointly the proceeds of the talook in question, and this conduct of the Respondent is rendered remarkable by the evidence of Ruggobanchunder Lahoree, the brother-in-law of the Respondent. His evidence is in these terms:—"I am the son-in-law of the late Rogoram Gosain. I married his daughter in 1836, and have lived ever since in his family house at Serampore, and live there still. The title deeds of the family property were kept in a room adjoining one which Rogoram used as his office, in his family house; all the family documents were kept in that room; some papers may have been lying about in another room, but, generally speaking, all deed and papers were kept in the room I speak of. I know the two talooks, Gheritty and Chattra. There were title deeds belonging to both of them; and in the lifetime of Rogoram, these deeds were kept in separate tin boxes, in the room I have spoken of, next to Rogoram's office, and of which Rogoram himself kept the key, up to the time of his illness. He then handed the key to me, and I re-[84]-tained it up to the time of his (Rogoram's) death; and I then gave it to Gungapersaud Gosain, Rogoram's eldest son. I gave him the key about six or eight months after Rogoram's death, and it may have remained with him ever since. Rogoram died in 1842; and his son, Gungapersaud, is about twenty years old, and Gopeekrist a year or two younger." On his cross-examination he says, "I gave up the key to Gungapersaud after his father's death. Rogoram gave me the key when he became ill, and told me to give it to Gungapersaud."

We must then remember the whole course of conduct on the part of the Respondent and the Appellant, who were in joint receipt of the rents, having possession of the title deeds, and who, therefore, knew what the title was. Stress has been laid on the accounts kept of Mr. Rattray's loan, by which it was said to appear that a sum of money which the Appellant refused to lend, was carried to the Respondent's account as for Gheritty. Their Lordships are of opinion that it would be unsafe to give such a character to the transaction; they think that it probably was, that the sum was to be debited in some way to the Respondent rather than to the Appellant, and that it was not intended to affix any particular character to the account in which it might be found. Their Lordships, however, think that the views which the sons may have taken of the matter are of very little importance; they may have mistaken their rights, and their conduct can only be material as being that of persons knowing what the father's intention was, and as, therefore, proving that intention; but it appears that they had no means of knowledge beyond what the Court at Calcutta and the Court here [85] have, for there is no trace of any communication having passed between their father and them, and, therefore, their conduct since the father's death does not afford any valid ground for changing the view of the case which would have prevailed at the death of the father if it had just occurred.

On the whole, it is not necessary to express any dissent, or, at least, to any great extent, from the view taken by the Supreme Court of the evidence. The Court thought it was not conclusive, their Lordships may say the same; the presumption, however, remains in favour of the Appellant: but if the evidence is to be taken as of any value, their Lordships view it that it is rather in favour of the Appellant than of the Respondent. Another point arises, but the case seems hardly touched by the pleadings. It appears that Rogoram Gosain and his brother formed a joint family, their property was joint, and there is no proof that the Rs. 64,000 were not part of the joint property: if they were, and perhaps the true inference may be that it was joint property, both families would have been interested in these purchases; but the family of the father's brother are bought off: this would leave the property part of the joint family property of Rogoram Gosain, in which case it would belong to the two sons. If this view is open on the pleadings, which we do not say, the Appellant would on this ground be entitled. On the whole, then, their Lordships feel bound respectfully to dissent from the judgment of the Supreme Court. The dismissal of the Bill cannot, therefore, stand: there are no costs to be dealt with, the Bill having been dismissed without costs. Their Lordships will declare that the purchase was a benamie purchase, and will [86] also declare the party in whose name it was made was a trustee for the father, and that the property in question was part of the father's estate at the time of his death.

Mr. Dickens suggested that the declaration should extend to Chattra, to avoid chances of further litigation between the parties, which was agreed to by the Appellant's Counsel and the Court.

Their Lordships made the following report, which was confirmed by Her Majesty's Order in Council:—Declare that the purchases by the late Rogoram Gosain, in the pleadings mentioned, of, amongst others, the talooks, Gheritty and Chattra, with their appurtenances, severally comprised in the indenture of lease and release, dated the 12th and 13th days of July, 1825, and the indenture of lease and release dated the 29th and 30th days of January, 1832, in the name of the Appellant and Respondent respectively, as in the pleadings mentioned, were and are benamie transactions, and that the Appellant and Respondent thereby severally became and thenceforth continued, and were, up to and at the time of the death of their father, Rogoram Gosain, trustees respectively for him, as the absolute and beneficial owner of each of the two talooks respectively, with their appurtenances aforesaid. And that it ought to be further declared that talooks, Gheritty and Chattra, respectively, with their appurtenances aforesaid, were, at the time of the death of Rogoram Gosain, integral parts of the estate and property of him, Rogoram Gosain, and that execution upon the judgment (if any) in the action of ejectment in the pleadings mentioned, and all [87] proceedings in the action, ought to be stayed, and that in case the possession shall have been changed under any execution issued upon the judgment, such possession ought to be restored as the same stood before such execution was issued: and their Lordships are further of opinion that the cause ought to be remitted back to the Supreme Court, with directions to the Supreme Court to give effect to this report and to Her Majesty's Order made thereupon: and their Lordships not thinking fit to deal with the costs incurred as aforesaid, do recommend the Supreme Court to deal with the costs of the parties incurred and to be incurred in the Court below, as to the Supreme Court, having regard to the declarations and directions aforesaid, shall seem just (a).

[88] DWARKA DOSS.—Appellant; BABOO JANKEE DOSS.—Respondent *
[Feb. 6, 7, 1855].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra.

In an action by a banking firm against another firm to recover a balance upon an account between them, the Plaintiff put in evidence the account-books of his firm, and the Inspector of the Court certified that the books were regularly kept, consistently with the rules of banking, and that they agreed with the account rendered by the Plaintiff to the Defendant. The Plaintiff, however, examined no witness to prove that the books were regularly kept, or the general accuracy of the particular charges constituting the demand; he proved admissions by the Defendant of the correctness of the account and of an award in his favour of one of the disputed items. The Defendant in his defence did not deny the accuracy of the Appellant's account, or of the books put in evidence, but objected to two items in the account, and claimed a set-off, but examined no witnesses to rebut the Plaintiff's case.

Held (reversing the Sudder Court's decree) that although the Plaintiff's books, and the Inspector's report, were not conclusive evidence, yet that the necessity of strict proof was removed by the admission of the Defendant, and the fact of the absence by him of any evidence to impeach the accuracy of the accounts, the disputed items being satisfactorily accounted for.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Court at Agra, which reversed a decree of the Sudder Ameen of the Zillah Court of Benares, in the Appellant's favour, in an action brought by him in that Court against the Respondent for recovery of Rs. 20,119. 3a. 9p., the alleged amount of the balance due to him of an account between them. Both parties were bankers, having houses of business at Calcutta and Benares.

The facts of the case and the pleadings are so fully stated in the judgment as to render any further statement unnecessary.

[89] The case was argued by Mr. Leith and Mr. Fulton for the Appellant, and Mr. W. H. Watson, Q.C., and Mr. Field, for the Respondent.

The argument was confined to the question of the sufficiency of the evidence adduced by the Appellant of the balance claimed upon the accounts between him and the Respondent. The Respondent insisted that the account books of the Appellant were not admissible or sufficient evidence of his liability. On the other hand, the Appellant submitted that there were sufficient admissions made by the Respondent by the pleadings and evidence of the disputed items, coupled with the fact of his not going into evidence to rebut the Appellant's case, to sustain the judgment of the Zillah Court.

The authorities cited were Baboo Bonee Suharee v. Baboo Hurkishen Doss (2 Knapp, P.C. Cases, 255; and see Rai Sri Kishen v. Rai Huri Kishen, 5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 132, and authorities collected at p. 446), and Macpherson "On Civil Procedure," pp. 255, 271.

The judgment of their Lordships was pronounced by

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh (Feb. 10, 1855).—In this case, an action was brought by the Appellant against the Respondent to recover the alleged balance of an account. Some evidence was given on the part of the Plaintiff. No evidence whatever was given on the part of the Defendant; and the sole question which their

* Present: The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh, the Right Hon. Lord Justice Knight Bruce, the Right Hon. Sir Edward Ryan, and the Right Hon. Lord Justice Turner.

Lordships have to consider is this, whether such a case is made out on the part of the Plaintiff as to call for an answer on the part of [90] the Defendant, and, in default of any answer being given, to entitle him to a verdict.

The Appellant and Respondent are both bankers in extensive business in India. The Appellant has one house of business in Benares, and another in Calcutta. The Respondent has a house of business in Benares, and none at Calcutta. He has other houses of business, at Patna, Chuprah, and various other places in India. The Benares firm of the Respondent employed the Calcutta firm of the Appellant as their agents, and this agency continued for a great number of years. The transactions were extremely extensive, and it is represented on the part of the Respondent that they amounted, as he says, to "lacs upon lacs of rupees." It would be in the ordinary course of such business that the account should be regularly transmitted in each year by the agents of the house to the principal, showing the transactions which had taken place, and the balance which resulted upon those accounts. And it is reasonable to presume that that which was the ordinary course was pursued in this case. It is so alleged on the part of the Appellant, and is nowhere distinctly denied on the part of the Respondent.

On the close of the account in the year 1849 (the mercantile year ending, as we take it from the papers, in the month of July or August), an account was delivered by the Appellant to the Respondent in respect of the transactions between the Respondent's Benares firm and the Appellant's Calcutta firm, on which a balance of between Rs. 18,000 and Rs. 19,000 was shown to be due from the Respondent to the Appellant. Payment of this balance was demanded: and it is stated on the part of the Appellant that one item, [91] constituting a portion of that balance, was objected to: an item of Rs. 4800 and odd. That was an item which had not occurred in the year to which the account related, but two or three years before, and it consisted of the value of certain gold coins which had been sent by the Appellant, or by his firm, to the Respondent, but which the Respondent alleged had never been received by him.

This matter, it is agreed on all sides, was referred to arbitration, and an award was made, as the Appellant alleged, by which that point was decided in his favour.

The Respondent persisting in a refusal to pay this balance, on the 24th of December, 1849, the plaint in this suit was filed. The plaint alleged the facts which I have already stated, but it was not until the 12th of April, 1850, that the Respondent filed any answer to that plaint. The effect of that answer is very fairly stated in the Respondent's case. He says, that "he denies the correctness of the Appellant's claim, and claims a nonsuit." In effect, he pleads what may be called a general issue. "He also insists that the suit was not properly brought at Benares;" and he makes various other technical objections. He then "alleges that the Appellant has included in his claim a sum of Rs. 1500 relating to the Chuprah agency, of which no particulars are given." He then states as an objection, that various other items in respect of other agencies are not included in this account. He objects to the award on the grounds of want of notice, and of partiality and misconduct: and states that "the parcel in question was never dispatched from Calcutta, and claims fuller details of the Appellant's accounts."

The agency, therefore, and the fact of the submis-[92]-sion to arbitration, are admitted. The regular transmission of the accounts is not denied, but he disputes two items in these accounts, or alleged to be contained in these accounts, and he raises a set-off in respect of other transactions, on account of other business transacted with the other firms of which he is a member.

On the 15th of May, 1850, the Appellant files his replication, and in that replication he denies the Respondent's alleged set-off. With respect to the item of Rs. 1500 for the Chuprah agency, he says, that no such item is contained in the account, and he denies the partiality of the arbitrator which is alleged in his answer. He then says, that the accounts which he has transmitted are in the possession of the Respondent. He offers to produce his own accounts: he appeals to the accounts of the Defendant in his books, and he then distinctly calls the attention of the Court to this, that he has not denied the accuracy of the general accounts between them.

To this replication the Respondent might, if he pleased, have filed a rejoinder. But he did not think fit to adopt that course, and the period within which the rejoinder ought to have been filed having elapsed, on the 27th of June, 1850, issues between the parties were settled by the Judge. These issues were as follows:—"In this suit Plaintiff should produce the day-book and journal, and show evidence to prove the balance in his favour, and also substantiate the award of the arbitrator respecting the item of Rs. 4000 mentioned in the petition of plaint, and should also substantiate the statement that Defendant admitted all the items of his claim with the exception of the item set down as lost in its passage by Dāk. And Defendant should refute the points stated above, and [93] should prove the falsity of Plaintiff's claim." And it is ordered "that both parties do file in one week all the evidence for or against the claim which is the subject of dispute."

Now, the Appellant's books were in Calcutta, and it was impossible for him to produce those books within the time limited by this order. But on the 25th of July, 1850, he presented a petition to the Court, filing the award, which was one of the points upon which evidence was to be given, and stating that he had copies of several accounts for, I think, four, five, or six years between himself and the Respondent, the originals of which had been delivered to the Respondent, and that he would file those accounts in order that they might be examined by the Respondent, and that as soon as the books arrived at Calcutta, those books should be produced in verification of those accounts.

On the 17th of August, 1850, those books were produced and were filed, and the books were handed over to a person of the name of Kunhya Lall, for the purpose of examination and inspection, according to the ordinary course of the Court. The order, addressed to the Inspector, was in these terms:—"You are, therefore, requested to appear in Court, and in the presence of both parties or their agents, to inspect or compare Plaintiff's account books, and file a report of the correctness or incorrectness of the same." This was to be done in the presence of both parties, and, accordingly, the Plaintiff's agents attended before the Inspector. The Defendant's agent did not think fit to appear until an order had been made by the Court, which was pronounced about a week afterwards, that in default of appearance on the part of the Defendant the Inspector should proceed [94] ex parte. Hereupon the Defendant's agent did attend, and objected: and the objection which he made was this: not that those books were not the genuine accounts which had been kept at Calcutta, not that those books were incorrect in their general statement; on the contrary, the Inspector reports that the Defendant's agent upon his attendance inspected those accounts, and stated that they were generally accurate; but he alleged, that with respect to one item in these accounts, a parcel of sugar, which had been sold five or six years before, he wished for further explanation; and that inasmuch as the earliest of those accounts included a balance of still earlier accounts, he wished those earlier accounts to be produced. The Inspector told him that he either could not or did not think it was his duty to comply with these requisitions; but that if any objections were pointed out, either to a particular item, or to the general accuracy of the accounts, or if anything was produced on the part of the Defendant showing that those accounts were defective by reason of errors in the earlier accounts, he would pay attention to those objections. The agent attended again on the following day, and repeated the same objections, and, upon those objections being disallowed, he stated that he would apply to the Court for an order giving directions as to the Inspector's proceedings. He took no step whatever in pursuance of this threat, if I may so call it; he never attended again before the Inspector, and the Inspector, therefore, proceeded ex parte with the examination of those accounts. He made his report on the 5th of September, 1850, and the result of that report was this, that he had fully investigated and examined those accounts, that the accounts had been regularly kept, that with two trifling exceptions, not necessary [95] to be particularly adverted to, the accounts in the books corresponded with the accounts alleged to have been delivered to the Respondent, and that it was proved to him, by the production of various letters from the Respondent to the Appellant, that those accounts so alleged to have been delivered, actually had been delivered, it being found, of course, that there was this balance, subject to a trifling modification due from the Respondent to the Appellant.

Now, the Inspector's report is evidence, but not conclusive evidence, and it is open to the parties to contradict, by evidence produced on the other side, the statements contained in that report. No "refutation," however (as it is called), of that report was filed by the Respondent. But, on the 9th of September, 1850, he presented a petition praying to be at liberty then to go into evidence for the purpose of refuting that report, and he was told that as long as the case remained open until the record was closed, it was perfectly competent to him to go into evidence. He had asked for three weeks. In point of fact, at least two months had elapsed, before the matter came on for hearing, but not one particle of evidence was produced during that period on the part of the Respondent in "refutation" (as he calls it) of this report. The other evidence produced by the Appellant in the action was this: He produced the award which had been made, and he proved by the examination of the arbitrator who had made that award, the submission (which was not denied), and the fact that he had made that award after a careful examination, not only of all the documents in the possession of the Appellant, but of the letters and books in the possession of [96] the Respondent, and that he came to the conclusion that the item of Rs. 4811 had been properly charged by the Appellant to the Respondent, and that with respect to the item of Rs. 1500 that belonged to another account, and was not included in the Benares account. He proved further that this award, of which the Respondent affected to know nothing, had been actually signed in the presence of the Respondent's agent, that one copy had been delivered to the Appellant, and the other copy had been delivered to a person called Gobundkur Doss, for the purpose of being handed over to the Respondent. The fact of this award being made, and made under the circumstances I have stated, was confirmed by the evidence of another person, a witness who was present, and who speaks to those facts. The Appellant went further into evidence for the purpose of proving the various admissions alleged to have been made by the Respondent, by which, as it was stated, he had consented to pay the balance of the account, provided this particular item of Rs. 4800 were deducted. Four or five witnesses were produced for the purpose of establishing those allegations.

The evidence upon these admissions was dissected with consummate ability by Mr. Field, on behalf of the Respondent. The Judge in the Zillah Court does not appear to have placed much reliance upon those witnesses, and the Judges of the Superior Court were of opinion that considering the usages and habits of India, it was entirely incredible that such conversations could have taken place. And the experience of one of their Lordships, who is familiar with that country, confirms in that respect the opinions of the Judges. But upon the other [97] evidence, on the 3rd of November, 1850, the Judge of the Zillah Court pronounced a judgment which I must say entitles him to very great credit. He examines the case with the utmost care. He discusses the principles upon which the judgment is to be founded. He gives his opinion as to the weight to be attributed to each distinct portion of the evidence, and he comes to the conclusion, that in the absence of all evidence on the part of the Defendant (who produced no evidence whatever), there was sufficient to entitle the Plaintiff to the judgment which he claimed. And, accordingly, judgment was pronounced in his favour for the amount of the debt, with costs.

On the 30th of December, 1850, the Respondent presented a petition for a review of that judgment, and the first paragraph in the petition for review strongly confirms the view which their Lordships take of this case, namely, that the real question between the parties were these and these only: first, as to the accuracy of the two items complained of in the Plaintiff's account of Rs. 1500 and Rs. 4800; and, on the other hand, the set-off alleged on the part of the Defendant, the fact of the balance being turned in his favour, as he alleged, by various other accounts subsisting between the parties, and which ought to be taken into consideration when they were dealing with the Benares account. For in that petition for review he states, "The following was substantially the reply which the Petitioner made to the above-named charge, namely, that according to the accounts, Petitioner has large sums to receive from Plaintiff on account of agencies in other Districts, and that the present suit cannot be brought against Petitioner."

[98] That petition of review was refused, and on the 31st of December he presented a regular petition of appeal.

The appeal came on for hearing on the 20th of April, 1852, and the Judges of the Sudder Court reversed the judgment of the Zillah Court, and they appear to have proceeded upon three grounds: First, that the accounts had not been satisfactorily made out. Secondly, that the award was not sufficiently proved, and it was in itself open to great suspicion. And, thirdly, that the evidence proving or affecting to prove the admissions of the Respondent was not worthy of credit.

On the last of these grounds their Lordships are not, as I have already intimated, disposed to differ from the Judges of the Sudder Court. But we feel ourselves unable to agree with them upon the other two grounds of their Judgment. It is perfectly true that the regular proof of books and accounts, requires that the clerks who have kept those accounts, or some person competent to speak to the facts, should be called to prove that they have been regularly kept, and to prove their general accuracy. But the question is, whether having regard to the issue joined between these parties, and the facts which must be taken to have been impliedly admitted between them, and to what took place before the Inspector when those books were produced to him, whether, having regard to these circumstances, the necessity of that strict proof was not removed, and whether it is possible for the Court to hold that any doubt can exist as to the genuineness of those accounts, or as to the accuracy of those accounts, excepting in the par-[99]-ticulars to which objections have been specifically made, and which objections had been distinctly, and in our opinion properly, overruled.

Now, their Lordships are of opinion, that what had taken place was abundantly sufficient to remove the objection on the ground of the absence of that strict proof. It appears that witnesses, to afford that proof, had been tendered for examination, that a commission issued at Calcutta for the purpose, and that that commission had been returned without any evidence being taken under it. It is alleged that it happened by mistake. There is no proof of that. Of course, therefore, we do not at all found our judgment upon that. But having regard to the fact that the genuineness of those books was not disputed when they were offered to the Inspector, and that their accuracy was not disputed by the Respondent's agent, who attended to examine them, but that, on the contrary, their general accuracy was admitted; that the accounts contained in those books had been for several months open to the inspection of the Respondent, with power to him to point out any inaccuracies, if any inaccuracies existed, and that he had in his own possession means at any moment of disproving the accuracy of those books (if inaccurate they were) by the production of his own accounts, books, and vouchers, their Lordships are of opinion that there was a prima facie case for the establishment of those accounts, and that then the only question was, whether the particular items objected to had been made out by the Appellant, and whether the set-off alleged on the part of the Respondent had been established.

Now, with respect to the award, the Judges of the Sudder Court state, that it is open to great suspicion [100] on the ground that the award was not made for more than twelve months after the submission to arbitration. Their Lordships cannot think that that is a sufficient ground for doubting the fact of the award having been made. Some determination must have been come to under the submission, which is not denied; and the fact of that award having been made is distinctly sworn to by the arbitrator who made it, and by another witness who was present upon the occasion of its being signed.

Upon the whole, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion, that the judgment of the Sudder Court must be reversed, that the judgment of the Zillah Court must be re-established, and that the costs of the proceedings in the Sudder Court must be paid by the Respondent to the Appellant; but that considering the great weight which is to be attributed to the judgment of the Sudder Court, and the doubt which unquestionably exists upon some parts of the case, it will not be fit to award any costs of the proceedings in this Court.

[101] RAJA LELANUND SING BAHADOOR,—Appellant: THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL,—Respondent * [June 13, 14, and 15, 1855].

On appeal from the Court of the Special Commissioners for the Districts of Calcutta and Moorshedabad.

By the tenure of Ghatwally, the lands are held under a grant from the ruling power, by the performance of the defined duty of the Ghatwal guarding the Ghats or passes.

Upon the death of the Ghatwal last seised, the lands descend entire to a male heir, as Ghatwal.

Exposition of the principles which induced the Government to recognise the title of the Zemindars in Bengal, as landowners, and to make the Settlement with them for a permanent annual jumma.

Under the provisions of the Decennial Settlement of 1789, the Bengal Government, in 1790, assessed the whole of the Zemindary of Khuruckpore, including certain Ghatwally lands, as a fixed jumma. This Settlement was made perpetual in 1796, under Ben. Reg. I., of 1793, at the same fixed jumma. In 1838, the Government set up a claim to resume, for the purpose of revenue assessment, the Ghatwally lands in this Zemindary. Such claim dismissed, by reason,—

First. That the Ghatwally lands were part of the Zemindary of Khuruckpore, and were included in the Permanent Settlement of the Zemindary, and covered by the jumma assessed on that Zemindary; and Second. That lands of Ghatwally tenure were not liable to resumption under cl. 4, sec. 8, Ben. Reg. I., of 1793, as included in allowances made to Zemindars for Tannah, or police establishments.

In circumstances respecting the enforcement by Government of their claim to resume these lands, the Judicial Committee, in reversing the decree of the Special Commissioners, decreed all the costs incurred in the proceedings in India and in this Court, to be paid by the Bengal Government.

In this suit the Government of Bengal sought to establish their right to resume and assess with revenue certain Ghatwally lands, containing 755 beghas, [102] attached to Ghat Foujdar in Tuppa Dhumsaen, in Pergunnah Gorda, forming part of the Zemindary of Khuruckpore, situate in the District of Bhagulpore, in Behar, in the possession of Toofany Sing, as Ghatwal, on the ground that they were held as La-khiraj, without sufficient title to exemption from payment of revenue.

At the time when this suit was commenced, Maha Raja Rehmut Ali Khan was the Zemindar in possession of an extensive Zemindary and principality called the Khuruckpore estates, within which the lands in question were situate, and of which they had always formed part. Raja Biddianund Sing, since deceased, represented by the present Appellant, his son and heir, and one Balnath Sahoo, became during the progress of the suit the purchasers at public auction of that Zemindary, together with the rights of Maha Raja Rehmut Ali Khan therein, and they were subsequently as such auction purchasers made parties to the suit. The Khuruckpore estates, including the Raj and principality, had descended through a long line of ancestors on Maha Raja Rehmut Ali Khan. The Zemindary was in the possession of this family at the time of the accession of the East India Company to the Dewanny in 1765, and it had been in their possession from a period long anterior thereto.

The origin and nature of Ghatwal tenure is fully stated and explained in the judgment. It appears that long before 1765, the Zemindars of the Khuruckpore estates had created certain Ghatwally tenures for the purpose of protecting their Zemindary from the attacks of mountaineers and other turbulent people in their neighbourhood; and those tenures embraced the whole of the lands lying within the village of Dhum-[103]-saen, of which the lands in question had always formed part.

as well as lands in other villages belonging to and also forming part of the Khuruckpore estates. These lands, held in Ghatwally tenure, were apportioned and attached by the Zemindar to particular Ghats, or passes, including the Foujdar Ghat, to which were apportioned and attached, amongst other lands, the 755 beghas of land in question. At the same time persons were selected and appointed by the Zemindar to perform the duties of Ghatwals at those several Ghats, and as such to act as the servants and dependants of the Zemindary for the time being; and among those Ghatwals, the Zemindar, from time to time, allotted and apportioned the lands, which were held by them on condition of their performing those duties in lieu of wages, but subject also to the payment of a fixed rate of rent to the Zemindar for and in respect of the cultivated land allotted to them, and for and in respect of the land which they might thereafter bring into cultivation. These Ghatwals were appointed, and their lands were at the same time granted to them by formal sunuds and grants made and executed by the Zemindars, who thereby reserved to themselves the power of dismissing such Ghatwals, and appointing others in their stead as they might see fit, or if they failed to perform efficiently the services required of them. Thus a permanent guard was established under the absolute control of the Zemindar for the protection of his Zemindary and the Ryots, as well as travellers and wayfarers, according to the ancient custom of the country, and which custom still prevails throughout those Districts of India in immediate proximity to the mountain ranges, as a security against the inroads and at-[104]-tacks of the mountaineers and other turbulent people banded together for the purposes of robbery and plunder.

The proceedings out of which this appeal arose were commenced in the year 1836, by the Sudder Board of Revenue giving instructions to Mr. Travers, the Special Deputy Collector of the District of Bhagulpore, to investigate the question of the Ghatwally tenures, and the right of Government to revenue from the lands held by Ghatwals in his District.

Mr. Travers accordingly proceeded to make the inquiry, and, in May, 1838, eleven suits were instituted before him on behalf of Government against different Ghatwals to assert the Government's right to assess the Ghatwally lands in Tuppa Dhumsaen with revenue. In one of these suits, Toofany Sing of Ghat Foujdar was the Defendant, and the question there raised and which was the subject of this appeal, was the right of the Government to attach and resume for non-payment of revenue these 755 beghas of land. The proceedings, to which Toofany Sing was a party, involved the same question as that in the ten other suits, and the question with regard to them was agreed to be determined by the result of his suit.

A summary of the various proceedings before the Collector and Special Commissioners, and their respective decrees, will be found in their Lordships' judgment.

By a final decree, dated the 27th of June, 1845, made by the Special Commissioner, Mr. Moore, in favour of the Government, these lands were directed to be resumed and assessed under cl. 4, sec. 8, Reg. I. of 1793, as being granted for police establishments.

[105] The present appeal was from this decree.

At the hearing, two grounds were taken by the Appellant against the Government's right of resumption. First, that Ghatwally lands were by the nature of their tenure held by, and formed part of, the Zemindary of Khuruckpore, and were included in the Decennial Settlement made between the Zemindar and Government in 1790, by which the Zemindary of Khuruckpore was assessed at a fixed jumma, which Settlement was made permanent by Ben. Reg. I. of 1793, and that such Settlement could not now be reopened. Second, that even if these lands were not included in the Permanent Settlement, they were exempt from resumption for taxation by the State, as they had been held for sixty years, from the date of the Company's accession to the Dewanny, without paying rent, which operated as a prescriptive bar to the Government's right to resume.

The Bengal Government relied upon their right to resume and assess these lands under Ben. Reg. I. of 1793, sec. 8, cl. 4, and contended, that previously to the passing of that Regulation, respecting the Permanent Settlement of the revenue, the produce of the Ghatwally lands was appropriated by the Zemindar to the maintenance of the Tannah, or police establishments; and by that Regulation, in consequence of the Government having taken upon itself the charge of maintaining the police of the country, lands of that tenure were made liable to assessment of revenue, in addition to the jumma assessed on the Zemindary by the Permanent Settlement, and that the jumma assessed by the Permanent Settle-[106]-ment on the Zemindary of Khuruckpore, in fact, included no sum assessed in respect of the produce appropriated from these lands to the maintenance of the police establishments.

The authorities referred to on these points were:—

At the conclusion of the argument, judgment was postponed, and was now delivered by

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh (July 25, 1855).—The question to be decided in this case is the validity of a claim made by the East India Company to resume, for the purposes of revenue assessment, [107] against the Raja of Khuruckpore, 755 beghas of land (between three and four hundred acres), part of his Zemindary. Their Lordships had no doubt, at the hearing of the appeal, as to the advice which it would be their duty to tender to Her Majesty; but it was stated that there were ten other suits which would be governed by the present decision, and it was obvious, from the nature of the claim, that if it could be maintained, it might affect a very great extent of land throughout the Provinces included in the Decennial Settlement. Their Lordships were, therefore, anxious to explain fully the grounds of their opinion, and by enabling parties to judge what cases will or will not fall within their decision, to prevent, as far as possible, further litigation.

The lands sought to be resumed, are of what is called Ghatwally tenure, and the great question in the case is, whether lands of this description are liable to be resumed under Regulation I. of 1793, sec. 8, cl. 4, relating to Tannah, or police establishments.

As the question depends on the effect of the Settlement of 1793, and the changes which were then introduced, it will be convenient to advert to the state of these Provinces, and the mode in which they were administered previously to that time. The three Provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, were ceded by the Mogul to the East India Company, in the year 1765.

At this time the territorial division of the country was into mouzas, or villages, occupied by Ryots; Pergunnahs, each of which included several villages; and Zemindaries, varying in extent, from a moderate English estate, to Districts equal to or larger than many European principalities. The Zemindary of Beerbhoom, which immediately adjoins Khuruckpore, is [108] stated in a document, dated in 1786, to which we shall have occasion to refer, to be twice as large as the Kingdom of Sardinia. Khuruckpore was probably of inferior but still of vast extent.

Many of the greater Zemindars, within their respective Zemindaries, were entrusted with rights, and charged with duties, which properly belonged to the Government. They had authority to collect from the Ryots a certain portion of the gross produce of the lands. They, in many cases, imposed taxes and levied tolls, and they increased their income by fees, perquisites, and similar exactions, not wholly unknown to more recent times and more civilised nations. On the other hand, they were bound to maintain peace and order, and administer justice within their Zemindaries, and, for that purpose, they had to keep up Courts of civil and criminal justice, to employ Kazees, Canoongoes, and Tannahdars, or a police force. But while, as against the Ryots and other inhabitants within their territories, many of these potentates exercised almost regal authority, they were, as against the Government, little more than stewards or administrators. Their Zemindaries were granted to them only from year to year; the amount of their jumma, or yearly payment to Government, was varied, or might be varied, annually; it was an arbitrary sum fixed by the Government officers, calculated upon the gross produce of the Zemindary from all sources, after making an allowance to the Zemindar for his maintenance, and for the expenses of the collection and of discharging the public duties with which he was entrusted by the Government. Amongst the lands thus granted to the Zemindars were often included lands which had been appropriated to the [109] payment and support of public officers of the Zemindaries, or villages included in them. These lands were called Chackeran lands; and it appears that under the ancient system such lands were usually exempted from assessment in favour of the Zemindar, though they had no legal title to exemption. But there was another class of lands called La-khiraj, which, by reason of a special exemption in a royal grant, or by having been legally devoted to religious uses, or by other means, had become or were claimed by their owners to be free from Khiraj, or assessment to the Government.

The police of the country was maintained by means of Tannahdars, or police officers, kept by the Zemindars, and appointed and paid by them; but, where no other provision existed for their maintenance, the expense was in effect defrayed by the Government, either by direct allowances to the Zemindar, or by deduction from his jumma, or by excluding from assessment, or assessing below their value, lands appropriated to that purpose by the Zemindar.

In addition to the police force thus kept by the Zemindar, at the expense of the Government, and which seems to have been usually very inefficient, private individuals and communities were accustomed to keep watchmen for the protection of their persons and property, under the name of Chokeedars, and various other names, who were paid by their employers, and from whom no allowance was made by the Government.

Besides the disorder which prevailed generally through the Provinces, particular Districts were exposed to ravages of a different description. The mountain or hill districts in India were at this time [110] inhabited by lawless tribes, asserting a wild independence, often of a different race and different religion from the inhabitants of the plains, who were frequently subjected to marauding expeditions by their more warlike neighbours. To prevent these incursions it was necessary to guard and watch the Ghats, or mountain passes, through which these hostile descents were made; and the Mahometan rulers established a tenure called Ghatwally tenure, by which lands were granted to individuals, often of high rank, at a low rent, or without rent, on condition of their performing these duties, and protecting and preserving order in the neighbouring Districts.

Nothing could be more deplorable than the state of the Provinces under this system. Murder and rapine were common throughout the country; more than half the lands were waste and uncultivated; and neither the Ryots nor the Zemindars had any inducement to improve them, as any increase in their value had only the effect of increasing the Government assessment.

It was considered by the East India Company that the first step towards a better system of government and the amelioration of the condition of their subjects would be to convert the Zemindars into landowners, and to fix a permanent annual jumma, or assessment to the Government, according to the existing value, so as to leave to the land proprietors the benefit of all subsequent improvements.

Accordingly, they determined to make the assessment in the first instance for a period of ten years, with a view to its being ultimately made permanent.

In 1789, the original Rules and Orders for the Decennial Settlement of Behar were issued; the Settle-[111]-ment in the other Provinces being issued in subsequent years.

In 1791, by Regulation LXXII., an amended Code of Regulations relative to the Decennial Settlement of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa was promulgated.

By section 1 of that Regulation it was provided, that a new settlement of the land revenue should be concluded for a period of ten years.

By section 2, it was provided, that it should be at the same time notified to the landowners with whom the settlement might be concluded, that the assessment fixed by the Decennial Settlement would be continued after the expiration of the ten years, and remain unalterable for ever, provided such continuance should meet the approbation of the Court of Directors.

By section 31, it was ordered, that the allowances of the Kazees and Canoongoes, heretofore paid by the landholders, as well as any public pensions hitherto paid through the landholders, be added to the amount of their jumma, and be in future paid by the Collectors on the part of Government.

The assessment was to be exclusive of all La-khiraj lands, whether exempt from Khiraj with or without authority.

The Chackeran lands, or lands held by public officers and private servants in lieu of wages, were not to be excluded, but were to be subject to assessment in common with the other lands in the Zemindary, the exemption which such lands had previously enjoyed being thus destroyed.

The landholders were declared responsible for the peace of their Districts as theretofore, and were to act agreeably to such Regulations on this head as might be thereafter enacted.

[112] The jumma was to be fixed by the Collectors on fair and equitable principles, with the reservation of the approbation of the Board of Revenue, to whom he was to report the grounds of his decision.

The Collectors, in fixing the jumma, were to adopt the following as a general rule:—that the average product of the land in common years be taken as the basis of the Settlement, and from this deductions be made, equal to the Malikana and Kurcha, leaving the remainder as the jumma of Government.

The Malikana is the allowance made to the Zemindar for his maintenance, and the disbursements and outgoings allowed to him against his receipts fall under the term "Kurcha."

At this period Raja Kadir Ali was the Zemindar of Khuruckpore. This Zemindary is situated in the Zilla of Baghulpore, on the frontier of the Province of Behar, and forms a considerable principality, including many Pergunnahs, and, amongst others, the Pergunnah of Gorda, in which the lands in dispute lie. A very large quantity of lands within this District had been granted by the ancestors of the Raja on the Ghatwally tenure before described. In the Tuppa of Dhumsaen, a subdivision of the Pergunnah of Gorda, no less than thirty-five villages were held at this time upon this tenure by Ghatwals, and, amongst others, the lands in question by an ancestor of the original Defendant in these proceedings.

The extent and particulars of these vast estates, and the nature of the Ghatwally tenures, were well known to the Government of Bengal at the time when the settlement was made. Some years before, in consequence of disturbances which had taken place in the country during the time of Kadir Ali's father, the Government had found it necessary to interfere [113] with a military force, and having displaced the then Raja and restored tranquillity, had placed the Zemindary under the charge of one of their own officers, Mr. Augustus Cleavland, who had the management of it up to the year 1781, about which time Kadir Ali (his father having died) was put into possession of the Raj.

It appears from evidence in the cause (the report of the Collector of Baghulpore, of the 19th of November, 1813), that Mr. Cleavland, during the time that he was in charge of these estates, had granted no less than 87,084 beghas of land in this and (we presume from the extent) the adjoining District upon Ghatwally tenure, in conformity with the orders of Government.

It appears from other evidence (in Mr. Sutherland's Report, dated the 8th of June, 1819) that the grants before Mr. Cleavland's time to the Ghatwals reserved a payment of two annas per begha, as a fee or perquisite to the Zemindar; that some sunuds were granted unadvisedly by Mr. Cleavland without such reservation, but that he afterwards insisted on such payment being made to the Government while he was in charge on behalf of the Government, and that all grants subsequently made by the Raja of Khuruckpore contained the same reservation.

In 1789-90 the jumma to be paid by Kadir Ali was to be fixed, with a view to the Permanent Settlement. As might be expected, considering the magnitude of the estate, it appears to have undergone great consideration. Every village was enumerated and entered in a register; the deductions and allowances to be made out of the income, and the particulars of the lands to be excepted from the assessment

(for some lands, called Nankar lands, were excepted), were the subject of correspondence between the Collector of [114] the District and the President and Board of Revenue at Fort William, and finally the jumma was fixed at Rs. 65,459. 8a. 10½p.

It is beyond dispute, and, indeed, in this case has been fairly admitted, that the Ghatwally lands formed part of the Zemindary. It is equally clear that they were included in, and covered by, this assessment. Had they been excluded, the accounts to show it are in the possession of the Government, and might have been produced; but the contrary is perfectly clear upon the evidence, and indeed is found as a fact in the cause by the Special Commissioner, Mr. Moore, in his judgment of the 17th of May, 1843.

Whether these lands were or were not productive of revenue to the Zemindar at this time, is not material: though, if it were important, a careful examination of the evidence has satisfied their Lordships that there was some profit derived from them by the Zemindar even in money; but, at all events, he derived the benefit arising from the services of the Ghatwals, and enjoyed the valuable right of appointing the individuals, who, with the lands, were to take upon themselves the duties of the office. It was not the intention of the Settlement that no lands should be covered by the jumma which did not actually produce income, and, therefore, contribute to increase the jumma at that time. On the contrary, probably more than half the lands in the country were waste and unproductive at this period, and one of the main objects of the Permanent Settlement was to bring them into cultivation.

Thus matters continued up to the year 1792. The Tannahdars, or public police officers appointed by the Zemindars, had been found very inefficient, and the [115] Government had appointed officers of their own to assist in keeping order, who had concurrent jurisdiction with those named by the Zemindar. But, in the year 1792, the Government determined altogether to suppress the Tannahdars, or police establishments, maintained by the landholders, and to take to themselves exclusively the preservation of peace and the prevention of crime by means of a police force of their own, to be established at convenient stations throughout the provinces. As the landholders were to be relieved from the expense to which they were subject for the maintenance of the force now to be suppressed, it was very reasonable that, where allowances for such expenses had been made by the Government, they should no longer be continued, and the Government, therefore, resolved to reserve the right of discontinuing them, or (where lands had been allowed for the purpose) of resuming them.

To carry these arrangements into effect, Regulations XLIX. and L., of 1792, were issued.

The preamble of Regulation XLIX. recites, in strong language, the disorders which prevailed, and the utter inefficiency and frequent corruption of the Tannahdars employed by the landholders.

Section 1, provides that the police of the country is in future to be considered under the exclusive charge of the officers of the Government, who may be specially appointed to that trust. The landowners and farmers of land, who keep up establishments, Tannahdars and police officers, for the preservation of the peace, are accordingly required to discharge them, and all landowners and farmers of land are prohibited from entertaining such establishments in future.

By section 2, landowners and farmers are no longer [116] to be held responsible for robberies committed on their respective estates. Provision is then made for the appointment of a police force in different stations throughout the Provinces, each under the charge of a Darogha or superintendent, and the whole is subjected to the control of the Magistrate.

It is clear that the police force here spoken of is distinct from the Chokeedars and village watchmen, for these persons are by the 12th section declared subject to the orders of the Darogha, and by the 13th section are ordered to apprehend and send offenders to the Darogha, and afford every information to him.

By Regulation L. of the same year, 1792, a tax is to be levied within the District of each police establishment, for defraying its expenses; and the 17th section, which is very important, is in these words (it is a circular addressed to the magistrate of each district):—"You will report whether the landowners of your District have been allowed any deductions on their jumma, or are in receipt of any money allowances, or hold any land either free of, or at a reduced revenue, for the purposes of keeping up Tannahdars or other police officers, and also your opinion whether the whole, or any, and what part of such deductions, allowances, or produce of such lands may with equity be brought to the public account, in consideration of the landholders being now prohibited from keeping up such establishment, and Government having taken upon itself the charge of the police."

Nothing can be clearer than this—that the lands referred to, are lands which the Zemindars, had been permitted by the Government to hold free from revenue—[117]—or at a reduced revenue, for the purpose of keeping up Tannahdars: not lands which the Zemindars had permitted other persons to hold free from rent, or at a reduced rent; or lands which such persons had a right to hold free from rent, or at a reduced rent; and that any lands which were in the first predicament were to be reported to the Government by the magistrate, together with his opinion, whether it was consistent with equity that the whole or any part of the produce of such land should be brought to the public account; and further, that this provision relates and is confined to a class of officers whom the Zemindar is no longer permitted to keep.

Though the Decennial Settlement had been made as to the several Provinces of Behar, Bengal, and Orissa under different Regulations, and although as to some of the estates the Settlement had not been entirely concluded in 1793, it was thought right in that year finally to establish its permanency, and for this purpose the celebrated Regulations of 1793 were published.

They were many in number, and after declaring the Settlement to be now permanent, re-enacted, with some modifications with respect to the three Provinces collectively, the provisions which had been previously made with respect to them separately.

The clause relating to the resumption of allowances which had been made to the Zemindars for police establishments, is in these words:—"Regulation I, section 8, clause 4. The jumma of those Zemindars, independent Talookdars, and other actual proprietors of land, which is declared fixed in the foregoing articles, is to be considered entirely unconnected with, and exclusive of, any allowances which have been made [118] to them in the adjustment of their jumma, for keeping up Tannahs, or police establishments, and also of the produce of any lands which they may have been permitted to appropriate for the same purpose; and the Governor-General in Council reserves to himself the option of resuming the whole or part of such allowances or produce of such lands, according as he may think proper, in consequence of his having exonerated the proprietors of land from the charge of keeping the peace, and appointed officers on the part of Government to superintend the police of the country. The Governor-General in Council, however, declares, that the allowances or produce of lands which may be resumed will be appropriated to no other purpose but that of defraying the expense of the police; and that instructions will be sent to the Collectors not to add such allowances, or the produce of such lands, to the jumma of the proprietors of land, but to collect the amount from them separately."

Upon the meaning of this clause the question in the cause depends. It is obvious that it has reference to the Police Regulation of 1792, and to the allowances with respect to which an inquiry was directed to be made in that year. It is unnecessary, therefore, here to repeat the observation already made as to their effect.

By Regulation XXIII. of 1793, the same inquiries are directed to be made by the Collectors as had been ordered to be made by the Magistrates in 1792; but, as the language is not precisely the same, it may be as well to state the clause at length. It is section 36, and is in these words:—"The Collectors are to report all allowances that may have been made to the [119] proprietors of land for keeping up police establishments, either by deduction from their jumma, or by permitting them to appropriate the produce of lands for that purpose, or in any other mode, which may not have been already resumed, with their opinion of how far the whole or any portion of such allowances can with equity be resumed in consequence of the proprietors of lands being exonerated from the charge of keeping the peace, as declared in Regulation XXII. of 1793:" which Regulation had re-enacted the provisions of Regulation XLIX. of 1792.

The same provision with respect to Chackeran and La-khiraj lands which had been contained in the Regulations of 1789 are repeated in those of 1793, namely, that the Chackeran lands should be included in the Settlement, and the La-khiraj lands excluded from it.

Although both the La-khiraj lands and the Tannaahdary lands are reserved for further inquiry under these Regulations, there was obviously a great distinction between them with respect to the period at which the decision relating to them ought to be made.

The La-khiraj lands were separate from the Zemindary, and were excepted out of the Settlement. The validity of the exception claimed for them depended on the validity of the grant under which it was claimed. Very many of the grants were believed to be fraudulent; but each case was to depend upon its own circumstances. The investigation of such circumstances might occupy a long time, and a discovery of grounds of suspicion might take place at any period. As these lands were not to be included in the Settlement, no great inconvenience could arise from delay.

[120] But with respect to the allowances for a police force made by the Government, whether in land or in money, the case was quite different. They were included in the Settlement, and if any additional charge was to be thrown upon the landholder in respect of such allowances, it was necessary that it should be ascertained as part of the Settlement. No difficulty in ascertaining the fact could possibly exist. The assessment had been very recently made, and the officers who had made it must, in every case, be perfectly aware whether any such allowances had or had not been made.

In pursuance of these Regulations, Mr. Dickenson, the Collector of Bhaghulpore, was required to report whether, in the Settlement for Khuruckpore, any such allowances had been made; and on the 29th of April, 1794, he makes his report in the negative. His words are these (contained in a letter addressed to the President and Members of the Board of Revenue of Fort William, relating to this and other Zemindaries):—"In obedience to the 36th Article, I have made the necessary inquiries, but do not find that any allowances, either by deduction from their jumma, permission to appropriate the produce of lands, or any other mode, have been granted to any proprietor for keeping up a police establishment."

This inquiry took place before any permanent grant had been made of this Zemindary, and with a view to such grant. No claim to resumption of lands or to alteration of jumma was, or, upon the footing of the report, possibly could be, set up by the Government; and nearly two years afterwards, namely, on the 25th of January, 1796, the Government made a grant to the Raja, of the whole Zemindary of Khu-[121]-ruckpore, including the lands in question, to hold to him in perpetuity at the jumma assessed in 1789-90, namely, Rs. 65,459. 8a. 10½p.

It is said that Mr. Dickenson made his report under a mistake. A mistake of what. Not of facts, certainly. The existence and nature of these Ghatwally tenures, the extent to which they prevailed in this District, and the mode in which they had been dealt with in making the assessment, must, from the circumstances which have been stated, have been perfectly familiar both to the Collector and to the Board of Revenue.

But was he under a mistake of law? That he considered the Ghatwally lands as not within the meaning of the clause in question is abundantly clear, and if he was mistaken as to the intentions of the Government who had framed it, a mistake so deeply affecting their revenues, and reaching to such a great extent of territory, must at once have excited the remarks and the remonstrance of the Revenue Board; but they made no objection to his view of the subject, and, accordingly, the grant is made on the terms already stated: the grantee holds under it, and for more than forty years no attempt is made to disturb it.

It would seem to be very difficult, under such circumstances, to permit any part of the lands so granted to be resumed on any allegation of mistake, if there were reason to suppose that any mistake has been made.

Indeed, by Regulation II. of 1819, the East India Company formally "renounce all claim on the part of Government to additional revenue from lands which were included within the limits of estates for which a [122] Permanent Settlement has been concluded, at the period when such Settlement was so concluded, whether on the plea of error or fraud, or any pretext whatever, saving, of course, mehals expressly excluded from the operation of the Settlement."

But their Lordships are far from thinking that there was any mistake either on the part of the Collector or of the Board of Revenue. All the information which their Lordships can obtain with respect to those lands leads to a different conclusion.

In Mr. Grant's Analysis of the Finances of Bengal, addressed to the Court of Directors, in the year 1786, and printed in the Appendix to the Fifth Report of the Select Committee on the Affairs of the East India Company, p. 268, the Zemindary of Beerbhoom is stated to have been conferred by Jaffier Khan on an Affghian or Patan tribe, "for the political purpose of guarding the frontiers on the west against the incursions of the barbarous Hindoos of Jharcund, by means of a warlike Mahomedan peasantry entertained as a standing militia, with suitable territorial allotments, under a principal landholder;" and Mr. Grant afterwards describes the tenure "as in some respects corresponding with the ancient military fiefs of Europe, inasmuch as certain lands were held La-khiraj, or exempt from the payment of rent, and to be applied solely to the maintenance of troops."

There is no doubt that the tenures here spoken of are Ghatwally tenures, though they are not mentioned by that name.

Beerbhoom immediately adjoins Khuruckpore, and in 1795 some Ghatwally lands were transferred from Beerbhoom to the District of Bhagulpore, in which Khuruckpore is situate, and in 1797 lands of the same [123] description were transferred from Bhagulpore to Beerbhoom.

In 1813, a report was made by the Collector of Bhagulpore to the Magistrate of Beerbhoom, in answer to certain inquiries with respect to Ghatwally lands in his District. The Collector states, that the Ghatwally lands in his District are of four kinds: First. The lands already referred to as granted by Mr. Cleavland. These he states to have been allotted in the environs of the forests, at the foot of certain mountains, which he names in various Pergunnahs, and amongst others "Pergunnah Kankjole, and in some other villages of the Khuruckpore estates, to certain Ghatwals and watchmen in lieu of salaries, in the proportion of the number of watchmen attending the said Ghatwals to attend to and guard the watch stations at the passes, and to patrol the precincts of the villages, that no mountaineers might be able to descend from those passes of the mountains to commit night attacks, to invade or assault, or to plunder money or cattle, or to create disturbance." The second class the report describes as, "The Ghatwals attached to the Khuruckpore estates, who pay a stipulated rate of rent for their lands and villages, being bound to protect and guard the highways, to watch the stations at the passes, to prevent disturbances being created by the mountaineers, thieves, and highwaymen. They hold their lands in virtue of sunuds granted by the Zemindar of Khuruckpore, except some who have received theirs from the former authorities." The report then proceeds to state, "That when the Zemindar, or Government authority, wishes to appoint a Ghatwal to guard the frontiers of the villages, it is his duty to ascertain the produce of the [124] villages, the quantity of Ghatwally lands therein, and after deducting a certain rate in the ratio of the guards with the Ghatwals, in lieu of wages, to fix a certain rent to be paid by the Ghatwals."

After mentioning other descriptions of Ghatwally lands, he states his opinion, that the Ghatwals have no right of inheritance or proprietary interest in their lands, but hold right of possession as long as they perform the terms and conditions of their sunuds. The report then states, that at the time of the Decennial Settlement, the Ghatwals were not treated as independent Talookdars; that no Settlement was made with them, but that they were included in the Settlement of the Zemindar of whom their lands were held.

In 1816, another report was made by the Collector of Bhagulpore, in which it is stated, that the Ghatwals pay a fixed rent to the Zemindar of Khuruckpore, and continue under his control, direction, and subjection, while the Raja is answerable to the Collector for the rents of the entire district of Khuruckpore.

With respect to the Ghatwally tenures in Beerbhoom, it is stated in a Regulation passed with respect to them in 1814 (Regulation XXIX. of that year), that the class of persons called Ghatwals in the District of Beerbhoom, form a peculiar tenure, and that every ground exists to believe, that according to the former usages and constitution of the country, this class of persons are entitled to hold their lands, generation after generation, in perpetuity, subject, nevertheless, to the payment of a fixed and established rent to the Zemindar of Beerbhoom, and to the performance of certain duties for the maintenance of the public peace and support of the police.

This description is confined in terms to the District [125] of Beerbhoom, but in the case of Hurlall Sing v. Jorawun Sing (6 Sud. Dew. Rep. 170), which occurred in 1837, a question arose as to the nature of these tenures generally, the point for decision being, whether they were divisible on the death of a Ghatwal or descended to his eldest son. One of the Judges states, that these tenures are very common in the Nerbudda territory for the protection of the Ghats. Another of the Judges seems to consider them as Chackeran lands; and the Court was of opinion, that the lands being held conditionally on the performance of certain defined duties, they were not divisible on the death of the Ghatwal, but descended to the eldest son.

Lands of this description could not properly be considered as lands of which the Zemindars had been permitted by the Government to appropriate the produce to the maintenance of Tannah, or police establishments. They were held by a tenure created long before the East India Company acquired any dominion over the country, and though the nature and extent of the right of the Ghatwals in the Ghatwally villages may be doubtful, and probably differed in different Districts and in different families, there clearly was some ancient law or usage by which these lands were appropriated to reward the services of Ghatwals: services which, although they would include the performance of duties of police, were quite as much in their origin of a military as a civil character, and would require the appointment of a very different class of persons from ordinary police officers.

We find accordingly that the office of Ghatwal in this Zemindary was frequently held by persons of high rank.

[126] Before the date of the Regulations, and in 1783, we have a letter from the Collector of Bhagulpore to the Raja Kadir Ali, informing him that the Ranees Surbissuree (who from the title must have been a female of high rank) had been dismissed from her office of Ghatwal of Jumme Hamapa, which is situate in the Khuruckpore estates, by order of the Governor-General in Council, and intimating that, "as the office is in your Highness's gift, your Highness will, should you deem it necessary and proper, appoint a person to the office of Ghatwal of the said Pergunnah, to watch day and night at the said Ghat. Should it be advisable, your Highness may retain it under your Highness's control, informing the Court of the Circumstance." Surely the language here used in speaking of the Ghatwal is little suited to the appointment of a police officer. It is rather that which in ancient times in England might have been addressed to a Lord of the Marches with respect to a chieftain under his orders.

Again, the officers contemplated by the resumption clause, were a class whom the landowner was in future prohibited from keeping. Was this the case of the Ghatwals? Why, we have a letter from the Collector of Bhagulpore to the Raja of Khuruckpore, on the 1st of September, 1808, in which he observes, "as the settlement of rent between the watchmen and yourself rests with you, as also does the dismissal and transfer of the Ghatwals, etc., as usual and customary on your estate, the Magistrate has no objection to the measure" (which the Raja had proposed to take), "nor is the Collector opposed to the step": and in the reports of the Collectors to which we have already referred, it is stated, that it is the province of [127] the Raja to appoint and dismiss the Ghatwals attached to the Khuruckpore estates; that he usually, but not always, makes a report to the Government when he does so, "that the settlement rests with him, and he raises or depresses the rent."

The appointment of Ghatwal has been continued, with the assent of the Government, up to the present time.

Upon this review of the evidence, their Lordships are of opinion, that if any attempt had been made in 1796 to resume these lands under the Regulation now in question, such attempts must have failed, and that, therefore, there can be no ground for the claim now set up by the Bengal Government.

It may be proper to notice the proceedings which have ended in the judgment against which the present appeal is brought.

It appears that on the 29th of November, 1836, the Government in India ordered that if the Ghatwally lands were of a nature to be resumed they be subjected to resumption.

The proceedings to be taken for the purposes of resumption, and the Court or tribunal which is to decide the matter, are of a special character.

The Collector of the District, or his deputy, enters on record, a claim to assess the disputed lands; notice is given to the owners; upon their answers, and upon evidence, the Collector who has made the claim, or one of his deputies, decides upon its validity, and if either party is dissatisfied, there is an appeal to a Special Commissioner appointed by the Government.

On the 1st of May, 1838, Mr Travers, then Special Deputy Collector of the Districts of Bhagulpore and Monghyr, entered the following claim on the part [128] of the Government against Toofany Sing, Ghatwal, who was in possession of the disputed lands in this case:—

“ Claim to assess 755 beghas of Ghatwally lands, situate on Ghat Foujdar Tuppa Dhumsaen. As it appears from an examination of the Ghatwally books, furnished by the Magistrate of this District, for the year 1819, C.E., that the lands in dispute have been appropriated rent-free by the said Defendant, as belonging to the said Ghatwally, and as it is necessary under Regulation II. of 1819, C.E., and Regulation III. of 1828, C.E., to inquire into the legality or otherwise of the deeds of grant, it is, therefore, ordered, that this case be numbered and placed upon the file of the Court, and that notice be served upon the Defendant.”

It does not very distinctly appear from this statement of the claim, upon what grounds it was intended to be rested, but we collect that it was thought that these lands were not included in the estate of Khuruckpore; that they belonged to the Ghatwal: and that as no Settlement had been made with him, they were still the subject of settlement, or, in other words, of assessment.

The matter then came upon some interlocutory proceedings before Mr. Alexander, described as Officiating Special Deputy Collector of the Districts of Bhagulpore and Monghyr, and on the 10th of November, 1838, he made a minute in part in these terms:—“ It is consequently decided that these lands were conditionally granted: but, firstly, the officers do not perform those conditions; and, secondly, the Government have no need of their services; besides which, it is evident that the said lands have not undergone [129] any settlement up to the present time, for the settlement was effected in 1197, F.E., while the said lands were set apart in 1181, F.E.; and notwithstanding that 2 annas per begha used to be paid to the Zemindar for certain lands, yet, as that cannot be considered rent, but a simple fee, in acknowledgment of the right of the Zemindar, the said lands are consequently of a nature to be resumed.” It was then ordered, “ that the Defendant produce any document in his possession invalidating the above-mentioned circumstances within a week, otherwise judgment would go in favour of Government, without any plea in opposition being taken into consideration.”

The Raja of Khuruckpore was apparently supposed to have nothing to do with the question; he was not made a party to the proceedings, nor served with notice of them; but, on the 27th of November, 1838, he presented a petition, stating that he was the owner of the land, and that Toofany Sing held under a lease from him.

The original Defendant put in his answer, stating, that he and his ancestors for several generations had held these lands at a rent of 2 annas per begha from the Raja of Khuruckpore, and that lands, including thirty-six original villages, beside others subsequently added, were held by the same tenure of the Raja.

A great deal of evidence was gone into; many inquiries were ordered, in the result of which, it distinctly appeared, that these lands were part of the estate of Khuruckpore, and had been included in the Settlement for that estate; and, accordingly, on the 9th of December, 1838, Mr. Alexander pronounced a decision founded on those proofs, in which he de-[130]-clared that the lands were of the nature of Chackeran lands; that they were not of a nature to be resumed; and he ordered the claim of Government to be dismissed.

Like decrees were at the same time pronounced by Mr. Alexander in the ten other suits.

Not long after these judgments were pronounced, judgments to which no objection can be made, except that they ought to have awarded costs of suit to those who had resisted the claims made against them, Mr. Alexander, unfortunately for all parties, altered his opinion, and thought that although the suits might not be maintainable, on the grounds originally taken, they might be supported under clause 4, section 8, of Regulation I. of 1793, and he applied for permission to review his judgment.

The form of proceeding did not allow this to be done; and on the 31st of December, 1839, the Government appealed to the Special Commissioners, bringing forward the clause just mentioned, and also insisting that the lands were not included in the Settlement of the Khuruckpore estate.

Before this appeal was heard, the interest of Maha Raja Rehmud Ali Khan, the original opponent of the Government, had been assigned to the father of the present Appellant, and he was admitted a Respondent to the appeal of the Government.

During the course of these proceedings, the same question had been raised by the Government with respect to other Ghatwally lands in other Pergunnahs of this Zemindary: and on the 29th of May, 1838, Mr. Travers, in some of these suits, decided in conformity with Mr. Alexander's decision, and dismissed [131] the claim of the Government, and, it is said, that these decisions were confirmed by the Special Commissioner on appeal.

Other suits, on the other hand, of the same description, came before Mr. Alexander, who decided them, not in conformity with his first determination, but according to the view which he had subsequently taken.

On the 21st of May, 1841, the appeal in the present suit came before Mr. Elliott, Special Commissioner, who reversed the decision of Mr. Alexander, stating as the ground of his judgment, that it was evident that the Ghatwally lands in dispute in this case, as well as in the other Ghatwally suits, were distinct and separate from the Settlement made by the Government. He established, therefore, the claim of the Government, and ordered that all the costs of the suit should be borne by the then Respondents.

The concurrence of another Special Commissioner was necessary to give effect to this decision (see Ben. Reg. III. of 1828, Sec. 4, cl. 6), and on the 27th of December, 1842, the case came before Mr. D'Oyley.

Mr. D'Oyley differed from Mr. Elliott, and the case, was, therefore, remitted to Mr. Moore, special Commissioner for Calcutta and Moorshedabad.

That gentleman directed an inquiry to be made of the secretary of the Sudder Board, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Ghatwally lands had been excepted from the Settlement of the Khuruckpore estates or not; and finding that they had not been so excepted, he concurred in the opinion of Mr. D'Oyley, and ordered that the appeal of the Government in [132] this, and the other ten suits of the same nature, should be dismissed.

The Government was still dissatisfied, and on the 19th of September, 1843, they applied for a review of the judgment.

The case came again, on several occasions, before Mr. Moore, who directed many more inquiries, the result of which, in the opinion of their Lordships, was to confirm the decision at which he had already arrived. Mr. Moore, however, considered that his former judgment was erroneous, and on the 9th of July, 1844, he reversed it. On the 9th of September, of the same year, the case came before Mr. Gordon, a Judge of the Sudder Court, vested with the powers of a Special Commissioner, under the orders of Government, who expressed his concurrence in that decision; and, at last, on the 27th of June, 1845, a final judgment in favour of the Government was pronounced by those gentlemen, resting their decision, as we understand it, on the ground that these lands were, in reality, lands granted for police establishments, and were to be considered as provided for in clause 4, section 8, Regulation I. of 1793.

From that decision the present appeal is brought to Her Majesty in Council, and it is scarcely necessary to say, that their Lordships must humbly report to Her Majesty their opinion that the decision complained of ought to be reversed. They have already sufficiently explained the reasons for their opinion, namely, that these lands are not properly within the meaning of the clause relied on by the Respondent, that they were a part of the Zemindary of Khuruckpore, and were included in the Settlement for that Zemindary, and covered by the jumma assessed upon it.

[133] If any case should occur in which lands of Ghatwally tenure, though not, in their Lordships' opinion, properly falling within the meaning of the Regulation, have nevertheless been dealt with as such, and have not been included in the Settlement of 1793, such case will have to be decided upon its own circumstances, and will not be governed by their Lordships' present decision.

With respect to the costs of the proceedings which have taken place, their Lordships do not doubt that the Bengal Government, in bringing forward this claim, have acted under a sense of public duty, but it is an attempt to disturb, upon insufficient grounds, a Settlement which subsisted without dispute for above forty years, during all which time the right to disturb it, if it exists at all, existed with as much force as when the proceedings were instituted. The claim has been persisted in after several decisions against the Government by their own officers acting as Judges; the decree in their favour has been finally obtained upon grounds different from those on which it was originally sought, and the Appellant has been exposed to a long and most expensive litigation. Under these circumstances, their Lordships think that they should do but imperfect justice, if they did not humbly recommend to Her Majesty that the Respondent should be ordered to repay to the Appellant all the costs which they have received from him under orders of the Judges below, and should also be ordered to pay to him the costs which he has himself incurred in these proceedings, including the costs of the present appeal.

[134] NUSSERWANJEE PESTONJEE and Others,—Appellants: MEER MYNOO-DEEN KHAN WULLUD MEER SUDROODEEN KHAN BAHADOOR,—Respondent * [June 19, 20, 1855].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Bombay.

In order to enable the Zillah Court, under Bom. Reg. VII., of 1827, to give an award the force of a decree of Court, the deed of submission to arbitration must contain all the conditions required by that Regulation.

Section 3, clause I., of Bom. Reg. VII., of 1827, enacts, among other things, that the deed of reference must contain "the time within which the award is to be given." A deed of submission to arbitration contained no provision for the time when the award was to be made by the arbitrator: held to be bad, and an award made under it, which had been ordered to be enforced as a decree of Court, directed to be taken off the file, as the Court had no jurisdiction except upon the fulfilment of the requirements of the Regulation.

The parol consent of the parties to the deed of submission before the arbitrator to waive such omission will not cure the defect.

In this appeal the question raised was, whether an award of Mr. Frere, the agent of the Bombay Government at Surat, made upon a submission to arbitration by the Appellants and Respondent, was within the provisions of the Bombay Regulation, No. VII. of 1827, so as to entitle it to the force of a decree of Court, or had the effect only of an ordinary award. The Order of the Sudder Dewanny Court appealed from, directed the award to be enforced as a decree of Court against the Appellants.

[135] The Appellants were Parsee bankers, residing at Surat. The Respondent was the Bakshee of Surat, and by virtue of his rank and relationship to the Nawab of Surat, exempted from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, unless with the consent of the Governor of Bombay (a).

It appeared that in the years 1828 and 1830, the Respondent, in consideration of advances made to him, and for debts due by his father, mortgaged to the Appellants and others, large estates called the Mooglace of Gundavee, in the Kingdom of His Highness the Guicowar of Baroda. On the 24th of April, 1852, the Respondent conceiving that he had grounds for being relieved from these mortgages, presented three petitions to Mr. Frere, the Government agent, under whose authority he was placed as a privileged native of rank (being a member of the family of the Nawab of Surat), upon that subject; and on the 27th of that month, the Appellants and two other persons, who also held property mortgaged to them by the Respondent, at the suggestion of the Bombay Government agreed to refer the subject-matter in dispute to the arbitration of Mr. Frere, and, accordingly, they executed the following aktiarnamah, or submission to [136] arbitration:—"We, Meer Akbar Ali Khan, Wd. Meer Surefuraj Ali Khan, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, manager of the firm of Pestonjee Kalabhaee; Cooverbaee, manager of the firm of Modee Rustumjee Hormusjee, who is his widow; and Bae Premcoover, manager of the firm of Shett Hurgovundass Nuthoolbaee, write this (to wit): Meer Mynooddeen Khan, Wd. Meer Sudroodeen Khan, in the matter regarding us, the creditors, presented three separate petitions in English, with their Goozerothee translations, on the 24th of April, 1852, the same being attached at the top of this paper. In this matter, we contend, that his claim is altogether false, and the contents of the petitions are without grounds. We, therefore, in conjunction with the said Meer Mynooddeen Khan, give this aktiarnamah, authority in writing, to William Edward Frere, Saheb Bahadoor, agent of Surat, to investigate this dispute, so that the said agent, after investigating the dispute consistently with justice, shall give his decision, which shall be agreed to by the parties. The parties shall not appeal against it; and should the resolution of the decision be consistent with the razeenamah, it shall be agreed to by us, the parties." This deed of reference was signed by the parties, and attested by four witnesses.

Pursuant to this deed of reference, both parties appeared before Mr. Frere. Evidence was adduced, and documents and accounts of great length produced, and counsel were heard for both parties before the arbitrator, who, on the 2nd of November, 1852, made his award, by which he, in substance, decided that the Appellants had been overpaid what was due to them, and awarded that the mortgage property should [137] be restored to the Respondent, and the balance due from the Appellants respectively refunded to the Respondent.

Mr. Frere, whilst acting as arbitrator, also held the office of Judge of the Zillah Court of Surat, in which capacity he ordered, on the 16th of November, 1852, the award and deed of reference to be filed in the Zillah Court of Surat, under Bom. Reg. VII. of 1827 (b).

(a) Bom. Reg. II. of 1827, ch. ii., sec. 21, cl. 2, confirms the stipulation made in the Articles of agreement, dated the 13th of May, 1800, between the East India Company and the Nawab of Surat, of the exemption of the Nawab, his family and servants, from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts; and, by Bom. Reg. XI. of 1827, ch. i., from the Criminal Courts. The Act of the Legislature of India, No. 18 of 1848, provides for the administration of the Nawab's estate, and for certain privileges to his family. See, In re the Nawab of Surat, 5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 499, where the principal sections of that Act are set out.

(b) By this Regulation it is provided as follows:—Sec. 1, cl. 1.—"Any such matter of dispute as is cognisable in a Civil Court, may, for the purposes specified in this Regulation, be referred by mutual consent of the parties to one or more arbitrators, chosen in such manner as may be agreed on by the said parties." Cl. 3.—"It is clearly to be understood that nothing contained in this Regulation is meant to prohibit or discourage amicable adjustments, though made in a way different from that herein prescribed, provided that such adjustments shall not be entitled to the consideration conferred on arbitration awards by virtue of this Regulation."

Sec. 3, cl. 1.—"When the choice of the arbitrator or arbitrators has been made, the parties shall execute a deed of reference, which may be upon unstamped paper, showing the names of the arbitrator or arbitrators, the nature and extent of the

On the 16th of November, 1852, the Appellants presented a petition to the Zillah Court, insisting [138] that the proceedings were irregular and contrary to this Regulation, on the grounds, first, that under the Regulation the Zillah Judge could not be arbitrator; second, that the Judge who made the award could not in his capacity of Judge file it in his Court; [139] third, that the deed of reference did not state fully particulars of the nature of the claim, nor the amount, nor the time within which the award was to be made; and fourth, that as the Respondent had presented three separate petitions, there ought to have been three separate deeds of reference; and the petition prayed that the Judge would not file the award, or would suspend the filing of it until the Appellants could submit a petition to the Sudder Adawlut. This petition was refused by the Court, and the award was accordingly filed, but the three petitions mentioned in the deed of reference were not attached to the award, or filed in the Zillah Court with it.

On the 19th of November, 1852, the Respondent applied to the Zillah Court for execution of the award, and, on the 20th of the same month, the Appellants presented a petition to the Court, praying for delay; but Mr. Reid, the Assistant-Collector in charge, considering there was no grounds to stay execution, directed the Nazir to enforce execution.

On the 24th of November, 1852, the Appellants presented a petition to the Sudder Adawlut at Bombay, by which they insisted that Mr. Reid's order was illegal, matter referred, the date of reference, the time within which the awards is to be given, the signatures of the parties and of two witnesses, and the consent of the parties to abide by the award, with any conditions that may be involved, such as whether the decision of a majority is to be conclusive, whether an umpire is to be appointed, etc."

Sec. 6, cl. 1.—"The period limited for completion of an award may be extended at the pleasure of the parties on their expressing the same and fixing a new period in writing on the deed of reference or on a paper attached to it, but the written attestation of two witnesses shall be necessary, as originally in the deed of reference."

Cl. 2.—"But if an award be not completed within the period either originally fixed in the deed of reference, or afterwards fixed according to the rules in the preceding clause, the arbitration shall be considered as cancelled, and the parties to be in the same relation as if no such arbitration had existed."

Sec. 8, cl. 1.—"The arbitration award, which may be upon unstamped paper, shall contain the names of the parties, the date of reference, the nature and value of the matter referred, and the decision made; it shall be dated and signed by the arbitrator, if sole, otherwise by the majority which made the award, and by the umpire (if any)."

Cl. 3.—"The award and deed of reference shall be presented and filed in the Zillah Court, or delivered to any Civil Commissioner to be forwarded to the Zillah Court for that purpose, by the arbitrators or parties or some one of them, within fifteen (15) days after the award is made, and they shall be accompanied by any documents which the arbitrators may consider requisite to put on record."

Cl. 4.—"But previously to the award being so presented or delivered, the arbitrator or arbitrators shall tender to each party a copy of it, and the date of tender shall be specified by indorsement on the award, or if by a party absenting himself the tender cannot be made, the circumstance shall be noted on the award."

Cl. 5.—"When an award appealable under section 10, clause 1st, is filed, a written notification thereof in the language of the Zillah, under the signature of the Judge or Assistant Judge, shall be affixed to a conspicuous place in the Court room, and shall remain there until the period for appealing has expired."

Sec. 9, cl. 1.—"Awards made and filed in conformity with the provisions and forms enacted in this Regulation, and final either when filed or by not being appealed against under section 10, shall have the force of decrees and shall be executed as such."

Cl. 2.—"Arbitration awards or other adjustments not made and delivered to be filed as prescribed in this Regulation, shall not be entitled to any other consideration in a Court than as evidence or agreements to be adduced or proceeded on by ordinary course of law."

on the ground that it was not allowable to execute awards as decrees, unless made in conformity with the Provisions of Reg VII. of 1827, and that the deed of reference had not been framed in conformity with sec. 3, cl. 1, of that Regulation; and insisting further, that the award was in excess of the authority conferred on the arbitrator, as the Respondent's coheirs had not objected to the mortgages, and the award should, therefore, have been confined to his share thereof; and insisting further, that the award [140] was a departure from some of the questions referred to the arbitrator and an evasion of others, and dealt with questions which were not intended to be referred to the arbitrator, and prayed that the Court would order the Zillah Court of Surat to stay execution on the award, and would send for the proceedings, and decide whether the award could be legally executed as a decree under sec. 9, cl. 1, of Regulation VII. of 1827; and if not, to cancel all the proceedings of the Zillah Court directed to enforce it.

On the 25th of November, 1852, the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut made an order, directing execution of the award to be stayed till further order, upon giving security.

On the 22nd of December, 1852, the Appellants' petition came on for hearing before the Sudder Adawlut, when, in addition to the ground stated in the petition, it was further insisted, on the part of the Appellants, that the award was not within Regulation VII. of 1827, on the grounds, first, that Mr. Frere being the Zillah Judge of Surat, and agent for the Government there, was precluded from acting as arbitrator; and, secondly, that inasmuch as by the Act of the Government of India, No. 18, of 1848, the Respondent who was of the family of the late Nawab of Surat, was exempted from any writ or process, unless issued with the consent of the Governor in Council of Bombay first obtained, the award was not within the Regulation VII. of 1827; and thirdly, that the Mooglaee of Gundavee, which was the subject of the mortgage, was situate in the territories of the Guicowar of Baroda; that neither the Surat Court, nor the Sudder Adawlut of Bombay, could [141] take cognizance of the matter on any suit relating thereto. And by an order of that date, the Sudder Adawlut (consisting of Messrs. Warden, Le Geyt, and Grant), ordered the award to be taken off the file of the Surat Court, as not being entitled to the force of a decree under that Regulation, and ordered all proceedings consequent on it to be quashed, and all securities furnished by the parties to be cancelled, and any monies placed in deposit to be returned. The grounds for this decision were recorded in a minute of Mr. Le Geyt, which, after stating that the matter sought for was immoveable property, and the rents arising therefrom (which had been ruled in Case 2948, to be of the nature of immoveable property), situated in territory beyond the jurisdiction of the Surat Court, and consequently not cognizable in that Court, and that the award was therefore not entitled to be filed or allowed the force of a decree in that Court, proceeded as follows:—"The next question to determine is whether the arbitrator's award should have the force of a decree of Court. In order to this, the matter of dispute must be such as is cognizable in a Civil Court; the deed of reference must contain in some shape the following matter, and be framed according to the following rules. It must exhibit the names of the arbitrators, the nature and extent of the matter referred, the time within which the award is to be given, the signatures of the parties and of two witnesses, and the consent of the parties to abide by the award with any conditions involved. If the 'time' be extended during the inquiry, such extension must be written, and such writing authenticated by two witnesses, and [142] in default of completion within the prescribed time, the arbitration is cancelled. The award must contain the names of the parties, the date of reference, the matter referred, and the decision made; it must be dated and signed. An award, as described, shall be filed in the Zillah Court, the parties having been previously furnished with copies, and shall be executed as a decree. It will be observed, that great stress is laid on the fixing of the time within which an award is to be made, and on turning to the title of the Regulation, and the notes on it of those who framed it, the reason is obvious. It is a law for regulating 'Punchayuts,' the chief defect in which Oriental mode of arbitration, was dilatoriness, and, therefore, in the Regulation, while form is dispensed with, dispatch is insisted on; 'the period should be particularly specified,' say the framers of the Code, 'within which the award was to be made, in order to promote regularity, prevent confusion and uncertainty, and diminish the power of arbitrators to betray and neglect their trust.' The Court then, after referring to the deed of submission, proceeded:—"The decision is, mutatis mutandis, the same in respect to Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, manager of the firm of Pestonjee Kalabhee. It was ruled by this Court, on the 4th of August, 1852, in the special appeal, 'Moteelal Samuldaiss v. Dungursee Deosee and others,' as follows:—"It will be observed, that cl. 1, sec. 21, Reg. II., A.D. 1827, enumerates, first, "claims on immoveable property including rents," and afterwards, "claims on moveable property"; and cl. 2 provides, that in order to make a claim for the first, viz., immoveable property cognizable within a Zillah, such immoveable [143] property shall be situated within that Zillah, and a Zillah Court has, therefore, jurisdiction over "complaints respecting the right of rents," provided they are "derivable from property situated within the Zillah"; and where such property has been mortgaged, a mortgagee may at any time, by the institution of a civil suit in the Zillah in which the immoveable property is situated, cause the mortgaged property to be applied to the liquidation of the debt; and the practice is in such cases to sue the mortgagor, to oblige him to settle the claim, failing which, the property to be applied to the liquidation of the debt.' The matter in the present case under the above ruling, relates to the disposal of immoveable property beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and not, therefore, 'cognizable in the Civil Court.' The nature and extent of the references are not defined in the deed of reference. The umpire is a person who has to determine judicially the awards that have and the awards that have not the force of a decree, and who, moreover, is the person appointed to hear appeals from such awards. The Advocate-General says, it was by mutual consent that 'the time within which the award was to be given' was not defined: if so, it was by mutual consent, and not by any fraud or inadvertence, that the deed of reference to arbitration was so drawn, as that the award on it should never rise above the level of the ancient sluggish Panchayetnamah, to invigorate and reform which, specially as regards expedition, the Regulation was enacted; and, considering that one of the parties is not generally amenable to the Regulations, this condition that the award should not have the force of a decree was a very judicious one on the part of his antagonists; for no sooner did the Bukshee, [144] who now seeks to exercise the force of the Court against his alleged creditor, receive himself an order from that Court to refund, pending the present inquiry, the money that had been paid to him wrongfully through that Court, then he wrapped himself in his privileges and demurred to its jurisdiction. The award, therefore, is one of those 'amicable adjustments' alluded to in cl. 3, sec. 1, of the Regulation, the value of which is declared in cl. 2, sec. 9, of the same Regulation, but it has not the force of a decree, and should be taken off the file of the Surat Court. It only remains to quash all the proceedings had in the Surat Court on the award, and in doing so the Court cannot refrain from expressing its regret that Mr. Frere did not, before leaving Surat and delivering over charge of his Court to an officer of the Revenue Department, who cannot be expected to know how to conduct the duties of the judicial office, either request Mr. Reid to refrain, as prescribed in the circular already referred to, from meddling with so important a case, or give him clear instructions how to handle it, for by Mr. Reid's precipitance and want of caution in executing the award before the expiration of ten days from the date on which the award was filed and considered a decree, and that without taking security, the Surat Court has become involved in the dilemma of having paid money wrongfully to a person not generally amenable to its jurisdiction, to the injury of those who are entitled to its protection."

In obedience to the judgment of the Sudder Court, the award was taken off the file, the Government securities placed in deposit by the Appellant, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, were restored to him, and the money [145] paid by the Appellant, Cooverbaee, was refunded to her by the Respondent.

On the 16th of March, 1853, the Respondent presented a petition to the Sudder Adawlut of Bombay for a review of judgment.

At a proceeding of the Sudder Court, on the 15th of June, 1853, Mr. Frere, the arbitrator, having become a Judge of that Court, the Court, consisting of Messrs. Frere, Remington, and Larkins, on taking the case into consideration, recorded that there was found on the original proceedings of the arbitrator, which had not been filed in Court, the following entry:—"The arbitrator then brings to the parties' notice, that the reference to him contains the words, 'having inquired into the case, and in justice to decide it, then we are content.' That at the time the agreement was given in he observed these words, but looked on them merely as saving the parties in case of corruption, but having since heard that they have been quoted as showing a means of escaping from the arbitrator's decision being held finally binding, he requests to be informed, before coming to a decision, whether his decision was to be held final or not. Messrs. Le Messurier and Howard, on the part of their principals, both declared the decision is to be held final, and the above is read over and explained to the parties themselves."

On the 22nd of June, 1843, the Court also recorded the following minute of the arbitrator, which was read and placed with the case:—"With reference to the assertion that the omission in the deed of reference to specify the time within which the award was to be made, was not brought to the Petitioners' [meaning the Appellants'] notice, I can most [146] safely and truly aver that it was brought to the notice of both parties before their counsel appeared, and omitted with their consent; and with reference to the assertion, that the reference was irrespective of Regulation VII., and grew out of a political matter, I can safely declare, that all the reference made on the occasion to political affairs was my explaining to the parties, that if they did not agree to an arbitration I should be obliged to recommend to Government, that as much of the property was within the territories of His Highness the Guicowar, they should decide the matter upon the evidence they had before them, if the parties would produce no other, and recommend their decision to His Highness for execution."

The Court, on the same day, pronounced their decision on the petition for review, reversing the decision of 22nd December, 1852, and ordering the award to be restored to the file of the Surat Court: the material part of this judgment was in these terms:—"It is an error to suppose that the nature and extent of the reference was not fully before the arbitrator, as even the parties who contest the award admit that in the petitions which headed the reference it was alleged that the mortgages held by them were fraudulent and gross breaches of trust, which questions thus raised by Meer Mynodeen were undoubtedly submitted to the arbitrator for decision by consent of both parties, the arbitrator acting under Reg. VII. of 1827.

"That the nature and extent of the reference should be defined in the deed of submission is evident enough, when it is found that one side are now contending that it was never their intention to refer to [147] the arbitrator's decision the propriety of a former agent's act, when once shown and proved to be his, but that the substantial question to be decided was, whether the officer in question had sanctioned the mortgages with a full knowledge of their contents, and this by his own admission in writing had been established. The necessity, then, of having the subject clearly defined is manifest, for as an award should be consistent with the reference, and may be objected to if not so, there will always be a multitude of points in which it may be suggested that an arbitrator has exceeded his authority, though nothing is so difficult as to ascertain what may be an excess.

"In the present instance, the Court are at a loss to perceive how the arbitrator, keeping finality in view, the main object why his services were called into requisition, could satisfactorily decide the dispute without entertaining the point raised of there having been an excess of authority on the part of Mr. Romer and other arbitrators.

"The Court, therefore, do not consider that the award was in excess of the authority conferred upon the arbitrator, as contended for.

"It was an error to suppose that the Zillah Judge was not a proper umpire; but whether or not, the objection is not a very material one, when the power of this Court over the proceedings is considered, which, as already exercised in this case, shows that no prejudice whatever could accrue to the parties by such an appointment: be it observed, moreover, that neither the Judge nor agent are expressly excluded by the Regulation.

"In prescribing that a time must be fixed for pronouncing the award, it may be admitted that the law [148] intended to provide against procrastination and the evils attending the old form of Punchayet. But the Court are struck with the force of the observation, that in placing no restriction of that kind on the arbitrator, the object of both parties was to facilitate, not procrastinate, his proceedings, which they severally intended should be final. The arbitrator, who is now sitting in Court, has satisfied us that the time was waived by consent of both parties.

"The Court do not, therefore, consider the condition as to time imposed by the Regulation to be of so stringent a character as could not be waived by consent of parties, where the object in view was to obtain a speedy decision in conformity with its spirit.

"The Court find in the deed of reference an express stipulation that there shall not an appeal from the decision of the arbitrator.

"Under the above circumstances, the Court can entertain no other belief than that the award of the arbitrator was sought for, in order that the dispute between the parties should be finally adjusted, and not that the award should be merely available as evidence in a civil suit. The provisions of cl. 1, sec. 9, Reg. VII., must be held to apply to the present award, unless the Court is prepared to let go the whole justice of the case.

"In reversing the decision of the 22nd December last, it may be proper to remark, that one of the three Judges, who was a party to the decision, only concurred therein because he felt bound by the decision on Special appeal, 2948, in which, however, he did not sit, and not because of the technical objections raised by the Petitioners, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee and Cooverbaee.

[149] "On this point the Court record the two following observations:—

"The first is, that Mr. Frere has taken no other part in the proceedings than that held in full Court. Beyond it, the discussion has been carried on exclusively by the other two Judges, unaided by their colleague, in his absence, and without reference to him on a single point.

"The second observation is, that should any further proceedings arise from the Court's present order, the Judges feel at full liberty to act in concert with their colleague, and to seek his opinion and advice in disposing of any question brought before them.

"The opinion of the Court, therefore, is, that the order of the Court of the 22nd December, 1852, should be reversed, and it is accordingly annulled; and the award of the 2nd November, 1852, is to be restored to the file of the Sudder Adawlut, and matters are to be put in the same position as they occupied prior to all motions made in this Court since the filing of the award in the Sudder Adawlut."

Against this decision the present appeal was brought, and now came on for hearing.

Mr. Serjeant Byles, and Mr. Ayrton, for the Appellants.—There are several fatal objections to the award being made a decree of Court. The chief one is, that the reference to arbitration was not made in accordance with the provisions of Bom. Reg. VII. of 1827. The award is sought to be made a decree of Court under this Regulation, similar to awards made rules of Court in England, under the Statutes, 9th and 10th Will. III., cap. 15, and 3rd and 4th [150] Will. IV., cap. 42, secs. 39, 40, 41. It is, therefore, essentially necessary that there should have been a strict compliance with the requisites of that Regulation, in order to create a jurisdiction in the Zillah Court, because if those conditions have not been complied with, there is no jurisdiction at all. Now, we submit, that any deed of reference which is to be made, ought to contain all the matters required by the Regulation, and that the omission of any portion is fatal to the award being made a decree of Court. Section 3, cl. 1, enacts, that the nature and extent of the matter referred, the date of reference, with "the time within which the award is to be given," shall be contained in the deed of reference; and cl. 1 of sec. 6, provides for extension of the time for making the award, but stipulates that it must be done in writing, with the attestation of two witnesses, as required by the original deed of reference. It cannot, therefore, be said, that the insertion of the time in the deed of submission is merely directory, it is clearly mandatory; the necessity of two witnesses required by these sections is conclusive upon that point. Here the deed of submission to arbitration entirely omits any mention of a time within which the award is to be made. That is fatal by this Regulation, as well as by the principles of English law; for it is an admitted principle that there must be in every case a certain day appointed on or before which the arbitrator is to make his award, and if it be not mentioned it is void, Watson "On Arbitration," p. 14 (2nd Edit.). The fixing of the time was the very object of passing this Regulation: as the Court below truly says, it was to prevent the procrastination under the Panchayet [151] system. The judgment of the Court below however states, that the omission in the award was waived by consent of the parties, and that such waiving rendered the award valid: this was clearly wrong in law, as the Court had not power to make a parol submission to an award a rule of Court, Ansell v. Evans (7 Term. 1). Another technical objection is, that the three petitions referred to in the award were not filed with the award in the Zillah Court, as required by sec. 8, cl. 3, of this Regulation. Nothing can be more improper than the manner in which these proceedings were carried on. Mr. Frere was the Government agent at Surat, and also the arbitrator; he afterwards becomes, first a Judge of the Zillah Court, and afterwards of the Sudder Adawlut, and seeks to make his award a rule of the Court of which he had become a Judge, and the Court below has actually interpreted the written submission to arbitration by oral explanations communicated to the Court by Mr. Frere. If the objections we have urged are not fatal, then we contend that the award is, on the face of it, bad, as the arbitrator has awarded upon matters not referred to him, and directed certain acts to be done ultra vires the reference, and has not made the award final, and we insist that it ought not to have been executed as a decree of Court, Bowes v. Ferne (4 Myl. and Cr. 150), Turner v. Turner (3 Russ. 494), Wilkinson v. Page (1 Hare. 276), Ross v. Boards (8 Add. and Ell. 290).

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. Le Messurier, for the Respondent.

[Their Lordships directed the argument to be con-[152]-fined to the two technical points raised by the Appellants.]

First, we submit, that the omission to specify in the deed of reference the time within which the award was to be made, did not prejudice the validity of the award, both parties having consented before the arbitrator to waive the specification of time; and having raised no objection on that ground until after the award had been actually made, the award cannot now be questioned on such a ground. It is similar to enlargement of time by an arbitrator, without sufficient compliance with certain directions in the award, but which the parties by consent agree to, and which has been held to be valid, Hallett v. Hallett (5 Mee. and Wels. 25), Leggett v. Emley (6 Bing. 255). It is true that there is no mention in the submission of the time when the award is to be made, but it is no less a good award for the purpose of Bom. Reg. VII. of 1827. Indeed, it is not contended that it is invalid as an award, only as being incapable of being made the subject of a decree of Court by Reg. VII. of 1827. The object of this Regulation is twofold: first to give the effect of a decree to an award when made; and secondly, it is intended to protect the parties while the reference is going on. In the case of a common award it was competent for a party to break off pending the arbitration. Clause 1, sec. 3, must be construed by section 7, which shows that the mention of the time in the deed of submission is only necessary when a suit had been instituted, that it might be suspended until the reference terminated. The award in this case was fully authorised by the deed of reference, and was final within the meaning of section 9, cl. 1. The [153] deed of reference says the party shall not appeal, which clearly contemplates a final award, and the same ought to have been executed as a decree. The objection that the petitions were not attached to the award when filed is of no value: it is sufficient that at the time of the reference they were attached to the deed. The circumstance of Mr. Frere being the Zillah Judge and agent at Surat, did not preclude him from undertaking the reference, and acting as arbitrator, more especially as by the terms of the reference any appeal against the award was excluded.

The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Sir John Patteson.—This case comes before their Lordships under a Regulation in India, No. VII. of 1827, and the question is, whether or not the submission and the award are within the terms of that Regulation.

The objections that have been taken are of a technical nature. The first is, that no time is specified in the deed of submission (which it is said is required by that Regulation), within which the award should be made, and that the omission of the time prevents the award from being entitled to be enforced as a decree of the Zillah

Court, according to the Regulation itself; and the second objection is, that there was an omission in the deed of submission as to the nature and extent of the subject-matters referred to arbitration, which, however, was not the case with the original deed, because the petitions on which the submission went, were stated to have been attached to the original deed, and those petitions forming part of the deed, though they were not filed in [154] the Zillah Court with the deed itself and the award, so as to enable that Court to proceed as upon a decree of their Court. There were other objections as to whether the award was final or not.

Their Lordships have been very much struck with the first and second objections which were taken, as to whether or not the case really comes within the Regulation of 1827, and it is upon those objections that they propose to advise Her Majesty.

Now, Regulation VII. of 1827 recites, "That it is advisable for the easy and amicable settlement of disputes of a civil nature, that the parties should have the means of adjusting them by arbitration, without being obliged to resort to a Court of Law, and that an award duly pronounced should have the force of a decree of the Court." It is very likely that this Regulation may have been enacted by the Legislature in India, with some reference to the Act of Parliament in this country, the 9th and 10th Will. III., cap. 15, by which submissions to arbitration were authorised to be made rules of Court, and enforced by process of contempt of Court, as if it were a proceeding actually in Court; it is very possible that that was so, but the difference between the law in England and the law in India, in that respect, is very marked, because, by the 9th and 10th Will. III., cap. 15, all that is enacted is, that if parties choose to submit their differences to arbitration, they may insert in the submission the agreement between them, that the submission may be made a rule of any of His Majesty's Courts of Record, upon an affidavit made by the witnesses to the submission, that there is such a clause; but there is no mention made in the Statute of Will. III. with respect to what the submission [155] itself shall contain; it is left entirely to the parties themselves to put into the submission anything they think fit. Therefore, the cases which have been cited upon that subject, with respect to the enlargement of time by consent, although not in the very terms in the deed of submission, are really beside the question which their Lordships have now to consider. No question arose in those cases, as to whether or not the deed of submission could be made a rule of Court; the only questions were, whether the terms of the deed of submission, such as they were, had been complied with, so as to make the award a sufficient one, that the Court might either enforce it by attachment or order it to be set aside; the motion generally was to set it aside, but, as I have said before, all these cases have nothing to do with the present question.

The present question turns upon this principle, that wherever jurisdiction is given to a Court by an Act of Parliament, or by a Regulation in India (which has the same effect as an Act of Parliament), and such jurisdiction is only given upon certain specified terms contained in the Regulation itself, it is a universal principle that these terms must be complied with, in order to create and raise the jurisdiction, for if they be not complied with the jurisdiction does not arise.

Now, it is said here, that there is one condition in which this Regulation has not in terms been complied with. The Regulation, by sec. 1, cl. 1, enacts, that any such matter of dispute as is cognizable in a Civil Court, may, for the purposes specified in the Regulation, be referred, by mutual consent of the parties, to one or more arbitrators, chosen in such a manner as may be agreed on by the parties, and then [156] the Regulation specifies who shall be qualified to act as arbitrators. And cl. 1, sec. 3, states, that when the choice of the arbitrator or arbitrators shall have been made, the parties shall execute a deed of reference, which may be upon unstamped paper, showing the names of the arbitrator or arbitrators; the nature and extent of the matters referred; the date of reference; the time within which the award is to be given; the signatures of the parties, and of two witnesses; and the consent of the parties to abide by the award, with any conditions that may be involved, such as whether the decision of a majority is to be conclusive, or whether an umpire is to be appointed, and so on. Then a form of a deed of reference is given; but it is expressly stated, that it is not requisite that the deed of reference should be framed according to that form, and it provides for the award being delivered within ten, or as many days as shall be specified, and that it contain the matters and be framed according to the rule specified in the preceding clause. Now, that provision is certainly not intended to put the thing altogether at large, and let the parties draw up their reference in any way they may think fit, without regard to the first part of the third section, because it expressly provides that it shall contain the matters, and be framed according to the rules specified in the first clause. It seems, therefore, that the Legislature of India, in passing this Regulation, attach importance to the matters, which they expressly enact shall be contained in the deed of reference.

Now, we are asked to consider, that, as far as regards the insertion of the time within which the award is to be made, it is directory only. Their Lordships are quite at a loss to see how they can possibly [157] so construe that clause. It is included with a number of other things, and if we say the insertion of the time is directory only, there seems no reason why all the other things that are there specified should not also be considered to be directory, or why they might not be disregarded altogether by the parties if they thought fit to do so. Another argument that was used upon this third section was, that so far as regards the insertion of time, that was, in truth, only inserted with a view to the seventh section, in which it is enacted that if pending an arbitration a suit be instituted, that suit may be stayed upon proof that the suit and arbitration relate to the same matters, and that the time for making the award has not expired. Here it is said by anticipation that the Legislature put into the third section the requirement that the time should be specified with a view to the seventh section; that if any suit should be instituted in the meantime, that suit might be suspended until the reference should be terminated. This is really a very ingenious but at the same time a very far-fetched argument, and a construction which their Lordships cannot think the Legislature of India at all intended when they framed this Regulation. It is manifest they required by the third section that the time should be mentioned, and they required by the fourth clause of that section, that if the time be enlarged, it must be done in a particular manner, and with the same formalities as the deed itself, which was to be executed before two witnesses: and then they go on to make a provision which is very natural, namely, that if any suit is instituted pending an arbitration, that suit shall be suspended until the arbitration is determined. That it is consistent to state, therefore, that the third [158] section has only reference to the seventh section, seems to their Lordships to be going much further than they can venture to do, particularly when it is considered that references had formerly been made in India under the name of "Punchayets," which had been attended with a very great and unreasonable delay. It might probably have been the intention of the Legislature in framing this Regulation to prevent such delays from taking place, and that might have been a very good reason why this requirement should have been made, that the time should be specified in the deed of reference within which the award should be made. To regard it, therefore, merely as directory, or of little importance, would seem to be letting in one of those very mischiefs which were expressly intended to be avoided by this Regulation. It is difficult, no doubt, for any Court to be quite sure that they know the reasons why an Act of Parliament is passed, or to account for the phraseology which is used in an Act of Parliament, or of a Regulation in India; but this reason for requiring the time to be specified and for making the Regulation in these terms, does seem to be natural and probable. Not only so, but it seems to have been stated that that was likely to have been the cause, because their Lordships perceive that in the first decree of the Sudder Court in India in giving their judgment, the Court say, "The Advocate-General says, it was by mutual consent that the time within which the award was to be given was not defined; if so, it was by mutual consent, and not by any fraud or inadvertence, that the deed of reference to arbitration was so drawn as that the award on it should never rise above the level of the ancient sluggish punchayetnamah, to invigorate and reform [159] which, specially in regard to expedition, this Regulation was enacted;" so that the Court there treat it as a reason for this Regulation, that it was to avoid the delay. It then goes on:—"And considering that one of the parties is not generally amenable to Regulations, this condition, that the award should not have the force of a decree, was a very judicious one on the part of his antagonists, for no sooner did the Bukshee, who now seeks to exercise the force of the Court against his alleged creditor, receive himself an order from that Court to refund, pending the present inquiry, the money that had been paid to him wrongfully through that Court, than he wrapped himself in his privileges, and demurred to its jurisdiction." As to the latter part, it is immaterial in this case whether it be right or wrong; but the reason which they gave, and which they suppose to have been the cause of this Regulation, seems to have been strong in the mind of the Court at that time; neither did that pass away, because their Lordships have observed that in a subsequent decree when they reverse their former decree, they still adhere to this view; they say:—"In prescribing that a time must be fixed for pronouncing the award, it may be admitted that the law intended to provide against procrastination and the evils attending the old form of Punchayet. But the Court are struck with the force of the observation that in placing no restriction of that kind on the arbitration, the object of both parties was to facilitate, not procrastinate, their proceedings, which they severally intended should be final. The arbitrator, who is now sitting in Court, has satisfied it that the time was waived by consent of both parties." So that even in the last judgment when they reverse the former [160] one, the Court still adhere to their view of the reason why the time was mentioned in the Regulation of 1827. Their Lordships cannot help thinking that that probably was the true account of the matter, and that the time within which the award was to be made was considered by the Legislature of India to be essential, to be of great importance and to be necessary to be inserted in the deed of reference in order to give to the award the force of a decree of the Zillah Court. It is said that it may have been that the arbitrator in this case being a Judge of the Zillah Court, and also agent for the Government of Surat, his time was very much occupied with public duties, and it may have been inconvenient to him to limit the time for making his award, because his time being so much occupied with his public duties he would have very little time to afford to investigate the matters that were so submitted to him. That might have been a very good reason for giving a long time; but it was not any reason whatever for altogether omitting to mention the time in the deed of reference. Then it is said, it is done by consent. Now, what the Sudder Court in the first instance states, would seem very forcible if it was originally the case that all mention of the time was omitted in the deed of reference by consent, and intentionally by both parties. One cannot help seeing that it may very possibly have been that neither party was willing that it should come within this Regulation, and that the award should have the force of a decree of the Zillah Court. If, on the other hand, it were not so, if it were inadvertently omitted, then the proper course would have been, when it was found out, to have had a fresh submission, in which it could have [161] been interested, in order to make the matter clear; but they proceeded upon the case as if it had been done with consent of both parties.

That brings it to the question, whether the consent of the parties to waive one of the conditions which is required by the Legislature in this Regulation can give jurisdiction to the Zillah Court. Now, it is quite clear, upon all principles and authorities which have been determined in this country, that no such consent can give jurisdiction. That was decided in the case of Ansell v. Evans (7 Trem. 1), regarding a parol submission not coming with the Statute, 9th and 10th Will. III., c. 15. The Court there said, the parties cannot by consent give us the power which the Statute must give. In the case of a submission, they required two witnesses to attest the fact and bring it before the Court, and, therefore, they said, we cannot assume a jurisdiction by mere consent of the parties. Neither can the Zillah Court assume a jurisdiction to make this award have the force of a decree of Court merely by consent of the parties.

If, indeed, we could have been satisfied that the time was merely directory, the case might have been very different. Their Lordships are all quite clearly of opinion that they must take it that the Legislature of India meant distinctly to prescribe that any deed of reference under which an award was to be made, to have the force of a decree of the Zillah Court should contain all those matters which are specified in the section of the Regulation to which I have already referred. And these matters being omitted, their Lordships have, therefore, come to the conclusion that, although the award may have been a very good one in itself, it cannot have the force which this [162] Regulation would have given to it if it had contained all the requisites which the sections specify.

This being so, it is sufficient upon that ground to decide this case. The other point, with respect to the petitions not having been filed along with the deed of reference, seems to their Lordships to be hardly ripe for their decision if it were necessary to decide upon it at all, because the facts are not quite clear. It may be that the petitions were originally attached to the deed of reference as mentioned in the deed of reference, it may be that possibly they may have been filed in the Zillah Court along with the deed itself, and not considered to have been of sufficient importance to be sent here, or it may be that they have become detached in some way that has not been accounted for. Although the question may very fairly have arisen upon whom the onus lay of showing the fact one way or the other, yet the fact is not sufficiently clear upon the face of the proceedings to enable their Lordships to come to a satisfactory conclusion about it. All that their Lordships decide is, that they are quite satisfied that it is necessary under this Regulation that the nature and extent of the matter referred should be contained in the deed of reference, not meaning by that, that every single thing should be specified which the parties dispute, but generally so as to be intelligible and clear, so that it may appear when once filed, if any future suit should arise, what it was that had been determined by the arbitrator. Whether the reference to petitions of a certain date might be sufficient or not, or whether the petitions ought to have been annexed or not, it is not necessary for their Lordships to determine, as they are satisfied upon the first ground [163] of objection, so as to render it unnecessary for their Lordships to express any positive opinion with respect to the second point.

All the other objections that have been taken as to the award not being final, their Lordships do not enter into; it may be doubtful how far a Court of Appeal could enter into that question at all, whether it ought not to have been originally raised in the Zillah Court, and disposed of there. Many difficulties of that kind may arise, but it is not necessary to say anything upon the subject; there being one fatal objection, that objection must prevail. The consequence will be that their Lordships will advise Her Majesty to restore the original decree of the Sudder Court, which directed that the award should be taken off the file of the Zillah Court, and to set aside the second decree of the Sudder Court.

Under the circumstances, their Lordships are of opinion that the costs subsequent to the first decree, including the costs here, ought to be allowed to the Appellants.

[164] BABOO GUNESH DUTT SINGH,—Appellant: MAHARAJA MOHESHUR SINGH, BABOO BASDEO SINGH, and BABOO KIRUT SINGH,—Respondents * [June 20, 21, 22, 1855].

On Appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

Family usage for fourteen generations, by which the succession to the Raj zemindary of Tirhoot had uniformly descended entire to a single male heir, to the exclusion of the other members of the family, upheld.

A custom for the Raja in possession, in his lifetime to abdicate and assign by deed the Raj title and domain to his eldest son, or next immediate male heir; held good, and a deed so assigning the Raj to an eldest son (provision being made for Baboo allowances for the younger sons), sustained.

Quære.—Whether Ben. Regs. XI. of 1793, and X. of 1800, being confined to cases in which there is no deed or Will executed, apply to the case of a Raj?

The question in this suit was, whether the ancestral estate of the Raj zemindary of Sircar Tirhoot, situate in the Districts of Tirhoot and Purneah, constituted a Raj domain, and as such descended entire to a single heir to the exclusion of the other members of the family, or was divisible among the co-heirs in equal shares, according to the usual course of succession provided by the Hindoo law. The first Respondent maintained the former, and the Appellant the latter, of these propositions.

The suit was instituted by the Appellant against Roodur Singh, since deceased, the father of the Re[165]spondent, Maharaja Moheshur Singh, Baboo Basdeo Singh, and Baboo Kirut Singh, to recover possession of a moiety of the above Raj. He claimed by inheritance through his father, Gobind Singh, who was one of the four surviving sons of Madhoo Singh, and who was, up to the 18th of June, 1807, in possession of the Raj as sole proprietor. The other three surviving sons of Madhoo Singh, were Chutur Singh, since deceased, who was the eldest son, and succeeded him to the Raj, and Kirut Singh, and Ramaput Singh. Although the late Gobind Singh, the Appellant's father, deceased, was the third of four sons, the Appellant sought by his suit to recover not one fourth merely, but one full moiety of the Raj and moveable property which had been in the possession of Madhoo Singh at the time of his decease, alleging that Ramaput Singh, the youngest son, had been adopted into another family, and had thereby lost title to any share of the patrimony, and that Kirut Singh, the second son, had released and relinquished his share. The Respondent's, Maharajah Moheshur Singh's, answer to the Appellant's claim, was, that the succession to the Raj was governed by ancient family usage, and that by virtue thereof Chutur Singh, in 1807, as the eldest son and heir apparent, received, under a deed of gift, possession of the Raj from Madhoo Singh, and on his death succeeded to the Raj title and Raj domain thereunder, and as sole heir-at-law; Gobind Singh and the other brothers receiving for their maintenance and support as Baboos, agreeably to the family usage, a provision in land, which was granted to them by Madhoo Singh, subject to the payment of Government revenue to him. Accordingly, Pergunnah Burharpoor Ragho was granted, in 1807, to Gobind [166] Singh for his maintenance, under the condition of his paying the Government revenue to the Chutur Singh, as sole proprietor of the Raj. This revenue he paid up to the time of his decease, which happened in the year 1822. On his death the Appellant succeeded to this Pergunnah.

The Appellant, although admitting the grant of this Pergunnah to his father, Gobind Singh, alleged that the same was made under a deed, dated the 14th of March, 1806, by Madhoo Singh, on the occasion of the ceremony of investing Gobind Singh with the Brahminical thread; and the Appellant alleged that the Pergunnahs which the brothers of his father also received were not granted for their maintenance, but that such Pergunnahs were granted by Madhoo Singh on the occasion of their being invested with their Brahminical threads.

The facts giving rise to the suit were shortly these:—

The ancestors of the Appellant and Respondents had been in possession of the Raj of Tirhoot from a period long anterior to the commencement of British rule in India. The first of these ancestors was Mahesh Thakoor, and from his death to the succession of the late Roodur Singh, the father of the first Respondent, there had been fourteen several successions; and on every such occasion only one person at a time succeeded to the Raj, in pursuance of the family usage: maintenance having been provided for the younger members of the family by a grant of a Pergunnah out of the Raj estates. By the custom of this family, the Raja last seised, upon his abdication by ill health or withdrawing from the world, by deed of gift assigned the Raj to his eldest son, or to the next immediate male heir.

[167] Madhoo Singh, the common grandfather of the Appellant, and Roodur Singh, succeeded to the Raj in 1775 upon the death of Raja Pratab Singh. Madhoo Singh had four wives: by the first he had no issue; by the second he had a son named Kishun Singh, who died without issue in his father's lifetime, and another son named Chutur Singh, the father of Roodur Singh; by the third he had two sons, Kirut Singh and Gobind Singh, the father of the Appellant; and by the fourth, a son named Ramaput Singh, who was, however, adopted into another family, and ceased, therefore, to have any claim or title to the ancestral estate.

On the 18th of June, 1807, Madhoo Singh being dangerously ill, and before leaving his home for Benares, executed a deed of gift of the Raj and Zemindary to Chutur Singh, his eldest son, making provision for his other sons by grants of Pergunnahs, by way of Baboo allowances; two petitions were about the same time presented in his name, one to the Zillah Court of Tirhoot, and the other to the Collector of that district. Both these petitions stated, that he had given the Raj and Zemindary, and all his property and effects, to Chutur Singh, and had given to his other sons, Kirut Singh, Gobind Singh, and Ramaput Singh, proprietary deeds for different Pergunnahs, for their support as Baboos. The petition to the Zillah Court prayed that Chutur Singh, might be allowed to appear and conduct in his own name all cases there pending in which Madhoo Singh was Plaintiff or Defendant, and that to the Collector prayed that Madhoo Singh's name might be erased from the revenue papers, and Chutur Singh's name entered in its stead, and that in future the Government revenue might be received from him.

Madhoo Singh died in the latter part of the year [168] 1807, whereupon Chutur Singh took possession of the Raj. In the month of May, 1811, Kirut Singh, his brother, set up a claim and instituted a suit against him in the Patna Provincial Court of Tirhoot, claiming a third part of the entire property, alleging that there were only three brothers entitled to share the property. By his plaint he impeached the validity of the deed of gift by Madhoo Singh in Chutur Singh's favour. In his answer to this plaint the Defendant relied upon the deed of gift of the Raj by Madhoo Singh in his favour, and insisted that Pergunnah Jedee was given to the Plaintiff by Madhoo Singh, as a Baboo allowance.

The Patna Provincial Court pronounced its decision in the suit of Kirut Singh v. Chutur Singh on the 22nd of June, 1814, and dismissed the claim of the Plaintiff, who appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut; but before the case was tried, he entered into a compromise with Chutur Singh, whereby he agreed to withdraw and abandon his appeal, and acknowledge the invalidity of his claim, which was accordingly carried into effect.

Gobind Singh died in 1822, leaving an only son, the present Appellant, who was then an infant about a year old.

Chutur Singh died on the 3rd of April, 1839, leaving two sons, Roodur Singh and Basdeo Singh, having made a deed of gift of the Raj to his eldest son, who thereupon took possession of the Raj. The Appellant having attained his majority, instituted the present suit on the 29th of July, 1839, in the Civil Court of Tirhoot, against Roodur Singh, Basdeo Singh, and Kirut Singh. The real Defendant was Roodur Singh, as the other Defendants had substantially no interest in the suit. In his plaint the Appellant alleged that he was entitled to the moiety in question, together with the acquisitions of his grandfather, Madhoo Singh, and his father, Gobind Singh, which had been purchased out of the produce of his grandfather's property, and the sum total at which he valued the property, reckoning the value of the revenue-paying lands at threefold their assessment, and that of the La-kiraj or unassessed lands at eighteenfold their yearly produce, amounted to Rs. 708,636. 14a. 1p. 4k., a moiety of which he claimed. He also alleged that the whole of the lands in dispute descended from his ancestor, Maharaja Nurindur Singh, to Pratab Singh, the adopted son of Nurindur Singh, and from Pratab Singh to his nephew, Madhoo Singh, his grandfather. He then stated that their father had given to each of them a Pergunnah, at the ceremony of the Brahminical thread, which Pergunnahs the Appellant, therefore, excluded from his claim, and alleged that Chutur Singh had fabricated documents while Madhoo Singh was in a state of insensibility, whereby he had got possession of the Zemindary after his father's death. He further stated the adoption of Ramaput Singh into another family, and the relinquishment by his uncle, Kirut Singh, of all claim to the hereditary property of the Zemindary in the suit which he had instituted against Chutur Singh, when, as alleged, Chutur Singh, by deed, assigned the Talook Bukanut, etc., to Kirut Singh, and withdrew him from the claim of his right to the whole property which was then pending in the Sudder Dewanny Court.

The Defendant, Roodur Singh, by his answer asserted that his brother, Basdeo Singh, and his uncle, Kirut Singh, the other Defendants, were in collusion [170] with the Plaintiff, and that the suit was at their instigation. He insisted that the property in question was an ancient Raj of Tirhoot, and that from its first creation and the commencement of the family the following custom had prevailed, namely, that the eldest son became the proprietor of the Raj and all its appendages and property, and filled the place of the father, and the younger sons, after they attained their majority, had only a maintenance as Baboos (or younger gentlemen of the family); that it was also the custom, that whenever the Raja of the time being found that he was grown old, or for any other reason was desirous of forsaking the affairs of this world, or thought his death approaching, he delivered over the Raj, and all the property of the Raj, to the eldest son, who was the heir-apparent, and appointed a provision for the younger sons as Baboos, and confirmed the old-established usage; that if there was no son or grandson, the Raja of the time then gave the Raj and all its appendages to the brother or any other relative as his successor, who succeeded to the Raj, and possessed all the property belonging to it. He then traced the successive descents of the Raj, according to the family usage; by which it appeared, that the actual Raja before his death made over the Raj to his eldest son, or, in case he had no issue, to his brother, who took exclusive possession of it, and the younger children had merely a maintenance as Baboos. He alleged that in this manner, when Chuter Singh wished to forsake the world and go to Kashee (a holy place), he, according to the same family usage, assigned by a deed to Roodur Singh, his eldest son and heir-apparent, the Raj and all the property, and in his own lifetime placed him in the Raj as his successor, and [171] gave him possession; and that he assigned the profits of the Pergunnah of Jareel, after paying the revenue, as a maintenance to Basdeo Singh, the younger son, and gave him also a deed by which Roodur Singh was acknowledged the possessor of the property of the Raj and Government revenue. That such an ancient usage had been continued, and no division or partition ever made, and that the Plaintiff could not show that the Raj was ever divided into shares; that the property, according to the family usage, having descended from one to another, did not prove that it is heritable to all, and that the Plaintiff's claim for a share could not be in anywise admissible; for country usage, family usage, and the rules of Princes, according to the Hindoo law and rules of Court, were prevalent and preferable, and no book could abolish such usage. The answer next insisted that the allegations of the Plaintiff as to the various Pergunnahs mentioned in the plaint having been given at the times of investing the recipients with the Brahminical thread were false and futile, and that Madhoo Singh never gave any Pergunnah, or village, to any son on the occasion of such investiture; and that such was not the family usage, according to which nothing but jewels and money were given on such occasions. The answer then stated that Kirut Singh had instituted a suit in the Provincial Court of Patna on similar grounds, for a third share of the property, and that his claim was dismissed, which decision the Defendant asserted was sufficient to repel the claim and allegation of the Plaintiff. He said that Pergunnah Aalapoor was included in the other property of the Raj, which Madhoo Singh gave to Chuter Singh by deed in 1807, and was given by Chuter Singh to Moheshur Singh, the [172] present Respondent, his eldest grandson, at his birth. He denied that Kishun Singh got Pergunnah Dhurumpoor at the ceremony of the thread, and asserted that as he was the eldest son, his father, Madhoo Singh, gave him that Pergunnah at the ceremony of appearance; and that as Kishun Singh had no issue, he adopted his brother, Chuter Singh as his son; and that on his death the Pergunnah came into the possession of Chuter Singh in the lifetime of Madhoo Singh. And after stating the manner in which Chuter Singh succeeded to the Zemindary, the answer alleged that Gobind Sing was well acquainted with the family usage and laws of the Raj, and thinking it useless to prefer a claim, he continued during his life to pay revenue to Chuter Singh, according to the conditions of the deed of Madhoo Singh. It next alleged, that when Kirut Singh's suit for a third share of the property was dismissed by the Provincial Court, he appealed to the Sudder Court; but when he understood that the eldest brother's right was complete according to family usage and the act of the father, and that he had no other right but to maintenance as a Baboo, he withdrew the appeal and filed a deed of withdrawal, in which there was no mention of any mutual exchange of right having been made. The answer then stated, that by every Hindoo law particular customs were maintained and upheld, and concluded thus:—"What the Plaintiff's father got was merely as the right of a Baboo's maintenance, and accordingly Madhoo Singh, when he was about to forsake the world, followed the usage, and gave the eldest son, Chuter Singh, all the Raj and its rights which he had by the family and country usage, and laws of the Raj. It deserves consideration, that if the property appertaining to this [173] Raj were divisible, by the family usage, among heirs, the Raj could not exist."

The Defendant, Kirut Singh, by his answer insisted that he had been improperly made a Defendant in the suit; that he was in possession of Pergunnah Jedee, under a deed of gift from his father, Madhoo Singh; that the Appellant had improperly included in his claim some villages which had originally belonged to Maharance Pudmavutee, the wife of Nurindur Singh, and ancestor of Kirut Singh, to which Madhoo Singh had no title, and of which he never had possession; and that the Appellant had no right to the hereditary property claimed by his suit.

The other Defendant, Basdeo Singh, by his answer stated that Kirut Singh had previously sued Chutur Singh for the same property, and that Chutur Singh had answered the plaint, denying that the property belonged to their grandfather and was ancestral, and that the suit was dismissed. He then said that in the present suit the Defendant, Roodur Singh, had intentionally abandoned the ground taken by his father, Chutur Singh, in the former suit, and had relied without any ground upon a family usage, which never existed in the Singh family. He declared that the line of defence adopted by Roodur Singh proceeded from fraud on his part; as he was in hopes that on the termination of the suit he might take an acknowledgment of the family usage from the Appellant, and acquire a proof of his assertion as to the family usage. Basdeo Singh then denied that the four Pergunnahs mentioned in the plaint had been given at the ceremony of the Brahminical thread, and asserted that the Zemindary was the private acquisition of Madhoo Singh, and had not descended to him by inheritance; [174] and that with respect to such property, a father had by law the power of making an unequal division of it amongst his sons.

The Appellant and Roodur Singh adduced evidence, and witnesses were examined on their respective sides. The material portions relating to the usage of the family and validity of the deed executed by Madhoo Singh, are sufficiently referred to in the judgment of their Lordships.

Previous to the cause coming on for hearing, and on the 20th of September, 1840, Basdeo Singh, the younger brother of the Defendant, Roodur Singh, had instituted a suit against Roodur Singh, claiming a share of the Raj, and raising exactly the same questions as were raised by the Appellant in his suit, namely, the existence of the family usage, and the validity of the deed executed in conformity with such usage by Chutur Singh in favour of Roodur Singh, his eldest son, with provision for the maintenance of his younger son. In both suits the points raised with reference to the family usage and the evidence on the subject being substantially the same, and the two cases being found so closely connected, they were heard simultaneously by the same Judge, and decided at the same time.

In Basdeo Singh's suit the question raised respecting the family usage was fully considered, and it was held by the Zillah Court of Tirhoot that the usage was fully established, and was valid, and Basdeo Singh's suit was accordingly dismissed.

The present suit came on for hearing before the Zillah Judge, Mr. David Pringle, on the 31st of December, 1844, who in his judgment and decree of that date stated as follows:—"In the case of Kirut Singh [175] v. Chutur Singh, the Plaintiff's claim (like the present Plaintiff's) was for an equal division; and the Court, upon finding that the possession of the Plaintiff was according to the deed of partition of Madhoo Singh, and not by a gift at the investiture of the Brahminical thread, dismissed it; and, by a legal opinion which was taken in that case from the Hindoo law-officer of the Court, and the acknowledged possession of the Plaintiff, the deed of partition was considered to be in conformity with it, and cannot now be disputed. It is my opinion that if the document of Madhoo Singh be sufficient with regard to the right of Kirut Singh, it is so with regard to all who are included in it. In this case the Plaintiff was at liberty to say that he was not a party to such a claim on that deed of partition; and if that deed was accepted by his father, it could not be prejudicial to him, and he referred to 2 Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu Law, p. 50, as a sufficient precedent for it; but the Plaintiff has never brought forward a claim to have the deed of Madhoo Singh annulled, and that deed has been confirmed by the Provincial Court, as above said, and he could produce no kind of proof. It is my opinion that the deed of gift at the investiture of the Brahmical thread is contrary to rule and usage, and nothing has been found to show its authenticity: for the possession of the Plaintiff is according to the document of Madhoo Singh, and not by any other document: and by the Hindoo law, if any deed of partition be put in execution, and any one take anything under it, he will have possession of only that and nothing more, and my decision should be according to the Hindoo law, upon which the Plaintiff founds his claim: and it is [176] not necessary to enter into the question of family usage in this case, because in a similar case, in which the Defendants are parties, the question of family usage has been fully tried." The suit of the Appellant was accordingly dismissed with costs.

The Appellant appealed from this decree to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Calcutta.

The appeal came on for hearing on the 27th of February, 1846, concurrently with an appeal brought by Basdeo Singh against the decree of the Zillah Court in his suit.

In Basdeo Singh's suit the Judge, Mr. Rattery, entered fully into the question respecting the family usage, and agreeing in opinion with the lower Court, dismissed the appeal (see case reported, nom. Muha Raj Kowur Basdeo Singh v. Muha Rajah Roodur Singh Bahadur, 7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 228); and for the same reasons dismissed the appeal of the Appellant in his suit, with costs. In his judgment he said:—"As this case is similar to case No. 50 (the suit of Basdeo Singh v. Roodur Singh), and with regard to the evidence in that case generally and to the documents filed by Roodur Singh, one of the Respondents in this case, particularly, it is not necessary in my opinion to enter into particulars in this case, which can be known by a reference to it. In this case my opinion coincides in every respect with that of the District Judge."

From this decree the Appellant appealed to England. Pending the appeal Roodur Singh died, having previously abdicated and by deed granted the Raj to his eldest son, Maharajah Moheshur Singh, who was admitted by the Sudder Court to succeed his father as Respondent, and carry on the appeal.

[177] The appeal now came on for hearing, and was argued by

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Shapter, for the Appellant.—Their argument was confined to two points: first, to an examination of the evidence, whether the Zemindary of Tirhoot constituted an ancient Raj or not, and the custom and usage of the family regulating the succession; secondly, as to the validity of the deed of appointment to the Raj by Madhoo Singh upon his abdication in his eldest son's, Chuter Singh's, favour, and the acquiescence in it by Kirut Singh and Gobind Singh, the Appellant contending, that the determination of the question of the succession was to be governed by the general Hindoo law, by which he claimed upon a partition to be entitled to the moiety sued for. They referred to Rajah Deedur Hossain v. Rancee Zohoor-oon-Nissa (2 Moore's Ind. Ap. Cases, 441), Rawut Urjun Sing v. Rawut Gunsiam Sing (5 Moore's Ind. Ap. Cases, 169), Baidyanund Singh v. Rudranand Singh (5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 198), Muha Raj Kowur Basdeo Singh v. Muha Rajah Roodur Singh Bahadur (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 228), 1 Strange's Hindu Law (2nd Edit.), pp. 16, 177, 198, 1 W. Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu Law, pp. 44, 46: Ben. Regs. XI. of 1793, and X. of 1800.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, appeared for the Respondents: but were not called upon to argue the case.

Judgment was pronounced, as follows, by [178] The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh.—In this case their Lordships do not think it necessary to trouble the Counsel for the Respondents. We had very little doubt at the termination of the argument for the Appellant what judgment it would be our duty to recommend Her Majesty to pronounce, but we were extremely unwilling to intimate any opinion upon that subject until we had an opportunity, by a careful examination of the whole proceedings, of ascertaining, whether there was anything to be found in them which would either alter or confirm that impression. We have had an opportunity of making that examination, and the result of that is to remove all doubt from our minds as to the utter absence of any ground for the present appeal.

Before advertg to the circumstances of the case, either of fact or of law, which are in controversy, it may be convenient to state those as to which either there is no dispute, or as to which, in the opinion of their Lordships, all possibility of their being successfully disputed is removed by the evidence.

In the month of July, 1775, Madhoo Singh succeeded to the Zemindary of Tirhoot. He succeeded to the Zemindary on the death of his brother Pratab Singh, who had previously been in sole possession of it, Madhoo Singh during the lifetime of his brother being in possession of a Pergunnah called Dhurumpoor, as a Baboo allowance, which is a provision for younger sons, as an appanage of the estate. Madhoo Singh had five sons: Kishun Singh, his eldest son, died without issue in his father's lifetime, and a younger son called Ramaput Singh was adopted into another family, and ceased, therefore, to be a son of Madhoo Singh. There remained, therefore, three [179] sons of Madhoo Singh, namely, Chutur Singh, his eldest son, Kirut Singh, his second son, and Gobind Singh, his third son.

On the 18th of June, 1807, Madhoo Singh, thinking himself at the point of death, and being, in truth, extremely ill, abdicated the Zemindary, and retired to Benares, or to the banks of the Ganges, for the purpose of dying there, and on that day he made a deed, upon which, in a great measure, the merits of this case turn.

By that deed, after reciting that he was unwell, and was retiring from the world to die upon the Ganges, he transferred the Raj, as he called it, or the Zemindary in question, to his eldest son, Chutur Singh, and by the same deed he declared that he had already given one Pergunnah, Jedee, to his second son, Kirut Singh, by way of provision as a Baboo, and another Pergunnah, Burkarpoor Ragho, to his son Gobind Singh, as a similar provision for him as a younger son. He made a similar disposition of certain villages as a provision for his daughters. This deed was executed on the 18th day of June. On the 27th of that month he presented a petition to the Judge of the Zillah Court of Tirhoot, stating the terms of this deed, and praying that it might be carried into effect. On the 4th of July, 1807, he presented a similar petition to the Collector, praying that in his department this instrument might be carried into effect by entering the estates in the names to which the deed transferred them. On the 12th of August, 1807, an order was made by the Collector accordingly, directing those transfers to be entered, and on the same day the Collector issued an order to the tenants, ordering them to pay their rents and assess-[180]-ments according to the terms of this deed; and on the 14th of the same month, the Zillah Judge of Tirhoot sent a message or note to Chutur Singh, stating that he had received communication of this instrument, and that Chutur Singh should be put in possession, and remain in quiet possession according to the terms of that deed.

With respect, therefore, to this instrument, and to the fact of its having been made, of its being considered valid, and carried into execution, at least adopted by all the authorities of the country, there can be no doubt.

But all this takes place during the time that Madhoo Singh was alive; he continues to live till the month of November, 1807; no doubt is ever intimated by him, no suspicion suggested by him of any fraud having been practised upon him, or of there being any invalidity in this instrument, and upon this deed the possession in all respects, both with respect to the Raj, if it be a Raj, and with respect to the Pergunnahs given to those younger sons as Baboo allowances, is taken and confirmed according to the terms of the deed.

Thus matters continued till the month of May, 1811, when Kirut Singh, the second son, who was in possession of the Pergunnah Jedee, institutes a suit against his brother, Chutur Singh, for the purpose of obtaining one-third of the Zemindary. In the plaint in that suit he states the facts which I have alluded to, namely, the situation of the family, and the possession of the Raj by Chutur Singh. He then alleges that the Pergunnah which he held was given to him by his father upon his investiture with the Brahminical thread, and that he was not by the acceptance [181] of that Pergunnah deprived of his general rights in the Zemindary; and then he alleged that the Zemindary was divisible amongst all the sons, and that he, therefore, as one of the three sons, was entitled to a third share. He stated that his brother, Gobind Singh, was then a minor, but that when Gobind Singh came of age, Gobind Singh would claim his third, or might claim his third, of the Zemindary.

On the 7th of May, 1812, Chutur Singh put in his answer in that suit, and he there distinctly alleged that the possession of the Pergunnah held by Kirut Singh was under the terms of this deed; he denied the fact of any grant having been made upon the investiture, and insisted upon the validity of the deed, under which he was in possession, and of his right as sole heir to this Zemindary.

On the 22nd of June, 1814, the suit of Kirut Singh was dismissed, and it was dismissed upon this ground; that totally independent of all family usage whatever, or of what the law might be if no such deed as that of 1807 had been assented to by the sons, Kirut Singh had taken possession of Pergunnah Jedee, and was then in possession under the terms of that deed; that he had, therefore, assented to the deed, and was bound by the whole effect of it.

That judgment was pronounced on the 22nd of June, 1814. Kirut Singh appealed against that judgment, and in the month of July, 1816, he abandoned that appeal, and by a deed of compromise and adjustment, distinctly recognised the title of his brother to the possession of this Zemindary, of this Raj, as it is there termed, as his undivided inheritance. On the 4th of September, 1816, it appears that there was a deed executed by Chutur Singh, which it was said was con-[182]-nected with the deed of July, 1816. Their Lordships can find no connection between those two deeds; there is nothing in the suit which had been instituted by Kirut Singh, in which the claim which Chutur Singh abandoned by the deed of the 4th of September, 1816, is raised or insisted upon by him. It never can be considered, in the opinion of their Lordships, as in the slightest degree affecting the validity or the effect whatever it may be of that abandonment of the appeal, that this deed was executed by Chutur Singh. The effect of Chutur Singh's deed was simply this, that Kirut Singh was to be put in possession of thirty-three villages, a comparatively small quantity of land, which had been given to him, not by a direct ancestor of the family, but by the Maharanee, the wife of one of those former Rajas, or at least a member of the family. Chutur Singh, it seems, had claimed that, not in this suit, but had claimed it, or set up some right to it, as a part of the Zemindary, and, upon this deed of the 4th of September, he abandoned it. The claim involved in this instrument of the 4th of September, 1816, is thirty-three villages, whereas the right involved in the suit by Kirut Singh is one-third of fifteen hundred villages, a large Principality. There is no sort of connection between those two instruments that we can perceive, and if there were it would be idle to represent that the one could be considered as a consideration for abandoning the claim to the other.

Now, observe this takes place in 1816. Gobind Singh had been in possession (as far as a minor can be in possession during his minority) of the Pergunnah which had been allotted to him, but in 1815 or 1816 he came of age. Kirut Singh, in his suit, had [183] adverted to his claim. I rather think he was guardian of Gobind Singh; but Gobind Singh, on coming of age, must have known, and could not have avoided knowing, the question which had been raised in this suit by his brother, Kirut Singh, and that if the possession of the Pergunnah which had been held by his brother was under that deed, he could have no claim, according to the decision of the Zillah Court, to any portion of the Zemindary. Now, in this state of things, what does he do? Having full knowledge of this claim, being called upon by the circumstances of the case, if he could distinguish his case from Kirut Singh's, to point out that distinction, and assert that claim in a suit of his own: he lives for seven or eight years afterwards: he acquiesces entirely in the possession of that Pergunnah; he raises no claim to the smallest portion of the Zemindary, and he dies in the month of June, 1822, leaving the present Appellant, his son, a minor.

Now, at the death of Gobind Singh, the present Appellant was about a year and a half old. His father had remained, at all events, after he came of age, for seven or eight years in the possession of this Pergunnah under that title, whatever it was, by which at that time it was held. In 1837, I think, the present Appellant would come of age. It is not material, but on the death of Gobind Singh the Appellant was made a ward of the Court of Wards, and during his minority the income of this Pergunnah was applied to his use.

In 1839, Chutur Singh, who had thus remained during the whole of his life in the individual possession of this Zemindary, made a gift to his son, Roodur Singh, according to the family custom, as it is [184] alleged, by which he abdicated the Zemindary in favour of his son, and he soon afterwards died, and Roodur Singh took possession as sole Zemindar.

On the 29th of July, 1839, the present Appellant instituted his suit. Now, it must be observed, that he had full notice of the ground upon which Kirut Singh's suit had been decided, and the points which he had to make out, therefore, were these: that the Zemindary in its nature was divisible; that there was no deed, or no valid deed, executed which could destroy that divisibility, and that he never had assented, whatever Kirut Singh might have done, to the deed of 1807, by which, what they call a partition of this family property was made.

Accordingly, in his suit, he distinctly alleges, and it is the necessary foundation of his suit, that his possession of that Pergunnah had not been under the deed of 1807, but that grants had been made to each of the sons, and among them to Kirut Singh, upon their investiture with the Brahminical thread by their father; that upon the occasion of that investiture, a grant had been made to each son, of a Pergunnah, as a free gift by the father. He then disputed, as had been done in the former suit, the validity of the deed of 1807 upon other grounds, and he claimed one half of this Zemindary.

The answer put in by Roodur Singh insisted that the possession had been under the deed of 1807, and under the family usage, warranting the execution of that deed. In that answer he distinctly stated what was very important, that with respect to Kirut Singh there was not a pretence for saying that it had been made upon the investiture with the Brahminical thread. It appeared upon the documents to which [185] he referred, that there had been a gift made to him upon his birth by his father, as the eldest son, and that the documents in the Collector's office, and the Magistrate's office, distinctly proved that. Now, on the 31st of August, 1841, the replication was filed by the Appellant, still persisting in his statement of this grant having been made to all the sons upon the investiture with the Brahminical thread, and then for the first time he sets up a deed which he states is dated the 14th of March, 1806, by which he alleges that that grant to him was made.

Now it appears, that Roodur Singh had a brother named Basdeo Singh, and when this claim was set up by the present Appellant, insisting that the Zemindary was divisible, and that he was entitled to one half of it, as coming from Madhoo Singh, it occurred naturally enough to Basdeo Singh, that if that were so he was entitled to one half of that which belonged to Chutur Singh, and, accordingly, on the 20th of September, 1841, he instituted a suit, and the effect of the success of those two suits would have been thus: in the first place, one half of the Zemindary must have gone to the present Appellant, and one half of the remainder must have gone to Basdeo Singh.

Now, there was this difference, and this difference only, in the questions which were raised in those two suits. In both, the validity of the deed of 1807 and the existence of the family custom were equally in controversy. In the suit of the Appellant alone, could any point be raised as to the deed of 1807 becoming valid by acquiescence of the parties. In the Appellant's suit, therefore, both the family usage and the validity of the deed of 1807 were raised, and also [186] the point whether the present Appellant was or was not bound by the acquiescence of his father in the deed of 1807. These two suits involving in a great degree the same points, an order was made by which they were referred to the same Judge; they were heard at the same time, and there appears to have been a reference made to the evidence in both suits. The evidence taken in one was referred to in the other. On the 31st of December, 1844, both these suits were dismissed. The first suit, the Appellant's, was dismissed in this manner: It was said by the Court, that he raised there two points, first the acquiescence, which, as they held to be decisively against him, it was unnecessary to enter into the question of family usage in that case, because that was fully done in Basdeo Singh's suit, in which equally with this it was an essential part of the case. In the two suits together, therefore, they decide that this is a Raj; that family usage exists for which the deed of 1807 was executed; that the deed of 1807 was a deed to which Gobind Singh assented, and by which the Appellant, his son, is bound.

On the 10th of March, 1845, there was an appeal in both suits to the Sudder Court, and on the 27th of February, 1846, both appeals were dismissed. In August, 1846, there was leave given to appeal to England. In 1850, Roodur Singh, the then Raja, following the usage which had prevailed in this family, or was represented to have prevailed in this family, for at least two centuries, abdicated in favour of his eldest son, the present Respondent, and by an order made by the Sudder Court, the Respondent was substituted for him in the appeal.

Now, the questions which have been raised at their [187] Lordships' bar, and argued with that ability which we always find in the arguments of the Counsel who have been employed in the appeal, are these: The first question is as to the validity of the deed of Mudhoo Singh, and that independent of any acquiescence by Gobind Singh. Now, questions of general law of great importance have been raised, but which it appears to their Lordships do not really arise in the present case. We apprehend that the principle upon which we are about to proceed in this case admits of no doubt or question whatever. By the general law prevailing in this District, and indeed generally under the Hindoo law, estates are divisible amongst the sons, when there are more than one son: they do not descend to the eldest son, but are divisible amongst all. With respect to the Raj as a Principality, the general rule is otherwise, and must be so. It is a Sovereignty, a Principality, a subordinate Sovereignty and Principality no doubt, but still a limited Sovereignty and Principality, which, in its very nature, excludes the idea of division in the sense in which that term is used in the present case. Again, there is no doubt that the general law with respect to inheritance, as well as with respect to other matters, may, in the case of great families where it is shown that usage has prevailed for a very long series of years, be controlled, unless there be positive law to the contrary. Now, it is said in this case, that there is no positive law which excludes the divisibility of this inheritance, unless it be clearly proved to be an ancient Raj, which it is denied that it is. But Regulation XI. of 1793 really has no bearing upon the case, for the Regulation of 1793 is confined to cases in which there is no deed and no Will executed. [188] While there is a deed, or where there is a Will, it does not give a validity to that deed or that Will, which the deed or Will would not otherwise possess, but it leaves it precisely where it stood before: therefore, the Regulation of 1793, and Regulation X. of 1800, and the authorities upon this point which have been referred to, do not appear to their Lordships to be at all involved in the consideration of the present case.

The question, therefore, is, first, was this a real and true Raj. Now, upon looking into the evidence upon that point, one can hardly avoid expressing some surprise that even the strong necessity of the case could induce a doubt to be raised upon that point at the Bar: because, what is the evidence? In the first place, it is not disputed that a considerable time before this country fell under the dominion of the East India Company, this was a Raj, with all the circumstances attending a Raj: that it was treated as such by the supreme authorities; it was treated as such by the vassals or tenants of the Raj, and that from that time to the present no question as to its being a Raj has existed.

But the evidence goes a great deal further, and it is some satisfaction to their Lordships in this case to find that there is at length one case (I think I may almost say it is the first I have ever seen in my experience in this Court), in which the parol evidence given in the case upon the part of the Respondents is really worthy of the utmost attention. It is given by persons not liable to any imputation whatever, either in respect of their position, or in respect of the form and mode in which they gave their testimony.

Now, the evidence which was given in this case is [189] produced from nineteen witnesses, fourteen or fifteen of them, if not more, being Zemindars or Talookdars, persons of station holding property, paying a large revenue to the Government, some Rs. 3000, some Rs. 5000, some Rs. 4000, some Rs. 8000; all well acquainted with the country, whose ancestors, as it appears in many instances, for twelve generations, in some for longer, and in others for a less period, have held lands in this District, who were interested, therefore, in knowing what the nature of this property was; and what is the account which they give? Why, the account which they give is this, that this was a Raj. Independent of this, however, there is the evidence of three Canoongoes, or Record-keepers, persons in this part of India especially, as it appears from reports which we have had occasion to look into for another purpose, entitled to great credit, and who tell us that that which is stated in the parol testimony, as a tradition from their ancestors by other witnesses, is consistent with their knowledge collected from the records which have been in their possession. The account, therefore, which they give upon that point is this: that before the time of Mahesh Thakoor, above two hundred years ago, before the original founder of this family, Mahesh Thakoor, came into possession of it, it was a Principality, that it was granted by the Emperor to this first founder of the family, and that ever since it has continued in this family, one and indivisible, but to that I will advert presently. Now, what do they tell us? They are asked how they know this: why they say, we know it for this reason, that the whole of this Sircar Tirhoot was originally included in it. The whole of that great property was included in the possession of this family: [190] they were the only rulers whom we knew, and we knew they were the rulers, and we knew who they were, for this reason, that we and our ancestors held our lands from them, and until the East India Company assumed the dominion over this territory, we paid our rents as vassals or as holders to the Lords of this Zemindary, who were the rulers of the country, we knowing nothing of the Emperor from whom the grant to this founder of the family was made, and we find the seal with the fish, which is not in its own expression very intelligible, is stated to be an emblem of Sovereignty or of high nobility granted by the Emperor to great families; and if it were further necessary to inquire into the antiquity of this Zemindary before the possession of the East India Company, there is evidence which admits, in the opinion of their Lordships, of no doubt whatever that this was a Raj; was a Principality indeed, the remnant of it, as it appears, extending even at the present time to about 1500 villages.

Well, then, in the next place, is there usage? Is the family usage proved? Now, the witnesses to whom I have already referred, one and all, speak of its being not only a Raj, but without divisibility. They state further, that according to their knowledge, it has always been treated as indivisible, and that there is no instance to be found anywhere in which there are two Rajas to be found upon the records of the Supreme Government as coparceners of this Zemindary. Now, is that consistent with the evidence on the other side? Why, evidence on the other side there is none. The case has been examined with the greatest ability and ingenuity, and in different parts of the case circumstances have been pointed out as to [191] which it is said, "Why, it is difficult to reconcile that with the statement." Why, we are dealing with usage continued for two hundred years, and when you have no other knowledge than that which can be collected, after a great lapse of time, with the ignorance of these circumstances which might explain difficulties, it is impossible but that there should be difficulties; but I must say, that this is a case in which there are as few difficulties, at least in my judgment, as I have ever seen.

Now, let us see what the evidence is. The pedigree put in by the Respondent describes the original founder of the family and many of his successors, not as "Rajas" or "Maharajas," but as "Thakoors;" why, really, that is a circumstance which is utterly unimportant. The question is not what was the title or designation of the owner, but what was the nature of the property which the person held? The term "Raja," as it is well said, has been and may be usurped by almost anybody who is in a situation which would in any degree give countenance to it, as we find commonly enough in this country with respect to other titles. But we all know that in feudal times the greatest barons and princes in the feudal empire, in France especially at all events, held their estates without titles; one of them, I think De Courcy, boasting that he was neither King, nor Count, but Seigneur De Courcy. It may be just the same with this family. They may be called "Thakoors," they may be called "Rajas," but that makes no difference. Nay, these very Baboos themselves, the younger sons of the family, are in this very case termed Maharaja Baboo so and so.

But then, it is said, (and it is the circumstance [192] which alone appears to their Lordships to have any weight in this case,) but we give you evidence that with respect to one of those parties, Ram Singh, there was a joint possessor of this Zemindary, and we prove it in this way:—Nurindur Singh was in possession as Raja, and during the time that he was in possession as Raja, from about 1745 down to 1752, we find several grants made by Ram Singh of property within the limits of this great Zemindary, most of them made for religious uses; but whether or not so made, it appears that one or two of those grants were subsequently confirmed by the Supreme Court. In the first place, it is quite consistent with possibility, and I should say with probability, that this Baboo would have, as the sons of the family always appear to have had, a Baboo's allowance, and that those grants were made out of that property which he held as Baboo, or out of other property which belonged to him in his individual character, and which was the subject of his own acquisition. But there is further evidence, that some of these grants were confirmed by Maharaja Nurindur; and with respect to others which were not confirmed, it is perfectly notorious to everybody acquainted with Bengal usage, that there is a very great reluctance on the part of the great proprietors to interfere with property so appropriated, whether with or without law; it is considered a sort of sacrilege so to do.

I am not aware that there are any other circumstances established in the evidence in this case which is in the smallest degree inconsistent with that usage which is proved by the witnesses to have prevailed for this great length of time, or anything which can throw doubt upon the truth of that statement.

[193] But there is this, which really removes, as it appears to their Lordships, all doubt upon the case. This property was acquired about two hundred years ago; according to the case which the Appellant is compelled to insist upon, not only was it not subject to division, but it was left to descend without disposition; it was not capable of being made the subject of disposition so as to exclude divisibility. Now, is it possible that in a period of two hundred years there should have been no division of this estate, or at least no such division as finally to divide and separate one portion of it from another? It is absolutely impossible; and can anything more strongly illustrate that impossibility than this, that if the question he raises, whether the general Hindoo law prevails or not, be decided in his favour, this Zemindary would naturally be split into portions; the Appellant would take one portion, Basdeo Singh would take another half of the remaining half, and the Raja would be left with only one-fourth?

Their Lordships, therefore, are quite unable to entertain any doubt, either as to the fact of its being a Raj, or as to the fact of the usage prevailing that the reigning Raja has the power of abdicating, and by deed assigning the Raj in favour of his eldest son or next immediate male heir; and we think that such usage is proved beyond all controversy to have prevailed in this country, and to have been acted upon in this instance.

If that be so, it is not very important to enter into the consideration of the sunuds, which were commented upon by the Appellant's counsel, the different grants which are represented to have been [194] made, beginning with that by Maheeneth Singh in the year 1690, and continuing down to the present time. Their Lordships are unable to find any reason to doubt the validity of these instruments, except with respect to one. With respect to that one, it is said, that that deed purports to bear date on the 12th of June, and that the Raja is proved to have died on the 9th of that month, and that, therefore, it could not be a genuine instrument. Well, the force of that argument depends, of course, entirely upon the accuracy with which these dates are given. Yet assuming that that instrument could not be genuine, upon which their Lordships in their present state of knowledge upon the subject are not able to pronounce any decided opinion, and striking that instrument out of the case, all the others would remain unimpeached, and that which is the most important of all would so remain.

Then, if there were no deed, the Raj would descend indivisible; but when we look at what has been done within the last one hundred years, there really seems to be scarcely room for the suggestion of a doubt that each of those different Rajas has actually adopted the custom contended for, whether reasonable or unreasonable; and, with respect to the deed in question, it would be unnecessary if that custom prevailed: and it may be observed, that though undoubtedly before the Regulation of 1793 such a deed was useful only if the Zemindar abdicated in his lifetime; yet, if he chose to retain the Raj, the deed was unnecessary as regards the Regulation of 1793; though it might possibly be important for other purposes.

[195] If, therefore, the case stood only upon this, that the Appellant has totally failed in making out the divisibility of this inheritance, and the invalidity of the deed of 1807, their Lordships would be clearly of opinion that he had failed altogether in the case; but as the property is of very great value, and as we have taken the somewhat unusual course of stopping the Respondent's counsel, it may be proper for us to advert to another point—namely, whether this deed of 1807 was assented to by Gobind Singh, so as to bind his son, the present Appellant? Now, that depends entirely upon this. That Gobind Singh held possession of this Pergunnah admits of no doubt; that he took possession and held it, or that it was held for him, during his minority, and that he held it for himself during his lifetime, and that after his death it was held for his son during his minority, and is held by him up to this very hour, as it appears by the Appellant's statement, are facts which admit of no doubt. The Appellant says, that is very true, but I do not claim that Pergunnah under the deed of 1807; if I do, no doubt I am out of Court: for the deed of 1807 allots it to me expressly as a Baboo allowance; but I claim it not as a Baboo allowance, but as a distinct and absolute grant made to me upon my investiture with the Brahminical thread; similar grants on other occasions having been made by Madhoo Singh in favour of his other sons, and I produce this deed, late it is true, in the course of these proceedings, many years after the contest had arisen—a deed, the like of which it never occurred to Kirut Singh to suggest or produce. It is in his replication, for the first time, he mentions a deed dated in the year [196] 1806, which purports to make this grant to Gobind Singh on the occasion, as the Appellant alleges, of his investiture with the Brahminical thread.

Let us see what the evidence is upon this point. He produces several witnesses to state that they saw this deed; some of them cannot read; some of them do not know the language; but they say that they saw the deed on the occasion of the investiture; that Madhoo Singh came out and declared that he had made that gift to his son, Gobind Singh. In the first place, these very witnesses swear, at least several of them do, that a similar grant was made in favour of Kirut Singh; and after the attention of the Appellant had been called to the fact that the grant to Kirut Singh was of a totally different character, in his replication he persists in that statement, and it is upon that issue that the parties go to evidence.

Now, what is the evidence? The Appellant's counsel most candidly, as well as most judiciously, withdrew that from the consideration of their Lordships by stating, "We must admit that it was a mistake." A mistake! Why, it is a mistake which must have been within the knowledge of the parties at the time they made this allegation, for in the answer they were referred to the documents; and what are the documents? Why, among the documents is a grant of the Pergunnah of Dhurum-poor, a portion of this estate, but such a portion that it pays 18 lacs of rupees a-year for revenue to Government. This grant was made to Kishun Singh upon his birth. Whether any deed was executed upon the occasion does not appear. I rather think there was not: but upon [197] Kishun Singh coming of age in the year 1802, Madhoo Singh presented him to the Collector, stating the fact of his having made the grant eighteen years before, and stating the fact that his son had now come of age, and praying that the estate might be transferred out of his own name into the name of Kishun Singh, and that is done by the Collector. And what is the effect of that? Why, the effect is:—to separate the property from the Zemindary; to make Kishun Singh at once hold from the Government, to make Kishun Singh liable to pay the revenue assessed upon it, and not to the Raja, but to the Government.

Then, what is the case with respect to the other grants? They are quite different. Where an estate is granted to a younger son as a Baboo allowance, he continues to pay the rent and assessment to the Raja; the property is never separated from the Zemindary at all. The cases, therefore, of absolute grants, and of grants by way of Baboo allowance, are essentially different in their nature.

Let us see, then, in what way the Pergunnahs thus given are entered in the Collector's books. If they were entirely transferred under a deed of grant, they would be transferred as such into the names of those persons to whom they were given. If they were made as Baboo allowances, they will be described as Baboo allowances, and the owners of those Baboo allowances will have to pay the revenue, not to the Government, but to the Raja in whose Principality the property is situate. Upon that there is no question at all. We find with respect to each of those Pergunnahs, the mode in which they were entered in the [198] Collector's books, and that they are especially entered as Baboo allowances, and entered immediately in these terms:—"Jumma Wassilbakee, or revenue account for the whole year, of the Pergunnah Jedee, in the Sircar of Tirhoot, the property of Maharajah Koonwur Baboo Kirut Singh, for his support as a Baboo." "Jumma Wassilbakee, or revenue account for the whole year, of the Pergunnah of Burhabpoor Ragho, in the Sircar of Tirhoot, the property of Maharajah Koonwur Baboo Gobind Singh, for his support as a Baboo." Is it possible to raise a doubt upon this? You have these entries made upon the petition of the Raja stating that he has made the grants for the Baboo allowances; you have those grants recognised by Kirut Singh and Gobind Singh, who held them, and they settle accounts distinctly upon the footing that they are Baboo allowances; they settle accounts upon a totally different principle from that upon which they would have been settled if they had been distinct grants like that to Kishun Singh.

It is useless to make further observations upon a case which, as to this part of it, at least, is so perfectly plain. But with respect to the deed of 1806 thus sworn to by witnesses who clearly are unworthy of credit, it may be remembered that every one of those respectable landowners whose evidence is given on behalf of the first Respondent distinctly state that there is no usage to grant land upon the occasion of these investitures, though there is a usage to make presents of jewels and of money, and, I think, three, or perhaps more, of those witnesses were present at this very investiture of Gobind Singh himself, and not one of them was asked by the Appellant—"Was [199] there such a deed made?" "Did not you see that deed?" Or, "Did not you hear of this deed which is sworn to by the Appellant's witnesses?"

Upon the whole of this case, therefore, their Lordships, neither upon the one point nor upon the other, are able to entertain any doubt.

They were much struck by an observation made by the Appellant's counsel upon the judgment which had been pronounced in this case: and they certainly had been led from their statement, which was a perfectly fair one, but from a misapprehension they had entertained of the nature of the two suits, to suppose that the case had been decided against Gobind Singh upon the ground of acquiescence, because it had been previously decided against Kirut Singh upon that ground. Now, it is quite obvious, that Kirut Singh might acquiesce and that Gobind Singh might not, but the case of acquiescence as against Gobind Singh is precisely the same as, only much stronger than, that against Kirut Singh; for with respect to Gobind Singh, he never during his life at any time, either by himself or by others on his behalf during his minority, made the slightest representation of his possession of this Pergunnah being otherwise than under the deed of 1807, and according to the entries made upon the Collector's books.

Their Lordships have looked through the report which was cited by the Appellant of the case of Muha Raj Koonur Basdeo Singh v. Muha Rajah Roodur Singh Buhadur [5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 198], and it is quite clear from that report that there was other evidence, probably a good deal of important evidence, which we have not before us upon the present occasion, but which it is wholly unnecessary we should have; and we advert to that now only for this purpose, that in dismissing the two suits at the same time, the Court below do not say, we exclude the consideration of the family custom in the Appellant's suit, and we exclude the consideration of the validity of the deed of 1807, independent of acquiescence; but having these same points raised in both suits, both being for this purpose consolidated, we will pronounce our opinion upon that point in the other suit, and upon the acquiescence in this.

Upon all these points, therefore, though the case is one of much complication, and has been argued with great ability, which might have thrown some doubt, if it had been possible that any doubt could be entertained with respect to it, their Lordships must come to the conclusion of humbly advising Her Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed, and with costs.

[201] GUDADHUR PURSHAD TEWARREE,—Appellant; MOOSUMAT SOONDERKOOMAREE,—Respondent * [June 29, 1854].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

Appeal restored after being dismissed for want of effectual prosecution within the time limited by the fifth rule of the Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853; the new rules having been only recently adopted by the Sudder Court at Calcutta, and the Appellant in ignorance of their existence, being engaged in taking steps to prosecute the appeal within the time and according to the practice previously existing.

This was a motion upon petition, to restore an appeal which had been dismissed for want of prosecution, pursuant to the fifth rule of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853 (see Rules, 5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, ix.), six months having elapsed from the arrival of the transcript and registration in the Council Office, and no effectual step taken for the prosecution of the appeal.

The petition stated that the transcript arrived, and the appeal was registered at the Council Office on the 28th of July, 1853; and that on the 1st of February, 1854, notice was given by the Registrar [202] of the Privy Council to the Registrar of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, in the terms of the rule, that as six calendar months had elapsed from its registration, and no effectual steps taken for the prosecution of the appeal, the same was, pursuant to Rule V. of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853, dismissed without further notice. The petition further stated, that the Petitioner was wholly ignorant of the new rules of practice, having previously had the usual notice to proceed with his appeal within two years, and was in no way prepared for this alteration, no Order having been issued respecting such alteration by the Sudder Court, until the 16th of February, 1854, when the new rules were first adopted by the Sudder Court. That in the latter part of 1853, the Petitioner had taken measures for the due prosecution of the appeal, and that his Mookhtar was in correspondence with his agent in England on the subject; and that he was prepared to proceed with the appeal in due course, and prayed that, under the circumstances, his appeal might be revived.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., in support of the petition, urged, that it was a proper case for the indulgence of the Court, by restoring the appeal, as there was no laches in prosecuting the same, the dismissal being under the new rules and regulations, of which the Petitioner was necessarily ignorant, conceiving that the usual period of two years allowed by the Order in Council of the 4th of September, 1833, under the Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 41, sec. 22 (2 Knapp's P.C. Cases, xxvii.), was [203] still in force, the Sudder Court at Calcutta not having notified the existence of the new rules till after the dismissal.

Mr. Leith opposed, submitting, that if the appeal was restored, it ought to be upon terms of paying costs, and giving fresh security, according to the usual practice.

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—If we advise any positive departure from the new rules and regulations, it is only under peculiar circumstances. We think, in this case, that enough has been shown to justify us in recommending the restoration of the appeal, upon the terms of the sum of Rs. 4000, now deposited in India in Government paper, for costs to abide the appeal standing, without substituting any fresh security, the Appellant undertaking to appear forthwith and use due diligence to bring on his appeal. All costs of and consequent on this application and the dismissal, to be reserved.

[204] SETO LUCHMEECHUND.—Appellant: SETO ZORAWUR MULL.—Respondent * [Nov. 30, 1854].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra.

Appeal from the Sudder Court in India, which stood dismissed under Rule V. of the Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853, for want of effectual prosecution, restored, as the Appellant was in ignorance of the existence of the new Rules, the Sudder Court having served the Appellant (after the interposition of the appeal) with notice that two years was allowed after the arrival of the transcript in England for prosecuting the appeal.

Where Government securities for the due prosecution of the appeal and costs were deposited in the Registry of the Sudder Court, the Judicial Committee in restoring the appeal dispensed with the usual recognizance in England.

In this case, the transcript of the proceedings arrived in England and was registered in the Council Office on the 12th of October, 1853, but no effectual steps having been taken for the prosecution of the appeal within six months, pursuant to Rule V. of the Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853 (see Rules, 5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, ix.), the appeal stood dismissed under that rule.

It appeared that no notice of the existence of the new Rules had been given to the Appellant, who was resident in India, in time to cause effectual steps to be taken to prosecute the appeal, and that upon the appeal being preferred in the Court below, the Appellant had had notice served upon him in India by the Sudder Dewanny Court, that he was to prosecute the [205] appeal within two years from the registering of the receipt of the copies of the transcript in the Privy Council Office. The Appellant now presented a petition setting forth the above facts, stating the largeness of the sum involved in the appeal, and praying for leave to restore the same. An affidavit was also filed by the agent in England, stating his ignorance of the operation of the new rules, and confirming the circumstances above mentioned.

Mr. Leith, for the Petitioner, cited Gudadhur Purshad Tewarree v. Moosumat Soonderkoomaree (ante [6 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 201).

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington.—The question is, whether there was sufficient means adopted by the Sudder Court to promulgate the new Rules and Regulations in India. It does not appear that the Petitioner was served with any notice, or had means of knowing of the existence of the new rules, and the Appellant very naturally relied upon the notice served upon him by the Sudder Court, by which two years were allowed for prosecuting the appeal after the arrival of the transcript in England. The mere fact of the arrival of the transcript here, in such circumstances, and that no steps have been taken to bring the appeal on for hearing, is not, in our opinion, sufficient to entirely shut out the appeal. The appeal will be restored upon terms of giving security here for £1000.

By the report of the Committee, the appeal was ordered to be restored, and the Appellant allowed to [206] prosecute the same upon lodging in the Council Office, within six months from the date of Her Majesty's Order in Council approving the report, a certificate of recognizance to Her Majesty in the penalty of £1000. This report was confirmed by an Order in Council, dated the 11th of December, 1854.

(March, 26, 1855 †) Mr. Leith, for the Petitioner, afterwards moved upon petition for liberty to waive so much of this Order as required the recognizance to be entered into in England for costs, on the ground that there was already a sum of Rs. 10,000, in Government securities, deposited in the Registry of the Sudder Dewanny Court for that purpose.—[The Lord Justice Turner: This Court has been accustomed to require security to be entered into here. Is not the appeal originally allowed in India defunct?—The security now lodged in the Court in India is amply sufficient for the costs, and it would only inconvenience the parties to get fresh security here.

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh. In the circumstances this application will be granted, but it must be upon condition that the money deposited in India remain in deposit to abide the appeal here.

By the Order in Council made upon this petition, it was ordered that so much of the Order of the 11th of December, 1854, as required that recognizance be entered into in the penal sum of £1000 sterling, be [207] dispensed with, and that the Government securities for Rs. 10,000 be held in deposit by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, to stand and abide the determination of the appeal, and such costs as might be awarded by the Lords of the Committee.

SIBNARAIN GHOSE,—Appellant; HULLODHUR DOSS,—Respondent *
[Nov. 30, 1854].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

If leave to appeal be obtained ex parte, the Respondent may, as a matter of course, present a counter-petition to dismiss.

Where an appeal had been granted ex parte upon an allegation unfounded in fact, the Judicial Committee refused to hear the case, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

In this case special leave to appeal was granted by the Committee (see case reported on this point nom., "In re Sibnarian Ghose," 5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 322) on an application made ex parte by the Appellant, upon, among other grounds, an allegation that certain exceptions taken in the Court below to the return made by Partition Commissioners had been overruled, as of course, in consequence of the absence of the Appellant's Counsel. This allegation turned out to be wholly unfounded, as it appeared that Counsel on both sides had been present on the occasion in question, and that the Appellant's [208] Counsel had stated that he was unable to support the exceptions.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., now moved for leave to present a petition to dismiss the appeal.

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington.—This application is unnecessary, as you are entitled, as of course, to move to dismiss, upon presenting a counter-petition for that purpose (see In re Ames, 3 Moore's P.C. Cases, 413).

Upon the appeal coming on for hearing (Nov. 30, 1855 †), Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., Mr. Leith, and Mr. Maude, appeared for the Appellant; and Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. A. Gordon, for the Respondent.

When the Respondent objected to the hearing, as leave had been granted upon an erroneous allegation that the Appellant's Counsel had been absent at the hearing of the exceptions in the Court below, whereas the certificate of the Judges in India distinctly showed that Counsel was present, and that he declined to argue the exceptions.

The Lord Justice Turner.—We consider it a matter of the utmost importance that parties who come here for an indulgence upon an ex parte application, should take care and speak the [209] truth. In this case, the Appellant in his petition for leave to appeal, has erroneously alleged as a ground for the indulgence of the Court, a fact to which the Judges in the Court below certify the contrary. Their Lordships are fully satisfied that this is so, and, that this case may operate as a warning in future, they dismiss the appeal with costs (see Wilson v. Callender, 9 Moore's P.C. Cases, 100, where the Judicial Committee, under similar circumstances, stopped the hearing of an appeal, and dismissed it with costs).

GUNGADHUR SEAL.—Appellant; SREEMUTTY RADDAMONEY DOSSEE.—Respondent * [Feb. 19, 1855].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

The Judicial Committee have no jurisdiction to entertain an application for extension of time to appeal until the petition of appeal is lodged.

Where it appeared that an inquiry was pending before the Master in the Court below, arising out of the decree, which was the subject of the appeal, the result of which might render the prosecution of the appeal unnecessary, the Judicial Committee enlarged the time prescribed by Rule V. of the Order in Council of the 13th June, 1853, for prosecution thereof, until further Order.

This was an application by the Appellant for an extension of the time prescribed by the 5th Rule of the Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853, by which the appeal stands dismissed unless steps for [210] prosecuting the same be taken within six months from the arrival of the transcript and the registration thereof. The affidavit filed in support of the application stated, that an inquiry was then pending before the Master of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, arising out of the decree appealed from, and that it was anticipated that the finding of the Master would render the prosecution of the appeal unnecessary, and that the Appellant was desirous of waiting the event of the proceedings in the Master's Office in India, before prosecuting his appeal, as he might be saved the expense attendant upon the prosecution thereof.

The transcript had arrived and was registered in the Council Office on the 12th of October, 1854, but no petition of appeal had been lodged.

Mr. Leith, for the Petitioner, was stopped.

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh.—We cannot entertain this application, as we have no jurisdiction until the petition of appeal is lodged. When it is lodged you may renew the application.

A petition of appeal was afterwards lodged, and (March 24, 1855.†) Mr. Leith now renewed the motion.

The six months expire to-morrow, and unless the indulgence is granted the appeal will stand dismissed.

[211] The Lord Justice Turner.—Enough has been shown to induce us to retain the appeal, notwithstanding the new rules, and to direct that the Petitioner be at liberty to suspend proceedings thereon until further order.

AMEER-OON-NISSA and Others,—Appellants; MOORAD-OON-NISSA and Others, —Respondents * [July 18, 19, 20, 1855].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlat at Agra.

A Mahomedan of the Shiah sect, by a deed of dower charged his whole estate with a certain sum when demanded by his wedded wife, but did not im-pignorate his estate to secure the sum put in settlement. The dower was not demanded during the lifetime of the husband, and his widow at his death took possession of his estate in satisfaction of her claim. Held, by the Sudder Dewanny Court, and such decision upon appeal affirmed by the Judicial Committee, that the widow had a lien upon her deceased husband's estate as being hypothecated for her dower, and could either retain property to the amount of her dower, or alienate part of the estate in satisfaction of her claim.

Held also, upon appeal, that a demand during the lifetime of the husband was not necessary, and that, although more than twelve years had elapsed from the date of the deed and the time the widow set up her claim for dower, she was not affected by the provisions of Ben. Reg. iii. of 1793, sec. xiv., and that the limitation there provided for, formed no bar to her claim.

In a suit by the only brother and heir-at-law of a Mahomedan of the Shiah sect, claiming the whole of the deceased's estate, and for mesne profits, the issues raised by the pleadings were: first, whether a marriage had taken place between the deceased and the party in possession, who claimed to be his widow: and secondly, the validity of a deed of dower executed by the deceased in her favour. The Courts in India found these issues in favour of the widow, and dismissed the suit. The Judicial Committee in affirming the Courts' decrees upon these points, held, further, that although the estate of the husband was hypothecated for the dower, yet, as the heir-at-law would be entitled to the residue after satisfying the widow's claim, he was by right entitled to an account, but, as the plaint was so framed as not to admit of an account being taken, the appeal was affirmed, without prejudice to a suit being brought for administration of the deceased's estate, upon the footing of the marriage and deed of dower by the deceased being admitted in the suit.

This was a suit instituted by Seyud Abdoollah, the ancestor of the Appellants, in which suit he claimed as the full brother and heir-at-law of Seyud Moostefah, [212] and sought to recover very considerable real as well as personal estate belonging to his deceased brother, Seyud Moostefah, with mesne profits. The Respondent, Moorad-oon-Nissa, was in possession, and she claimed a lien upon the same as the widow of the deceased, under a deed of dower executed by Seyud Moostefah in her favour to the amount of Rs. 64,000. The other Respondents, Gholam Abbas and Sooltan Ali, claimed under the twofold character of adopted sons and as the grandchildren and heirs of the deceased Seyud Moostefah.

The circumstances of the case were as follows:—

Seyud Moostefah, late of Roostoomnugur, in the Zillah of Moradabad, in the North-Western Provinces, a Zemindar and a Mahomedan of the Shiah or Imma-meeah sect, was seised and possessed of the Zemindary of Mouza Roostoomnugur, Gundhoppoora, and other lands, situate in Pergunnahs Seondara and Kundurkhee, and of houses, besides moveable estate and effects of about the value of Rs. 70,000.

On the 4th of October, 1838, Seyud Moostefah died intestate, without children, but leaving Seyud Abdoollah, since deceased, his younger brother, and as such, by the Mahomedan law applicable to the Shiah sect, his sole heir. At the time of his death, Seyud Abdool-[213]-lah lived at Azeemabad, a distance of 800 miles from Roostoomnugur. In the house of Seyud Moostefah, and residing with him at the time of his decease, were the Respondent, Moorad-oon-Nissa, who had formerly been a dancing girl, and kept in the house of the deceased at a monthly salary, and who claimed to be the widow of the deceased; and two other of the Respondents, Gholam Abbas and Sooltan Ali, who had been brought up by the deceased's first wife, Razeeah Begum, and who were, as they contended, his grandchildren, and had, moreover, been adopted by him in his lifetime. These persons possessed themselves of the whole of the estate, property, and effects of Seyud Moostefah, at Moradabad, and their title was recognised in the absence of, and without notice being given to, Seyud Abdoollah, by the Government authorities; Seyud Abdoollah being engaged in the District of Azeemabad, where he resided, and where some of the deceased's estates were situated, in establishing his title as sole heir-at-law to the deceased.

It appeared that soon after the death of Seyud Moostefah, a quarrel took place between the Respondents, Moorad-oon-Nissa, Gholam Abbas, and Sooltan Ali. In consequence, the two latter Respondents presented a petition to the revenue department of Government, praying that their names might be recorded in the Collector's Office (Moorad-oon-Nissa's name never having been so recorded) in place of the name of Seyud Moostefah, deceased, as owners of the lands aforesaid which had belonged to him, and whom they therein alleged to be their grandfather. Moorad-oon-Nissa presented a counter-petition, disputing their claim as heirs. By a proceeding of the Court of Commissioners, the parties were referred [214] to a Civil Court to establish their respective titles. Other proceedings took place before the Magistrates, in the District, when Gholam Abbas denied that Moorad-oon-Nissa was the wedded wife of the deceased, and alleged that she only cohabited with him. Ultimately a deed of compromise, dated the 7th of April, 1842, was entered into by Gholam Abbas and Sooltan Ali of the one part, and Moorad-oon-Nissa on the other, by which they agreed to divide the deceased's estate and property in equal moieties, Gholam Abbas and Sooltan Ali agreeing to take one-half and Moorad-oon-Nissa the other half.

The Respondents, Moorad-oon-Nissa, Gholam Abbas, and Sooltan Ali, while in possession, sold and mortgaged considerable portions of the real estate, and applied the produce to their own use.

On the 21st of August, 1843, Seyud Abdoollah filed his plaint in the Zillah Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Moradabad against Moorad-oon-Nissa, Gholam Abbas, and Sooltan Ali, and Kumpa Domnee and Gholam Basit as accessories, and Chowbay Bindrabun, Kunheya Lal, Ghaseeram, Bhojraj, Kheoraj, Nundram and Benee Sing, mortgagees and purchasers of different portions of the immoveable estate of Seyud Moostefah, deceased, and Nagur Mull, a party in possession of a house. By this plaint, Seyud Abdoollah, claiming as the full brother and heir-at-law of Seyud Moostefah, sought to obtain possession of the Zemindaries, estates, tenements, gardens, and lands, of the late Seyud Moostefah, in the District of Moradabad, with the mesne profits and interest, amounting to Rs. 72,290. 5. 7.; but did not include the estates in Azeemabad, which he had recovered, and he charged that the Respondents, Moorad-[215]-oon-Nissa, Gholam Abbas, and Sooltan Ali, had taken possession of the whole of the moveable estate and effects of the deceased, amounting in value to a very large sum of money, and also the whole of his immoveable estate and property, and that the Respondent, Moorad-oon-Nissa, was not the wife of Seyud Moostefah, deceased, and he charged collusion between her and Gholam Abbas and the Canoongos, in getting their names entered as proprietors, and submitted, that even if she had been the wife of Seyud Moostefah, still the name of Plaintiff ought to have been mentioned as an heir, because he was the full brother of the deceased, and under the Mahomedan law, though there be a widow, the brother is heir likewise; he also charged that Gholam Abbas and Sooltan Ali were not the grandsons of the deceased.

Moorad-oon-Nissa by her answer, for the first time alleged that she held a deed of dower, dated the 26th of July, 1818, executed in her favour by the deceased, Seyud Moostefah, on a stamp paper of Rs. 50, stipulating a dower of Rs. 46,000; and the answer averred that this deed of dower had been brought in operation; that it was a rule which the Shiah sect observed, that if an endowed widow be seised of the estate of her husband a residuary claim (usbeent) could not be entertained; that it was also a maxim that, as the dower gave the wife a lien on the property, if she be seised of that property, a residuary claim could not be entertained by a Court of justice. The answer also submitted that the disputed property constituted the estate of the deceased, and that the Plaintiff as the heir would have been entitled to take the same had she not a claim for her dower, which, under the Mahomedan [216] law, took the precedence of, and was a bar to, her right of inheritance as wife of Seyud Moostefah: which dower she contended gave her a lien on the disputed property for the amount: and the answer admitted that mortgages and sales of portions of the real estate of the late Seyud Moostefah had been made by her to the Respondents, Chowbay Bindrabun and Kunbeya Lal, but alleged that they were made either to discharge debts contracted by Seyud Moostefah in his lifetime, or to discharge obligations created since his death.

The joint answer of the Respondents, Gholam Abbas and Sooltan Ali, set up that they were brought up by the former wife of Seyud Moostefah, who, they alleged, had made a deed of gift in their favour: and they further alleged that when Seyud Moostefah died, he left Moorad-oon-Nissa, and Gholam Abbas as the grandson in possession of his property: that from the death of Seyud Moostefah, Moorad-oon-Nissa was the proprietor and occupant of the estates of her husband by virtue of her dower, while Gholam Abbas continued to manage them.

The other Defendants put in their answers, which raised no point material to the principal questions at issue. The Plaintiff in his replication again denied the fact of the marriage and the validity of the deed of dower.

The pleadings having been closed, the Court thought that the only questions to be proved, were the marriage of the principal Defendant, Moorad-oon-Nissa, and the deed of dower alleged by her for the first time in her answer, and ordered the deed to be produced and witnesses to be examined.

Moorad-oon-Nissa put in evidence the deed of dower [217] which was registered and sealed by the Caze, the material part of which was as follows:—"I acknowledge myself justly a debtor for the dower of my said wedded wife, to the amount of Rs. 46,000 of the present currency, the moiety whereof is Rs. 23,000, and the amount I acknowledge to be justly due, and when demanded by my said wedded wife, in the payment thereof, I will raise no objection, no excuse make, but will deliver the same to my said wedded wife." This deed had the Caze's seal affixed, and, as it was obliterated and defaced by wet and age, the Defendant, Moorad-oon-Nissa, filed an office copy of the same from the registry of the Caze. She also put in evidence a copy of the register of stamp sales on the 24th of July, 1818, and in which there was an entry that Seyud Moostefah had bought a stamp of Rs. 50 value.

Witnesses were examined by the Plaintiff in support of his case, and also by the Defendant, Moorad-oon-Nissa, in order to prove her marriage and the execution of the deed and the amount of her dower. The effect of their evidence is set out in the judgment of the Principal Sudder Ameen, which was pronounced on the 11th of February, 1845, and, in substance, was in these terms:—"The evidence put in by the Defendant, to prove her marriage and the amount of her dower, having been taken into consideration, it appears the deed of dower, dated 26th of July, 1818 (corresponding with the 21st Ruzman, 1233 Hijree), which bears the seal and signature of Seyud Moostefah and of the Caze, also copy of the sale register of stamps sold on the 24th of July, 1818, which the Defendant filed, proves the declaration of the Defendant as to its being engrossed on a stamp of Rs. 50. Nagur Mull and [218] Iman Bukhsh, the witnesses who subscribed to the deed, have verified it. From the testimony of these witnesses it also appears that at the marriage, Hosein Beg, was the Vakeel of Moorad-oon-Nissa, and Munnoo Khan and Imam Bukhsh were the witnesses to the Vakalat. In their depositions, Munnoo Khan and Imam Bukhsh have distinctly proved the marriage. In addition to this, Caze Sumeehoodden and Gholam Hosein Khan, the Khansaman, witnesses to the marriage, have in their deposition declared that they were present at the time. Shaikh Ameeroollah and other witnesses have deposed, that Seyud Moostefah declared to them that Moorad-oon-Nissa was his wife. Referring to the proceeding of the Collector, dated the 9th of November, 1828, and to the Fowtenamah of Moostefah, it appears that Moorad-oon-Nissa is the wife and the heir of the deceased, and that a settlement for the payment of the revenue was made with her under the title aforesaid. By the Order of the Court, dated 8th June, 1839, issued in execution of a decree in favour of Moostefah, Plaintiff, it is proved that the decree was put in execution at the motion of Moorad-oon-Nissa, after her right to inherit had been proved. Thus it is fully established that Moorad-oon-Nissa was married to the deceased, that her dower was fixed at Rs. 16,000, and that she is in possession under that title. The Plaintiff has caused the evidence of certain witnesses to be taken to show that Moorad-oon-Nissa was not married, but these witnesses profess to prove a negative. As the marriage of Moorad-oon-Nissa with Seyud Moostefah, the owner of the property, is proved on the grounds given above, and as her possession by virtue of her dower is established, no other person can under the Mahomedan law succeed to the property, and thus the acts [219] of Moorad-oon-Nissa, whereby certain property has been alienated to other parties in satisfaction of debts due to other parties by the deceased, are lawful. On these grounds it is ordered that the claim of the Plaintiff be dismissed, that all the costs of suit be paid by Plaintiff."

The Plaintiff appealed from this decree to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra.

On the 9th of April, 1846, Mr. Benjamin Tayler, the Sudder Judge before whom the appeal came, thought it necessary to call for a futwa from the Cazee-ool-Coozat on the following points:—"If in a deed of dower it be not mentioned that any property is pigniorated for the dower, if from the record of the case the marriage and the settlement by dower be proven, can the wedded wife, according to Mahomedan law, applicable to the Imnameeah sect, take possession of her husband's effects by virtue of her claim for dower, supposing the effects to be less in value than the amount of the dower, and can she alienate any part of them?"

The futwa of the Mooftee was, that "In the Moofateeah-ool-Sherayeh and its commentary, books which treat of the Mahomedan law applicable to the Imnameeah sect, and are works of great authority, it is distinctly declared, that if any person have a claim against another, and the debtor deny the debt, the creditor is competent to take the debtor's property which is of the same description as the debt consists of. For example, if the debtor's property consists of cash, and the debt be also for cash, the creditor is justified in taking just so much of the property as is equal to the debt. If the matter of the debt and the debtor's property be of different kinds, for example, [220] if the debtor's property be immoveable, and the debt be for cash, the creditor is justified in taking so much of the property, the value of which covers the debt, or he may sell it and apply the proceeds to the liquidation of the debt, but in no case is it lawful to take more than the debt. It is not necessary to have recourse to the Public authorities in order to enable the creditor to take the debtor's property in payment of the debt, but it is better to apply to the authorities. Thus, under the authority of the above doctrines, the wedded wife referred to in the Court's question, is competent to take effects of her husband in kind, to the amount of her dower, in satisfaction thereof, or she may take the value of such effects to the amount of her dower, without resorting to the Courts. In no case, however, is she justified in taking more than the amount of her claim. Whatever remains over is divided among the heirs according to Mahomedan law, first satisfying claims which take the preference of inheritance."

The final judgment on the appeal was pronounced by Mr. Benjamin Tayler, on the 21st of April, 1846. The material part was in these terms:—"The state of the case is, that the determination of the suit depends entirely on the proof of the marriage of the Defendant with Seyud Moostefah, and on the question of her dower. Adverting to the evidence to these two facts, I am of opinion, that there are no grounds for disturbing the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen. The Appellant pleaded that, although the Respondent set up her marriage, and the amount of her dower, amounting to Rs. 16,000, she has no claim to the property of her husband, because in the deed of dower there is no property [221] pigniorated. On this point, namely, that if the marriage be proven, and it be established that the dower of Respondent is Rs. 16,000, is she competent to sell the effects of her husband, which in value exceeds her dower? a futwa was called for from the Mooftee of the Court. The Mooftee, in answer, states that the Respondent is competent to take the property at the selling price, or to sell it, and that the surplus will belong to the heirs of her husband. Proceeding, therefore, on this exposition of the law, it is ordered, that so much of the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen, dated the 14th February, 1845, which proceeds to dismiss the Plaintiff's claim, on the ground that it is not proven that the Respondent is not the wedded wife of Seyud Moostefah, is confirmed and affirmed. As the Mooftie of the Court has given his futwa, clearly and distinctly, declaring that Respondent is competent to hold possession of the property, the Court cannot interfere. The costs of the Court, with interest from the date of suit to date of satisfaction, to be paid by the Appellant."

Seyud Abdoollah appealed against this decree to Her Majesty in Council. He died before the appeal came on for hearing, leaving the Appellants his heirs surviving, who were allowed by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to prosecute the appeal as Appellants in place of Seyud Abdoollah. The appeal was revived in England in their names. The Respondents not having appeared, the appeal was heard ex parte.

Mr. Leith and Mr. Fulton in support of the appeal. The Court in India has acted upon an erroneous assumption that the onus probandi lay upon the [222] Plaintiff. It was clearly upon the Defendants, and we contend that Moorad-oon-Nissa, the principal Defendant, failed to establish the two material issues of fact raised by the pleadings, namely, her marriage with the deceased and the genuineness of the deed of dower alleged to have been made in her favour by Seyud Moostefah. The evidence of her witnesses upon these points is unsatisfactory and wholly unworthy of credit.—[The Lord Justice Knight Bruce: The evidence of the marriage is strong.]—But, we submit, even if those issues of fact had been established in her favour, still the issues in law ought to have been determined in favour of the Plaintiff. He was the heir-at-law, and, as the deed of dower was disputed, he was entitled by the Mahomedan law to be put in possession of the deceased's real estate, Moosummaut Wuzerun v. Mahomed Hossain Khan (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 34), Macnaghten's "Principles of Moohummudan Law," p. 290. Her remedy being to establish the deed of dower by a suit at law, Ranee Bukhs Beebee v. Nadir Beebee (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 59). A fatal objection, however, lies to her claim. The deed of dower set up by her is of the class known by the Mahomedan law as exigible, or payable on demand, Hedaya, Vol. I., p. 150, Macnaghten's "Principles of Moohummudan Law," pp. 59, 278, and should have been demanded against her husband's estate within twelve years from the date of the execution of the deed, which was not done; her husband's estate is, therefore, exonerated, Norunnissa Begum v. Nawab Syud Mooshin Allee Khan (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 40); Meer Nujib Ollah v. Mussummaut Doordana Khatoon (1 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 103); her claim being barred by Ben. Regs. III., of 1793, sec. 14, and II. of 1805; Macnaghten's [223] "Principles of Moohummudan Law," p. 285. Another ground of objection is, that considering the means of the deceased, the dower was excessive and void, Macnaghten's "Principles of Moohummudan Law," p. 288-9. In no circumstances can the decree stand, as the Court ought to have directed a portion of the real estate to be sold, and after payment of the dower to the Defendant, Moorad-oon-Nissa, and the deceased's creditors, the surplus ought to have been handed over to the Plaintiff, who is clearly entitled to an account of the deceased's estate. A total dismissal of his suit was, therefore palpably wrong. The case of the other Defendants who claim by adoption is untenable; no such thing as adoption in this sense is known to the Mahomedan law. Macnaghten's "Principles of Moohummudan Law," p. 86. Finally, the mortgages and sales ought to have been declared invalid, as the widow had no power of alienation.—[Mr. Pemberton Leigh: There has been great laches. The deceased died in 1838, and the Plaintiff does not bring his suit till 1843, and during that time the Respondents have been in possession, and have dealt with the estate as their own.]—That arose from the fact of the Plaintiff's taking proceedings in his own District to establish his title to property there situate.

Judgment was delivered by

The Right Hon. the Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—Seyud Moostefah, a Mahomedan, in good circumstances, died on the 4th of October, 1808, in the North-West Provinces, intestate, without child or de-[224]-scendant, but a female, the principal Defendant, Moorad-oon-Nissa, lived in his house and passed as his wife, and now claims dower as his widow, and two young men, named Gholam Abbas and Sooltan Ali, the sons of Moshun Ali, in a sense members of his family, were living with him, and who appear to have been brought up by Razeeah Begum, the first wife of Seyud Moostefah, and claimed to be treated as adopted sons, although no power of adoption is known to the Mahomedan law. In these circumstances, the lady who lived with the deceased appears to have entered at his death into possession of his property in the neighbourhood of the place where he died, and she was treated by the local authorities as administratrix. As a Mahomedan widow she would be entitled to a fourth part of the deceased's estate, the other three parts going to his heirs.

The two sons of Moshun Ali, for reasons not apparent, afterwards set up a claim to the property, as descendants of Seyud Moostefah, and contested the title of the widow, denying the fact of her marriage with the deceased. This led to quarrels and litigation, which ultimately, in 1842, ended in a compromise between them, upon terms sufficiently advantageous to these young men. By this arrangement they agreed to divide the property of the deceased in equal moieties, half to go to the widow and half to them.

Shortly after this compromise there arose the claim which has led to the present appeal. That claim was set up by Seyud Abdoollah, the full brother and heir-at-law of Seyud Moostefah, and he brought his suit in the year 1843, in the Zillah Court of the Principal [225] Sudder Ameen of Moradabad against the Respondent, Moorad-oon-Nissa, and others, seeking to obtain possession of the Zemindaries and other real and personal estate of the deceased, and for mesne profits; and by his plaint he charged Moorad-oon-Nissa, with not being the wedded wife of the deceased; and made other allegations which, as far as it appears to their Lordships, had better have been omitted. The Respondent, by her answer, set up her marriage with the deceased, and insisted upon her rights as his widow, and alleged that she held a deed of dower executed on her marriage, whereby the deceased settled upon her Rs. 46,000, and that she held the property as a lien for such dower. The reply impeached the deed as a forgery, and denied the marriage. Evidence was gone into, and the Principal Sudder Ameen, by his decree, decided against the claimant. An appeal was made from this decision to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, when Mr. Tayler, the presiding Judge, after consulting the Mooftee attached to the Court, as to the law relating to dower, came to the same conclusion and dismissed the claim. The present appeal is against that decree, and has been heard ex parte. The case has been here argued with great zeal and ability. There are four points upon which the case depends. First, marriage or no marriage; second, whether the alleged deed of dower is genuine or a forgery; third, the effect of Regulation of Limitation, III. of 1793, sec. 14, upon the deed of dower, which, as it created a debt demandable and payable immediately, it is said was a demand that was barred, more than twelve years having elapsed; and, fourthly, the Appellant urges that the decision is erroneous, and that there ought [226] not to have been a total dismissal of the suit, as the Plaintiff was the heir-at-law, and that there ought to have been an account taken of the deceased's estate, as he was entitled to the residue, after payment of the dower to the widow.

With regard to the marriage, much need not be said. The question is, did a marriage take place? Now the evidence is so very strong, that after the case had been gone into, it was suggested that it was scarcely possible to resist the fact of the marriage, she must, therefore, be taken to be the widow. The question of dower is less clear. The deed is dated the 26th of July, 1818, and considering the position of the Respondent, Moorad-oon-Nissa, at that time a dancing girl, the sum of Rs. 46,000, for dower seems excessive; but, then, there must be taken into consideration the circumstances of Seyud Moostefah. He had no family, was advanced in life, and appears to have formed a very strong attachment for this young woman, and, therefore, it is not improbable that he should make a very liberal provision for her by way of settlement. Seven witnesses are examined, and speak to this deed, and every one of them must be grossly perjured if there was no marriage; two of them are attesting witnesses. The deed is proved to be holograph of the husband, and, as he was a man well acquainted with business, and his handwriting well known in the neighbourhood, if any doubt existed, proof of forgery could have been given, but it is not attempted to be established by evidence that it is not his handwriting. The instrument itself, when produced, is found to be partly obliterated and defaced by wet and age, but a copy of the instrument from the registry of the Caze is [227] brought forward. This deed does not appear to have been registered during the lifetime of the husband; but their Lordships assume that the rules required by law were complied with by the Caze. If it was a forgery, it is a great probability that a different time would have been selected, and all the circumstances seem to favour the likelihood of such a transaction having taken place. With regard to the marriage, it may be improbable, we admit, that a marriage had taken place at the sacred time alleged; but if no marriage had taken place these persons would not have selected that time, and alleged it to have taken place at that time. This deed of dower was, however, never brought forward during the intermediate time when the disputes arose between the Respondents and these two young men. There was a perfect silence during that time, and the excuse for not producing it is not very satisfactory, but it must be remembered that a copy was on the registry in 1839. I cannot say what reason actuated the Respondent, Moorad-oon-Nissa, or her advisers, in preventing the deed being produced, but that fact is not sufficient to raise a presumption of fraud, and to outweigh the direct evidence of the witnesses, and more particularly when a stamp of the value required for such a deed is proved to have been sold to the deceased a short time previous to the date of the deed, which makes the evidence, we think, preponderate in favour of the deed; and, considering that it is a mere question of fact, upon which no difference of opinion existed in the Courts below, it would require a strong case to justify us in reversing their decrees, and, therefore, we think, the marriage and deed must be held to be established.

[228] Then there arises the question as to the operation of the Regulation of Limitation, III. of 1793. It was contended that the form of the deed by the Mahomedan law was to make the dower exigible immediately, not only due but at once demandable, and that twelve years, the period of limitation, expired in 1830, during the lifetime of the husband. Upon this point a very great difficulty arises. It was never pleaded in the original proceedings by the Plaintiff before the Sudder Ameen, the objection was only taken in the Sudder Dewanny Court; and considering that it is an objection by the Plaintiff against the Defendant, that might perhaps be a ground for refusing to entertain it. Now, section 14 of the Regulation in question prohibits the Civil Courts from hearing or determining any suit whatever, "if the cause of action shall have arisen twelve years before any suit shall have been commenced on account of it; unless the Complainant can show, by clear and positive proof, that he had demanded the money or matter in question, and that the Defendant had admitted the truth of the demand, or promised to pay the money; or that he directly preferred his claim within that period for the matters in dispute, to a Court of competent jurisdiction to try the demand, and shall assign satisfactory reasons to the Court why he should not proceed in the suit; or shall prove that either from minority, or other good and sufficient cause, he had been prevented from obtaining redress." This may probably be a case fit to be dealt with under the concluding part of this Regulation; there may be such "good and sufficient cause," but their Lordships do not desire to put their decision on that point. The terms of the deed are "when demanded [229] by my wedded wife." In this country various cases have arisen with regard to obligations payable on demand; a promissory note not payable on demand, is payable immediately. It is important, however, in some cases of negotiable securities, that the demand be made within a reasonable time, in other cases that the demand should be made immediately, and in some without any demand at all. Carter v. Ring (3 Camp. 459), Gibbs v. Southam (5 Barn. and Ad. 911), Simpson v. Routh (2 Barn. and Cr. 682). In the latter case Mr. Justice Littledale lays it down, that in the case of a bond with a penalty to pay a certain sum on demand, an express demand must be made before the action can be maintained. So in an action on a promise to pay a collateral sum on request. These authorities show that there may be cases where an action would not lie except where a request or demand is made, and others where such demand is not necessary. It is quite unnecessary that it should be any demand here. The deed of dower or settlement by the husband in favour of his wife, and the intention of the parties, was, that the wife was to have, as a dowry, the sum of Rs. 46,000; and it is important to consider how inconvenient it would be if a married woman was obliged to bring an action against her husband upon such an instrument; it would be full of danger to the happiness of married life; and we think, upon the true construction of this settlement, she had a right of suit without a previous demand, and that she was not obliged to sue her husband immediately or in his lifetime. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the Regulation does not apply as a bar to her claim, and that such defence entirely fails.

[230] Lastly, there remains the question of the distribution and administration of the deceased's estate. No such relief is asked by the plaintiff. The claim made by the Plaintiff is as sole heir against the Defendants, charging them with collusion in keeping him out of possession. He does not claim in the alternative, that if the marriage of the Respondent, Moorad-oon-Nissa, and the deed of dower are proved, then that he may have his share of the estate. It is possible it might have been competent to the Court below, in their discretion, to have entertained such a question, but it was a matter of discretion for the Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. Independently of this, Moorad-oon-Nissa was in possession, by the consent of the local authorities, a possession very analogous to that of an executrix here. That fact, however, is not sufficient to decide the point of right, but the Plaintiff has not asked for an account. Again, he has burthened the record with a number of unnecessary parties who ought not to have been there, and that would have created very considerable inconvenience in taking accounts. He has also excluded all the moveable estate and that portion of the immoveable estate of which he himself obtained possession. We are of opinion, therefore, that the Judges before whom the case has been heard in India took the right and convenient course in dismissing his suit, and leaving him to bring another suit to obtain an account; that, no doubt, was the effect of their decisions, though not in terms. Under these circumstances their Lordships will add a recommendation in their humble report to Her Majesty, that the dismissal of the appeal be without prejudice to the Appellants' right to bring a suit for an account and administration [231] of the deceased's estate consistent with the establishment of the marriage and the deed of dower. Costs, if any, incurred in India by reason of the appeal, must be paid by the Appellants.

The following report, which was approved by an Order in Council, dated the 21st of July, 1855, was made by the Judicial Committee:—Their Lordships do agree humbly to report to your Majesty as their opinion, that the judgment or decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra, of the 21st of April, 1846, ought to be affirmed, without prejudice to any suit which may be instituted for the recovery of the rights of the late Appellant, as one of the heirs of Seyud Moostefah, consistently with the establishment of the marriage of the Respondent, Moorad-oon-Nissa, and of the validity of the deed of dower alleged by her in the suit, both of which facts their Lordships consider to be proved in this case, and their Lordships direct that all costs, if any, incurred by the parties to the suit in India, by reason of this appeal, be paid by the Appellants.

[232] RAJAH BOMMARAUZE BAHADUR, and, on his Demise, his Son and Heir, KUMARA VENCATAPERMAUL RAUZE BAHADUR.—Appellant: RANGASAMY MUDALY,—Respondent * [Nov. 28, 29, 1855].

On Appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, at Madras.

By the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, extending the provisions of the Statute, 3rd and 4th Wm. IV., c. 42, sec. 28, to India, it was enacted, "That upon all debts or sums certain, payable at a certain time, the Court before whom such debt or sums may be recovered, may, if it shall think fit, allow interest to the creditor, at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest, from the time when such debts or sums certain were payable, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time."

An instrument, in the nature of, though not strictly, a Bond, was executed in 1833, which provided for the liquidation of the amount therein specified by instalments, but no provision was made for the allowance of interest. The condition for payment not having been performed: Held, in an action brought in 1849, to recover principal and interest upon the Bond, that the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, was retrospective in its operation, and authorised the allowance of interest, although it was not provided for by the Bond.

In proceedings by the obligee of the Bond before the Collector's Court in 1844, upon an application for a sequestration of the obligor's estates, the obligor filed an account of his liabilities, in which the Bond in question was entered and certain payments mentioned. Held, that such acknowledgment took the Bond out of the operation of the Mad. Reg. of Limitation, II. of 1802, sec. 18, cl. 4.

The examination of a material witness of the Plaintiff in the absence of the Defendant, his Vakeel having been removed and no other Vakeel then acting for him, is such an irregularity that if objected to at the proper time would be fatal to the reception of such evidence. But where no objection was urged during the trial, or until an appeal was interposed, the Judicial Committee held that the objection came too late, and could not be sustained, as, notwithstanding such irregularity and miscarriage, that fact did not taint the whole proceedings so as to prevent the Plaintiff recovering upon the other evidence which was sufficient to establish his case.

But, although the other evidence rendered the evidence improperly admitted immaterial, the Judicial Committee, as there had been an irregularity in the Court below, in affirming the judgment, refused to give the costs of appeal.

The Respondent instituted the suit out of which this appeal arose, in the Civil Court of Chittoor, on [233] the 21st April, 1849, to recover Rs. 66,384. 2. 10., the balance of principal and interest upon a Bond executed by the Appellant in favour of the Respondent's father, to secure the principal sum of Rs. 34,426. 14. 0. The plaintiff stated that the Respondent's claim to the amount due upon the Bond in question originated in the Appellant's late father having borrowed certain large sums of money of the Respondent's father, the repayment whereof was secured to him by six several Bonds, together with the deposit of a number of gold ornaments set with precious stones, and a mortgage of certain villages, forming part of the Zemindary of the Appellant's father, and of which the Appellant since his death had been in possession. The plaintiff also stated, that the Appellant personally entered into a settlement of accounts with the Respondent's father, when a balance was struck between them; that the gold ornaments were sold, and the proceeds, together with the amount which the Respondent's father had realised from the mortgaged villages, being deducted from the amount of principal and interest due to him, left a net balance in his favour of Rs. 34,426. 14. 0., for which the Appellant, on the 20th March, 1833, executed and gave the Bond sued on to the Respondent's father, wherein it was stipulated that the [234] amount so due should be discharged by annual instalments, as thereafter mentioned. That upon the execution of this Bond, the villages which had been mortgaged to the Respondent's father were given up by him to the Appellant, together with the several Bonds given by the father of the Appellant to the Respondent's father. The plaintiff further stated, that the Respondent, by letters and by the Plaintiff's agents, demanded of the Appellant the balance due upon the Bond; that he made several engagements to pay it, until his Zemindary was sequestered by the Collector of the District; who, in September, 1844, issued a proclamation and notices, calling upon the creditors of the Appellant to come forward and represent the extent of their dues; and that accordingly the Respondent, on the 4th November, 1844, presented a petition to the Collector, stating that the principal of the Bond, with interest equal to it, was due to the Respondent. That the Appellant filed an account before the Collector admitting the execution of the Bond, and Rs. 33,940. 11. 8. to be the balance due by him on account of the principal thereof, after deducting payments made under it to the amount of Rs. 186 2 4, which was composed of muzzur, or presents, Rs. 35, and eight years' quit rent due from the Respondents from May, 1832, to the same month in 1839, on the village of Gopalapuram attached to the Zemindary of the Appellant, who had granted such village at an annual jodee of fifteen pagodas for the maintenance of a public choultry erected by the Respondent's grandfather. That the Appellant's Zemindary having been released from attachment, and the creditors directed to seek their own remedy [235] against the Appellant, the Respondent, by letter, demanded of him the balance due as aforesaid, and that he engaged to pay it in a short time, which he had failed to do.

The Appellant by his answer stated, that his minority ceased about the time of the date of the Bond in 1833; that he did not remember what balance was then struck by his agents after selling the jewels mortgaged to the Respondent's father, nor whether any document was executed regarding it; that the Appellant made no engagements either with the Respondent or his father, about the alleged balance due on the Bond; that the Appellant did not know what account was produced by the Respondent before the Collector in 1844, as to the amount of the Bond and interest; that the Appellant did not tender any account under his own hand admitting the execution of the Bond, and that a balance was due upon it; and that he did not enter into any engagements subsequently as alleged by the plaintiff. The Appellant, by his answer, also pleaded the Madras Reg. II. of 1802, sec. 18, cl. 4, in respect to suits, the period of limitation being twelve years from the time when the cause of action shall have arisen; and he submitted, by his answer, that the Bond in question was composed of interest as well as principal; and also that such Bond did not provide for the payment of any interest upon the sums therein mentioned, and that by the plaintiff the Respondent claimed a sum for interest equal in amount to the Bond; and he also pleaded that the Respondent's claim to such interest was contrary to the terms of the Bond and to Madras Reg. XXXIV. of 1802, sec. 5, whereby it is enacted, [236] that the Courts of Adawlut should not decree to creditors compound interest, and he finally pleaded that he was not liable to pay either principal or interest to the Respondent.

The Respondent replied, but as the reply contained no allegation of any new facts in support of the Respondent's claim, the Court, on the 18th of September, 1849, recorded that a rejoinder from the Appellant was needless.

The cause was tried before Mr. E. C. Lovell, the Judge of the Civil Court of Chittoor, who, pursuant to Madras Reg. XV. of 1816, sec. 10, cl. 3, directed and recorded the particular points in the suit which were to be proved; which were, that the Respondent should file the Bond and prove its execution by the Appellant and his payments and promises. No points were recorded by the Judge for proof by the Appellant.

The suit being at issue, evidence was entered by the Respondent in support of his case. The documentary evidence consisted; first, of the instrument in the pleadings called a Bond, dated 20th March, 1833, the material part of which was as follows:—

“ Amount of principal borrowed by my father from your father's agent, Perumal Mudaly, in the two years Swabhanu (A.D. 1823-4) and Tarana A.D. 1824-5) last past, under six Bonds mortgaging fifty-four different ornaments, made of gold and set with precious stones			Pagodas	16,800

(3500) three thousand and five hundred each, to be paid on the 30th Punguni (10th April) of each year, commencing from Vigaya (A.D. 1834). If I fail to do so, you may recover it according to judicial regulations.

[238] "Thus do I voluntarily execute this Bond, in the handwriting of Dhurjati Venkat Row Rayasum. RAZE BOMMARAUZE BAHADUR."

There were four witnesses to this Bond.

Second, a sunnud, or grant, dated the 20th of March, 1833, of the village of Gopalpuram, by the Appellant's father; third, a power of attorney, dated the 19th of July, 1844, given by the Appellant to Sainbarauze Venkata Row to act as his Vakeel; and fourth, copy of an account of the Appellant's liabilities, dated 7th November, 1844, which had been filed with the Collector by the Appellant's Vakeel in the proceedings relating to the sequestration.

On the 22nd July, 1850, the Appellant's Vakeel was appointed District Moonsiff, when, according to the practice of the Court, and in compliance with the provisions of Mad. Reg. XIV. of 1816 (a), a notice of that fact was issued by the Court, and served upon the Appellant on the 13th August following, requiring him to engage another Vakeel. The Appellant accordingly appointed a new Vakeel in the suit, who first appeared for the Appellant on the 24th of the same month of August. During the time which intervened between the 22nd July and 24th August, the Appellant was unrepresented, either personally or by Vakeel.

[239] For the purpose of orally proving the points recorded for proof by the Respondent, seven witnesses were examined; the first of these was the only surviving attesting witness to the execution of the Bond, a relation of the Appellant, who deposed that it was duly executed by him. The other three attesting witnesses were dead, but two witnesses identified the signatures of the deceased attesting witnesses. Two other witnesses deposed to being present at the settlement of the accounts and execution of the Bond in question. The remaining two witnesses deposed to having heard the Appellant promise to pay the amount of the Bond. With respect to the other three documents filed by the Respondent, no witnesses were called by him to prove them. No witnesses were examined by the Appellant. The first witness was examined upon affirmation, and finally dismissed on the 20th August, 1850, in the interval between the times when notice was given to the Appellant of the retirement of his former Vakeel and of the appointment and the appearance of his new Vakeel. No objection was taken to the reception of this evidence by the Appellant during the trial.

On the 30th of December, 1850, Mr. E. C. Lovell made his decree, which, after stating the pleadings and evidence, declared that the Bond was fully proved, and under the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839 (b), the Plaintiff [240] appeared to be fairly

(a) By Regulation XIV. of 1816, sec. 13, it is enacted, that "if a pleader should be unable to attend in the Court in consequence of indisposition, or other sufficient reason, he is to notify the same in writing to the Court, on unstamped paper; and the hearing of any cause in which such pleader may be employed is to be postponed to a future day, unless the party or his authorised agent shall commit the management of the cause to any other pleader of the Court, or unless the party himself shall be present, and willing to plead the cause in person."

(b) Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, entitled "An act concerning the allowance of interest in certain cases," was passed by the Honourable the President of the Council of India, in Council on the 30th December, 1839, and is as follows:-- entitled to interest upon the instalments from the dates of their severally becoming due, the total amount of principal and interest being, as above stated, Rs. 66,384. 2. 10., which he accordingly awarded to the Plaintiff, with costs of suit.

The Appellant appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras, and by his petition of appeal urged that the defective and irregular manner in which the Bond sued on was drawn up was sufficient to prove it not to be a bona fide document. That the evidence of the execution of the Bond was insufficient and worthless. That the sole attesting witness to the Bond was examined when Appellant had no Vakeel in Court, the party employed by him having been appointed to a Moonsiffship. That no points were given to Appellant for proof. That the circumstances under which Rs. 486. 2. 4. were alleged in the plaint to have been recovered in part payment of the amount sued for, were incredible. That the terms of the Bond did not admit of interest being charged. That the decree of the Lower Court was in opposition to sec. 5, Reg. XXXIV. of 1802, inas-[241]-much as it awarded interest upon interest, of which the amount of the Bond sued on was expressly stated to consist in part.

In his answer, the Respondent upheld the correctness of the Civil Judge's decree, disputing the several assertions and arguments advanced by the Appellant.

The original Defendant having died, the appeal was prosecuted by his son and heir, Coomar Vencatapermaul Rauze.

The Sudder Court's decree was pronounced on the 2nd of April, 1853. The material part was in these terms:—"On mature consideration of the merits of this case, the Court concur in the judgment formed thereupon by the Civil Judge. The bond sued upon is denied, and it is pleaded that the claim is shut out by the Regulation of Limitation. It appears to the Court that the copy of account put in by the Respondent at once removes this bar, and proves the justness of the Respondent's claim. The document was obtained from the Collector, and purports to be copy of an account of the Appellant's liabilities tendered by him to the Collector through a Vakeel when his Zemindary was under attachment; and copy of the power of attorney granted to that Vakeel, also authenticated by the Collector, has been likewise filed. In the account the Bond now sued on is entered, the sum and date thereof being specified, as also are eight items of receipt, being the jodee rent for eight years, from 1832-33 to 1839-40, of a village belonging to the Appellant, appropriated by the Respondent, and amounting to Rs. 486. 2. 4., which have been credited to Appellant as payments made upon the Bond, and [242] which are so deducted from the sum thereof in the said account rendered to the Collector.

"The reception of the above power of attorney and account by the Collector is a sufficient guarantee of the genuineness of these exhibits as having been put into his office by the authorization of the Appellant: and in effect nothing has been adduced to call these documents into question; nor could such a matter have taken effect and remained concealed and unprotested against by the Appellant had his name and authority on the occasion in question been made use of falsely and fraudulently.

"The above acknowledgment of the Bond and the payments credited against it occurred in the year 1844, or within five years of the institution of the suit, and

"Whereas, it is expedient to extend to the territories under the government of the East India Company, as well within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Courts as elsewhere, the provisions of the Statute, 3rd and 4th Wm. IV., ch. 42, sec. 28, concerning the allowance of interest in certain cases:

"It is therefore hereby enacted, that upon all debts or sums certain, payable at a certain time or otherwise, the Court before which such debts or sums may be recovered, may, if it shall think fit, allow interest to the creditor, at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest, from the time when such debts or sums certain were payable, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time; or if payable otherwise, then from the time when demand of payment shall have been made in writing, so as such demand shall give notice to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand until the term of payment, provided that interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law."

upon the evidence to the claim arising thereout the Court consider the decree of the Civil Judge to be fully justified.

"The Bond itself appears to the Court to be a genuine document. It is inscribed on a stamp, and bears the seal of the Appellant, which could not easily have been surreptitiously made use of nor counterfeited, and nothing has been adduced to bring the integrity of this seal into question.

"In his answer in the original suit the Appellant admitted the previous heavy transactions between his father and the Respondent's father, out of which the Bond arose; and he has made no attempt to show how these were brought to a close otherwise than by the execution of the Bond sued on, as alleged by the Respondent; and as to this Bond, on that occasion the Appellant could not say that it had not been executed, a hesitation which cannot possibly be attributed to the want of recollection then pleaded, and is [243] only to be accounted for by the fact that the Bond really was executed, and that the Appellant then shrunk from absolutely denying his act.

"It has been objected that interest should not be adjudged upon the Bond, as the terms thereof make no provision for the same, and as the sum of the Bond is itself formed in part of interest.

"The Court consider both these objections to be unsustainable. The Bond provided for liquidation of the sum thereof by instalments; and as this condition was not kept, the charge of interest becomes fairly exactable; nor does the circumstance that the sum secured by the Bond is composed of interest prevent the exaction of such a charge, since this is plainly authorised by the very enactment (sec. 5, Reg. XXXIV. of 1802), which Appellant quotes as sustaining his objection.

"For the above reasons the Court confirms the decree of the Civil Judge, and dismisses the appeal with costs."

Against this decree the present appeal was brought.

Sir Frederic Thesiger, Q.C., Mr. Leith, and Mr. Blaine, for the Appellant. No fair trial has taken place, and the cause ought to be remitted to the Court below, as the Bond in question has not been sufficiently proved. There are, however, several fatal miscarriages and irregularities. First, there were no points recorded by the Judge, for proof by the Appellant, as required by Mad. Reg. XV. of 1816, sec. 10, cl. 3, and such omission is fatal, Srimut Moottoo Vijaya Rajanadha Gowdy Vellabha Perria Woodia Taver v. Rany Anga Moottoo Natchiar (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 278). [244] Secondly, the Appellant had no opportunity of cross-examining the only surviving attesting witness to the alleged Bond; he being at that time absent and unrepresented. The irregularity in permitting such examination was contrary to Mad. Reg. XIV. of 1816, sec. 13, and to every principle of justice. Thirdly, documentary evidence was improperly admitted to be received. A copy of an account was admitted without proof of the loss of the original to let it in, or indeed any proof at all. Mad. Reg. XVII. of 1802, sec. 11.—[Mr. Pemberton Leigh: There appears to have been no objection to the admission of the copy in the Court below.]—It is not too late to urge it here. Syud Abbas Ali Khan v. Yadeem Ramy Reddy (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 156). The evidence of the witnesses upon the alleged promise to pay the debt and interest is insufficient, and too vague to be relied upon. But, even if the Respondent had proved his title to recover, he was barred by Mad. Reg. II. of 1802, sec. 18, cl. 4. Lastly, No interest upon the debt ought to have been allowed, interest not being provided for by the Bond. Motee Bahoo v. Khachik Arakel (6 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 67), Foster v. Weston (6 Bing. 709), Higgins v. Sargeant (2 Barn. and Cr. 348). The law in force at the date of the Bond, Mad. Reg. XXXIV. of 1802, sec. 5, must govern the right to interest, and not the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, which we insist has no retrospective operation. Broom's "Legal Maxims," p. 28.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Mackeson, for the Respondent. —None of the objections raised by the Appellant can prevail. The charge that the witnesses of the Re-[245]-spondents were unworthy of credit is unfounded, nothing was adduced in evidence to impeach their credit. Moreover, this Court, in a mere question of credence, treats it as one solely for the decision of the Court below, that Court having a much better opportunity of testing the credibility of the witnesses, Muddoo Soondun Sundial v. Suroop Chunder Seekar Chandiy (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 431). The Bond sued on was fully proved, as well as the promise to pay. It is too late now to object to the irregularities. If that had been done in the Zillah Court they could have been cured. The Appellant admitted the truth of the Respondent's demand upon this Bond in the account filed by him before the Collector on the 7th of November, 1844, which was within twelve years from its date to the filing of the plaint, and, as the debt secured was to be paid by instalments, the Bond is expressly within the proviso of cl. 1, sec. 18, of Mad. Reg. II, of 1802, which effectually disposes of the Appellant's objection on the Regulation of Limitations. Again, it is urged that the principal amount of the Bond sued on was for interest, and that interest could not be charged upon interest. The answer to this is, that the account set out on the face of the Bond shows that the balance on the previous transactions secured by the Bond was the residue of principal money which remained due after applying the credits in liquidation of the whole interest due. But even if the balance had been made up of the aggregate amount of principal and interest, compound interest is expressly allowed by cl. 5 of Mad. Reg. XXXIV, of 1802, where the former Bonds have been delivered up and cancelled. The remaining point is, that interest was not recoverable, as it was not provided for in the Bond, and that the case does [246] not fall within the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839. This Act, we submit, is retrospective in its operation, and authorises the allowance of interest, although not expressly provided for in a Bond. The Bond provides for liquidation of the amount by instalments, and as this condition was not performed, the charge of interest was fairly made.

Sir Frederic Thesiger, in reply, submitted, that there was not sufficient evidence that the Vakeel was authorised by the Appellant to make the admission he did in the account, Medho Fow Chento Punt Gole v. Bhookun-das Boolaki-Das (1 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 351).

On the conclusion of his argument, judgment was delivered by

The Right Hon. Sir William H. Maule.—After giving due consideration to the learned arguments which have been addressed to us by the Counsel on both sides, their Lordships are of opinion that it is their duty humbly to advise Her Majesty that the appeal in this case should be dismissed. The ground on which their Lordships have come to that conclusion I will very shortly state.

This is an action for a pecuniary demand evidenced by an instrument which in the course of the argument has been called a Bond, and without being strictly in the nature of such an instrument, in the sense which belongs to it according to the law of England, is an instrument which recognises the existence of a debt payable with interest, and provides for its liquidation by certain instalments which have not been paid.

The case came on before the Zillah Court in India, [247] and on that occasion evidence was given which satisfied that Court of the justice of the Plaintiff's demand. In the course, however, of the proceedings there, it appears that a witness, the sole surviving attesting witness to the instrument in question, was examined for the Plaintiff without the presence of any Vakeel, or agent on behalf of the Defendant, and in the absence of the Defendant himself. Other evidence was also given; but this particular evidence was certainly very material evidence in respect of the Plaintiff's demand.

The objection which was suggested in the petition to the Sudder Dewanny Court, and which has also been urged in the argument before us, was that such examination could not regularly or properly have taken place, and their Lordships are of opinion, that that objection, if taken in the right time and in the right place, would (to what extent may be questioned, perhaps), be an objection which ought to prevail with respect to the evidence to which it was applied. It does not appear however that there was any objection taken to the reception of this evidence in the Zillah Court; not merely that no objection was taken at the time of the examination, because, as that was in the absence of anybody representing the Defendant, it might well be that it could not be observed as to him that he did not then object; but it appears very clear that there was ample opportunity of objecting afterwards, and requiring the Court to do what might be necessary to remedy the omission, or irregularity; but nothing of that kind appears to have taken place. It is true, that before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, as appears in the petition of appeal, there was some reference made to the examination of [248] the witness in the absence of the Defendant and those representing him. The Sudder Court, however, did not think fit to allow such objection; and the way they dealt with it, and with the whole case, was this: the Sudder Court said, that notwithstanding there may have been an irregularity and a miscarriage in the Court below with respect to this evidence, that that did not taint the whole proceedings so as to prevent the Plaintiff from recovering, inasmuch as it did not show anything that was inconsistent with the right of the Plaintiff to recover the sum in demand; the Court then pointed out that the Defendant, in a regular proceeding before the Collector, whose business it was under a sequestration to seize and take possession of this Zemindary, had sent in an account, in which account the Bond in question was noticed in such a manner as clearly to identify it as the Bond under which the Plaintiff claimed; the account also contained payments which, if made, would take the case out of the Regulation of Limitations, which account was put in by a person shown to be an authorised agent of the Defendant.

Observations have been made with respect to the credibility of this transaction, and with respect to the sufficiency of the proof of the copy of that account, and of the authority of the agent who put it in: but it seems to have been thought by the Court below a regular and proper proceeding, and it is one of so public and important a nature that it is hardly conceivable that it could have taken place in the Collector's Court, and the document remain there so long as it did quite unimpeached, unless it was a regular proceeding. It would be very unsafe, if documents of that public nature, and taking place in the [249] regular course, could be treated, on mere suspicion, as having no weight at all. It is very fortunate when there is public and official written evidence of the matters in question, in a country where it is said that oral evidence may be easily procurable in a corrupt manner.

The Sudder Dewanny Adawlut treated, and we think rightly treated, that document as clearly showing a distinct acknowledgment on the part of the Defendant of the existence of this Bond, and also of the payments on which the Plaintiff relies to take the case out of the Regulation of Limitations. There is also other evidence in the case of the same tendency; the result of the whole of which seems to their Lordships, as it did to the Court of appeal below, to be, that supposing the document in question had never been produced in Court at all, there would be quite sufficient evidence to establish the claim, or at least to require an answer, and no answer is suggested to have been given, supposing the claim actually to exist.

That being so, we agree that the case cannot be said to stand precisely in the situation in which it would have stood if the document had not been produced at all; but having been produced, even though it be conceded to have been in an irregular manner, and having been admitted in evidence; taking all these circumstances into consideration, they were, we think, of sufficient weight to counterbalance the objection which I have previously described, upon which the Court below acted. In this state of things, their Lordships, as already intimated, conceive that justice has been attained, and that any probability of justice being attainable more perfectly by sending [250] the case again to the Court below, is so infinitely slight, that it would be doing injustice to give any weight to that probability. Still an irregularity does certainly appear to have taken place, and one of a serious nature in respect of the admission of evidence in the absence of the Vakeel of the Defendant, who ought to have been present in order to scrutinize such evidence; but as it turns out in the result, in consequence of the other evidence adduced, to be unimportant, and to have no weight as affecting the decision; the irregularity also being one which does not raise any material suspicion on the rest of the Plaintiff's case; their Lordships think they are bound to affirm the judgment of the Court below, that Court having come to the right conclusion; yet inasmuch as a miscarriage took place in the course of the proceedings, they think the affirmance should be without costs on either side. Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly recommend Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed, but without costs.

[251] RUGHONNAUTH SAHOI CHOTAYLOLL.—Appellant: MANICKCHUND and KAISREECHUND.—Respondents * [Feb. 1 and 2, 1856].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

A wager contract in India (before the passing of the Legislative Act, No. 21, of 1818) upon the average price opium would fetch at a future Government sale, held legal, and an action thereon maintained.

The Plaintiff and Defendants, by contracts in writing, wagered as to the average price to be obtained for opium "of the 30th of November," "of the first lelaum, or public Government sale of opium." At the time when these contracts were entered into, the first Government sale had been advertised for the "30th of November, 1846." The sale on that day was prevented by a combination of opium speculators interested in similar contracts. The Government sale was again advertised, and took place on the 7th of December following, when opium of the quantity and description advertised for sale on the "30th November" was sold. Held: First, that the date mentioned in the contracts, the "30th of November," was a mere description of the period when the first public Government sale of opium usually took place, and formed no part of the risk contemplated by the wagers, the subject of the contracts, and was immaterial; and, secondly, that according to the true construction of the contracts, the first actual public Government sale of opium which took place next after the date of the contracts, satisfied the terms of the contracts; and upon a certain average being realised thereon, the event on which the Plaintiff had wagered was determined in his favour, and he was entitled to recover the differences under the averages.

The action in this case was brought upon certain wager contracts made between the Appellant and Respondents, as to the average price to be obtained on a future lelaum, or public Government sale of opium.

The facts of the case were these:—

The Respondents were merchants, trading in co-partnership together at Calcutta, and the Appellant, as well as the Respondents, were dealers and specu-[252]-lators in opium. At the time of the making of the contracts in question, the Appellant was a speculator for the high, and the Respondents were speculators for the low average price of opium, which should be obtained at the first public Government sale of the season.

The contracts entered into between the Appellant and Respondents were eleven in number, and all referred to the same day, the 30th of November, as the day of sale to determine the wager, the several instruments differing only as to the fixed limit or amount agreed upon to be the standard. All these contracts were reduced into writing, and the chittee, or writing of one of these contracts, dated the 30th of September, 1846, was as follows:—

"Marked in the Khattah on account of your house, the money of the 'Taijee' or rise is with you.

Taijee or rise on the average of 1600 of the first lelaum or public sale of the Patna.

1½ Sri Purmaissore Jee.

"1½ To Brothers Rughoonauth Sahoi Chotayloll. This is written by Manickchund Kissoreechund, with salutations, which they will peruse.

"Further, we have eaten the Taijee or rise on the average of one lot of 5 (in letters) five Paitees or chests of Patna opium of the 30th of November (Sumbut), 1903, Nineteen hundred and three, at the price of 1600, (in letters) sixteen hundred. If the average of the first lelaum, or public sale of the Company's sircar rises above sixteen hundred, according to that we will give you the 'bullun' or rise; if it falls below sixteen hundred, you have no 'dauwah' or claim. We will not give you credit for the [253] 'Nuzurannah ka roopia,' or bonus money that we have taken from you, Sumbut 1903, Mittee Mugsur or Ughum, the 5th day of the light side of the moon.

At the time when the contracts were entered into, the first public Government sale of opium by the East India Company for the season had been advertised in the Calcutta Gazette of the 29th of August, 1846, for the 30th of November, 1846. On that day the opium advertised to be sold by the Government was put up for sale by public auction at Calcutta, subject to certain printed conditions of sale; but, owing to the first lot put up for sale having been bid for to an exorbitant price by persons who attended the sale, no lot was knocked down, and the sale was postponed. On the 7th of December, 1846, the opium advertised for sale on the 30th of November was again put up for sale, subject to certain modified conditions of sale, which had been advertised by the Government between the 30th of November, 1846, and that day. On this last day the opium was sold, and realised the average price of Company's Rs. 1793, 5 annas, and 9 $\frac{3}{4}$ pie, per chest. After the sale, the Appellant claimed from the Respondents the sum of Company's Rs. 18,134, 13 annas, and 3 pie, being the amount of the differences between the sums mentioned in the contracts and the average price for which the opium sold, with interest thereon from the 7th of December, 1846; but the Respondents refused to pay, whereupon the Appellant, in October, 1848, brought an action upon promises in [254] the Supreme Court at Calcutta against the Respondents. The declaration contained eleven special counts, followed by a count for money had and received. Each of these special counts was laid upon a separate and distinct written contract, in the nature of a wager respecting the average price which should be thereafter obtained by the Government for Patna opium at a certain future public Government sale.

The Respondents pleaded first non assumpsit to the whole declaration, also several pleas traversing its allegations; and further setting up fraud on the part of the Appellant.

Issue was joined upon these pleas. Afterwards the Respondents obtained leave to plead additional pleas, which set up in substance the same defence.

The cause came on for trial on the 21st of July, 1852. Evidence was given on behalf of the Appellant and Respondents, and, by consent, the depositions of witnesses in another action, entitled "Chotayloll v. Uggerchund and Hurruckchund," being the same Plaintiff against other Defendants upon similar wager contracts, were used as evidence. The Appellant proved the contracts upon which the action was brought, and also that the first lelaum, or public Government sale of opium, was advertised for the 30th of November, 1846, and that there was an attempt to hold the sale on that day, but that it went off owing to parties trying to run up the bids to an immense amount; and that the first actual lelaum, or public Government sale of opium for the season, took place on the 7th of December, 1846, when the same number of chests of Patna opium, and of the like quality as advertised for the 30th of November, 1846, were sold, and produced the average price [255] before mentioned. Upon this evidence the Court found a verdict for the Respondents on the pleas of non assumpsit to the special counts, and a verdict for the Appellant on all the other issues; damages, Company's Rs. 5775, on the common counts for money had and received; leave being reserved to the Appellant to move to increase the verdict by the amount claimed on the special counts, and to the Respondents to move to enter a verdict for them. This sum was the amount of the premiums, or bonuses, paid by the Appellant to the Respondents, and which the Court thought the Appellant entitled to recover.

The Appellant obtained a rule to show cause why the verdict for the Respondents, on the plea of non assumpsit to the special counts, should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the Appellant on that issue, with damages contingently assessed; namely, Company's Rs. 18,134, 13 annas, and 3 pie, in substitution for the verdict for the Appellant upon the money counts; and the Respondents also obtained a rule to show cause why the verdict for the Appellant on the first plea, as applicable to the twelfth count of the declaration, should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the Respondents; and why the verdict entered for the Appellant, on the fifth plea, should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the Respondents; and why the verdict entered for the Appellant, on the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas, should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the Respondents.

Both these rules were argued before the Supreme Court on the 20th of August, 1852, and were, after argument, discharged without costs. The judgment [256] of the Court in this and two other cases, including the case of "Chotaylo v. Uggur-chund and Hurruckchund," was as follows:—

"These cases are in substance the same, and our judgment in one case is applicable alike to all. The contracts declared upon are gambling contracts, on the average price to be obtained on a future public Government sale of opium. At the time when these contracts respectively were entered into, the sale was advertised to take place on a certain day in November. The sale was attempted on that day by the vendors; but the sale was prevented by a combination, and by the machinations of certain persons interested in similar contracts, who had taken the low average, and who, to avoid losing their bets, were bent on preventing any sale on that day.

"The sale not having taken place, a sale was advertised by the vendors for a day in the ensuing month of December, under conditions somewhat different from those under which the defeated sale was advertised to take place. In these contracts which are now under consideration, though there is some variation of expression as to the sale, yet the expressions in all as to the time of the sale are inconsistent with the substituted day. In one, which is the case most favourable for the Plaintiff's argument, the term 'the first opium sale' is used; but that expression is preceded by a statement of the day; and we think that the true way of construing that, also, is to take the two expressions together, and as meaning the first sale now advertised, for the reference to the day in the contract seems to be in that sense. In one contract, the very day of the defeated sale is named, and the sale is described as a sale of that [257] day; in the other, the sale is described as the sale of November.

"The language, we think, refers plainly to the sale, and is no stipulation that the very identical opium should be sold; which, indeed, the vendors, on the evidence of the witness Welsh, never bound themselves to, not selling opium specifically described, but taking indiscriminately from their stores opium of the quality described in their advertisements. In construing contracts by natives, an adherence to the letter, without regard to their style, is to be avoided; the expressions in all, we think, denote the day or time of sale.

"These contracts differ, therefore, materially, from the case before the Privy Council, and from the former case in this Court, as here the then intended day of sale, which was a fixed day rarely departed from, is mentioned by reference to it in the contracts. In this Court it was held that the change of day on certain of those gambling contracts did not defeat the bets because in those contracts the time named for the sale was general, namely, 'the first opium sale;' and as the first advertised sale proved abortive, that which next followed fulfilled the terms of the bets. The Privy Council have so decided in contracts thus generally worded. But these contracts contain, by reference to the day and the month respectively, a description of the sale, which is particular and limited in terms; and the question is, whether we are at liberty to treat that part of the contract as mere description and nothing else, and to read the contracts, as bets on the result of the next first opium sale, whenever it might be. There are, certainly, no express words of warranty or condition; still, the nature of the contract [258] is such that time, if named, would, upon legal principles, be of the essence of the contract: for it is a contract on a contingency or risk, which the alteration or retardation of the day might materially vary. In such cases, the question is, not whether in the particular case such alteration has, in fact, increased or diminished materially the chances of winning; but the rule where it prevails is a general one not dependent on the actual result in an individual case. It is obvious, for instance, that if a wager is with a capitalist, on the ability of that capitalist to influence a market price to a rise by means of his money, or credit, and transactions; that the retardation of the day on which the bet is to come off may give him an important advantage, as its acceleration might place him under great disadvantages, and various casualties might have the most important influence on the risk on such a bet as the present. The description of the day of sale in the contract cannot, therefore, in the reason of the thing, be regarded as mere surplusage.

"There is no evidence why the description was inserted in these particular contracts, nor do the rules of evidence permit the parties to explain by oral evidence the reason of their inserting the time. If such evidence were admissible, and it appeared that one side meant, in fact, the day to be material, and that the other did not, the contract would fail on the ground of want of mutual assent to the same agreement. The unwarrantable and successful attempt to frustrate the first sale would have been merely a purposeless wrong to the vendors, unless some, at least, of the contracting parties thought the day a material term in their contract. As, then, there is no ground in the reason of the thing, or in the surrounding cir[259]cumstances, to treat the description as unmeaning surplusage, it must stand, and it denotes a sale which never took place; consequently, the event on which these particular bets hinged never took place, and, consequently, the bets were not lost. This view of the case appears to us to be supported by the language and reasoning of the Court in the case of Daintree v. Hutchinson (10 Mee. and Wels. 85), especially by the judgment of Mr. Baron Alderson. That learned Judge says, in substance, that the day, if it had been a fixed day, would have limited the bet to a match on that day. The Court does not there say that the parties should have introduced words of express warranty or condition to that effect, but simply that the day should have been fixed. In that case, the Newmarket Meeting was considered on the evidence to be in the nature of a moveable feast, a time fluctuating with weather and other circumstances. But here the evidence shows only one change of day in many years, and that not recent. No doubt the wording of a contract, and its nature, might be such as to give rise to a confident belief that the mention of a day, or time, was merely descriptive of a thing as it then stood, an expression in its own nature, having, and intended to have, no limitation to time; but viewing the nature of the contract and the surrounding circumstances, we think it would be merely assumption of the point in dispute to adopt this view of the matter. There are no merits, and the demerits seem equally balanced. It is a mere question, whether a bet on a sale in a certain month, or on a certain day in that month, means a bet on a sale at any indefinite time.

"We cannot vary the terms which they have used, [260] and we do not feel justified in rejecting any of them. On the other ground, we think that the Plaintiff is entitled to a return of the premium. It is ingeniously argued, that it was part of the risk whether the sale would take place or not, at the appointed time; but we think, that was no part of the risk: the risk was whether at a sale to take place in the prescribed time the price would rise above a named sum, consequently, we think the risk was not run. Had this argument been sound, then, of course, the wager would have been decided against the Plaintiff. The pleas of fraud, as they are framed, not being in any of the cases supported by the evidence, we think it unnecessary to enter upon a consideration of their validity in law. Therefore, the rules in all the cases will be discharged, and the verdicts supported as they were found."

The present appeal was from this judgment, so far as it related to this action.

Sir Fitz-Roy Kelly, Q.C., Mr. Serjeant Channell, and Mr. W. H. Clarke, for the Appellant.—At the time when these gaming contracts were entered into, they were legal. It has been so held by this Court, Ramloll Thackoorseydass v. Soojimnull Dhonnull (4 Moore's Ind. Ap. Cases, 339), Doolubdass Pettamberdass v. Ramloll Thackoorseydass (5 Moore's Ind. Ap. Cases, 109). The Act of the Legislative Council of India, No. 21, of 1848, for avoiding wagers had not then passed, and, therefore, does not apply to this case. The question, then, is simply one of construction. The terms of the contracts are similar in their nature, and they must be determined [261] upon legal principles, by endeavouring to discover what was the real meaning of the parties. Now, we submit, that the true construction of the term "the 30th of November," was intended as a mere description of the period at which the lelaum, or first public Government sale of opium usually took place, and that whether such public Government sale did or did not take place in the month of November, 1846, that circumstance formed no part of the risk contemplated by the wagers. The actual time of sale was immaterial, the subject of the contracts being a sale of the quantity and description of opium advertised in the Calcutta Gazette of the 29th of August, 1846, at the next Government sale, whenever such sale should be effected. Although, therefore, the month of November, 1846, was mentioned in the contracts, the sale contemplated by the contracts was not limited to that month only. Suppose the 30th of November had been a Sunday, or a fast-day, that fact would not have avoided the contracts. —[Sir William H. Maule: Your argument is that the language of the contracts import that the opium was to be the opium of the 30th of November, 1846, and not that the sale is to be on the 30th of November?]

—The contracts clearly mean that construction. Mr. Pemberton Leigh: Does the contract mean more than that it should be the opium that would be for sale on the 30th of November?]

—The first actual public Government sale of opium, namely, that of the 7th of December, 1846, which took place after the making of the contracts, satisfied the terms of the contracts, and upon a certain average being realised thereon, the event on which the Appellant had wagered was determined in his favour, and he was [262] entitled to recover the difference between the bonuses or premiums paid him under the contracts and those averages.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Respondents. —No sufficient grounds are shown for disturbing the verdict or altering the judgment appealed from. The construction now put by the Appellant is unsound, for it cannot with any reason be argued that the description of the day of sale mentioned in the contract is to be regarded as mere surplusage. In Daintree v. Hutchinson (10 Mee. and Wels. 85), which was an action upon a wager upon a coursing match, Baron Alderson lays it down, that if a specific day be fixed for running a match, that would have limited the match to the day. Now, the Government sale, which was to have taken place on the 30th of November, never took place; the wagers were, therefore, off.

Sir Fitz-Roy Kelly, replied.

Their Lordships reserved judgment, directing the following appeal, which arose under similar circumstances, to be argued.

RUGHONAUTH SAHOI CHOTAYLOLL,—Appellant; UGGERCHUND and HURRUCKCHUND,—Respondents.

This case differed in no respect from the former appeal, the facts being similar, except as to the form [263] of the contracts and the parties. In the view their Lordships took of the case, the distinction was immaterial, and it is unnecessary to state the particulars of the case.

Sir Fitz-Roy Kelly, Q.C., Mr. Serjeant Channell, and Mr. W. H. Clarke, appeared for the Appellant; and Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Respondents.

Their Lordships' judgment in both appeals was delivered by

The Right Hon. Sir John Patteson.—These cases are in substance really one of construction only, as to the meaning of the contracts which the parties have entered into upon certain opium wagers. Undoubtedly, there is hardly anything which is more difficult than to arrive at a certain conclusion with regard to the meaning and intention of the parties to a written contract, if the words of the contract are in any way capable of more than one interpretation. It is very difficult to do so; but still their Lordships are, in this case, obliged, as well as they can, to ascertain from the contracts themselves and the surrounding circumstances, what was the meaning of the parties.

Now, looking at the words of the contracts, and at the surrounding circumstances of the case, their Lordships are of opinion, that the contracting parties intended to make a wager as to the average price of opium at the first Government sale, without any pro-[264]-vision that such sale should necessarily take place on "the 30th of November," and no other day. The 30th of November had been advertised in the Gazette of the 29th of August, 1846, as the intended day of the first sale; and it appears that it really happened that no alteration was made in the day so advertised. The parties, therefore, would naturally in their contracts refer to the advertisement in the Gazette by way of description. If they had intended to confine their contracts to what should happen on the 30th of November, and no other day, they certainly would have used some words of limitation so confining it, but no such words are to be found. The words are, "the first public sale," the addition of "the 30th of November" being introduced, as we are of opinion, only as a description, as if it had been, which sale is advertised now on the 30th of November. It appears by the evidence that no particular chests are marked or set apart for any particular sale, therefore it seems hardly likely that the parties intended by the words "the 30th of November," to describe the particular opium, then to be sold, and not to refer to the day of sale. It appears by the evidence of the witness Welch, that sufficient opium had not arrived for all the sales contemplated in that year, though there was then sufficient for the first sale.

Such being the construction to be put upon the contracts when made, does the alteration made in the conditions of sale, after the attempted sale of the 30th of November proved abortive, do away with the contracts? Their Lordships think not. Their Lordships so thought in Doolubdass Pettamberdass v. Ramlohl Thackoorseydass (5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 109), and there is nothing in the present case lead-[265]-ing to the conclusion that the parties contracted with express reference to the conditions which are published in the Gazette of the 29th of August. In truth, the only material addition to the conditions of the sale on the 7th of December was the twelfth condition, guarding against the mischief which had rendered abortive the intended sale of the 30th of November.

The case of Daintree v. Hutchinson (10 Mee. and Wels. 85) is no authority on the point raised. There the day was decided to be immaterial, and the dictum of Mr. Baron Alderson in that case merely shows that where parties make a specific day essential in their contract they must abide by it. But the question here is, whether the parties did make a specific day essential, and their Lordships think that they did not. There is an expression in that case which is adopted in the judgment of the Court at Calcutta, which, perhaps, it is as well to mention. The Court there say, "In that case, the Newmarket Meeting was considered on the evidence to be in the nature of a moveable feast," not fixed definitively for a particular day, but dependent in some degree on circumstances. Now, certainly, we do not feel disposed to agree with that, because, in truth, a moveable feast is as well known and as fixed at the beginning of the year, as any feast which is not moveable. All moveable feasts depend upon Easter. It is known what day Easter will be in the years 1857 and 1858, and for years to come, if it is calculated. Therefore, all feasts which depend upon Easter, are as well known as Christmas or any other day which is not commonly called a moveable feast. That expression, therefore, seems to us to be incorrect. Under these [266] circumstances their Lordships will recommend Her Majesty that the verdict should be entered for the Plaintiff on the issue of non assumpsit, and on the special counts for the damages which have been found in each case. And we think the verdict should be entered for the Defendants in each case on the counts for money had and received.

Mr. R. Palmer.—Your Lordships did not say what your intention is about the costs. I believe, under the present Rules, if nothing is said the Appellant gets the costs of the appeal (see, however, upon this point, Lindo v. Barrett, 9 Moore's P.C. Cases, 456, where their Lordships held that to entitle a successful Appellant to costs, application must be made at the hearing for their allowance).

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh.—All we can do is to give the costs according to the ordinary rule.

By the Order in Council made upon the appeal, it was ordered, that the appeal be allowed with costs.

[267] JOHN DOE, on the demise of RAJAH SEEBKRISTO and Others.—Appellant: THE EAST INDIA COMPANY. Respondents * [Feb. 2 and 4, 1856].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

The East India Company, as representing the Indian Government, have a freehold in the bed of navigable rivers in India, and to the land between high and low-water mark.

Land formed by gradual accretion belongs to the owner of the adjacent soil.

By the Hindoo law a verbal grant of real estate is good, if followed by possession by the grantee.

The grantors of real estate were Hindoos, and the grantees, the East India Company. Held, that as the Hindoo law which governed the grantors' rights allowed a verbal grant, the law of the grantees regulated the matter, and, as there was possession under the grant by the grantees, the grant was valid.

Ejectment by the Appellant against the Respondents for recovery of a piece of land situate at Hautollah, in Calcutta, bounded and abutted on the north by a ghaut known as Ahereetollah ghaut, or Rajchunder Doss's ghaut; on the south by land in the possession of the Commissioners for the town of Calcutta; on the east, partly by land belonging to the lessors of the Appellant, and partly by the Strand Road; and on the west by the river Hooghly. This piece of land was claimed by the lessors of the Plaintiff as an accretion to certain land which they asserted to be their property.

The Appellant, the lessors of the Plaintiff in the Court below, were Rajah Seebkristo, Rajah Kalee-[268]-kristo, Rajah Dabeekristo, Rajah Opoorbokristo, Rajah Nreepaindorkristo, and Rajah Noraindorkristo, sons of the late Rajah Rajkissen, Kistnochunder Ghose and Kistnosokah Ghose, Woomasoondery Dossee, Bohoo Rane, the widow of Rajah Madubkissen, a son of Rajah Rajkissen and Gopaullohl Tagore, as executor of the Will of Rajah Jaudubkissen, another son of Rajah Rajkissen.

The Respondents, who took up the defence as landlords, pleaded simply "Not Guilty," and thereupon issue was joined.

The action was tried before the full Court on the 22nd and 23rd of March, 1854, when it appeared from the evidence that the river Hooghly was a navigable tidal river, subject to the daily flow and reflow of the tide; that at different times the Respondents had taken measures for the public improvement of the town of Calcutta, and in the year 1824, took steps with that object through a Committee, which was called the "Lottery Committee," in consequence of the funds required for the intended improvements having been provided by means of a lottery. That previously to the year 1824, a narrow and inconvenient road followed the course of the Hooghly on its left or eastern side, as it flowed from north to south, and the "Lottery Committee," acting on behalf of the Respondents, altered and improved this road through the whole length of the town of Calcutta; and at the place in question widened, and in parts straightened, the old road. At that place the new road thus formed was called the Strand Road. In executing these improvements, the "Lottery Committee" raised the ground to the west, and built along the west side of the Strand [269] Road a strong retaining wall, with a paved embankment sloping off to the west into the river, and bounding the river by a defined line. This wall, with its embankment, adjoined the piece of ground in dispute. The case set up by the Appellant at the trial was: that in the year 1778, the Respondents made a grant to Nubkissen, the grandfather of the principal lessors of the Plaintiff, of the Talookdarry of Sootalootee, which, on the death of Nubkissen and Rajkissen, his son, passed to Rajkissen's sons: that this grant passed to the lessors of the Plaintiff the freehold of the lands within Sootalootee: that the place where the retaining wall was built by the Respondents, the Talook Sootalootee extended on its western bound-dary to the high water-mark of the river Hooghly: that between the old road and the river Hooghly there was, in 1824, a strip of ground within Sootalootee, which was let out as golahs for bamboos brought down the river Hooghly for sale; that in 1824, Rajkissen's sons allowed this piece of ground to be taken for widening and improving the road; but that, by so doing, they did not part with the soil on which the additional width of the new road was made, and still retained in themselves the property of the same: that the terms on which the owners of the Talook consented to the land being so used by the Respondents were mentioned in a communication, partly verbal and partly written, which passed at the time between the "Lottery Committee," who then represented the Respondents, and Rajah Seebkissen and Kistnoochunder Ghose, the executors of Rajah Rajkissen. The only evidence at the trial of what was stated in this communication was the deposition of a witness named Kistnoochunder Ghose, who deposed that [270] Roopnarain Ghosaul, a person on behalf of the "Lottery Committee," came to him and Rajah Seebkissen, and said "the Lottery Committee were desirous of getting the ground for the purpose of constructing a road. I said the land belonged to our estate, that there was no objection to take the land provided all our right and title in the land belonged to us, and that no loss or injury inured to us. We gave some land to make the road, reserving the bamboo-market to ourselves, and all other ghauts should not be encroached upon, but reserved to us, and the hauts that were there, and land was given up for the road. We did not give up the land on the river side; there was a little portion of the land given where these bamboos were placed. Had we given the land on the river side, the bamboo mart would be injured;" and in a letter dated the 16th of June, 1824, by the Secretary to the "Lottery Committee" to Rajkissen's executors, they said that the new road would not interfere with the haut at Hauteollah, nor with the advantages derived from their private ghauts in Sootalootee, of the nature of which the "Lottery Committee" however had no means of judging, nor any authority to decide upon them; that as far as their operations were concerned, they had the satisfaction of knowing that all their property in that neighbourhood would be greatly enhanced in value in consequence of them. This letter then proceeded, "in exchange for the high ground which was occupied by your tenants on the river side, and is required for the new road, you will receive all the surplus that may remain between it and the land in your possession on the east side of it;" that afterwards, the waters of the river Hooghly gradually retired opposite and adjoining the [271] land which had been so taken for widening the road, and that the piece of ground in question having been left by the gradual retirement of the river, was an accretion to the adjoining land, the property of which they insisted was still in the family of Rajkissen, and, as a consequence, belonged to the lessors of the Plaintiff; and in support of their case, they relied on the fact that no written conveyance of the soil of the land for widening the new road was forthcoming, and that after the completion of the Strand Road, the whole space between the retaining wall and the eastern boundary of the Strand Road had not been used for traffic, but a strip of land on the west side of the Strand Road, and adjoining the wall, had been marked off by posts, so as to separate it from the part actually used for traffic: and that the family of Rajkissen had been allowed to use or let out places on this strip as golahs for bamboos, which were still sold there. The Respondents met the case of the Appellant by evidence to show that the piece of ground in question had not been formed by an ordinary change in the bed of the river, but by acts done by conservators, with the object of forming new ground: and they brought evidence to disprove any title in the lessors of the Plaintiff to the adjoining strip of ground, or to the site of the boundary wall; by proving, that the whole space between the retaining wall and the eastern boundary of the Strand Road was, in 1824, paved in a corresponding manner, and that the subsequent use of the strip of land along the wall for bamboos had been by the express permission of the Respondents. They also contended that the character and nature of the improvements made, and the subsequent enjoyment by them, were [272] inconsistent with the suggestion that any property in the freehold was in the lessors of the Plaintiff, and submitted that the evidence adduced by the Appellant did not establish any of the facts, on the ground of which his claim was made, nor warrant in law the consequences attempted to be deduced from them.

The Court found a verdict for the Appellant, leave being reserved to the Respondents to move to set aside the verdict and to enter a nonsuit, or a verdict for the Respondents instead. The Respondents afterwards moved for and obtained a rule to show cause on those terms, which was, after argument, by an Order bearing date the 4th day of April, 1854, made absolute, for entering the verdict for the Respondents, with costs, against the Appellant.

The judgment of the Court, on making the rule absolute, was delivered by the Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Peel, as follows:—"We are of opinion that the lessors of the Plaintiff have not made out their title to the land, which is the subject of this action of ejectment. The land is part of that which was the bed of the river, and the lessors of the Plaintiff can have no title to it unless by accretion. Whether the ownership of the soil of the bed of the river is in the Crown, or in the Defendants, is unimportant with regard to the decision of this cause. The title by accretion cannot be made out, unless it be shown that the land to which the accretion adhered is the land of the lessors of the Plaintiff. To establish this they made out their claim thus. They proved that a grant had been made to a party, under whom they claim by the Defendants, of a Talookdarry, the boundary of which they proved to be the high-water mark of the [273] river. Then, under this grant, they made claim to the soil down to that boundary, and claimed this land over which the water once flowed as an accretion to that adjacent land. The waters retired gradually: it was not a case of derelict land; and though that withdrawal of the waters was aided by the acts of Defendants in various parts of the river contiguous, yet the proximate and not the remoter cause is alone looked to, and the lands were still gained by accretion, though that accretion was aided by human agency. If the waters had been bounded out, the character of an accretion could not have been given to this land. It was urged for the Defendants, that as they made the wall on their own soil, the accretion was an accretion to their soil. This in a certain sense is true; but the consequence would by no means have followed, if the lessors of the Plaintiff had established the rest of their case, that they could not, therefore, claim this accretion. Any one who possesses land on the banks of a river (and there is no difference in this respect between navigable rivers and rivers not navigable), has a right to the flow of the water in its usual course; subject to that right, the owners or conservators of the river have the right of repairing the banks and improving the course of the river. The erection of a wall or other bound between the land on the edge of the water, and the water intercepting the actual flow, must either be an invasion of the right of the landowner to the usual flow of the water, or a mere repair and support of the banks. In the latter case it would not infringe on his rights, and in the former it would; but in the former case, as no one can take advantage of his own wrong, the right could not be affected by the circumstance, unless by the [274] laches of the sufferer. In a navigable river the erection of anything in the bed of it would be a nuisance if it impaired the free course of the navigation; the mere erection without that consequence would not be so. In The King v. Russell (6 Barn. and Cr. 566), which case, though it was disapproved of and overruled on one point, namely, the question whether a set-off, as it were, could be made of public benefit against public detriment, in considering the question of nuisance or no nuisance by such an erection, which, in fact, impeded the course of navigation; yet it has never been questioned as to the general position, that nuisance or no nuisance by such an erection is a question of fact, which the mere fact of the erection alone does not solve in favour of the existence of the nuisance. In like manner, where the soil belongs to the owners of the land on either bank ad medium filum aque, as it does in general by the English law in non-navigable rivers, where the tide does not flow, the right of either proprietor on either side of the river to his own soil, though it be the bed of a river, is not restrained, unless in so dealing with his own he interfere with the rights which are as it were of common right, to the flow and use of the water. If he do so interfere, then it is an actionable wrong. In this case, however, there is no ground for saying that any wrong was done either designedly or actually, in the erection of this road and its adjuncts: that which was done was done with the full consent of the owners of the soil adjacent; nor is there any proof of any interference with the navigation, or of any encroachment on any private right to the flow or use of the water. The whole question turns then on this, namely, the ownership of the soil immediately next to

[275] the accretion as it began. X The lessors of the Plaintiff admitted a gift of the land to the Defendants (a) by [276] them for the purpose of making the road. It was at the trial at first contended that the gift was intended to [277] be merely a gift of an easement, a dedication of a way to the public with a reservation of the right of property in this soil itself; but the witness did not state it so, and though he may have meant to give with a reservation of other rights, yet the subject of accretion was not in fact present to the minds at that time either of donor or donees, and the accretion in fact has been attributable to the acts and cost of the Defendants. This distinction between the gift of the property in the soil and the gift of a right over it is now abandoned, and it is candidly admitted that the distinction was not likely to be, and was not present to the mind of the donor. X Then the question is, what is the validity in law of this gift, and what was its extent! for if it was a good grant and left no space belonging to the donors intervening between the ground given and the then high-water mark, the [278] accretion would then be an accretion to the Defendant's own soil under the circumstances of his case. Now the donors are Hindoos; it is true the donees are the East India Company, that is, British subjects, and they are Defendants, and where the Plaintiff is a Hindoo, and the Defendant a British subject, the law to be applied to the case, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, is the law of the Defendant. By the Hindoo law there

(a) Mr. Ritchie, the counsel for the lessors of the Plaintiff, after the delivery of the above judgment, handed to the Court the following paper in explanation of the admission referred to by the Court, as having been made by him:—"My admission was not intended to extend to an admission of an actual gift of the land by the lessors of the Plaintiff to the Defendants, or to an abandonment of the distinction between the gift of the property in the soil and the gift of a right over it, as might be inferred from the passages of the judgment in question. I fully admitted on showing cause, that the distinction was not likely to be and was not present to the mind of the executors. But I contended that that circumstance did not of itself give the right in the soil to the Defendants, that the distinction would have been called to the attention of the executors if they had been required to execute an actual grant or gift, in which case they probably would not, without compensation, have parted absolutely and for all purposes with the soil, especially as they were mere executors and trustees for infants; that it was clear that the executors, although they intended to give up to the East India Company full possession of the land for the purpose of making a public road, had no intention of giving it to the Company for any other purpose; that the use of the land for any other purpose would have been wholly unauthorised by what took place between the Lottery Committee and the executors; that if within a month or other short period after the commencement of the road the Defendants had applied the land to any other purpose than that of a public road, as, for instance, by building go-downs or inclosing it, the lessors of the Plaintiff might have maintained trespass or ejectment; that the only ground on which they could now be precluded from doing so would be the adverse possession of more than twenty years of the soil over which the actual road passed; and that the legal effect of the Defendants taking possession of the land, and constructing the road without any more definite understanding than that disclosed by the executor's evidence, could not be carried further than a possession for a particular purpose by licence, which possession, it might be admitted, had become adverse by reason of the impression under which the Lottery Committee entered, viz. that the Rajahs intended to give them the land itself, for the purpose of making the road; and which possession having continued for more than twenty years, could not now be displaced by the lessors of the Plaintiff, as proprietors, even if a trespass or encroachment, of which the public could complain, had been committed by the Defendants; and I certainly did urge under another head of the argument, while contending that the rights of the Company, whatever they were, were limited to the particular portion of the ground actually used as a road, that even admitting an actual grant to the Defendants, of the land over which the road passed, that grant would carry nothing with it but the land used as a public road, and would leave the whole land between the road and river not required for the purposes of a road, but used all along by the lessors of the Plaintiff's tenants, the property of the lessors is no distinction between moveable and immoveable property as to the mode of granting it. It, therefore, resembles the case of a grant by the English law, of chattels real or personal, before the Statute of Frauds, which then might as to both have been without writing or deed. (See Shepherd's Touchstone, tit. "Grant.") The grantor, then, has capacity to grant, and the thing is grantable without deed or writing by the law of the grantor, and can pass out of him by such a grant as this; and by the English law a grantee can gain the subject of the grant by his assent to the grant. Here there has been also possession, which quodam modo the Hindoo law requires. Whether by the English law delivery, or what is equivalent to it, is essential to the validity of a gift inter vivos, must be treated as a doubtful point. Irons v. Smallpiece (2 Barn. and Ald. 551) decided that without deed, or delivery, or possession, the grant was invalid against the personal representatives of the grantor. Doubt was always entertained about that decision, and these doubts have been strengthened by the observations of a learned reporter, Serjeant Manning, and by some late judicial dicta, for the case does not appear to have been overruled. There are not wanting, however, analogies in the English law to support the decision in Irons v. [279] Smallpiece, which is certainly in harmony with the provisions of many bodies of law. But here there is possession under the gift, and, therefore, the requisitions of both laws are fulfilled, supposing Irons v. Smallpiece to be law. Therefore, it appears to us that the grant, though not in writing or by deed, was of the Plaintiff, there being, as I contended, no evidence of a grant to the Defendants, except that derived from the user, coupled with the letters of the Lottery Committee, and any grant, therefore, that could be presumed, being co-extensive with and not more extensive than the user in point of quantity: but this admission was made, or at least was intended to be made, for the sake of argument only, and without any intention to make an admission of a fact which, on another branch of the argument, I, with Mr. Welch (the junior Counsel), who was with me, contested."

In consequence of this explanation, the following note was added by the Chief Justice to the judgment:—"Mr. Ritchie, the leading Counsel for the lessors of the Plaintiff, has stated to me, and from the confidence which I repose on his word I have no doubt that he has truly stated, that in that part of the judgment which is marked between the marks X X, I have mistaken the extent of the admission which his argument involved. I have, therefore, annexed to the judgment of the Court his statement, including an argument in support of it of the extent to which he meant his admission to go.

"The Court adheres to the opinion which it expressed that the grant was of the land itself, and not merely of a right over the land, though no doubt the grantors meant the land to be used for a road. This was intended also by the grantees, and it was not altered until the arrangement took place, by which the land marked by the saul posts spoken to in the evidence was devoted to the purpose of laying the bamboos. As this was done by mutual consent, it worked no breach of condition or forfeiture. And it appears to the Court to be really immaterial whether the grant to the East India Company bore the limited character now contended for, or that which our judgment ascribes to it, because in either view of it, it equally is pregnant with evidence of assent to the road-making, and consequently the construction of the road, that is, of part of it, on the Defendants' own soil, which the evidence for the defence we think clearly establishes, involved no violation of any right of the lessors of the Plaintiff, and unless it did, or unless it could be treated as a mere erection of a river bank or mound, we think the accretion must follow the title to the land in that part.

"Our view may be explained thus:—

"A. gives to B. either the soil itself or the right for the public to pass over the soil as part of a public road between C. and D.; B. incorporates with that for the same purpose, with the assent of both, his land between D. and E.; then a portion of what would have been such public road is taken out of it for the use of A. and his tenants, but leaving on the side towards the river a small portion belonging to B.: how is B.'s title to that land got out of him by any dealing with the part so taken out, whether that dealing be viewed as founded on right, or as adverse possession?"

valid, notwithstanding the character of the Defendants. We know of no authority opposed to this view, and on principle we think that where the grantor means to grant by his own law, and can grant effectually by his own law in the way in which he makes the grant, and where the grantee can take by his law under a grant, without execution of any deed or writing whatever, that the oral gift is valid, though the law of the grantee is to regulate the matter. Every Court should labour to support rather than to defeat the acts of the parties inter se, where they involve no violation of the law. Parties may waive their own law, and act under another by mutual consent, where the law contains no prohibition to such a course of dealing. And it cannot be laid down as any part of the English law, that a British subject cannot accept a gift unless it be made him by the donor in that mode in which he himself, if donor, must grant a thing of the like nature. The gift, then, being in our opinion valid, what was the extent of the land given? We pay all proper attention to the argument, that there was no consideration for this transfer, and certainly we should not be justified in stretching it. But the contemporaneous acts of the parties afford, we think, a sufficiently clear light as to the extent of the grant. The cases cited by the Defendants' Counsel have much reason for their support, and they are undoubtedly law. The making of [280] this road was one continuous act, and the line marked out above and below this particular land, and the acts done on that line in laying down the guns which were to be the support of the lamp-posts, are all important; there is no ground for imputing encroachment, for the evidence shows enough in the propinquity of the grantors, the interest they took in the matter, and the publicity of the matter, to forbid any such supposition. Mr. Gray speaks to the foundation being made for these guns, and the object of them. The argument as to the width of the road, and the evidence also furnished by the inspection of the map, both lead to the conclusion, which is also confirmed by the evidence as to the making of the road, that the road as it was originally designed and made, really passed beyond the limits of the land, which was the subject of the gift, and that it was made partly on the given land, partly on the land adjacent.

"It is in evidence that soil was brought from a distance, and thrown down where the water ordinarily flowed; the road was a raised road, formed so as to be safe from the assaults of the river: in any proper mode of making such a road, it would be made as the evidence for the defence says that it was. Consequently we think that in reality the road, as marked out, extended beyond the given land, and that no intermediate space belonging to the Plaintiff existed, to form a nucleus for an accretion, as the lessors of the Plaintiff contend. Then the subsequent possession of the lessors of the Plaintiff as to the land covered by the bamboos is explained by the evidence. It proceeded on an arrangement made after the line was traced out, by which part of that which was taken for road, and would, if dedicated, have become so, was [281] reserved for the lessors of the Plaintiff. The public, in fact, never acquired a right to pass over the soil where the bamboos have been placed, for the arrangement and the use preceded, from the evidence, the opening and occupation by the public of the road; but this arrangement cannot be extended beyond its object, and the use is the measure of that right; the use, however, is not over ground co-extensive with the ground originally taken and marked out; so that in any way of viewing this matter, either as a regrant of the soil, or as an adverse possession by the lessors of the Plaintiff; still the soil so occupied, not reaching down to the water line, but having another boundary, cannot be the nucleus for an accretion.

"We have viewed this case, adopting the version of the lessors of the Plaintiff as to their original ownership, which the evidence in our opinion confirms. The Defendants contend, that the lessors of the Plaintiff had no land along the river line here, unless it were the old road. But that is quite inconsistent with the acts of the Lottery Committee. A particular complainant complains to them that he has been wronged by their taking part of his ground for the road; they write to the lessors of the Plaintiff to this effect:—'We considered his claim as groundless, and thought he had no title in it, and appeal to you whom we consider as the proprietors.' But would they have answered in this way on the application of a man like this Petitioner, had he put forward the impudent assertion, that he was proprietor of the old road, which now the Defendants say was all that the lessors of the Plaintiff possessed! Very probably the rights between the Talookdar and the Pottahdars were not undisputed, or at all clear; indeed the case quoted [282] seems to show as much; but if the Committee had recognised the lessors of the Plaintiff as having a bare seignory, or nothing in the character of land but the bare soil in an old road, they would hardly have expressed themselves as they did. Probably there was much land occupied along the line, and probably some under disputed title, and probably some vacant, or disputed as to its being vacant or occupied. The grant of the Company, in our opinion, confers a title, in express terms, to all lands within the limits of the Talook, which were in the nature of waste or unoccupied lands, over which no rights existed in any persons occupying or claiming by title derived from or superior to the preceding Talookdars, that is, the grantors. This is, at all events, good against them, and it would be vain to attempt to struggle against the words of such a grant by arguments founded on the original or present character of Zemindarry or Talookdarry rights, even if well founded. The deed of grant and the acts of the grantors, the East India Company, show that they treated the Talookdar, their grantee, as having some rights in the soil; and neither a Talookdarry or Zemindarry right has anything in its nature repugnant to such a supposition. Rule absolute, and verdict entered for Defendants."

The present appeal was from this judgment.

Sir Frederick Thesiger, Q.C., Mr. Bovill, Q.C., and Mr. Paterson, for the Appellants.—The accretion in question pertained to land which was, at the time the accretion began, the property of those under whom the Appellants claim. It was an imperceptible accretion, and, therefore, belonged to them as proprietors of the adjoining soil. This is so [283] by the Hindoo law, Mussamat Iman Bandi v. Hurgovind Doss (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 403), as well as by the law of England. The King v. Lord Yarborough (3 Barn. and Cr. 91. S.C. nom. "Gifford v. Lord Yarborough," 5 Bing. 163), Woolrych "On Waters," p. 26. Before the new land was gained by accretion, the lessors of the Plaintiff, the Appellants, had a right to the soil of the land along the river Hooghly, a navigable river, and that included the river bank. No evidence has been given to show that such right had ever been taken out of them. It was necessary for the Respondents, in order to displace the Appellants' right, to have shown either a valid grant of the soil of such land, or an adverse possession thereof for twenty years and upwards, which they failed to do. The verdict was the result of a misapprehension of the Court as to the admission by Counsel of the grant (see ante [6 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 275). There was only a consent to the taking and using the land for a road, and a dedication of it to the public for that purpose, and the acts of ownership done by the Respondents and relied upon by them as acts of ownership, were done only with the consent of the lessors of the Plaintiff, and were not adverse to their title to the soil of such land. The verbal grant to the Respondents, even supposing that the grantors intended to convey to them an interest in the soil, is invalid by reason of its not being a conveyance by deed or writing, or founded on any consideration to pass the proprietary right in lands situate in Calcutta to the Respondents, a British corporation; the law of England being the law applicable to the case. It is true that by the Hindoo law [284] land is considered as a chattel, there being no difference in that law between real and personal estate, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 17; yet, by the English law, a verbal gift of a chattel without actual delivery does not pass the property to the donee, Irons v. Smallpiece (2 Barn. and Ald. 551). Assuming it to be a valid gift, it was only a grant of land for making a public road, and would carry nothing with it but land actually used as a public road, and would leave the whole of the land not so used the property of the lessors of the Plaintiff.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., Mr. Forsyth, and Mr. Melvill, for the East India Company, Respondents.—The chief and only question really is, to whom the ownership of the bank and soil immediately adjacent to the land which has been gained by accretion, belongs. The East India Company, as representing the Indian Government, are owners of the freehold of the bed of the river Hooghly, subject to such rights as the public have to the use of a navigable river. They are also owners of the land under the grant of 1824, adjoining to the land in question, and, the accretion being imperceptible, the land so acquired would belong to the Respondents as owners of the adjoining soil. Ben. Reg. XI. of 1825, sec. 4; Hale "de Jure Maris," pp. 5, 142, who refers to Bracton, lib. 11, cap. ii.; Woolrych "On waters," p. 26, The Institutes, lib. ii., tit. 1. In fact, the ground, which was part of the bed of the river Hooghly, was formed by the acts and works of the Respondents. The onus of proof lay upon the lessors of the Plaintiff, who having failed to prove a title, the verdict ought not, upon a question of fact, to be disturbed.

[285] Sir Frederick Thesiger replied.

The Right Hon. Sir William W. Maule.—This is a case apparently of considerable intricacy, and has the appearance of raising some questions of difficulty, both in point of law and of fact. But ultimately, upon being closely looked into, and the documentary and parol evidence being considered, particularly with reference to the judgment of the Court below, the question appears to their Lordships to turn upon a matter of fact which was the subject of inquiry in the Court below, and of the most unhesitating decision of that Court.

The land claimed has become land by way of gradual accretion. A question of law was raised, whether, supposing the accretion (granting it to be gradual) was one which had been contributed to, or even purposely contributed to, by the act of the Defendants, that would not take the matter out of the ordinary law with respect to the accretion. The Court below thought, and we think rightly, that that made no difference. If there were a gradual accretion, which was not denied, it was one which would be dependent upon ordinary law.

The question, then, comes to this: assuming it to be such an accretion as that it belong to the proprietor to whom the adjacent land belongs, who was the person to whom the adjacent land belonged in this instance? Now, with respect to that point, the Court below in their judgment have given a clear opinion, particularly taking into consideration the explanatory part of the judgment: for some doubt having been raised, or some difficulty expressed by the Counsel for the lessors of the Plaintiff as to some [286] concession, or supposed concession, in his argument, being misapprehended, an explanation is given by the Court with respect to that circumstance, and the Court takes that opportunity, apparently, of describing explicitly, and so as to be unmistakable, the ground upon which their judgment actually depends, showing, that any misapprehension which there might be, of such concession, did not make any difference in their judgment; for even granting the Court had misapprehended this supposed concession, their conclusion ought to have been the same, and that for two reasons: the first, that notwithstanding Counsel retracted, or explained, the concession which the Court supposed he had made, the Court would have come to the same conclusion whether that concession was made or not, because they themselves would infer from the evidence, that there was a grant on the part of the Rajahs of the land to the East India Company, that is to say, about the year 1824 a grant of the land which is the subject of the transaction between the Rajahs and the East India Company. The Court came to the conclusion that if such a grant or Hindoo transfer of the land had taken place, it would make no difference in their judgment, upon the supposition that the land to which the accretion took place was land that never was the land of the Rajahs, but was the land always of the Defendants, the East India Company; and they say, the evidence shows that the new road and the new embankment, which was made about the beginning of the year 1824, by the East India Company, was made extending westward beyond the western boundary of the old road, and beyond the high-water mark. They say the evidence, combined partly with measurements and [287] partly with the statements of the witnesses, shows that the new work, that is, the upper surface of it, including that part which is used as a traffic road, and that which was constructed in continuity of the traffic road, and which now is used for bamboo golahs, the whole of that land was shown by the evidence to extend considerably to the westward of high-water mark. The perpendicular retaining wall was itself built upon land between high and low water mark, that is, upon the East India Company's land, a portion, therefore, as to the rest, which may properly be called a wall (because a wall made against a river on the sea very commonly nas, and ought to have, on the side which is next the water, a slope more or less gradual), would still more be upon the East India Company's land.

Then the Court discusses the question, whether the East India Company, who must be taken to be the owners of the soil, could properly do this; the answer is, that they might properly do it except so far as they might interfere with the navigation of the river (which no one seems to have suggested), and except so far as they might interfere with the rights of parties adjoining the river. Now it appears that they dealt with some private persons and paid them for their land; as far as the Rajahs had any interest in respect of their being the owners or lords of the Talook of Sootalootee, they obtained their consent probably because their property would be improved by the new works. That is the way in which the Court explains the East India Company's doing this, and shows that they did it rightfully; and that being so, the case then is, that the East India Company, being the owners in fee of a certain portion of land between the high and low water [288] mark which was subject to certain curvatures for navigation and otherwise, with the leave and consent of those who were interested, altered the character of the land. Instead of making the land a portion of the bed of the river, they made it permanent dry land: there is, therefore, a portion of permanent dry land westward of high-water mark, and forming a part of what was anciently the bed of the river, which is now part of the bed of the river, and that portion of land, according to the judgment of the Court below, which we think is well supported by the evidence, is the part to which the accretion in question has taken place.

The question, therefore, is reduced to this: who is the owner of the land immediately contiguous to the high-water mark in the river at this place? The answer is, those persons who were owners of that portion of the bed of the river which now constitutes dry land, and they are the Respondents, the East India Company.

We think, therefore, it is clear enough that the Court below came to a right conclusion upon that matter of fact: at any rate Sir Frederick Thesiger could hardly in his reply carry the case so far as to say, that it was clear the other way. When we find that a Court having jurisdiction to try matters of fact have determined a matter of fact in a certain way, particularly a matter of fact of a local description, and to which their local knowledge might very much assist them, we should not be disposed to reverse the decision of the Court in determining that fact because we do not quite see our way to the same conclusion. Taking the evidence as it stands, illustrated as it is by the argument of the learned Chief [289] Justice in the judgment, and more particularly by the explanation which was elicited by Mr. Ritchie the Counsel, and by the argument before us, their Lordships have no doubt that it is their duty to advise Her Majesty that the judgment in this case should be affirmed, and with costs.

BAMUNDOSS MOOKERJEA,—Appellant; OMEISH CHUNDER RAEE and Others,—Respondents * [Feb. 11 and 12, 1856].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

Upon the adjustment of an account of the principle and interest due upon a Bond, a Kararnamah or deed of agreement, was entered into by the parties, in which, besides the original sum, a further sum for interest accrued thereon was declared due and agreed to be paid off by instalments before a given time. Payments were made at irregular periods, which payments the Bondholder claimed to appropriate to keeping down the interest upon the whole sum composed of both the original principal sum as well as the sum mentioned in the Kararnamah as accrued thereon for interest. Held, upon the construction of the instrument, that the principal sum alone carried interest, and that all payments made in pursuance of the stipulations were to be applied in the first instance to satisfy such interest, the excess of the payments only being appropriated towards the liquidation of the principal sum due.

Costs awarded a successful Appellant, upon appeal and in all the proceedings in India from the commencement of the suit. The costs incurred in India to be recovered there.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, dated the 23rd September, 1850, made on an appeal from a decree of the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Zillah Court of Nuddeah, in a suit in which the Appellant was Plaintiff and the Respondents were Defendants. The suit was founded upon a written agreement called a Karar-[290]-namah, made in July, 1833, between the Appellant and the Respondent, Omeish Chunder Rae, by which he, on his own account, and as guardian of the other Respondents, bound himself to pay to the Appellant, in the manner and at the times therein mentioned and provided, the sum of Rs. 34,628. 8a., together with interest. The Appellant claimed in the suit the sum of Rs. 35,703. 4a. 10g. as the amount of the balance of the principal and interest then remaining due and unpaid, after crediting in account certain payments made at various unequal and irregular periods by the Respondents, or on their account, to the Appellant, after the making, but not in accordance with the terms and conditions of the agreement, and without any directions having been given by the Respondents as to the application thereof respectively.

There was no dispute between the Appellant and Respondents as to the fact of the making and execution of the agreement, or as to the sum of Rs. 34,628 being the actual amount due at the time of the making thereof, or as to the amount of the several payments subsequently made on account by the Respondents. The only question was upon the construction of the Kararnamah, after-mentioned, and whether the principle insisted on by the Appellant of appropriating and applying the payments towards the liquidation of the principal monies and interest due upon this instrument was right and proper.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

Anund Chunder Rae, the father of the Respondents, a Hindoo inhabitant of Bengal, borrowed from the Appellants on the 20th Bysack 1237, B.E., the sum of Rs. 30,000, and executed a deed mortgaging part of his immoveable estate and property to the Appellant to secure the repayment of that sum, together with interest [291]—rest thereon at the rate of R. 1 per cent per mensem. He died without having repaid that sum, and indebted to the Appellant not only in the amount of principal money, but also in a further sum on account of arrears of interest accrued due thereon, leaving the Respondents his sons and co-heirs and Lukhee Dibah, his widow, since deceased.

The amount of principal and interest at that time due was, by agreement between the parties, calculated up to the 30th Assar 1240, B.E., (July 1833,) and the aggregate amount was ascertained and admitted by the Respondents to be, Rs. 34,628. 8a. On the same day the Respondent, Omeish Chunder Rae, for himself and as the manager of the joint family, and guardian of his brother, Purnoo Chunder Rae, and Bhogoban Chunder Rae, the other Respondents, who were then minors, and Lukhee Dibbah, in order to release the estate and property, voluntarily entered into and duly executed the Kararnamah, or agreement, upon which the suit was brought, which was as follows:—

“I, Omeish Chunder Rae, my father, and I, Lukhee Dibbah, my husband, Anund Chunder Rae, deceased, on the 20th Bysack 1237, pledged to you his 5 annas 6 gundahs 2 cowrees 2 krants share of Talook Turf Marm Jowanee, and executing a mortgage bond, borrowed the sum of Rs. 30,000, agreeing to pay interest thereupon at the rate of R. 1 per cent. per mensem, and having appointed us as guardians and managers of his minor sons Bhogoban Chunder Raee and Purnoo Chunder Raee, died on the 10th Bysack 1239.

"We are unable at present to pay at once the money due under the Bond, with interest, and by redeeming the Bond release our property, and are also unable to pay interest at the rate of R. 1. You [292] have, therefore, remitted 4 annas per cent. per mensem of the interest of the money, and have agreed to take interest after the rate of 12 annas per cent. On making up the accounts, therefore, of what is due, by calculation of interest upon the above-mentioned sum of the Bond from the date of the Bond up to the 29th Poos 1237 at the rate of R. 1 per cent. per mensem, and from the 1st Maugh of the above year up to this date at the rate of 12 annas per cent. per mensem, after adjustment of the accounts, including interest, there appears to be due, together with interest, after deducting payments, that principal sum of Rs. 30,000 and Rs. 4,628. 8a. as interest, total Rs. 34,628. 8a. principal and interest, for which this Kararnamah is executed: that we will pay out of the said sum the sum of Rs. 4,628. 8a. due as interest on the 25th Maugh 1240, and from 1241 to 1250 within these ten years we will liquidate of that principal, Rs. 3000 per annum, and interest on whatever amount of principal remaining in balance each year at the rate of 12 annas per cent. per mensem, and having paid up the principal and interest we will redeem that Bond and this Kararnamah. Having concluded an arrangement on these conditions, we have of our own free will executed this Kararnamah. Whatever sum we shall pay at any time, it will be credited on the back of this Kararnamah. If we make any claim of payments other than those specified on the back of the Kararnamah, it will be inadmissible. The original Bond, signed by the late Anund Chunder Raee, remains in your hands. After having paid up the money we will take back that Bond. Upon these stipulations we have executed this Kararnamah."

After the making of this agreement the Respondents made several payments, on account of the Ap-[293]-pellant's claim, and which were respectively endorsed on the back of the Kararnamah, or agreement; but the Respondents did not pay the Rs. 4628, the amount of the arrears of the old interest, on the 25th Maugh 1240, B.E., nor did they pay the instalments of the Rs. 30,000 at the times and in the manner provided by the agreement; and on the expiration of the period of ten years mentioned therein there was due and owing to the Appellant a large balance. The Respondents disputed the Appellant's mode of calculating the balance as well as the amount thereof, and thereupon the Appellant brought this suit in the Zillah Court of Nuddeah against Omeish Chunder Raee himself, and as the guardian of Purnoo Chunder Raee and Bhogoban Chunder Raee, the other Respondents.

The plaint set forth the facts above stated, and made out the Appellant's claim to the balance in the following manner:—First, he claimed the original principal sum of Rs. 30,000, lent to the father of the Respondents, and agreed to be paid by the Respondents as aforesaid. Secondly, the Rs. 4628, the amount of the old interest admitted to be due at the time of the making of the agreement with the Respondents. Thirdly, interest on the principal sum of Rs. 30,000 at 12 annas per cent. per mensem up to the end of the ten years mentioned in the agreement, and from the expiration of that period, further interest on this principal sum after the original rate of R. 1 per cent. per mensem. And fourthly, interest on the Rs. 4628, being the amount of old interest due at the time of the making of the agreement, at the rate of R. 1 per cent. per mensem from the 26th Maugh 1240, B.E., up to the 27th Maugh 1241, at which date the last-mentioned sum of Rs. 4628, the amount of the old inte-[294]-rest, was cleared off. The Appellant, in his plaint, allowed against these sums the payments made on account, appropriating and applying those payments in the first instance in keeping down the interest from time to time as it accrued due.

The Respondent, Omeish Chunder Raee, by his answer, stated that he owed the Appellant the sum of Rs. 13,953. 14a. 15g. only, under the agreement sued on; he alleged that the Appellant was bound to apply the amount paid in each of the ten years, after the first of these years, to the reduction of such balance of the principal sum of Rs. 30,000 as remained due in each year, and that he was entitled to charge interest on such balance only after such deductions; that taking the accounts in this way, the amount of the principal sum of Rs. 30,000 would appear to have been overpaid by the sum of Rs. 1202 at the end of the ten years; that this last-mentioned sum of Rs. 1202, and the amount paid in 1240, B.E., the first of the ten years, ought to be applied towards the reduction of the Rs. 4268 acknowledged to be due for interest at the time of the agreement; and that this Respondent was not bound to pay any interest except on the amounts of the balances and principal remaining due taking the accounts in the above-mentioned manner. Afterwards, by a supplemental answer, this Respondent set up that there had been a mistake in his answer in allowing interest on the balances of the principal debt of Rs. 30,000 remaining due in each year, and alleged for the first time that he was not bound to do more than pay interest on the instalments of Rs. 3000, made payable in each year by the agreement.

The cause came on for hearing before the Principal [295] Sudder Ameen of the Civil Court of Zillah Nuddeah, and judgment was delivered by him on the 5th of February, 1846, as follows: "It becomes necessary to take into consideration the following points:—1st. Has the Plaintiff any right to get interest on the sum of Rs. 4628. 8a. entered in the bond as interest? 2nd. Can he get interest upon the principal, Rs. 30,000, after the 30th Assar 1240, up to the end of that year? 3rd. Has the Plaintiff any power to deduct from the sums paid up by the Defendant from the year 1241 the interest upon the entire principal from year to year? 4th. Is the claim which the Plaintiff has set up to charge interest at a higher rate than that mentioned in the Bond, after the expiration of the period of the Bond, just or not? 5th. Is the objection urged by the Defendant in his supplemental answer of the 1st December last, that the sum of Rs. 3000 ought in each year to be considered as the principal, and the Plaintiff should only get interest upon the balance of that, after deducting from it such sums as had been paid by Defendant, and not upon the balance of the entire sum, admissible or not?"

"First. In my opinion the Plaintiff cannot get interest upon the sum of Rs. 4628. 8a. entered in the Bond as interest; for the parties have not entered into a distinct Bond with regard to that sum, and it has not been consolidated with the principal, but has been entered in the Kararnamah as money due on the score of interest. The claim for the interest of that sum, therefore, cannot be maintained under sec. 7, Reg. XV., 1793.

"Secondly. I can see no objection against giving the Plaintiff interest upon the principal after the month of Assar 1240, for the remainder of that year; [296] for in the agreement which has been entered into between the parties with respect to this debt, there is a condition to the effect that interest would be paid on this principal, Rs. 30,000, at the rate of 12 annas per cent., and a computation having been made upon this sum up to 30th Assar 1240, the interest has been specified in the Kararnamah. Nor does there exist any condition in the deed to the effect that Plaintiff would not get interest upon the principal from the month of Assar. The agreement contained in the Bond, that both principal and interest should be paid from 1241 to 1250, can mean nothing more than to fix a rule for paying up the principal and interest, and does not destroy the right of the Plaintiff to get interest for the year 1240.

"Thirdly. The Plaintiff, in support of his claim to deduct in the first place his interest from the payments made by the Defendant, has filed a copy of a decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, decided by Messrs. Courtney, Smith, and Sealy on the 5th September, 1827, in the case of "Goverdhan Dax v. Waris Ally." (4 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 261.) From that it appears, that when there is a stipulation for interest, the Mahajan (money-lender) can in the first place deduct his interest from the payments made by the debtor; consequently, since it has been considered proper that the Plaintiff should be allowed the interest prayed in his plaint, there is no reason why it should be deemed unjust to permit him, according to the above decision, to deduct in the first place his interest from the money paid; especially as in the deed there is an explicit agreement that interest should be paid on the balance remaining due in each year at the rate of 12 annas per cent.

[297] "Fourthly. The Plaintiff, alleging that the period of the Kararnamah, the foundation of his claim, had expired, sues for interest at a rate higher than that fixed in it. This claim is contrary to sec. 5, Reg. XV., 1793; and moreover the Bond contains no condition that after the expiration of the fixed period a higher rate of interest will be charged. The Plaintiff is, therefore, not entitled to be allowed interest at a higher rate than the rate stated in the bond.

"Fifthly. It has been urged on behalf of the Defendant, in the supplementary answer, that as the principal, Rs. 30,000, had been agreed to be paid up in the course of ten years, the Rs. 3000 per annum should be reckoned as the principal, and interest accordingly charged only upon the balance of that remaining due in each year. This objection of the principal Defendant is not tenable on various grounds. First, This objection has been repeatedly urged by him, accompanied by a discussion, both in his answer and in his rejoinder, and it cannot therefore be supposed that there should be any mistake with regard to it. Secondly. On reviewing the whole contents of the Bond, it evidently seems to have been written with two motives: (first), because the Defendants could not pay the whole sum of Rs. 30,000 at once; (second), because they were unable to pay interest at the rate of 1 R. per cent.: and it does not appear from any part of the Bond that the Plaintiff relinquished the interest of the Rs. 30,000, and agreed to take only the interest of the Rs. 3000; on the contrary, it is clearly written in the Bond that the principal will be paid up in the course of ten years, at the rate of Rs. 3000 per year, and that whatever part of the principal remains due for each year, interest will be [298] paid on that at the rate of 12 annas per cent. per mensem, and the principal and interest thus liquidated; thus the word "usl" (principal) cannot be regarded as denoting anything besides the entire sum of Rs. 30,000, and not the annual sum of Rs. 3000. The objection in the supplementary answer of Defendant is merely an excuse.

"On making up a separate account on this footing, namely, that the sum of Rs. 4628. 8a. mentioned in the Bond, which was agreed to be paid on the 25th Maugh 1240, be deducted from the sums paid up by the Defendants as receipted on the back, and that the sums received by the Plaintiff from 1241 to 1250, amounting to Rs. 28,876. 8a., be carried to the account of the interest of the principal, Rs. 30,000, due to Plaintiff; and of the principal there falls due to the Plaintiff, up to the date of plaint, a principal sum of Rs. 25,997. 12a., and interest, Rs. 5134; total, Rs. 31,131. 12a. The claim of the Plaintiff to all sums in excess of this is inadmissible.

"As the above sum and interest on the balance of principal from the date of plaint up to this day, at the rate of 12 annas per cent. (or Rs. 2742. 11a.) total Rs. 33,874. 7a., are considered proper to be awarded to the Plaintiff; it is ordered, That this suit be decreed in favour of the Plaintiff, who will recover from the Defendants, out of the amount claimed by him, Rs. 33,874. 7a., and interest thereon, according to practice, from to-morrow's date up to the date of realisation, also costs in proportion to the sum of Rs. 31,131. 12a., with interest thereon from to-day to the date of payment. The Defendants will pay their own costs in proportion to the same amount, but their costs upon the excess amount [299] will be paid by Plaintiff, and the Plaintiff will be answerable for his own costs in proportion to the excess amount."

The Respondents appealed from this decision to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

The case was referred, by Mr. A. Dick, before whom the appeal came in the first instance, to the full Bench of the Court, consisting of Messrs. A. Dick, W. B. Jackson, and J. A. F. Hawkins, who, on the 11th of August, 1847, gave the following judgment on the appeal:—"The Court, on a full consideration of the conditions of the Bond, and the conduct of the parties throughout, find that on the part of Appellants (the present Respondents) the conditions have not been kept; and, again, the Respondent (the present Appellant) received the several payments made to him, and endorsed them on a Bond, without specifying whether those sums were on account of principal or interest, and moreover that the Bond has not a word about the interest payable annually. The debt, however, has been clearly admitted, as also the several payments. The Court, therefore, deem it proper and equitable to adjudge to Plaintiff (the present Appellant) the sum of Rs. 4628. 8a., payable by agreement on the 25th Maugh 1240, B.E., with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, to the date of the institution of suit, provided it exceed not the principal; and the principal sum of Rs. 30,000, with interest at 9 per cent. per annum from the date of the Bond till date of institution of suit, after deducting the several payments endorsed on the Bond, with interest on them at 9 per cent. per annum from their respective dates as endorsed till institution of suit, and 12 per cent. per annum on the balance of this latter account [300] from the date of institution of suit to the date of the decree of the Court, and with interest at 12 per cent. on the consolidated sum due on the latter date until day of payment, with costs in proportion."

An application was then made for, and a review of, the judgment admitted, on the ground that the decision was contrary to the true construction of the Karar-namah, and the case was reheard on the 30th May, 1850, before a full Bench of the Judges of the Sudder Court, consisting of Mr. A. Dick, Sir R. Barlow, Mr. W. Jackson, Mr. J. R. Colvin, and Mr. J. Dunbar.

The joint judgment of Sir R. Barlow and Mr. J. R. Colvin upon the rehearing was as follows:—"We think that this suit must be disposed of under its own specialities, and the terms of the particular agreement in the case. We differ from the former decision, both because we think, in opposition to what is therein set forth, that the Bond or agreement, clearly intended that there should be a calculation, and a demand of interest payable at the close of each year, and because the adjustment which the decision directs is not founded upon any endeavour to interpret and apply the conditions of the agreement, but upon a principle of adjustment assumed by the Court, merely on its own view of what would be fair between the parties. The meaning and intention of the agreement, by which exclusively we must be guided, do not to us appear open to material doubt.

"One point seems to us certainly established in the proceedings, namely, that an annual adjustment was agreed to. This is apparent from the figured statement in the answer of the Defendant, in which the calculation of balance in one year being adjusted, [301] is carried on with interest to the next, and the next successively.

"As to the other conditions of the agreement, we consider that it was stipulated that in each year from 1241 to 1250, B.E., payments to the extent of Rs. 3000 should first be carried to the credit of the principal debt, then, upon a balance of principal being struck at the close of each year, an immediate claim of interest at 9 per cent. per annum was to arise from that date upon such balance. If at the close of any year more than the aggregate of instalments payable up to that date at the rate of Rs. 3000 per annum should have been paid to the Plaintiff, then (there being no special condition, except as to the particular annual payment of Rs. 3000 on account of principal), we consider that the Plaintiff was entitled upon general principles to carry such excess to credit, at his discretion, in reduction of any arrear of interest, instead of in further reduction of the principal. There appears to have been an excess of this kind in the fourth and seventh years of the term, and these sums we would accordingly allow to be deducted from the total of the interest then over due. Adopting this as the governing principle in the construction of the agreement, we would dispose of the other minor points arising on the details of the claim as follows:—

"Interest at the usual rate of 12 per cent. per annum should be calculated on the sum of Rs. 4628. 8a., the balance of the old interest, acknowledged as new principal debt by the present agreement, from its due date up to the dates at which that amount was made good to the Plaintiff. If, in addition to the above sum of Rs. 4628. 8a., and [302] the interest so due on it, any sum were paid, as seems to have been the case to the extent of a few hundred rupees before the close of 1241, B.E., at which the first instalment of Rs. 3000 became due on the main principal debt of Rs. 30,000, such excess sum being paid before any claim of interest could arise by the agreement on the Rs. 30,000, should be credited in diminution of that principal debt. After the expiration of the stipulated term of ten years, the claim of interest, at the usual rate of 12 per cent. per annum, on the balance of principal then remaining unpaid, must be considered as revived, and the calculation must be made accordingly on that amount from the expiry of the term."

The other Judges, Mr. Jackson and Mr. Dunbar, concurred in this judgment, so far as it related to the interest upon the Rs. 4628. 8a., but differed upon the other points. Mr. A. Dick abided by the original judgment of the full Court; and there being, therefore, no decision for want of a concurring majority, the case was referred to the Agra Court, and the Judges of that Court, Messrs. Deane and Begbie, having concurred in opinion with Sir R. Barlow and Mr. Colvin, final judgment was given by the Sudder Dewanny Court at Calcutta, on the 23rd of September, 1850, in the following terms:—"It is ordered, that in conformity with the opinion of the majority of the Judges, namely, Sir R. Barlow and Mr. Colvin, Judges of the Calcutta Court, and Messrs. Deane and Begbie, Judges of the Agra Court, the decision of the lower Court be modified in the manner set forth in the opinions recorded by Sir R. Barlow and Mr. Colvin, given above. Costs of Court to be charged to Defendants in pro [303] portion to the amount decreed; that is, the Appellants are to pay the costs of this Court upon the amount decreed, as per account prepared by the accountant, with interest from this day to the date of payment. If Respondent has not yet recovered costs of the lower Court, he must present a petition for the recovery of the same in the said Court, when an order will be passed for payment to him, in conformity with the Circular Order, dated the 4th March, 1836."

The Appellant appealed to the Queen in Council, and submitted that the final decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Calcutta, and also the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Court of Zillah Nuddeah reducing the amount of the Appellant's claim as before-mentioned, were respectively erroneous, and ought to be set aside, for the following reasons:—

First. Because the Appellant was entitled to apply in the first instance the payments made by the Respondents towards the keeping down of the interest accruing due, from time to time, as aforesaid.

Second. Because there was nothing in the agreement binding the Appellant in any way to apply in each of the ten years, from 1241, B. E. to 1250, B. E. such payments as were made as aforesaid to the extent of Rs. 3000, to the credit of the principal money.

Third. Because, according to the true construction of the agreement, the Appellant was entitled to interest on the principal sum of Rs. 30,000 after the month of Assar 1240, B. E. up to the end of that year (nine months), the Appellant not having agreed in [304] any way to remit the interest for that period; and that the disallowance of this interest was inconsistent with the first decision of the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, a decision which, in this particular, had not been complained of by the Respondents.

Fourth. Because the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in holding that the Appellant was bound to apply in each of the ten years after the making of the agreement, payments to the extent of Rs. 3000, to the credit of the principal debt, and that he was only entitled to apply any excess over such payments towards the reduction of interest, did not act consistently upon this rule, for they omitted to credit the interest payments in excess of Rs. 3000, made in the years 1243, B. E. and 1250, B. E.

The Respondents, on the other hand, submitted that the above judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Court ought to be affirmed, though if any alterations were to be made in the judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Court, in respect to which the same was favourable to the Respondents, they submitted that the whole effect of the Order made on the judgment ought to be reconsidered, and such Order made as should be just; because the decision of the Sudder Dewanny Court on the material point in question was consonant with the terms of the agreement under which the payments were made, and with the rules of law applicable to the case.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., Mr. Leith, and Mr. Maude, for the Appellant, relied on the reasoning and conclusion of the Zillah Court, as containing the true construction of [305] the Kararnamah. They insisted that the payments admitted to have been made, from time to time, by the Respondents were to be taken as payments on account of interest only, and were not entitled to be applied in any degree towards the liquidation of the principal. They relied on the case of Goverdhun Das v. Waris Ally (4 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 261), in which it was held that interest exceeding the principal debt might be awarded when the excess had accrued subsequent to recourse being had to law for recovery of the debt. They cited also Gholam Ahmud Khan v. Munohur Das (1 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 294), Rajah Bommarauze Bahadur v. Rangasamy Mudaly (ante [6 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 232), Act, No. 32 of 1839, and Ben. Reg. XV. of 1793, secs. 5, 6, and 7, regarding interest on loans.

Mr. Field, for the Respondents, contended that the suit not being upon the original

Bond, but upon the Kararnamah subsequently executed, the question was not as to the form of the contract, but the true meaning of the parties as disclosed in the agreement. He maintained that the final decree of the Sudder Court was consistent with the law and equity of the case. Upon the doctrine of appropriation he cited and commented upon Devaynes v. Noble (1 Merr. 604), Simson v. Ingham (2 Barn. and Cr. 65), Dig. lib. 46, tit. 3, qu. 1, 3.

The Right Hon. Sir William H. Maule.—Their Lordships during the argument in this case [306] intimated their opinion on the main question, namely, whether the payments made should be ascribed exclusively to principal, and no part of them to interest: expressing their opinion that the course adopted was the ordinary one, and that the construction of this instrument is one which does not point out any other, namely, that the payments should be applied in the first instance to interest, and to principal only so far as those payments exceed the interest due.

That is the main point in question, and their Lordships entertain no doubt at all about it.

With respect to the subordinate points, the first question made was, from what time interest is to be calculated? Now it appears, upon the terms of the Kararnamah, the instrument in question, that interest is to be calculated on the Rs. 30,000 from the time therein mentioned. There seems no reason why the sum which is lent at interest, and which continued at interest, with no difference except the modification of taking away one-fourth of the interest, and reducing the R 1 per mensem to 12 annas per cent. per mensem, should be exempt from paying interest at one rate or another during the whole time that it remains unpaid, and that time will be taken from the time up to which the interest is calculated. Now, the interest is calculated up to the 30th of the month Assar, in the Hindoo year 1240. From that time the sum of Rs. 30,000, or so much as remained from time to time unpaid, is, in their Lordships' opinion, to carry interest at the rate agreed upon in this instrument, namely, at the reduced rate of nine per cent. per annum.

[307] Then, secondly, as to the sum of Rs. 4628, which is described as the result of the calculations of interest up to the 30th of Assar, and stipulated to be paid as such on the 25th Maugh; with respect to that it is carefully distinguished in the instrument from the Rs. 30,000, which are called principal. It is evident that the parties intended that the sum of Rs. 4628, which is made up of interest, should retain that character. There is an express stipulation that on the principal sum of Rs. 30,000, interest shall be paid at the rate of 12 annas per cent. per mensem, that is, at the rate of nine per cent. per annum; there is no such stipulation with respect to the Rs. 4628, which seems to their Lordships to evince a clear intention by the parties that this sum should not carry interest. What would be the effect if there were a clear calculation of interest, and a stipulation or covenant to pay it without any other part of the instrument affording an explanation of those legal expressions, it is not necessary to say, for it seems very clear, that the express and precise provisions with respect to the sum, called principal, namely, Rs. 30,000, which is to carry interest, excludes any idea of the sum of Rs. 4628, which is interest, also being intended to carry interest. With respect to that, it seems that the parties themselves intended that if the creditor thought fit to exact this sum on the principal day, the 25th Maugh 1240, he might do so; but if he did not, he could not lie by and charge interest upon it. Therefore, this sum, in the opinion of their Lordships, does not carry interest. I may observe, also, with respect to interest on the Rs. 4628, supposing that there was a discretion to grant it or not, which there is [308] some question about, upon the terms of the Regulation, their Lordships are of opinion they would probably exercise their discretion in refusing to grant interest upon that sum.

Another question is raised on the Regulation XV. of 1793, whether, after the expiration of the tenth year, the interest should be twelve per cent. or nine per cent. It is said the Regulation of 1793 applies so as to exclude that question, because the interest for the ten years would be at the rate of one hundred and eight per cent., and that Regulation hinders persons from recovering arrears of interest of more than one hundred per cent. But that applies only to arrears which have not been any part of them paid. That is not so here.

Now, it appears to their Lordships upon this agreement very clear, that after the expiration of ten years the interest is not to recur to the old rate of twelve per cent., but to be reduced to the new rate of nine per cent. under the stipulation by which alone the Defendants were made personally liable.

Then, with respect to the amount of costs, it appears here that the Plaintiff is entitled to succeed in the substance of his demand, and that being the case, there is nothing in the Regulations in force in India any more than in this country to hinder the Plaintiff from recovering his costs. Their Lordships are of opinion, that the Appellant ought to have judgment to recover his debt and to recover his costs.

Their Lordships will, therefore, advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the Sudder Court, [309] and to restore the judgment and order of the Zillah Court, with costs here, and liberty to the Appellant to recover his costs in India.

NAGALUTCHMEE UMMAL.—Appellant: GOPOO NADARAJA CHETTY and Others,—Respondents * [Feb. 4, 5, 6, and 7, 1856].

On Appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras.

A Will by a Hindoo, without male issue, kinsman or coparcener, after providing for the maintenance of his widow, daughters, and female relations, devised ancestral as well as other real and personal estate to trustees upon certain charitable trusts; was impeached by reason, first, that the Testator had authorised his widow, in an event which happened, to adopt a son, which act would have rendered him incompetent to exercise a testamentary power; secondly, that at the time of the execution of the Will the Testator was not of sufficient mental capacity to make a testamentary disposition; and thirdly, that the Testator being a Hindoo had no power by law of devising ancestral estate by Will.

Upon appeal held, affirming the decree of the Sudder Court in India,—

First, that although, in the absence of male issue of the deceased, there was a strong presumption, arising from religious considerations, in favour of a delegation by the deceased to his widow, of authority to adopt a son for him, yet that the evidence entirely failed to prove that fact;

Secondly, that the evidence established his mental capacity at the time of executing the Will; and

Thirdly, that by the Hindoo law prevailing in Madras, a Hindoo in possession, without issue male, kinsman, or coparcener, had power to make a Will disposing of ancestral as well as acquired estate.

After an appeal had been asserted from a decree of the Sudder Court at Madras, the Appellant applied to that Court, under Sec. 4 of Reg. VIII. of 1818, and the Circular Order of 21st September, 1826, for an order calling upon the Respondents, who had been in possession of the estates in dispute before the institution of the suit, to give security as prescribed by the Regulation. The Sudder Court refused the application as not being within the provisions of the Regulation. Upon petition the Judicial Committee declined to interfere, as there was no allegation of waste by the Respondents in the petition.

Quære. Whether there is any jurisdiction in the Judicial Committee under Sec. 4 of Mad. Reg. VIII. of 1818, to call for security from the Respondent when put in possession.

The principal question in this suit was, whether the Appellant's deceased husband, Appacooty Jyen, a Hindoo native of Madras, who was without male [310] issue, kinsman or coparcener, was competent, by the Hindoo law in force in Madras, to make a Will disposing of ancestral property. Two other questions also arose, first, whether the Testator was of mental capacity at the time of executing the Will in question, and, next, if he had authorised his widow to adopt a son for him in the event of the child, of which his wife was then pregnant, not being a male child.

The facts of the case which gave rise to these questions were these:—

Appacooty Jyen, the deceased husband of the Appellant, of Govindacoody in the presidency of Madras, was the adopted son of Rajappier, otherwise called Venekataswami Jyen, and was the owner of considerable property, both real and personal, partly inherited from the family into which he had been adopted, and partly acquired by himself. He had no son, and only one daughter. In the month of August, 1844, he was attacked by the illness which terminated his [311] life. At that time he had none but female relatives existing, whom he supported out of his estate, but his wife was then pregnant. On the 28th of August, 1844, he executed the following Will:—

"Finding myself in a failing state of health, my infirmity increasing, and apprehending that this may endanger my life, and being also without male issue, having only a daughter, a wife, a maternal aunt, grandmother, and paternal aunts, Ponnamm and Purvatee, who have been under my protection up to this time, I appoint Kistnayan of Saloovanpatay, and Samee Jyan of Govindacoody, to continue as heretofore to manage the affairs connected with my estate in the Talooks of Combaconum and Valangeman, consisting of Merasi villages, houses, jewels, ready money, utensils, etc., and to collect and pay all debts due to and by me. All the females shall take what may be necessary for their household purposes, and live together. The charities of the Chootry Pagoda and other places shall be performed as usual, and accounts rendered every year of all receipts and disbursements to my uncle Chinnappayan of Teroovavoor and to Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty of Combaconumpettah. Any expense, even to the extent of one rupee or one callum of paddy, can only be defrayed upon their authority, and an account of such expenses be kept under their signature. If my wife, who is now pregnant, should give birth to a boy, the provisions herein contained shall be conformed to until that boy attains his proper age, but should a daughter be born, such daughter, as well as the other daughter now living, shall be given in Cannecadanum marriage (without any consideration being received from the bridegroom), to families of respectable [312]-bility and well circumstanced, with the consent of the parties aforesaid. After deducting the expenses of the charities from the estate, they shall support themselves with the remainder as heretofore. After the lifetime of my grandmother, stepmother, and paternal aunts, a portion of the estate being set apart for the purposes of charity to be conducted as heretofore, the residue shall be allotted as dowers to my daughters. If the females do not agree among themselves, they shall receive what will suffice for their expenses, and live apart from each other. They are also to receive the ornaments as allotted to them, respectively in writing by my father. Thus do I execute my Will." This Will was witnessed by six witnesses.

As the above Will did not determine the proportions which the female relatives were respectively to enjoy in case they should disagree amongst themselves, and prefer to live separate, the Testator, on the 3rd of September following, the day before his death, executed a Codicil to his Will as follows:—"If my wife, who is now pregnant, give birth to a son, both the paternal aunts shall receive the income (of the lands left to them) during their lifetime, and after their decease their lands shall go to that son. If a daughter be born, she also shall have 2 valies of land set apart to her out of the lands now allotted for charitable purposes, and Rs. 1000 shall be laid out for her wedding. Chinnappayan Teroovavoor and Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty, of Pettah, shall as Dharmakartas, or trustees, continue to manage all the aforesaid affairs in accordance with these provisions, the village karyacars, or agents, and the females obeying their instructions. In the event of a son not being born, all the lands except that set apart to Ganapati Jyan, shall after the lifetime re-[313]-spectively of those to whom they are now bequeathed, be appropriated to purposes of charity." This Codicil was witnessed by several witnesses.

Appacooty Jyen caused information to be given to the authorities of the District, that he had executed these instruments, and died on the 4th of September, the day after the date of the Codicil, leaving the Appellant, his widow, and a daughter, four years old, him surviving.

The Appellant afterwards gave birth to a daughter. The Respondents, Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty and Chinnappavien, administered the estate according to the terms of the Will and Codicil, and after some adverse proceedings by the Appellant, who asserted a right to possession on the ground that Appacooty Jyen had authorised her to adopt a son in the event of the child she was pregnant with being a female, they were put in possession of the deceased's estate; the Appellant being referred by the Sub-Collector, to whom she preferred her claim, to establish her right by a civil suit.

Accordingly, on the 28th of December, 1847, the Appellant filed her plaint in the Civil Court of Combaconum against Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty, Chinnappavien, Krishnien, and sixteen other Defendants, including amongst them the other female members of the deceased's family. By the plaint she asserted that the lands and other property in dispute were not acquired by her late husband, but inherited by him from the ancestors of the family into which he had been adopted; that at the time of his death, she being then pregnant, he had authorised her to adopt a son in the event of her giving birth to a daughter, and that she and her two [314] daughters were according to the Hindoo law entitled to her husband's estate, and that in the event of her adopting a son the title would pass to him. She also asserted that the alleged Will and Codicil were forged by the Respondents, subsequently to the death of Appacooty Jyen; and alleged that Appacooty Jyen was in a state of insensibility from the 23rd of August to the 4th of September, 1844, the day he died.

The Respondents, Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty and Chinnappavien, the two substantial Defendants in the suit, put in a joint answer, and therein stated the above facts as to the execution by Appacooty Jyen of the Will and Codicil. They further stated that they had not undertaken the trusteeship either to usurp the family estate or to earn their livelihood by it, but in consideration of the friendship which had existed for generations between the families of Appacooty Jyen and Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty, and the promise which they gave him of duly enforcing the arrangements made by him before his death: and they denied that the deceased had authorised the Appellant to adopt a son, as it was inconsistent with the Codicil, which provided that the whole of his family estate should be appropriated to objects of charity in the event of the Appellant, who was then pregnant, not giving birth to a male child. The answer moreover alleged, that the other Defendants, being aware of the execution of the Will and Codicil, as well as of the other facts of the case, and some of them being attesting witnesses of those documents, had been included as Defendants with the view of preventing them from giving evidence.

The other Defendants, by their answer, supported the allegations in the answer of the above-named first [315] two Defendants, and insisted that Appacooty Jyen was in possession of his faculties until three hours before his death, and that he never authorised the Appellant to adopt a son.

The Appellant, in reply, reiterated the allegations in the plaint, and submitted that the estate of Appacooty Jyen being ancestral, and not self acquired, ought, according to the Hindoo law, to descend after his death to his heirs, and that he was utterly incompetent to dispose of it according to his discretion, as the Appellant and her daughter were his heiresses at the time of his death, and the Appellant, who was pregnant, might have been delivered of a boy, that such boy would have become heir to the deceased, or the Appellant might have adopted a son and constituted him heir. She also alleged that the Defendants, Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty and Chinnappavien had admitted, in a petition presented by them to the Sub-Collector, the fact that her husband had authorised her to adopt a son, and had requested the Sub-Collector to induce her to make the adoption. She also objected that the Will and Codicil were not written on stamped paper, and were not genuine instruments.

The Defendants, Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty and Chinnappavien rejoined at considerable length, going through and controverting the assertions of the Appellant. With respect to her allegation that Appacooty Jyen could not have executed the Will and Codicil, or made over the estate to them, inasmuch as he had continued in a state of insensibility for twelve days preceding his death, they said the falsity of this allegation needed no other proof than the Appellant's own statement in a petition made by her to the Sub-Collector for possession of her husband's estate, [316] namely, that her husband delivered over the estate to the first Defendant, on his promising to manage it faithfully. They also contended that the Will and Codicil were in perfect accordance with the Hindoo law and the usage of the country, and denied the statement in her reply regarding a petition to the Sub-Collector, in which her authority to adopt a son was admitted.

The different parties entered into evidence. The evidence was conflicting. On the part of the Appellant, twenty-eight witnesses were examined, but only three of them spoke to the fact of Appacooty Jyen having authorised the alleged adoption. The account they gave was, that while Appacooty Jyen was lying on his death-bed, he said to the Appellant, in the presence of twenty or thirty persons assembled together, "Why do you grieve, you are now pregnant, and will give birth to a boy; if not you can adopt a son." Of these three witnesses, one was a common labourer, and he deposed that the occurrence took place "about nine o'clock in the morning." The next, who called himself a merchant, declared that when Appacooty Jyen spoke the above-mentioned words, giving authority to adopt, "it was between eight and nine o'clock at night." The third witness, deposed that the occurrence happened, "about two or two and a half hours after sunset." To prove the alleged forgery of the Will and Codicil, two witnesses were examined by the Appellant, who deposed to their having been separately asked three or four months after the death of Appacooty Jyen by Chinnappavien, in the presence of Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty and several other persons, to attest what purported to be a Will and Codicil of the deceased, which they refused to do. [317] The evidence of the other witnesses was immaterial. The Appellant also put in evidence the following letter, marked A, from Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty to Krishnien, one of the Respondents: "I have sent Nagalutchmee Ummal in my palankeen: on her arrival you must take care that all the females, Pommammal, Ambalammal, and others, should be on as friendly terms with her as formerly, but not as they were when at this place. Let nothing pass there regarding the matter of adoption. I shall call four days hence, when we can speak about all affairs. Until then you must take great care that no dispute occurs, and such steps should be taken as may induce Nagalutchmee Ummal, of her own accord, to make an adoption. After my arrival we can discuss the above-mentioned matters." Also a petition, marked K, addressed by the two Defendants, Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty and Chinnappavien, in March, 1845, to the Sub-Collector, in which, after mentioning the fact of the Will and Codicil having been executed, they said that Appacooty Jyen left verbal instructions before he died, that if his wife were delivered of a daughter they should cause a boy to be adopted, and deliver over to him the property on his coming of age; and they requested the Sub-Collector to make an order directing the Appellant and others to abide by the provisions of the Will and Codicil, and to adopt a son in accordance with the instructions left by Appacooty Jyen. Also a petition, marked J, of the great-grandmother of Appacooty Jyen to the Sub-Collector, in which she mentioned that he left verbal instructions with his wife for the adoption of a son in the event of his wife not giving birth to a boy.

The Respondent, Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty, was per-[318]-sonally examined by the Court, and was asked to explain the allusion to adoption contained in the above letter and petition. He said that shortly after the Appellant's confinement, Appacooty Jyen's mother and great-grandmother requested him and Chinnappavien to get a boy adopted to the Appellant; they answered that as no mention had been made of adoption by Appacooty Jyen, they should not permit the adoption; but the females, if they wished it, might make it themselves. Upon this the females told them that Appacooty Jyen had authorised them to adopt a boy in the event of his wife not giving birth to a son, and that he and Chinnappavien replied that if such was the case they might adopt a boy. The Appellant, however, subsequently refused to make the adoption, and the mother and great-grandmother of Appacooty Jyen suggested that as disputes existed amongst the females, if they mentioned that Appacooty Jyen had permitted an adoption, an order would be passed for making one, which would put a stop to the quarrel, and they, therefore, made the statement about the adoption. Another of the Defendants was also examined on the same subject, and gave a similar explanation.

The Respondents' witnesses proved that Appacooty Jyen, while in full possession of his faculties, executed the Will, and two or three days afterwards the Codicil in question, and that not a word was said about adoption. It was also proved that he continued sensible until a few hours before his death. The Respondents also put in evidence a petition presented by the Appellant to the Sub-Collector in February.

1845, in which she had stated as follows:—"Being destitute of brothers or other kinsmen, Appacooty [319] Jyen entrusted the whole of his property, including ready cash, ornaments, and bonds, to one Nadala Setty, son of Gopee Setty, of Combaconum Pettah, who from the days of his (petitioner's husband's) ancestors had maintained a trustworthy and respectable character, and he enjoined him and the agent and curmum of his villages not to deceive the Petitioner in consequence of her sex, but faithfully to manage the entire estates, and restore the same to her on her demand, according to the accounts."

Before finally deciding the suit, the Civil Judge directed the following case and questions to be put to the Pundits of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras:—"A Brahmin dying without male issue, left a Will, in which he bequeathed to his wife five valies of nunjah land, with the poonjah belonging to it, and all the jewels she was in the habit of wearing; to his daughter two valies, together with her jewels and Rs. 1000 for the expenses of her marriage; fifteen valies of nunjah, etc. to four others of his female relations; and to all of them a place of residence and such household utensils as they might require. There were also some other small bequests; and he then left the rest of his property, partly derived from inheritance and partly from purchase, to various religious and charitable institutions, appointing two of his friends executors of his Will and managers of the charities. He likewise provided that if his wife, then pregnant, were delivered of a son, the estate should in due time revert to him; but if a daughter were born, the same provision was to be made for her as for his other daughter, the residue going to the above-mentioned charities. The widow of the deceased was delivered of a girl, and now contests the validity of [320] the Will, claiming a right to succeed to the whole of her husband's estate.

"1st. Is the Will valid?

"2nd. Supposing the deceased gave his wife verbal instructions to adopt a son in the event of her bearing a daughter, would her compliance with these instructions operate to invalidate the Will, in which no mention is made of adoption?"

To these questions the Pundits answered: "The Will referred to in the question is valid, under the Hindoo law, the Testator having thereby bequeathed a portion of his estate for the maintenance of his wife and other members of his family, whom he was bound to protect, and directed the remainder to be appropriated to charitable purposes in the event of his wife, who was then pregnant, not being delivered of a son. If the Testator had really given his wife verbal instructions to adopt a son in the event of her not bearing male issue, her compliance with those instructions would of course invalidate the Will according to the Hindoo law, it being incompetent for the Testator, who authorised the adoption of a son, to alienate the whole of his estate, and thereby injure the means of the maintenance of his would-be heir."

On the 20th of January, 1849, the Judge of the Civil Court of Combaconum made his decree in the cause. After stating the pleadings and evidence, he proceeded thus:—"I have no doubt that the Will, and Codicil to it, were executed by the deceased, and that he was in the full possession of his senses at the time. These documents are attested by several persons of respectability, and their evidence to the point is clear, and for the most part unexceptionable. The first Defendant also, who, as an old [321] friend of the family, is appointed one of the executors, is himself possessed of large property, and was selected by the late Judge to serve as an assessor in criminal trials, which circumstances dispose me to regard him as an unlikely person to engage in forging a testament, by which he personally gains nothing but the management of the charities. On the other hand, the testimony brought forward by the Plaintiff to prove that her husband was senseless and speechless from the 10th to the 22nd is inconclusive, the 15th, 16th, and 17th witnesses having only seen him the day before his demise, and the 18th, two or three months before; moreover, if he were really delirious from the 10th, it is impossible to suppose that they would have delayed removing him to his house at Combaconum, where the best medical advice was to be had, until the 20th. The evidence of the 24th and 25th witnesses, to prove the forgery, is, in my opinion, entitled to no credit, their statements being of the most improbable nature."—[After setting out the case and answers of the Pundits, the learned Judge proceeded]—"The Pundits have decided the first question in the affirmative; and with regard to the second, they observed, that if the Testator had given instructions to his wife to adopt a son, her compliance with those instructions would invalidate the Will. This, therefore is the next question to be considered:—The 19th, 20th, and 21st witnesses speak to the fact of the Plaintiff's husband having given her permission to adopt a son, but they are of inferior condition in life, and the reasons they assign for visiting the deceased at that juncture are very unsatisfactory. The deceased was a person of considerable estate; and it may reasonably be inferred that if he had been really desirous that his widow should [322] adopt a son, he would have taken care to convey the injunction to her in the presence of respectable persons, and provide that the boy to be affiliated should be selected from among his own kindred; and as a proviso is made in the Will that his estate is to go to his posthumous son, if one were born, it is to be supposed that a similar proviso would have been made in favour of an adopted son if he had given instructions on that point.

“In further proof of her husband's order to adopt a son, the Plaintiff has filed three documents, marked A. J. K., and these are certainly strong arguments in her favour. The first is a letter written by the first Defendant to his agent, the third, about four or five months after the demise of Appacooty Jyen, in which he desires him to treat the Plaintiff with the customary respect, and not to say anything to her about the adoption for the present. J. is a copy of a petition forwarded to the Sub-Collector by the grandmother and stepmother of the deceased, in which they allude to his having ordered his wife to adopt a son. K. is a copy of a petition addressed to the Sub-Collector by the first and second Defendants, in which a similar allusion is made to the order of the deceased for adoption. Here are distinct admissions on the part of the Defendants that the deceased enjoined his wife to adopt a son; but notwithstanding this, I am disposed to think that no such injunction was really given, and that the circumstances under which these admissions were made, are sufficiently explained in the deposition taken from the first Defendant. From this it would appear, that after the Plaintiff had given birth to a daughter, the female relations of the deceased, desirous of seeing a representative of the family, intimated to the executors the [323] propriety of the Plaintiff adopting a son; they, however, declined to interfere in the matter, as no mention was made of adoption in the Will, and deceased had said nothing to them on the subject; but added, that if they could settle it among themselves, no obstacle would be offered on their part as executors. Preparations were accordingly made for the affiliation, and the ceremony would have taken place but for the interference of the Plaintiff's mother and uncle, who persuaded her, that if she adopted a boy, selected by the relations of the deceased, she would have no control over the property, and so the affair was broken off. The object of the subsequent petition to the Sub-Collector was to forward the adoption, under the impression that it was the only means to put a stop to the quarrels that had now sprung up between the women.

“The explanation is, of course, open to objection, but I am inclined to regard it as a probable solution of the circumstances under which these exhibits were written, and in the absence of any other evidence that can be relied on, I cannot admit them as sufficient proof that the deceased left behind him any injunctions to adopt a son; and I am of opinion that his last wishes and intentions are contained in the Will and Codicil to it, and I, therefore, dismiss the Plaintiff's claim with costs.”

The Appellant appealed from this decree to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and in her petition of appeal she for the first time urged as an objection that the Will and Codicil were altogether void, under Regulation V. of 1829 (a).

[324] The Respondents in their answer objected that until the Appellant had made an adoption she was not competent to maintain the suit, but the Court overruled that objection and heard the appeal.

The Sudder Court pronounced its decree on the 27th of November, 1851. In delivering judgment, the Court said:—“With regard to the first point urged by the Appellant, that the Will and Codicil are forged documents, the Court would observe that the evidence to their execution is clear and satisfactory. It is true, as pleaded by the Appellant, that all the attesting witnesses were not cited and examined, but two to the first, and five to the second instrument, and the writer of both were so, and their testimony has, in the opinion of the Court, fully and incontrovertibly established their genuineness and authenticity. It must also be admitted that these documents were neither engrossed upon stamped paper, nor afterwards registered; but the Court attach no great importance to these facts, as the circumstances under which they were executed, and the distress of the family and friends of the Testator at the time, are sufficient to account for the first omission, and the unpopularity of registration and the unwillingness of the natives to resort to the measure were most probably the reason of the second.

(a) Mad. Reg. V. of 1829 enacts, that “Wills left by Hindoos within the territories subject to the Government, shall have no legal force whatever, except so far as their contests may be in conformity with the provisions of the Hindoo law, according to the authorities prevalent in the respective Provinces, under the Presidency.

"The argument of the Appellant that a Brahmin would hardly constitute Soodras to be the trustees of his property and charities, is done away with by the [325] admission of the Appellant herself, in her address to the Sub-Collector, under date the 17th of February, 1845, in which she allows that the first Respondents' family had been entrusted by her deceased husband with the control of his property.

"With respect to the second objection, that the Will and Codicil, even if proved to have been duly executed, are void, because authority to adopt a son was given, the Court would remark that no proof entitled to the least credit has been produced to this point. The witnesses that speak to the circumstance, irrespective of other objections to their evidence, are not in that position of life which entitles them to be selected by a wealthy and influential Brahmin on his bed of sickness, surrounded as he was by his own immediate friends and relatives, as the depositaries of his wishes, regarding an heir to his large estates. It is almost impossible to imagine that the deceased, who entered into so many details in his Will and Codicil for the respectable maintenance of all the females of his family, and the right disposal of the residue of his property after his death, would have neglected to have taken similar precautions for the adoption of a son in the event of his posthumous child proving a female; but this the Appellant wishes the Court to believe he did.

"The documents A. J. and K. are certainly strong in favour of the Appellant's plea; but the Court do not attach that weight to the admissions they contain regarding the adoption to the extent of setting aside the strong evidence to the contrary. The first incidentally alludes to an adoption, and suggests that the Appellant should voluntarily mention it herself; and the second is written by the great grandmother and [326] aunt of the deceased, both advocating the Appellant's cause, in which also the permission to adopt a son is spoken of. Neither of these allusions can very much aid the Appellant's case. The third, however, is a letter written by the first Respondent himself to the Sub-Collector, in which he distinctly admits that the deceased Appacooty ordered the Appellant to adopt a son in the event of a child, of which she was then pregnant, being a daughter. This is an admission which the first Respondent has been at much pains to explain away; but the Court thinks that he has done this in his deposition given before the Civil Judge, and to which that Judge particularly refers in his decision.

"The third objection taken by the Appellant is, that the Will is illegal, because the widow is the party to whom the law gives the estate.

"The Court have referred to all the authorities quoted by the Appellant in support of this position, and find that although the opinions regarding Wills of Hindoos generally are conflicting, yet that the majority of them are against the argument of the Appellant. It is unnecessary to cite all the opinions given on the subject, and the Court will content itself by referring to the case of Ramtoonooy Mullick v. Rungpaul Mullick (1 Morley's Dig., p. 39, No. 3), in which it was held that a Hindoo might and could dispose by Will of all his property, moveable and immoveable, and as well ancestral as otherwise, and this decision was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council.

"Questions, however, regarding the legality of the Will now under discussion, were referred to the law officers of the Court, to whom the Legislature have assigned the duty of declaring the law on such matters, and they distinctly stated their opinion that it is [327] a valid and good instrument. The arguments, therefore, of the Appellant that it is not recognizable under the provisions of Regulation V. of 1829, cannot be sustained." The Court, for the above reasons, affirmed the decree of the Civil Court, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

The Appellant afterwards presented petitions for review of judgment, and also for security from the Respondents for the mesne profits pending the suit, which the Sudder Court refused to entertain.

From the decree of the 27th of November, 1851, the Appellant appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

After the arrival of the transcript in England, the Appellant presented (Nov. 30, 1854 *) a petition under the provisions of Madras Reg. VIII. of 1818, sec. 4, for an Order calling upon the Respondents to give security for the mesne profits, or, in the event of the Respondents not giving security, that the Appellant might be put in possession upon giving security, or in the alternative that the property might be attached pending the appeal. The petition, after stating that the Appellant had applied to the Sudder Dewanny Court, that pending the appeal, the Respondents might be required to give security, as prescribed by the 4th section of Mad. Reg. VIII. of 1818, and setting forth the Circular Order of 1826, which the Court refused, as they were of opinion that the provisions of that Regulation did not apply to the case; alleged that as considerable time must necessarily elapse before judgment could be obtained upon the pending appeal, the Appellant had reason to fear, that unless security was directed to be given by the Respondents, the Appellant would be unable to reap the benefit of Her Majesty's decision, if in her favour, the Respondents having already, as the Appellant was informed and believed, mortgaged part of the estate, though they were still in possession of the greater portion of the same; and the Appellant prayed that the Respondents might be ordered, within six weeks from the service of an order to that effect upon such of the Respondents as should be in possession of the property in dispute, to give full and sufficient security, in accordance with the above Regulation and Circular Order; and that the calculation upon such Order might be made from the date of the property coming into possession of the Respondents, and that the Appellant might have leave to come in at the beginning of each succeeding year and demand additional security for the net proceeds of the past year, or, in the event of the Respondents not giving the required security within the period prescribed, that the property might be given over to the Appellant, pending the appeal, upon her giving such security, or, in default of the Appellant giving security within the like period of six weeks from the date of the expiration of the period to be assigned to the Respondents for giving their security, then that the estates might be attached, pending the appeal.

Mr. E. J. Lloyd, Q.C., and Mr. Coryton, in support of the petition.—The present application, though novel in its nature, is founded upon the case of Rajah Vassareddy Lutchmepetty Naidoo (5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 300), where the mischief now sought to be averted occurred, the property, pendente lite, being sold and the mesne profits lost. The refusal of the Sudder Court to exercise the discretion conferred on the Court by Mad. Reg. VIII. of 1818, sec. 4, will operate most prejudicially to the Appellant in the event of the decree being reversed, as no security for the mesne profits have been given.—[The Lord Justice Knight Bruce: Does that Regulation apply in this case? The Respondents were put in possession by the Collector, not by the Court.]—We submit that the Judicial Committee, under this Regulation, in its ministerial, if not in its judicial character, has power to make the order sought for.

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—The Regulation under which this application is founded does not, in their Lordships' opinion, apply to the present case, and, therefore, it will not be necessary to decide whether they have such a discretion as the Appellant concludes we possess, of directing securities to be furnished by the Respondents. There is, in fact, no allegation in the petition that the Respondents have committed or are committing waste, only a rumour of a mortgage of part of the estate. The case of Rajah Vassareddy Lutchmepetty Naidoo [5 Moo. Ind. App.

300], has nothing to do with such an application as this, as their Lordships in that case only ordered their decree to be effectually carried into effect by the Court in India.

The appeal now came on for hearing.

[330] Sir Frederick Thesiger, Q.C., Mr. E. J. Lloyd, Q.C., and Mr. Coryton, for the Appellant. Two questions are involved in this case; first, whether Appacooty Jyen gave the Appellant authority to adopt a son in the event which happened; and, secondly, whether the Will and Codicil set up by the Respondents are valid and legal instruments.

First. The presumption is strongly in favour of the supposition that Appacooty Jyen, being without a son, authorized the Appellant, his widow, to adopt one from their family in the event of the child of which she was then pregnant being a female, his spiritual welfare depending upon his being represented by a son, Huradhu Mookurja v. Muthuranath Mookurja (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 414). This necessity is strongly shown by writers of the highest authority in India, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," pp. 7, 73, 76 (2nd Edit.), 1 W. H. Macnaghten's "Hindu Law," p. 63, Inst. of Menu, ch. IX., pl. 107, Daya Bhaga, ch. XI., s. 1, pl. 31, F. Macnaghten's "Cons. on Hindoo Law," p. 176, 3 Colebrooke's "Dig. of Hindu Law," pp. 291, 5, Crastnerao Wassadewji v. Ragunath Harichandarji (Perry's "Oriental Cases," 150). The verbal authorization of the Appellant by her husband, which is sufficient, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 93, to adopt a son, is proved by the evidence of three witnesses, and the admission of that fact by the Respondents themselves in the exhibits filed. They even admit that they urged the Appellant to exercise the power so conferred on her. Upon the adoption taking place, the child becomes heir of the deceased, and the widow's title to her [331] husband's estate merges into that of guardian of the child, 2 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 127, Dhurm Das Pandey v. Mussumat Shama Soondri Dibiah (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 229). As power had been given to the widow to adopt a son, Appacooty Jyen was, by the Hindoo law, incompetent to make any testamentary disposition.

Second. Neither the factum of the Will and Codicil, nor the mental capacity of the Testator, are sufficiently established by the evidence. The witnesses prove that the state of his health was such as to affect his mind, rendering him incapable of exercising testamentary power at the very time when it is alleged he executed these instruments; he, at that time, being in a state of delirium and insensibility. In such a condition, even if he executed the Will and Codicil, he must have been under such influence as would make the instruments void if to the prejudice of the Appellant. Decisive proof of the complete absence of influence and excitement must be proved, Dodge v. Meech (3 Hagg. Ecc. Rep. 620), Cartwright v. Cartwright (1 Phill. Ecc. Rep. 99), Instit. lib. 2, tit. 12, sec. 2. The evidence of the execution by the Respondents' witnesses, moreover, is contradictory and inconclusive; and considering the facility of obtaining evidence, and the value of Hindoo testimony, is quite unworthy of credit. Three only of the attesting witnesses are produced, and their testimony, which is contradictory in itself, fails to establish the validity of these documents; the Appellant's witnesses depose to these papers being forgeries. The onus probandi undoubtedly lies upon the Respondents, who set up these instruments. Assuming, however, that the Will and Codicil were [332] actually executed, they are void at law, a Will or testamentary power being wholly foreign and repugnant to the Hindoo law prevailing in Madras, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 254, Mad. Reg. V. of 1829. The Sudder Courts in Madras have decided that such an instrument is illegal and void (Decisions Sudr. Udalut, Mad., vol. i. pp. 27, 111). There is, besides, another fatal objection, which is, that Appacooty Jyen had no power to alienate the ancestral property; without the consent of his heirs he could not do so by deed, much less so could he by Will, which is not known to the Hindoo law. By the Hindoo law, ancestral property of an undivided family belongs to the family in common, and not to the head of it alone, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," pp. 2, 17, 19, 199, 349; the Mitashara, ch. i., s. 1, Daya-Crama-Sangraha, fo. 94. The distinction as between ancestral and self-acquired property, as affected by Wills, is fully recognised by the Courts in Madras (Decisions Sudr. Udalut, Mad., vol. ii. pp. 61, 193, 271). In the event of the Respondents defeating her right to adopt, the Appellant, as widow of the deceased without male issue, is sole heir to his movable and immovable property, as she takes before the daughters. 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 133, Keerut Sing v. Koolahul Sing (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 331), Cosse-nauth Bysack v. Hurrosoondery Dossee (Morton's Dec. 85).

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. Forsyth, for the Respondents.—First. The title of the Appellant to maintain this suit is founded upon the alleged adoption. Now, there is no evidence, or even an allegation in the [333] pleadings, that she has adopted a son for her deceased husband. If she had adopted a son, she has no title, as widow, to institute this suit, as, by the Hindoo law, the act of adoption divests the property from the widow and vests it in the adopted son, Dhurm Das Pandey v. Mussumat Shama Soondri Dibiah (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 229), Rungama v. Atchama (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 1); her title to sue could only have been in the character of guardian of the son. In any view she cannot succeed in this suit, as it is not shown that she is her deceased husband's heir. We admit that a widow may, in some circumstances, succeed to her deceased husband's property, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 121, but the case of Keerut Sing v. Koolahul Sing (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 331), cuts it down to a life estate; but here the husband, by the exercise of a testamentary power, has defeated her title altogether.—[Sir William Maule:—The Appellant does not treat the case as one of adoption, but as having the power to adopt.] The question of the Appellant having adopted a son is only raised here upon the petition of appeal.—[Mr. Pemberton Leigh:—It is not pleaded that she exercised such a power, supposing she had the authority of her husband to adopt. Upon a record so framed we cannot, upon appeal, determine the question of adoption, even if such a power had been given.]

Second. Then the sole question remaining is the validity of the Will and Codicil. The evidence establishes the due execution of these instruments. The position and character of the Respondents, who are mere trustees, and have no interest under the Will, but to carry into effect the charitable intentions of the Testator, their readiness to sanction an adoption, [334] if power to adopt could be shown to have been given, at once proves their disinterestedness and their conviction of the genuineness of these instruments. The charge of forgery as against them, or undue influence in obtaining the execution of the Will and Codicil, is not entitled to any credit, being contrary to probability as well as fact. It is perfectly competent, by the Hindoo law, as at present prevailing, for a Hindoo to make a Will. Mulraz Lachmia v. Chalekany Vencata Rama Jayyanadha Row (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 54), Maulrauze Vencata Vurdiah v. Maulrauze Lutchmia (1 Mad. Decisions, 438), are express authorities upon that point, and relate to the Presidency of Madras. It is also recognised by Mad. Reg. XXV. of 1802. A distinction is attempted to be made by the Appellant between acquired and ancestral property, and it is argued that the Testator could not by Will alienate ancestral property. No such distinction, however, exists. The foundation of the testamentary restriction rests upon the Hindoo law of an undivided family; kinsmen and coparceners having a right which cannot be divested without their consent. The Mitacshara, ch. i., sec. 1, pl. 30. But here the Testator was without kinsman or coparcener, and, in the absence of male descendants, he provides for the maintenance of his wife and daughter, and some female relations. In such circumstances it was competent for him to make a Will, devising ancestral property. The Pundits who have been consulted, and the Courts in India, have held upon their exposition of the law, that he had such a power, and this Court will not willingly reverse such decisions, operating as it does so beneficially by recognising the power of a Hindoo disposing of pro-[335]-perty by Will in Madras. We concede that where the Mitacshara governs, a father cannot by Will exclude his son. In considering the validity of a Will, it is necessary to look to the disposing power a Hindoo has over his property, whether ancestral or otherwise. In Bengal, a Hindoo may leave by Will, or bestow by deed of gift, his possessions, whether inherited or acquired. 2 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 438, Mullick v. Mullick (1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 245). 1 Morley's Dig., tit. "Will," pp. 612, 616. The only restriction, according to Colebrooke, a great authority, 2 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 435-6, is, if the Testator has sons. So in Madras he can dispose by act, inter vivos. Rungama v. Atchama (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 1). There is no reason why the Will of a Hindoo devising ancestral estate should not be treated as a conveyance. It is of little importance by what name the instrument or declaration by which a Hindoo governs the disposition of his property after his death is, whether it is called a Will or a deed. In Scotland (see Bell's Dict. of Law of Scotland, tit. "Will") heritable property cannot be devised by Will, it must be by a trust disposition; which is, in fact, a conveyance. In the like manner it is competent to a Hindoo to make a gift of his property by deed, inter vivos, which is in the nature of a Will. 1 Strange's "Hindoo Law," pp. 17, 18, 258. Eshanchund Rai v. Eshorchand Rai (1 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 2), Sreenarani Rai v. Bhya Sha (2 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 29). It would not perhaps be good if given to one son to the exclusion of the other sons. Sham Singh v. Mussumat Maraster (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 191). Now if a Hindoo can give, sell, or run in debt, so as to affect his ancestral property and render it liable to an execution, he surely must have a power of disposing of [336] it by Will. Such power was recognised here in Baboo Janokey Doss v. Binduban Doss (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 745). The Mitaeshara, ch. i. sec. 1, pl. 27. If the decision of the Court below be reversed, it will go to the extent of holding that in no circumstances in Madras can a Will by a Hindoo devising ancestral estate be valid.

Mr. E. J. Lloyd, in reply.—It is inconsistent with, and repugnant to, the spirit of the Hindoo law which is in force at Madras, to allow such a testamentary disposition as this. The Hindoo law, in fact, knows no such instrument as a Will. 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 251. Mad. Reg. V. of 1829 expressly prohibits the exercise of such a power. The cases referred to by the Respondents relating to Wills do not apply, as they are either founded upon the authorities prevailing in Bengal, which are not received as law in Southern India, or, as in the case of Mulraj Lachmia v. Chalekany Venkata Rama Jagganadha Row (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 51), relate to self-acquired property, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 268, which point is not now in contention. The objection here is confined to the validity of a Will devising ancestral estate. It has been recently held in Madras that such a Will is a nullity and of no force (Decisions Sudr. Udalut. Mad., vol. i. p. 27). Such a restriction is not peculiar to Southern India: an instrument devising real estate would be void by the law of Scotland. And so it would be by the English law, as in this case there is a devise of real estate to charitable purposes, which would be void by the Statute of Mortmain. The judgment of the Court below is founded upon the opinions of the [337] Pundits, who, contrary to the Regulations, have cited no authorities to support their opinions, which, in a case of such importance as the present, shows the necessity of the Court being governed by the ancient and undoubted law of India, which restrains alienation by a testamentary power.

Their Lordships took time to consider their judgment, which was now delivered by

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh (April 3, 1856).—The question to be decided in this case is the right of succession to the property, movable and immovable, partly acquired and partly ancestral, of a Hindoo named Appacooty Jyen. He died on the 4th of September, 1844, at Combaconum, within the Presidency of Madras: and by the Hindoo law, as it prevails in that Province, the questions which arise in this case are to be determined.

The Appellant, who was Plaintiff in the Court below, is the widow of Appacooty Jyen, and it is not disputed, that, as such, she is the sole heir to his property, both movable and immovable. The Respondents, however, insist that the Appellant's title, as heir-at-law, is displaced by a Will and Codicil, executed by her husband before his death: and the genuineness of those instruments, and their validity in point of law, if genuine, are the material questions for their Lordships' consideration. It is contended by the Appellant that both these instruments are forged; that at the time when they are respectively alleged to have been executed, the supposed Testator was insensible; and that if they are held to be established by the evidence as genuine, [338] they are, by the Hindoo law, as it prevails in the Presidency of Madras, inoperative as to all ancestral property of the Testator.

Another matter was put in issue in the Courts below, with respect to which their Lordships intimated at the hearing, that they could not upon this record pronounce any direct decision. It is alleged by the Appellant in her plaint, that her husband enjoined her, in the event of the child with which she was pregnant, at his death, not proving to be a male, to adopt a son to be chosen by herself. As no adoption according to this power was ever suggested in the Courts in India to have been actually made, their Lordships were of opinion that the question, whether the power to adopt had been really given, could not be decided upon this appeal. It was thought, however, by the Counsel on both sides, that the adoption and the testamentary dispositions were so inconsistent with each other that they could not stand together. To the extent to which the adoption, if proved, may affect the evidence as to the testamentary instrument, it will be necessary for their Lordships to examine the proofs in support of it. The onus of proving the Will and Codicil is, of course, upon the Respondents, who rely upon them.

Appacooty Jyen himself was an adopted son. At the time when the disputed instruments are said to have been made, he was in his twenty-second year: he had a wife, the Appellant, and one daughter, about four years of age; and his wife had been for some months pregnant with another child, born after his death; he had several female relations living in his house, widows of different [339] members of the family into which he had been adopted; he had some considerable property, movable and immovable, and of that portion of the latter which had come to him from his ancestors a part had been regularly applied by them to the maintenance of certain religious and charitable establishments, which it seems they had founded. This usage had been continued during his life by Appacooty Jyen, and one of the gentlemen afterwards named as trustees in the alleged Will had been entrusted by Appacooty Jyen with the superintendence of these charities.

In this state of his family and circumstances, in the month of August, 1844, he was attacked by the illness which terminated in his death. Astrologers had foretold that his life would be in great danger in the twenty-second year of his age, which he had then attained; and it is alleged by the Respondents that the sick man, anticipating his death, made, on the 28th of August, the Will, the validity of which is now to be decided. By that instrument he directed that the agents then in the management of his estates should be continued, and, in substance, he appointed the Respondent, Nadaraja Chetty, and a gentleman named Chinnappavien (who has died since the institution of the suit), trustees of his property: he directed provision to be made for the maintenance of his widow and his female relations; for his daughter then born, and for the child to be born according as it might prove to be a boy or a girl; and he directed that the several charities which he was in the habit of supporting should be continued by his trustees, but he made no provision for the event of any boy [340] being adopted by his widow, nor any allusion to his having given her any such power of adoption.

By this Will, though he had provided for the maintenance of the several female members of his family, he had not made provision for their residing apart from each other in the event of their disagreement; this not improbable contingency was suggested to him, and it is said, that on the 3rd of September, 1844, the day before his death, he executed a Codicil to his Will by which he allotted separate residences to his wife and other female relations, and bequeathed to charities a larger portion of his property than they could have claimed under his Will; but as regards the adoption, the Codicil is equally silent with the Will.

The trustees under these instruments take no personal interest whatsoever under them, unless the administration of the charities can be considered as such: they are persons in a respectable station of life, of good property, connected with the Testator, trusted by him in his lifetime, and who, after his death, so far from showing any improper eagerness to maintain these instruments, were willing, and indeed anxious, that the widow should exercise her supposed power of adoption, by which their operation would have been in a great measure defeated. This power they state that, from the representations made to them, they at one time believed her to possess, although they were afterwards satisfied that such belief was erroneous. The transaction, in respect of which an imputation is attempted to be cast upon Chinnappavien, appears to their Lordships fully explained.

The Will and the Codicil are attested: the first [341] by seven, the latter by ten witnesses, including the individual who wrote them; many of those witnesses, though not all, have been examined; they are several of them of a class superior to that from which Hindoo testimony generally proceeds; their evidence seems open to no other objection than may reasonably be accounted for from the length of time which had elapsed between the date of the transactions deposed to, and the period when the witnesses were examined, and there are not wanting incidental circumstances noticed in the argument at the Bar, which strongly confirm the accuracy of the accounts which they give. Now these witnesses, one and all, depose to the fact of the signature of these papers, to their being written from the dictation of the Testator, and to his perfect mental capacity at the time when they were executed.

Against this testimony, there is really, when it comes to be examined, no evidence whatever. Three witnesses are called, who say that they saw the Testator in the afternoon or evening of the day on which he died, and one says he was then insensible, and that he, the witness, was told that he had been insensible for ten or fifteen days: another swears, that when he saw the Testator he was not insensible, for he says, that the Testator desired the witness to feel his pulse, who did so, and told him that he would come and feel it again when the fever had abated: the third says, that when he called to see Apparooty Jyen, between two and three in the afternoon, he was lying speechless, and that the witness was told by Chinnappavien that he had been insensible for several days. That [342] the Testator became insensible some hours before his death, which occurred in the evening of the 4th of September, is stated by the Respondents' witnesses, and not one of the Appellant's witnesses affects to say that he had any personal knowledge of the state of the Testator at the time when either the Will or the Codicil was executed.

The evidence of two witnesses, who state that they were invited to attest these instruments after the death of the Testator, is wholly unworthy of credit, and has been treated by the Judges in the Court below with proper disregard.

There appears, therefore, not the slightest reason for dissenting from the opinion of the Judges in the Court below, who had, both in the Zillah and the Sudder Court, been satisfied of the genuineness of these instruments, unless it can be found on clear proof of the power of adoption and the inconsistency of such power with the contents of these instruments.

But their Lordships have sought in vain for any such proof. There is no doubt that, at some time after the Testator's death, the female relatives of the Testator represented that a power had been given by the Testator to the widow to adopt a boy of their family, and that the trustees, believing it, had wished such adoption to be made, and that the widow refused to make it; but of evidence that any such power was really given by the Testator, there is none worthy of the least attention.

The allegation in the plaint by the Appellant is, "that in the early part of the month of August, 1841, when she was eight months pregnant with a second child, her husband had a severe attack of [343] fever and ague; and in order that he might obtain happiness in the next world, he authorised her, in the presence of certain parties, to adopt a boy to be chosen by herself, in the event of her expected child being born a girl." This religious feeling is so much in accordance with the tenets and prevailing sentiments of Hindoos, that the statement in itself bears no mark of improbability. But, when the evidence is referred to, it is quite of a different character from that which the plaint alleges. It consists of witnesses who depose to hearing the Testator say, by way of consoling his widow, who was deeply distressed at the prospect of his death, that she should not be so much grieved; that she would produce a son, and, if not, she could adopt one. Surely this is not the language which would be used by a person who, on the prospect of death, with a view to the salvation of his soul, was at that moment laying injunctions on his widow for the performance of a solemn and important duty. It is not necessary to impute perjury to the witnesses; they are speaking after the lapse of several years to words which they probably misunderstood, or had forgotten, if such words ever were used at all, which is very doubtful; they could not have been intended to give the authority, but must have referred to something either already done, or thereafter to be done, by the Testator.

The question at present only is, whether their Lordships can say that the evidence as to the power of adoption is so strong as to induce them, upon that ground, to disbelieve the testimony in favour of the Will and Codicil, which certainly are not [344] very consistent with it. Their Lordships can come to no such conclusion. If an adoption has been or should be made, and any claim should be advanced by the person so adopted, such claim will have to be decided upon the evidence which may then be produced. It is sufficient for the present purpose to say that their Lordships do not mean in the smallest degree to invite or to encourage any such claim.

The Will and Codicil being established as the acts of the Testator, must, without doubt, take effect as to all property of his not ancestral; the question is only as to their operation on that which is ancestral, and this, in truth, is the only point upon which any reasonable doubt can be raised.

It must be allowed that in the ancient Hindoo law, as it was understood through the whole of Hindostan, testamentary instruments, in the sense affixed by English lawyers to that expression, were unknown; and it is stated by a writer of authority (Sir Thomas Strange) that the Hindoo language has no terms to express what we mean by a Will. But it does not necessarily follow, that what in effect, though not in form, are testamentary instruments, which are only to come into operation and affect property after the death of the maker of the instrument, were equally unknown. However this may be, the strictness of the ancient law has long since been relaxed, and throughout Bengal a man who is the absolute owner of property may now dispose of it by Will as he pleases, whether it be ancestral or not. This point was resolved several years ago by the concurrence of all the judicial authorities in Calcutta, as well of the Supreme as of the Sudder Court. No [345] doubt the law of Madras differs in some respects, and, amongst others, with respect to Wills, from that of Bengal. But even in Madras it is settled that a Will of property, not ancestral, may be good; a decision to this effect has been recognised and acted upon by the Judicial Committee, and, indeed, the rule of law to that extent is not disputed in this case.

If, then, the Will does not affect ancestral property, it must be, not because an owner of property by the Madras law cannot make a Will, but because, by some peculiarity of ancestral property, it is withdrawn from the testamentary power.

It was very ingeniously argued by the Respondents' Counsel, that in all cases where a man is able to dispose of his property by act, inter vivos, he may do so by Will; that he cannot do so when he has a son, because the son, immediately on his birth, becomes coparcener with the father: that the objection to bequeathing ancestral property is founded on the Hindoo notion of an undivided family; but that when there are no males in the family the liberty of bequeathing is unlimited.

It is not necessary for their Lordships to lay down so broad a proposition; they think it safer to confine themselves to the particular case before them. Under the circumstances of Testator's family, when he made his Will and Codicil, and having regard to the instruments themselves, the Pundits, to whom this question was properly preferred by the Court—the Pundits of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut—have declared their opinion, that these instruments are sufficient to dispose of ancestral estate; that opinion has been affirmed by two Judges successively, of whom it is [346] but justice to say that they appear to have examined the subject very carefully, and, after much consideration, to have pronounced very satisfactory judgments, though in one or two incidental observations which have fallen from them, their Lordships may not entirely concur.

Their Lordships must advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree complained of, with costs.

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

An appeal was allowed in October, 1854, by the Supreme Court at Calcutta to England. After the allowance of the appeal no further steps were taken by the Appellant. In March, 1856, the Judicial Committee, upon a certificate of the Registrar of the Supreme Court that no further proceedings had been taken after the Order allowing the appeal, dismissed the appeal, at the instance of the Respondents, for want of prosecution.

This was a petition by the Respondents to dismiss the appeal for want of prosecution. The appeal was allowed by the Supreme Court at Calcutta on the [347] 26th of October, 1854, but no further proceedings had been taken since that time by the Appellant. A certificate of the Registrar of the Supreme Court certifying that no steps had been taken since the date of the order granting the appeal was filed.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C. (with whom was Mr. Leith), in support of the motion, insisted, that as a year and a day had elapsed, the appeal must be taken to have abated.—[Mr. Pemberton Leigh: Have we jurisdiction? There has been no petition of appeal presented, and no reference of the appeal to us.]—The Supreme Court considers itself functus officio, after leave to appeal to England has been granted.

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington.—Their Lordships would have felt very great difficulty in this application if this petition had not been referred to us, but as it has been referred, we are of opinion that we can dismiss the appeal for want of prosecution, which we hereby order.

[348] ARDASEER CURSETJEE.—Appellant: PEROZEBOYE,—Respondent † [April 12 and 14, 1856].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Bombay.

The Bombay Charter of Justice (Dec. 1823) gives the Supreme Court "full power and authority to administer and execute, within and throughout the town and Island of Bombay, and the limits thereof, and the factories subordinate thereto, etc., upon all persons so described and distinguished by the appellation of British subjects, as aforesaid, there residing, the Ecclesiastical law, as the same is now used and exercised in the Diocese of London, in Great Britain, so far as the circumstances and occasion of the said town, island, territories, and people shall admit and require."

Suit on the Ecclesiastical side of the Supreme Court at Bombay by wife against husband for restitution of conjugal rights and for maintenance. Protest by the husband, that the parties were Parsees professing the religion of that sect, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to administer towards them the Ecclesiastical law as at the date of the Charter was used and exercised in the Diocese of London. Upon appeal, Held: (reversing the judgment of the Court below, and maintaining the protest) that the Supreme Court of Bombay, on its Ecclesiastical side, had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit, as there existed such a difference between the duties and obligations of a matrimonial union among Parsees from that of Christians, that the Court, if it made a decree, had no means of enforcing it, except according to the principles governing the matrimonial law in Doctors' Commons, which were in such a case incompatible with the laws and customs of Parsees.

Quære: Whether, in such circumstances, the Supreme Court can, on its civil side, give relief to the wife?

In this case the appeal was brought from a judgment of the Supreme Court at Bombay, which overruled a protest entered by the Appellant against the competency of that Court to entertain a suit instituted against him by the Respondent, his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights. The Appellant and Respondent were Parsees, and natives of the Island of Bombay.

On the 7th November, 1853, the Respondent filed a libel against the Appellant on the Ecclesiastical side of the Supreme Court of Bombay, pleading, first, that in the month of May, 1830, a marriage according to the laws and usages among Parsees, and agreeably [349] to the rites and ceremonies of the Parsees' religion, was duly had and solemnised between the Respondent and the Appellant, the Respondent being a daughter of the late Framjee Cowasjee Banajee of Bombay, Parsee merchant and inhabitant, deceased, and the Appellant being a son of Cursetjee Ardaseer, late of Bombay, Parsee merchant and inhabitant, deceased. Secondly, that after the celebration of the marriage, the Respondent, by reason of her tender years, continued to live and reside with and under the protection of her father, and separate and apart from her husband, until the month of February, 1833, when the Respondent, having attained her age of puberty, quitted her father's roof, and she and her husband then came together, and the marriage was then consummated between them. Thirdly, that some time in the course of the year 1835, the Respondent paid a visit to her father, with the consent and approbation of her husband, and while on such visit was taken seriously ill, when she was visited by her husband, and was treated by him with conjugal kindness, and that, on her recovery from her illness, she returned to the house of her husband, and was received and treated by him then as his lawful wife; but that after a short residence and cohabitation with him, the Respondent, with the consent of her husband, paid another visit to her father, with the intention of returning to her husband when requested by him so to do, [350] and that the Appellant, while his wife was on such last-mentioned visit to her father, having neglected to invite her back to his house for a considerable period of time, and the Respondent being desirous of returning to her husband, her father requested him to send for his wife, which he refused or neglected to do; that subsequently, the Respondent, through her relations and friends, applied to her husband to the like effect, and that especially her father, on the 3rd of July, 1843, wrote to the Appellant's father a letter in which he desired and requested him to endeavour to induce the Appellant to receive back his wife, but that he refused to comply with his request, and the Respondent, on the 3rd of July, 1843, proceeded to the house of her husband, but after a short stay there was obliged to quit it from his violent conduct and demeanour towards her, he refusing to permit her to remain in his house and forcibly expelling her from the same. Fourth, that the Respondent, during the lifetime and up to the time of the death of her father, continued to live in his house in consequence of the continued refusal of her husband to take her back and maintain her, and was maintained and supported by and at the expense of her father. Fifth, that since the death of her father, which took place on the 12th of February, 1851, the Appellant had refused to receive the Respondent, or to allow her any maintenance, and that she had been obliged to support and supply herself with the necessaries of life, by the sale from time to time of her jewels and furniture, and by the occasional assistance of her friends, and had frequently been in great distress for want of money to pay her monthly bills for rent and the other necessaries of life, and had been obliged [351] to contract debts on such account to a large amount, and was, and had been for some time past, in very needy and destitute circumstances, and without the means of providing herself with the necessaries of life. Sixth, that since the death of her father, the Appellant, though he had never been divorced from the Respondent, went through the form and ceremony of a second marriage with one Bhiceoyjee, a daughter of one Dorabjee Dadabhoj, of Bombay, Parsee inhabitant, and had for some years past been and was then living with her as man and wife and had had several children by her, and had repudiated the Respondent, his lawful wife, without any just cause; and the libel prayed that the Respondent's husband might be ordered to take back his wife, and treat her with conjugal kindness, or, if the Appellant should not consent, to pay her Rs. 1000 per month for the period of her natural life, or a suitable maintenance for her, together with the arrears of such maintenance from the 3rd of July, 1843; then that an account might be taken, under the directions of the Court, of the Appellant's property, movable and immovable, as well as that embarked in his trade or business, together with the profits thereof, and that such suitable maintenance might be made to the Respondent thereout, as the Court should, under all the circumstances of the case, declare the Respondent, as the lawful wife of the Appellant, to be entitled to.

The Appellant filed a protest against the competency of the Court to entertain the suit, alleging that the Respondent and the Appellant were respectively born in the Island of Bombay, and were Parsees, professing the religion of Zoroaster, commonly called the Parsee religion, and were respectively descended from [352] the race of Parsees inhabiting Goozerat in India, and were not respectively descended from Parsees born or residing within any of Her Majesty's dominions other than the territories under the government of the East India Company in India, and were not respectively persons who, prior to the date of the Letters Patent establishing the Court, had been described or distinguished in the Royal Charters of Justice for Bombay by the appellation of "British subjects," and that the Court was incompetent to take cognizance of or proceed in the suit, or to administer towards and upon the Promovent or Impugnant the Ecclesiastical Law as the same, at the date of the Letters Patent establishing the Court, was used and exercised in the Diocese of London in Great Britain.

The protest was argued on the 9th of January, 1854, and on the 5th of July following, the Chief Justice, Sir William Yardley and Sir Charles Jackson, the Puisne Judge, disagreeing in opinion, delivered their judgments, seriatim.

The judgment of Sir William Yardley, the Chief Justice, certified and returned by him to the Privy Council, as containing the reasons for his judgment, after setting forth the pleadings, proceeded thus: "The question which is raised by this protest is, whether the Court has Ecclesiastical jurisdiction in matters relating to the marriage state over persons of the Parsee religion, who are natives and inhabitants of the town and island of Bombay. If the Court has such jurisdiction, this protest must be overruled; if not, it must be allowed.

"At the time this case came on for argument I entertained, and I confess I still entertain, great doubt whether the Impugnant ought to be allowed again to [353] raise this question by protest, inasmuch as in the year 1843, when a suit precisely similar to the present was instituted against him by the same Promovent, he then put in the same protest, which, after solemn argument, was overruled in an elaborate and careful judgment by Sir Erskine Perry, then Puisne Judge of the Court; the Chief Justice, who had been prevented by illness from hearing the argument, fully concurring in the conclusion that the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction did extend to Parsees, as appears by a full report recently published by Sir Erskine Perry in his collection of Oriental Cases, and that decision has been followed in at least one other case, which is also reported in the same volume. Buchaboye v. Merwanjee Nasserwanjee. (Oriental Cases, 73.) However, as this is an important question of jurisdiction, and the former decision does not seem to have been acted on by the Promovent in this case, and as my learned brother dissents from that judgment, I have thought it better not to content myself by merely referring to the former judgment, but to examine afresh the arguments which have been adduced on both sides of the question; but in so doing it is not my intention to travel over the same ground traversed by Sir Erskine Perry in his judgment, but to consider a few points in the argument which have been adverted to either not at all, or not so fully as their bearing on the question seems to demand. The Act, 4 Geo. IV., c. 71, under the immediate authority of which the Charter establishing this Court was granted, after reciting that it might be expedient for the better administration of justice in Bombay, that a Supreme Court of Judicature should be established at Bombay, in the same form and with the same powers and authorities as [354] that now subsisting, by virtue of the several Acts before mentioned, at Fort William in Bengal, enacts, by section 7, 'that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, by Charter or Letters Patent under the Great Seal, to erect and establish a Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay aforesaid, to consist of such and the like number of persons to be named from time to time by His Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, with full power to exercise such Civil, Criminal, Admiralty, and Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, both as to natives and British subjects, and to be invested with such powers and authorities, privileges and immunities, for the better administration of the same, and subject to the same limitations, restrictions and control within the said town and island of Bombay, and the limits thereof, and the territories subordinate thereto, and within the territories which now are or hereafter may be subject to or dependent upon the said Government of Bombay, as the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, by virtue of any law now in force and unrepealed doth consist of, is invested with, or subject to, within the said Fort William, or the places subject to or dependent on the Government thereof; and by section 17 of the same Act, it is declared and enacted (amongst other things), 'that it shall be lawful for the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay to be created by virtue of this Act, within the said town and island of Bombay and the limits thereof, and the factories subordinate thereto, and within the territories which now are or hereafter may be subject to or dependent upon the said Government of Bombay, and the said Supreme Courts are thereby required, within the same respectively, to do, execute, perform, and [355] fulfil all such acts, authorities, duties, matters and things whatsoever as the said Supreme Court of Fort William is or may be lawfully authorised, empowered, or directed to do, execute, perform, and fulfil within Fort William in Bengal aforesaid, or the places subject to or dependent upon the Government thereof.'

"I have been the more particular in setting out these two sections, because upon the language of the 7th section, as distinguished from that of the 13th Geo. III., c. 63, s. 13, under which the Supreme Court at Calcutta was erected, is founded an argument, that if the Court at Calcutta has Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the natives of India residing within its jurisdiction, it does not thence follow that this Court has such jurisdiction, because the 7th section of the 4th Geo. IV., c. 71, only empowers the Crown to erect a Court, with the powers and authorities therein described, and that, therefore, we must look to the Charter itself to ascertain the extent of the jurisdiction conferred; whereas by the 13th Geo. III., c. 63, sec. 13, it is declared that the Court to be erected 'shall have, and the said Court is thereby declared to have, full power and authority to exercise and perform all civil, criminal, admiralty and ecclesiastical jurisdiction,' etc. Now, I feel compelled altogether to dissent from this argument, for I think it impossible that the Legislature could more clearly have expressed its intention that the Court to be erected at Bombay should be a Court with jurisdiction co-extensive with that of the Supreme Court of Calcutta than it has done in the 17th section of the Act, which I have cited, and which seems to me to give, by relation, to the Court here, any authority and power which the Court at Calcutta may have derived from the language of the [356] 13th Geo. III., c. 63, sec. 13; and if that be so, the argument which goes to show that the decision of the Supreme Court at Calcutta in the Beebee Muttra's case (Clarke's Rules, p. 119) is no authority in this case, entirely falls to the ground, and we must take it, that if by virtue of the language of the Act, 13 Geo. III., c. 63, the Supreme Court at Calcutta has the jurisdiction, this Court also, by virtue of the language of the 4th Geo. IV., c. 71, equally possesses it. But without for the present either adopting or rejecting the view of Chief Justice Russell, as to the force and power of the words cited, let us proceed to examine those clauses of our own Charter in which the jurisdiction of the Court is defined.

"The language of the clause of the Charter granting Ecclesiastical jurisdiction is as follows:— And it is our further will and pleasure, and we do hereby, for us our heirs and successors, grant, establish, and appoint that the Supreme Court at Judicature at Bombay shall be a Court of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and shall have full power and authority to administer and execute within and throughout the town and island of Bombay, and the factories subordinate thereto, and all the territories which now are or hereafter may be subject to or dependent upon the said Government, and towards and upon all persons so described and distinguished by the appellation of British subjects as aforesaid there residing, the Ecclesiastical law, as the same is now used and exercised in the Diocese of London in Great Britain, so far as the circumstances and occasion of the said town, island, territories and people shall admit or require, and to that purpose we give and grant to the said Supreme Court at Bombay full power and authority to take [357] cognizance of and proceed in all causes, suits, and business belonging and appertaining to the Ecclesiastical Court before the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay, in whatsoever manner to be moved, as well at the instance or promotion of parties as of office, mere or mixed, against any of the said subjects residing in the said town, island, territories or districts, and which by the law and custom of the said Diocese of London are of ecclesiastical cognizance, and the said causes, suits and business, with their incidents, emergents and dependents, and whatsoever is thereto annexed and therewith connected, to hear, dispatch, discuss, determine, and also to grant probates under the seal, etc., of the last wills and testaments of all or any of the said subjects of us, our heirs and successors, dying and leaving personal effects within the said town, islands, territories or districts respectively, and of all persons who shall die or have effects within the places aforesaid,' etc., etc.

"The difficulty in the construction of this clause arises mainly upon the words 'and towards and upon all persons so described by the appellation of British subjects': and it is contended for the Impugnant, that these words do not include any of the Asiatic inhabitants of the Island of Bombay, even though they and their forefathers may have been subjects of the Crown of England for many generations; and this term 'British subjects' has undoubtedly given rise to much discussion; and an opinion of Sir Charles Grey has been cited from the Fifth Appendix to the Third Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Affairs of the East India Company, 17th February to 6th October, 1831, in which, after admitting the great obscurity which the meaning of [358] the term, as used in various Acts of Parliament and Charters, is involved, he says, 'Perhaps if I were asked what I myself should say approached to a criterion of any question whether a person is within the meaning of this expression as it is used in the Statutes and the later Charters, it would be, whether he is a subject by any other title than that of birth within British India, and that if he is a subject in any other way he is a British subject according to the meaning of the Madras and Bombay Charters; but that if he has no other claim than that of birth in British India, he is not.' Sir Charles Grey then expresses himself, as it seems to me, very doubtingly upon the sufficiency of this definition or description: and certainly one does not see very clearly why the term 'British subjects' should be held to include any native, whatever his colour or race, of Jamaica, or any other dependency of Great Britain not included in the British Isles, and yet be held not to include persons born in an Island which has been a dependency of the Crown since 1661, and the natives of which have, since that time, owed no allegiance to any other power; and I cannot help thinking that all Sir Charles Grey meant to say was, that such a construction might avoid many and perhaps most of the difficulties which have arisen from the use of the term.

"It is further contended in argument, that the difference of the language of the clause of the Charter now under consideration, as to the granting of probates, indicates an intention that the power to grant probates should have a more extensive application than the general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction granted by the first part of the clause, and that such intention is manifested by the words 'and of all persons who [359] shall die or have effects within the places aforesaid,' which words are not in the Calcutta Charter, and therefore it is argued those words were clearly introduced for the purpose of including the native subjects of the Crown in this Island, which clearly shows that it was not intended that the former part of the clause should apply to them. But are the words proper for this purpose? What are 'the places aforesaid'? We must refer back to the former part of the clause, and we find that the places aforesaid are the 'town and Island of Bombay and the limits thereof, and the factories subordinate thereto, and all the territories which now are or hereafter may be subject to or dependent upon the said Government,' which would now include the whole of the Bombay Presidency, and perhaps the newly-acquired Province of Scinde. How, then, can it be for a moment contended that these words were introduced merely for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to grant probates of the Wills of the native inhabitants of the Island of Bombay? Probably the intention with which these words were introduced may have been to enable the Court to grant probate of the wills of foreigners dying and leaving bona notabilia in the jurisdiction, 'or' meaning 'and.' But it is not necessary at present to determine the meaning of those words. It is sufficient to show that of themselves they afford no argument that natives are not included in the jurisdiction granted by the former part of the clause. Now, if that be so, we have no more jurisdiction to grant probate of the Wills of the Asiatic native inhabitants of this Island than we have to exercise a general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over them; that is to say, none at all, unless they are included in the term 'persons [360] distinguished by the appellation of British subjects,' or unless we can put some reasonable construction upon the Charter which would include them as well as British subjects of British descent. That is difficult, I admit, but not insuperable if we read the Charter in conjunction with the Act of Parliament under the authority of which it was granted, and which authorised the erection of a Court 'with full power to exercise such Civil, Criminal, Admiralty, and Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, both as to natives and British subjects, etc., within the said town,' etc. Now, if we take the clause conferring the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and apply the words 'and towards and upon all persons so described and distinguished by the appellation of British subjects as aforesaid' to the words immediately preceding, viz. 'and all the territories which now are, or hereafter may be, subject to or dependent upon the said Government,' and to those words only, we might then hold that we had an Ecclesiastical jurisdiction within and throughout the town and island of Bombay, and also over British subjects, in the narrower sense of the term, in the other territories subject to the government of Bombay; and this construction would be in strict conformity with the practice of the Court ever since it was established, and is moreover favoured by the language used, the words 'and towards,' etc., seeming to couple the words following with the sentence immediately preceding, and being unnecessary and ungrammatical if the operation of the former words was to be confined to 'persons described and distinguished by the appellation of British subjects'; and further, the words 'there residing' may, with at least equal grammatical correctness, be applied to 'the territories which now [361] are or hereafter may be subject to or dependent upon the Government of Bombay,' as to the whole of the local definition of the jurisdiction. This construction would give us a jurisdiction local and universal in the town and island of Bombay, and personal over British subjects in the territories dependent upon the Government of Bombay; and this construction alone (if the natives of Bombay may not be described as British subjects) would be in conformity with the jurisdiction heretofore exercised by the Court, and seems to satisfy and reconcile the language of the Statutes and the Charters. I have shown that the Statute gives the Court a general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and it is laid down by Chief Justice Russell, in Beebee Muttra's case, on the authority of Lord Kenyon, in The King v. Miller (6 Term Rep. 268), that the King's Charter could not essentially narrow the powers granted by Act of Parliament; nor do I think there was any intention to do so, the Charter being intended rather to particularize and specify the powers of the Court than to limit and control them.

"But another argument has been used against the exercise of an Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over any other inhabitants than those of British parentage or descent, on the ground that the Ecclesiastical Courts are essentially Courts Christian, and that their jurisdiction cannot be applicable to persons of any other religion, because formerly the sentences of those Courts were enforced by the greater or lesser excommunication, a process which, in the case of a Hindoo, or Fire worshipper, would be simply absurd. To this it may be answered, that excommunication was abolished by the 53rd Geo. III., c. 127, and consequently was not, at the date of our Charter, the practice of the Diocese of [362] London; and if the argument is good for anything it tends to show that the Supreme Courts in India cannot reasonably exercise any Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over natives who are not Christians, either for granting probates, or letters of administration, or otherwise. But the Charter seems to have been framed with a view to meet objections of this nature, for it expressly provides (sec. 29) that 'in all suits so to be determined by the laws and usages of the said natives, the said Courts shall make such rules and orders for the conduct of the same, and frame such process for the execution of their judgments, sentences, or decrees, as shall be most consonant to the religion and manners of the said natives, and to the said laws and usages respectively, and the easy attainment of the ends of justice'; and the whole Charter is conceived in the same enlarged and liberal spirit, looking rather to the substantial ends of justice than to an exact conformity to the proceedings of English Courts of law.

"It has been pointed out, too, that Sir Erskine Perry's judgment proceeds on the assumption, that unless the Court exercise an Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, natives of Bombay would have no means of enforcing the rights and obligations springing from the married state, and would be altogether without remedy: and in reply to this argument, it is suggested that the wife, in a case like the present, might sue her husband, either on the equity or plea side of the Court, and that at all events persons supplying her with necessities might sue him. That is quite true, and it might constitute some argument against the existence of an Ecclesiastical jurisdiction in such cases, if the only 'conjugal rights' acquired by marriage by a [363] Parsee female were a right to be maintained at the expense of her husband; but though it is true that marriage is a contract, it is something more than a contract. It is the most important of all social institutions, and under it a female acquires a status, rights, and privileges which would be very inadequately vindicated by an action for necessities: and I am not aware of any authority for the position that she could enforce those rights and privileges by a suit against her husband on the equity side of the Court. I think it is much more natural to suppose that the Legislature, when it was about to erect Courts of plenary authority and jurisdiction in the presidency towns of British India on the model of the Courts of various jurisdictions in England, and expressly conferred upon the Indian Courts those different species of jurisdiction, it was intended that the procedure should be, so far as was consistent with the circumstances of the country and its inhabitants, conformable to that of the Courts in England respectively exercising the corresponding jurisdictions. And, finally, this jurisdiction has been so long exercised in the Supreme Court and the Recorder's Court that it has, to use the language of Lord Mansfield, become 'a rooted and established practice,' not to be disturbed except upon sure and sufficient grounds. A suit of this kind was entertained by Sir James Macintosh when Recorder; and we have seen that two suits of a similar kind were entertained by Sir Erskine Perry, to whose judgment in the case between these very parties I beg leave more particularly to refer,—a judgment founded upon much research and inquiry, and an extensive knowledge of the subject. Under these circumstances, even if I saw more reason than I do to [364] doubt the soundness of the views of my predecessors, I should pause before I took upon myself to reverse a current of decisions which has flowed all in one direction for half a century, or thereabouts, and I believe still longer. I think it would be incumbent on me, even if I entertained much more serious doubts than I feel on this occasion, to act upon those uniform decisions until they shall have been reversed by a superior tribunal."

The judgment of Sir Charles Jackson, the Puisne Judge, was as follows:—"Two questions appear to be raised by this protest, first, whether this Court has any and what Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over Parsees, and if it has, secondly, to what extent such jurisdiction can be properly exercised between Parsees.

"The first question, whether this Court has any and what Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over Parsees, must be decided upon the construction of the Act of Parliament authorising the establishment of this Court, and the Charter of the King passed in pursuance of that Act. The 4th Geo. IV., c. 71, sec. 7, authorised His Majesty, by Charter, to erect and establish a Supreme Court at Bombay, 'with full powers to exercise such civil, criminal, admiralty, and Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, both as to natives and British subjects, and to be invested with such powers and authorities, privileges and immunities, for the better administration of the same, and subject to the same limitations, restrictions and control within the said town and island of Bombay and the limits thereof, and the territories subordinate thereto, and within the territories which now or hereafter may be subject to or dependent upon the Government of Bombay, as the said [365] Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal by virtue of any law now in force and unrepealed doth consist of, is invested with, or subject to, within the said Fort William, or the places subject to or dependent on the Government thereof.' It is clear from this section, that the Legislature contemplated the issuing of a Charter giving this Court an Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over natives as well as British subjects, and the same power to administer the same as the Supreme Court at Calcutta was invested with; and it appears from the 17th section that this Court, when created, is required 'to do, execute, perform, and fulfil all such acts, authorities, duties, matters, and things whatsoever as the Supreme Court at Calcutta is or may be lawfully authorised, empowered, or directed to do, execute, perform, and fulfil,' etc. Considering the terms of this enactment, and the positive language of section 13 of the 13th Geo. III., c. 63, conferring a general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction on the Supreme Court at Calcutta, and the decision of that Court in Beebee Muttra's case, I think, it is clear that this Act confers upon this Court an Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the natives of Bombay.

"The Charter establishing this Court, dated the 8th of December, 1823, must next be considered. The 47th section of that Charter regulates our Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and appears to be divisible into two parts. The first part of the section gives an Ecclesiastical jurisdiction in all causes and suits which are of Ecclesiastical cognizance; and the second gives power to grant Probates and Letters of Administration; and the terms employed throughout the section, describing the classes of persons subject to these different jurisdictions, are very remarkable. The first part of the section grants the Court Ecclesiastical [366] jurisdiction 'towards and upon all persons so described and distinguished by the appellation of British subjects,'—'as the same is now used and exercised in the Diocese of London in Great Britain, so far as the circumstances and occasion of the said town, etc., shall admit or require,' and for that purpose authority is given to this Court to hear and determine all causes of Ecclesiastical cognizance brought 'against any of the said subjects.' The second part empowers the Court to grant Probates of the Wills 'of all or any of the said subjects,' 'dying and leaving personal effects within the said town, etc., and of all persons who shall die or have effects within the places aforesaid.' These last words, 'and of all persons,' etc., could not have been inadvertently inserted in this section, for they are not to be found in the Calcutta Charter (of which the Ecclesiastical section in this and the Madras Charters is in other respects a copy), and their insertion here raises the construction, that it was intended to let in a larger class of persons to the benefit of the jurisdiction regarding Probates than was provided for in the previous part of the section regarding Ecclesiastical suits. It is material, therefore, to ascertain what persons are meant by the description of 'persons so described and distinguished by the appellation of British subjects;' whether this description means, as is contended, on the one hand, that anomalous class of persons, so well described by Sir Charles Grey in his Minute in the Report on the Affairs of the East India Company,—a class difficult to define, but well understood in the common parlance of the Supreme Courts; or whether it means all inhabitants of this Island, excepting aliens. We find the same expression used in the 28th section of the Charter, in which the jurisdiction in Civil suits and actions is [367] confined to such 'persons as have been heretofore described and distinguished in our Charters of Justice for Bombay by the appellation of British subjects;' and this section is followed by the 29th, which gives the Supreme Court jurisdiction in all suits and actions against the inhabitants of Bombay. This last clause applies to the inhabitants generally, and does not appear to be introduced merely for the purpose of giving jurisdiction over aliens, inasmuch as it provides, in the cases of Mahomedans and Gentoos, that their peculiar laws should be preserved to them; and I, therefore, think that these two sections, taken together, show that the 28th section applied to a particular class of British subjects, and not to all the inhabitants of Bombay. We find the same expression in the 43rd section of the Charter, which empowers the sheriff to summon in criminal cases juries 'being persons so heretofore described and distinguished as British subjects'; and it is clear that under that clause of the Charter, previous to the year 1826, all the inhabitants of Bombay could not serve on juries, for in that case the Statute, 7th Geo. IV., c. 37, which was passed to render all inhabitants (not being aliens) capable of serving on juries, was wholly unnecessary. On the whole, therefore, I think that from the reference to former Charters in section 28, and from the position in which the expression is found in that section, and from the terms of the 43rd section, and Statute, 7th Geo. IV., c. 37, that the expression 'described and distinguished as British subjects' cannot mean all the inhabitants of Bombay, and that it must be understood as meaning British subjects in a restricted sense, and excluding all those 'subjects' who have no other claim than that of birth in British India. Such was the opinion of Sir Charles Grey on [368] the meaning of that term, as expressed in the report to which I have referred; and such was the opinion of Sir Edward Ryan, arrived at in Beebee Muttra's case (Clarke's Rules, p. 142); and though the other Judges dissented from him in that decision, it would appear from the report that Chief Justice Sir William Russell did not dissent from this construction of the term 'British subjects.' (Clarke's Rules, p. 127.) Then, again, I think that the different language used in the latter part of section 47 of the Charter, in which the jurisdiction is given to grant Probates of the Wills 'of the said subjects,' 'and of all persons who shall die or have effects within the places aforesaid,' was probably introduced for the purpose of avoiding the question which arose in Beebee Muttra's case; and it certainly is improbable that they should have been so introduced for the purpose of meeting the case of aliens and sojourners only, a suggestion which seems to me answered by a comparison of sections 28 and 29 of the Charter, in which the term 'British subjects' is evidently used in contradistinction to the other native inhabitants of Bombay.

"Having thus ascertained the strict meaning of the term 'described and distinguished as British subjects,' in the first part of this section, I will proceed to examine some of the grounds on which it has been attempted to give those words a more extensive construction. First, it is said that this construction will exclude from the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of this Court, except with respect to Probate and Administration, not only Parsees, Hindoos, Mahomedans, and Jews, but also the Portuguese and native Christian inhabitants of this Island. This is not so, for under the general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction vested in us by the 4th Geo. IV., c. 71, we might still entertain all [369] suits of an Ecclesiastical nature 'which the circumstances and occasion' of such parties might require; but whether we ought to exercise with respect to all these parties such general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction is a question of grave doubt, for such a jurisdiction seems wholly inapplicable to Asiatics, whose creed admits of polygamy and great facilities of divorce.

"Then again it is argued, that the 28th section of the Charter gives this Court jurisdiction to determine all suits and actions whatsoever, and is supposed to give us an Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over natives, if section 47 does not. The words in the 28th section are certainly large and general, and would, I think, justify us in entertaining an action by Perozeboye against her husband for his breach of contract in not maintaining her; but it is manifest, looking at the whole Charter, and particularly at sections 10, 41, 42, 43, 44, and 47, that section 28 was only intended to define the jurisdiction of this Court in plea side cases, and so it has always been understood. If section 28 had the extensive meaning now sought to be put upon it, many of the clauses in the Charter to which I have referred were wholly unnecessary.

"Assuming, then, that the Charter does not contemplate the exercise of any Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over natives, except with respect to Probates and Letters of Administration, and assuming that the Act 4th Geo. IV., c. 71, does confer a general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over natives, and that, in accordance with Beebee Muttra's case, nothing in our Charter can limit or restrict the general jurisdiction so given, I still doubt whether we ought to entertain a suit for restitution of conjugal rights between Parsees. We find that we have a vague general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over natives under the Act; and that the Charter, [370] in which we should expect to find that jurisdiction more clearly defined, does not contemplate the exercise of any such jurisdiction, except with respect to Probates and Letters of Administration. Surely if the Charter itself is so cautious in developing the general jurisdiction given over natives by the Act, it behoves us to erince as much caution in exercising that jurisdiction. I can conceive some subjects of Ecclesiastical cognisance,—alimony for instance,—which, upon admitted marriage, it might be proper to enforce under the general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction as between parties other than Christians; but I should not be disposed to enforce as between persons of this class personal duties which may not flow from the contract of marriage as understood by them, or laid down in their creed, and which certainly have not been made of positive obligation by any law or Statute. It is the policy and intention of this Charter to adapt our Ecclesiastical jurisdiction to British subjects 'so far as the circumstances and occasion of the said town, island, territories and people shall admit or require;' and acting in that spirit, I think we should hesitate before we introduced among Asiatics so peculiar a form of proceeding as this. The jurisdiction to compel cohabitation seems to flow peculiarly from the Canonist's notions of indissolubility of a Christian marriage, and the obligation, under dread of spiritual censure, to perform all conjugal duties, and is, therefore, I think, inapplicable to natives, who are not bound by any law that I know of to live with their wives, and are allowed great facilities of divorce. If a suit of this nature can be entertained, we may be called on hereafter to compel a native woman to return to her husband's roof, under which he has other wives, who monopolise his attentions, or we may [371] compel a Mussulmanee to return to her husband's house, to be divorced the minute afterwards, by an imprecation. And indeed it appears from the case of Buchaboye v. Merwanjee Nusserwanjee (Perry's Oriental Cases, p. 73), that the Parsees also claim great facilities of divorce. These may be extreme cases, but I think they show the inapplicability of this form of suit to Asiatics. It is true that in an old case, Andries v. Andries, the Consistory Court in England held, that they had jurisdiction in a cause for restitution of conjugal rights, brought by a Jewess against her husband, a Jew. Sir William Wynne, in Lindo v. Belisario, explains this case, and does so on the ground that the marriage was admitted, and that the Ecclesiastical Court was the only one they could apply to for the purpose. (1 Hagg. Cons. Rep. Appx. 9.) The observations of Sir William Wynne on Andries v. Andries were quite extrajudicial; and it would seem from his observation (ib. p. 11), and those of Sir William Scott (1 Hagg. Cons. Rep. 216) in Lindo v. Belisario, that they entertained great doubt, if not on the jurisdiction, at least upon the propriety of exercising it, in a question of marriage by Jewish law, and, but for the request of the Lord Chancellor, and with the view of assisting him, would have declined to exercise it; and if they doubted their jurisdiction to determine the validity of such a marriage, they surely must have doubted it with respect to enforcing the personal duties flowing from such a marriage. The doubts of these learned Judges respecting their jurisdiction in matters relating to the validity of Jewish marriages leads me to decline jurisdiction in a much stronger case, in which I am called on to enforce personal duties arising out of a marriage between Parsees; personal duties which are unknown and undefined by [372] any law that I am aware of. No written authority has been cited showing that a Parsee husband must live with his wife, although they disagree; and I cannot see any natural law imposing such a duty, under such circumstances; for the natural law, as between natives, would rather appear to be that they should live separate when they cannot dwell together in peace.

"But it does not follow, because we decline to exercise a general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over Parsee, Mahomedan, and Hindoo inhabitants of Bombay, and refuse to entertain suits by them for restitution of conjugal rights, that, therefore, they are without all remedy in such cases as these. By an adaptation of the law of alimony to a state of circumstances like these, we might still give the wife a remedy against her husband in the Ecclesiastical Court. Having this general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over natives, we might perhaps exercise it so far as to make a native husband do justice, and maintain his wife; but it is quite a different thing to say that a native husband shall cohabit with his wife, whether he likes it or not; for that appears to me to be an adjudication applicable to Christians only, and somewhat anomalous when applied to Asiatics; and if any objection (which does not occur to me) should exist to that course, I cannot see why she should not have a right of action against her husband for damages, or a suit in equity for a maintenance. Marriage, whatever the form of the contract may be, constitutes, if not an express, at all events an implied contract between the parties that the husband shall maintain his wife. In Christian countries a breach of this contract cannot be enforced by the wife in a Civil Court directly against the husband, because the law considers a man and his wife [373] as one person, and will not permit an action by the wife against her husband; but no such principle is known to the Mahomedan, Hindoo, or Parsee law; and the Supreme Courts at Calcutta and here have always treated native married women as femes sole, and indeed it is quite impossible, upon any a priori or natural reasoning, to treat them as anything else. There being, then, as alleged in this case, a breach of contract, the husband having refused to receive his wife, having forcibly expelled her from his house, and having failed to maintain her, what is there to prevent this Parsee feme sole from bringing an action against her husband for damages, or a suit in equity for a maintenance past and future, to be secured from his estate? A great wrong has been done her, and there must be some remedy. The mere fact that such an action is novel, and unknown to the English law, would be no answer to her claim, for the reasons already stated; and she seems to have just the same right to sue in respect of this breach, as any other person has to sue for any other breach of contract; and there is certainly nothing impolitic or contra bonos mores, in her recovering damages for the wrong done her, or obtaining that maintenance, past and future, to which she is justly entitled; and I must say, I think that this lady would have a remedy directly against her husband. But even if this were not so, under the circumstances he alleged it is clear that the parties who supply her with necessaries will be entitled to recover against her husband, and this Court has already so decided.

The only question which remains is no doubt entitled to much consideration. It is forcibly urged, that the question has already been decided by a judgment [374] of Sir Erskine Perry between these parties, and that his judgment has since been followed in another case, and that it would be wrong now to re-open the question. This objection would have had more weight if the parties had ever acted on the previous decision in this case; but it appears that after Sir Erskine Perry's judgment, no further steps were taken, and the cause dropped, and that now an entirely new suit has been commenced, to which the present protest has been put in. I am anxious, of course, to pay every respect to the opinions of this Court; but I should not have thought that the cases referred to established such a course of decision as precluded us from inquiring further into a question of jurisdiction, more especially when we find that no such suit has ever been recognised at Calcutta, or I believe at Madras, and there is no report of any enforcement of cohabitation here. For, notwithstanding the strong opinion of the Chief Justice, I still think there is some doubt how far the language of the Charter, directing us, in 1823, to proceed in Ecclesiastical matters according to the practice of the Diocese of London, has the effect of introducing into this country the Statute, 53rd Geo. III., c. 127, by which the process of excommunication in such cases was abolished, and other process substituted. However, if I am wrong in entertaining this question, and not feeling bound by authority, I am happy to think that the expression of my opinion must, from the constitution of this Court, be peculiarly harmless."

In pursuance of the practice of the Supreme Court, an Order was made in accordance with the judgment of the Chief Justice, discharging the protest with costs.

[375] The Appellant appealed from this Order to Her Majesty in Council (a). The appeal was argued by

(a) Previous to the hearing of the appeal a search was made at the instance of the Respondent, among the records of the Supreme Court at Bombay and the late Recorder's Court, for any records of Ecclesiastical suits between natives of India or other Asiatics for any causes matrimonial, when the following authorities were reported by the acting Registrar and certified to the Judicial Committee to be the only cases on record, from the earliest date at which these records commenced, to the present time:—

1. Anna Petruse v. Jacob Petruse, of Bombay, Armenian. The libel was filed on the 7th day of January, 1802, for alimony. On the 3rd day of May, 1802, sentence of the Court was signed in this cause, and on the 23rd of March, 1805, the Court ordered an attachment to issue against the goods and chattels of the Impugnant, per monthly alimony due to Promovent.

2. Dustagool Johannes v. Gregory Johannes, of Bombay, Armenian. The libel was filed on the 10th of September, 1811, for divorce and separation from the bed and board and mutual cohabitation. On the 28th of July, 1812, the Court, by consent, dismissed the libel; and on the 20th of October, 1812, it was ordered that the original account in Armenian should be delivered to the Impugnant.

The Queen's Advocate (Sir John Harding) and Mr. Ayrton, for the Appellant, and Dr. Addams and Mr. Le Messieur, for the Respondent.

[376] The Queen's Advocate [Sir John Harding].---There are two important questions for decision in this case: first, what jurisdiction the Supreme Court [377] at Bombay possesses in circumstances such as are here presented; and secondly, whether the jurisdiction, if it exists, has been properly evoked. The case comes on upon the Appellant's protest to the jurisdiction of the Court. The parties are Parsees, and the real question is, whether the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, "as exercised in the Diocese of London," can be applied to Parsee inhabitants of Bombay, who are governed by their own peculiar laws, and as between whom, coming under the general designation of "Gentoos," all matters of contract and dealing are to be determined by their own laws and usages. The first mention of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction conferred on the Supreme Court at Bombay, is in the Statute, 37th Geo. III., c. 142, sec. 9, which enabled His Majesty to erect Courts of Judicature in Madras and Bombay respectively, with "full power and authority to exercise and perform all Civil, Criminal, and Ecclesiastical and Admiralty jurisdiction." The Statute then defines the extent of the general jurisdiction of the Court, while section 12, which is extremely germane to the present question, "in order," as it is there expressed, "that due regard may be had to the civil and religious usages of the natives, enacts that the rights and authorities of Fathers and Masters of families, according as the

3. Sahibnaboye v. Shaikjee Zarah, of Bombay, Mahomedan, libel filed on the 16th of June, 1815, for decree to pronounce that the marriage which took place between the parties was void and of no effect. On the 8th of July, 1815, Court granted to Impugnant leave to defend this suit in forma pauperis, and no further proceedings took place.

4. Perozeboye v. Ardaseer Cursetjee, of Bombay, Parsee, libel filed on the 8th of July, 1843, for decree that the said Ardaseer Cursetjee do take back the said Perozeboye his lawful wife, and treat her with conjugal kindness. On the 21st of September, 1843, Court overruled the protest with costs; and on the 19th of October, 1843, leave to appeal was granted, and no further proceedings.

5. Buchoooye v. Merwanjee Nasserwanjee, of Bombay, Parsee, libel filed on the 2nd of February, 1844, for decree that the said Merwanjee Nasserwanjee do take home and receive the said Buchoooye his wife, and treat her with marital affection and to render her conjugal rights. On the 20th of April, 1846, sentence of Court signed, and filed the same on the 7th of May, 1846.

6. Perozeboye v. Nanabhoj Framjee, of Bombay, Parsee, libel filed on the 17th of February, 1844, for decree that the said Nanabhoj Framjee do take home and receive the said Perozeboye his wife, and to treat her with marital affection and to render her conjugal rights. On the 1st of January, 1846, sentence was signed in this cause, and filed the same on the 2nd of January, 1846.

7. Buchoooye v. Merwanjee Nasserwanjee, of Bombay, Parsee inhabitants, libel filed on the 8th of June, 1849, for divorce and separation. On the 22nd of September, 1851, cause called on for hearing and was struck out, the Impugnant being dead.

8. Perozeboye v. Ardaseer Cursetjee, of Bombay, Parsees, libel filed on the 7th of November, 1853, for decree that the said Ardaseer Cursetjee do take back his lawful wife the said Perozeboye, and treat her with conjugal kindness, and to provide for her alimony in the event of the said Ardaseer Cursetjee refusing to receive her back. On the 10th of August, 1854, Court granted leave to appeal, and on the 13th of November, 1854, the petition to Queen in Council was filed.

9. Awaboye v. Nasserwanjee Merwanjee, of Bombay, Parsees, libel filed on the 23rd of November, 1853, for decree that the said Nasserwanjee Merwanjee do take back his wife the said Awaboye, and render her conjugal rights, and alimony, pendente lite. On the 22nd of September, 1854, answer of the Impugnant filed, and no further proceedings.

10. Khursedball v. Bazenjee Dossaboy Barterna, of Bombay, Parsee, libel filed on the 18th of October, 1854, for alimony. On the 25th of June, 1855, sentence was pronounced and signed in this cause, and the same was filed on the 25th of August, 1855.

same may be exercised by the Gentoo or Mahomedan law, shall be preserved to them within their families respectively, nor shall the same be violated or interrupted by any of the proceedings of the said Courts." What could be a greater violation or interruption of a Parsee family than to introduce and enforce among them the Ecclesiastical law as exercised in the [378] Diocese of London? They are not British subjects in the sense intended by the Charter. The first Charter of Justice granted to Bombay was under this Act. Being under the authority of an Act of Parliament, it cannot exceed the exact terms of the Act, The King v. Miller (6 Term Reps. 268; and see The Queen v. Eduljee Byramjee, 3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 468; The Queen v. Alloo Paroo, ib. 488). There is no sufficient proof of the exercise of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction by the Mayor's Court which preceded the Supreme Court, though, in a note by Sir Erskine Perry (Perry's Oriental Cases, p. 65), it is stated that an Admiralty jurisdiction was conferred in 1683. It is true that that learned Judge held, in a case similar to this, that the Ecclesiastical laws did apply to Parsees, and in a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights awarded alimony, pendente lite (Ibid. p. 73). There was, however, no precedent for such a decision, except a case between the same parties as in this suit (Ibid. p. 57), decided a few years previously by the same learned Judge, which was never appealed to England. The precedents produced from the Register of the Court are neither strong in themselves, nor do they prove more than the assumption of the jurisdiction by the Supreme Court, and submission to it by the natives of India, who were wholly ignorant of the matter. The present Charter of Justice is in substitution of that under the Statute, 37 Geo. III., c. 142, but contains the same provisions regarding the jurisdiction and Ecclesiastical law.

It is scarcely necessary to argue the second question. The suit is wholly informal; it purports to be [379] for a restitution of conjugal rights, but prays not that alimony, pendente lite, should be decreed, but that the husband shall pay his wife a stipulated sum for separate maintenance. If the Supreme Court had all the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction possessed by the Consistory and Arches Courts in England, this Court upon appeal could not make such a decree, or anything like it, upon these pleadings. The Judges in the Court below, though they differ in opinion, are equally in error on the grounds of their decision: the Chief Justice considered himself ruled by the cases decided by his predecessor, and the analogy of the Bombay Charter to that of Fort William. No case was, however, cited before him as having been determined in that Court, and your Lordships have been informed by the learned late Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Peel, that in a case before him, when presiding at Calcutta, between natives, it was unanimously agreed by the Judges in Court that by the true constitution of the Charter it could never be intended that Ecclesiastical law was introduced, or could be enforced against natives professing a wholly different creed from Europeans. The other learned Judge, Sir Charles Jackson, seems to found his opinion against the jurisdiction, on the supposition that marriage is a civil contract, which, per se, entitles the wife to an action for maintenance. We know of no such law in our Courts here, nor do I apprehend, except under the Poor Laws, that any such right exists. The wife's title to a settlement in Equity is the only thing the least resembling such a right, but that is under a totally different state of circumstances, and has nothing to do with Ecclesiastical law.

[380] Mr. Ayrton.—Though precedents have been produced from the files of the Court below, this case is, in fact, one of first impression. The decisions of Sir Erskine Perry were not upon the same state of facts as arise here, nor do the pleadings appear to have been in the same form; and an argument was there raised also before that learned Judge against the exercise of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction where the parties were Parsees, which he overruled. The assumption of such jurisdiction by the Supreme Court in such cases is of no higher value than the judgment we now appeal against. The whole question turns upon the true construction of the Bombay Charter of 1823 the words of which must govern the case, Morgan v. Leach (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 428). The authority to apply English law in suits in equity, or common law, is general as regards English residents in Bombay (Charter, cls. 6, 10, 28, 29), but is not extended to natives; they are expressly exempted; their suits are to be determined by their own laws and usages. How, then, can the Court administer the Ecclesiastical law of England in the case of natives, who are exempt from the Common law and principles of Equity prevailing here?

Dr. Addams.—This application of the Ecclesiastical law to Parsees is not for the first time introduced. The precedents show that suits for restitution of conjugal rights have been frequently brought, and uniformly entertained by the Supreme Court at Bombay, and that long before the decision of the two cases cited from [381] Sir Erskine Perry's "Oriental Cases." From the precedents existing in the Registry of the Court, that learned Judge could have come to no other decision. In the case between these parties, the learned Chief Justice has gone most fully into the origin and history of this jurisdiction, which it is plain has been exercised from the first introduction of English law into India. The protest is against the parties being subject to British laws at all: they say they are not British subjects, and, therefore, that the Ecclesiastical law cannot be applied to them. But they are living under the protection of the British rule, and within the territories belonging to Great Britain, and if, therefore, they are not expressly exempted by the Charter, they must be subject to the law there provided for all residents within the limits of Bombay. Are they, then, either, Mahomedans or Gentoos? for they are the only classes exempt. Parsees are not named or alluded to, either in the Charter or Act of Parliament.

With regard to the pleadings, they are sufficient for the object of the suit, which is one for restitution of conjugal rights; the prayer for maintenance is a prayer for alimony, for that is the only maintenance the Ecclesiastical Court can give, and must be, in the first instance, pendente lite. If the pleadings in substance are sufficient, this Court will not refuse to administer justice on account of an irregularity in form.

Mr. Le Messurier.—There is no question that the Supreme Court at Bombay possesses Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, that is given by the 47th section of the Charter. By the [382] 37th section, that Court is empowered to frame rules and process in all suits to be brought in that Court; and rules of practice and procedure have been accordingly framed, and exist. The sole question then is, whether these parties, being Parsees, are amenable to the jurisdiction established. The Supreme Court has jurisdiction over all British subjects residing within the factory, or subject to, or dependent on, the Government of Bombay; that is expressly provided by section 28. The Government permits these parties to be residents at Bombay, they are, therefore, prima facie liable to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. But it is alleged that they are Parsees, professing the religion of Zoroaster, and, as such, exempt from the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Court. Now, Parsees are nowhere designated or exempted in the Charter. Mahomedans and Gentoos are the only natives designated, and they are exempted only as to "their inheritance and succession to lands, rents, goods, and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party, which shall be determined in the case of Mahomedans by the laws and usages of Mahomedans, and where the parties are Gentoos, by the laws and usages of the Gentoos." Supposing, therefore, Parsees to be exempt from the jurisdiction, what law is to be applied to them? they are neither Mahomedans nor Gentoos. It is clear, therefore, if any law is applicable to them, it must be English law; that which they are entitled to claim as British subjects. It is argued, on the other side, that Parsees come under the general designation of Gentoos, which is a mere no men collectivum. But, if so, the Gentoos Code would have to be applied to Parsees. Why, [383] then, this objection to the introduction of Ecclesiastical law? The laws of marriage are governed in this country by Ecclesiastical law; if then a question relating to the validity of a marriage come before the Supreme Court, that Court must look to the law by which the marriage is to be regulated, and if there is no special law provided for and applicable to the parties, the law of England must be the rule for the Court's decision. That would be a case of the application, pro tanto, of the Ecclesiastical law, though not on the Ecclesiastical side of the Court. Matrimonial suits between Parsees have been entertained by the Mofussil Courts, Mihirwanjee Nuoshirwanjee v. Awan Bacc (2 Borr. Bom. Sud. Dew. Reps. 209); to these are added several cases in regard to marriage contracts, dower, etc.: they are all collected in Morley's Dig., tit. "Husband and Wife," 4, p. 299. What is to prevent the Supreme Court exercising a similar jurisdiction when the case is properly before them when administering that law, the administration of which is expressly given to them by the terms of the Charter?

Mr. Ayrton, in reply.—Parsees are within the definition of "Gentoos," which is a generic term, being corrupted from a Portuguese word, "Gentis," meaning a gentile, or heathen, as distinguished from Mahomedans or Hindoos, the native inhabitants of India. The Ecclesiastical jurisdiction conferred by the Charter is intended for, and limited to, British subjects. Its sentence can only be enforced by Ecclesiastical process, that is, by excommunication. How can such a process be applied to Parsees?

[384] Judgment was reserved, and now delivered by

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington (July 16, 1856).—The present question arises upon an appeal from the Ecclesiastical side of the Supreme Court of Bombay, which Court had overruled a protest against its jurisdiction; and their Lordships will have to determine whether, under all the circumstances, the judgment ought to be maintained, or the appeal allowed.

The suit in the Court below is a suit for restitution of conjugal rights; such is clearly its character, though some of the averments in the suit, and a part of the prayer made, are different from what would be made or admitted in the Ecclesiastical Courts in this country.

The parties are Parsees, natives of the Island of Bombay, and there resident. Their religion is that of Zoroaster. The wife brought the suit. The husband, in a protest, after the libel was given in, denied the jurisdiction of the Court, and contended that it was incompetent to take cognizance of such a suit. The Chief Justice was of opinion that the protest ought to be overruled, thereby, in effect, deciding that the Court might proceed to administer justice in such a suit between the parties. The Puisne Judge dissented. According to the Charter of the Supreme Court, judgment was given in accordance with the opinion of the Chief Justice.

The language of the clause of the Charter granting Ecclesiastical jurisdiction is as follows:—"And it is Our further will and pleasure, and We do hereby, for Us, Our heirs and successors, grant, establish, and appoint that the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay shall be a Court of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, [385] and shall have full power and authority to administer and execute within and throughout the town and island of Bombay, and the factories subordinate thereto, and all the territories which now are or hereafter may be subject to or dependent upon the said Government, and towards and upon all persons so described and distinguished by the appellation of British subjects as aforesaid there residing, the Ecclesiastical law, as the same is now used and exercised in the Diocese of London in Great Britain, so far as the circumstances and occasion of the said town, island, territories, and people shall admit or require; and to that purpose We give and grant to the said Supreme Court at Bombay full power and authority to take cognizance of and proceed in all causes, suits, and business belonging and appertaining to the Ecclesiastical Court before the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay, in whatsoever manner to be moved, as well as at the instance or promotion of parties as of office, mere or mixed, against any of the said subjects residing in the said town, island, territories, or districts, and which by the law and custom of the said Diocese of London are of Ecclesiastical cognizance, and the said causes, suits, and business, with their incidents, emergents, and dependents, and whatsoever is thereto annexed and therewith connected, to hear, despatch, discuss, determine, and also to grant probates under the seal, etc., of the last Wills and testaments of all or any of the said subjects of Us, Our heirs, and successors, dying and leaving personal effects within the said town, island, territories or districts respectively, and of all persons who shall die or have effects within the places aforesaid."

[386] Such being the jurisdiction conferred by the above clause upon the Supreme Court, we must next consider the objection which has been raised to the exercise of that jurisdiction in this case. The especial reason assigned against the Court taking cognizance of this case, as set forth in the protest, is, that the parties are Parsees, professing the religion of Zoroaster, born in the island of Bombay, natives of India, and are not persons who, prior to the date of the Letters Patent establishing the Supreme Court, have been described in the Royal Charter of Justice, by the appellation of "British subjects,"—that the Court is incompetent to take cognizance, or to proceed in this suit, or administer to the parties the Ecclesiastical law as used and exercised in the Diocese of London.

It is quite true, as was argued at the Bar, that the reason assigned for the incompetency of the Court to exercise jurisdiction is, that the parties to the suit are not British subjects within the meaning of the Charter, and that the general averment of incompetency had reference to that reason, but we think that in a case of this description, where the question substantially is, whether the Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, or, to state the case more accurately, whether from the peculiar nature of the subject-matter this case is not excepted from the general Ecclesiastical jurisdiction conferred by the Charter, it is our duty to look at the whole record, and give judgment accordingly. If it be apparent on the face of the record that the suit is not maintainable, we think that there is enough in the protest to require us to express our opinion, though that protest may not have been intended to direct our attention to more than one particular objection.

[387] Proceeding upon this principle we will assume for the moment, that the parties to this suit are properly described and distinguished by the appellation of "British subjects," and address ourselves to the question what, with reference to the facts of the case, is the proper meaning of the words, the "Ecclesiastical law, as the same is now used and exercised in the Diocese of London, so far as the circumstances and occasion of the said town, island, territories and people, shall admit or require." The inquiry, then, is, whether the circumstances and occasion will admit or require the application of the English Ecclesiastical law in this instance?

We must remember that the English Ecclesiastical law is founded exclusively on the assumption that all the parties litigant are Christians; indeed, originally, more strictly speaking, Christians professing the doctrine of the Church, and that till of late days, the only mode of enforcing the decrees of Courts Christian was by process of excommunication, the imprisonment which followed taking place under the authority of the Civil Courts. Excommunication in ordinary cases is now superseded; instead of that proceeding, the Ecclesiastical Courts pronounce the party to be in contempt, and signify the same to the Court of Chancery, which issues the authority to imprison.

It is true, however, that a considerable part of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court is in its nature, though not in its origin, purely civil, and has no proper connection whatever with any religious matters. We advert to the grant of probate and administration.

[388] Our proper inquiry is, whether, with reference to the limitation in the Charter, "as far as the circumstances and occasion of the said people shall admit or require," it is consistent with that limitation for the Ecclesiastical side of the Supreme Court to entertain a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights at the instance of a Parsee wife against her husband.

We must consider the nature of such a suit, the steps which must or may be taken in it, and the consequences which may arise from any decree which may be pronounced in it. In such a suit the first step may be to try the validity of a Parsee marriage, and though this might be a task of no small difficulty, yet, perhaps, it might be practicable to determine such a question by Parsee law, if it be competent to a Court Christian to take cognizance of the Parsee law for such purposes. We are aware that, under particular circumstances, the Ecclesiastical Courts in England have exercised jurisdiction with respect to Jewish marriages, ascertaining their validity by Jewish laws; but the very great difficulties attending such investigation, and the almost absurd consequences to which they lead, would not induce us to follow those precedents further than strict necessity requires.

Assuming, however, the validity of the marriage to have been tried and established, the next step in a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights in the Ecclesiastical Court, if there be no defence, is to order the husband (assuming him to be the party proceeded against) to take his wife home and treat her with conjugal affection; and if he refuse, to pronounce him in contempt, the consequences of which [389] is imprisonment. The husband may defend himself by alleging and proving his wife's infidelity or cruelty.

The Ecclesiastical Court has no power to decree alimony, except pendente lite, or after a decree for separation by reason of cruelty or adultery. It is wholly contrary to the first principles on which the Ecclesiastical Courts proceed, to allow alimony under any other circumstances, for the Ecclesiastical Court cannot contemplate any separation of husband and wife, except where cohabitation is prevented by adultery, or rendered impracticable by cruelty. Under all other circumstances, a separation is, by Ecclesiastical law, unlawful. It follows, therefore, if the wife succeed in a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, the sole remedy is to compel the husband to take her home.

It appears in this case that the husband has gone through the form of marriage with another woman, with whom he is cohabiting. He, therefore, either has another wife, lawful by Parsee law, or he is living in adultery.

Is it possible that in either of these two cases the husband can, by the Ecclesiastical law as it prevails in the Diocese of London, be directed to take his wife home? In England, the wife, on account of such an intercourse, would be entitled to a separation from bed and board, and alimony; but a prayer for restitution is, under such circumstances, wholly unheard of. A Court Christian cannot enforce a renewal of cohabitation with an adulterer or adulteress: such a proceeding would be utterly repugnant to its character, its practice, and its principles. Such a decree would not be the administration of Ecclesiastical law, [390] but the violation of it. What might be the remedy by Parsee law we think it wholly unnecessary to inquire, because, from the religion the Parsees profess, it cannot be the remedy the Court Christian would afford, nor would such relief be administered by Ecclesiastical law.

There are, however, other difficulties. The Civil Courts in India can bend their administration of justice to the laws of the various suitors who seek their aid. They can administer Mahomedan law to Mahomedans, Hindoo law to Hindoos; but the Ecclesiastical law has no such flexibility. Change it in its essential character, and it ceases to be Ecclesiastical law altogether.

For the reasons we have stated, we think that a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, strictly an Ecclesiastical proceeding, could not, consistently with the principles and rules of Ecclesiastical law, be applied to parties who profess the Parsee religion; but we should much regret if there were no Court and no law whereby a remedy could be administered to the evils which must be incidental to married life amongst them. We do not pretend to know what may be the duties and obligations attending upon the matrimonial union between Parsees, nor what remedies may exist for the violation of them, but we conceive that there must be some laws, or some customs having the effect of laws, which apply to the married state of persons of this description. It may be that such laws and customs do not afford what we should deem, as between Christians, an adequate relief; but it must be recollected that the parties themselves could have contracted for the discharge of no other duties and obligations than such as, from time out of mind, were [391] incident to their own caste; nor could they reasonably have expected more extensive remedies, if aggrieved, than were customarily afforded by their own usages. Such remedies we conceive that the Supreme Court on the civil side might administer, or at least remedies as nearly approaching to them as circumstances would allow. In suits commenced on the civil side, the peculiar difficulties which belong to the exercise of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction in some matrimonial cases would not arise. Proceedings might be conducted on the civil side with such adaptation to the circumstances of the case as justice might require, though on the Ecclesiastical side such modification would be wholly irreconcilable with Ecclesiastical law.

We have been led to make these observations, not merely by general considerations, but more particularly by the case of Mihirwanjee Nuoshirwanjee v. Awan Bacc (2 Borr. Bon. Sud. Dew. Rep., 209). That case shows that the Sudder Adawlut at Bombay will take cognizance of matrimonial suits between Parsees, and will afford them such relief as a due regard to their own laws and customs will allow; it also proves, as indeed must be expected, that those laws and customs are wholly at variance with the principles which govern the matrimonial law of the Diocese of London, and incompatible with the Ecclesiastical law, as in such cases is administered. One instance will suffice. It appears that, under many circumstances, the husband is permitted to take a second wife, the first being alive.

We have not neglected to observe that in two or three cases, the Ecclesiastical side of the Supreme Court has not refused to entertain suits of this description, but we have no reason to think that the [392] difficulties which occur to us were brought prominently before that Court, or that, after duly considering them, the Judges came to the conclusion that they were unimportant. There is no such course of decision as should make us hesitate in giving effect to our own opinion.

We think that the protest should be sustained, and the judgment reversed on the grounds we have stated, and we do not deem it necessary to enter upon a discussion which chiefly occupied the time of the Court below, whether the parties to this suit were or were not persons who, prior to the date of the Letters Patent establishing the Court, were described and distinguished in the Royal Charters of Justice by the appellation of "British subjects." Whatever may, in such respect, be their description, our opinion is that this suit cannot be entertained.

The Lords of the Committee will, therefore, humbly report to Her Majesty as their opinion, that the Order of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay, of 5th July, 1854, whereby the protest of the Appellant was overruled, ought to be reversed, each party paying his and her own costs of this appeal.

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra, North Western Provinces.

Principles upon which the Native Courts in India are to proceed, in trying issues in suits depending before them.

If, by inadvertence or otherwise, the recorded issues do not enable the Court to try the whole case on the merits, the suit ought not to be disposed of, but an opportunity should be afforded by amendment, and, if need be, by adjournment, for decision upon the real points in dispute.

The power of a Manager for an infant heir to charge ancestral estate by loan or mortgage, is, by the Hindoo law, a limited and qualified power, which can only be exercised rightly by the Manager in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, a bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred, in the particular instance, or the criteria to be regarded. If that danger arises from any misconduct to which the lender has been a party, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong to support a charge in his favour against the heir, grounded on a necessity which his own wrong has helped to cause.

A lender, however, in such circumstances, is bound to inquire into the necessities of the loan, and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the Manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. If he does inquire, and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged and reasonably-credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, which renders him bound to see to the application of the money.

The mere creation of a charge by a Manager securing a proper debt, is not to be viewed as an improvident act; and a bona fide creditor is not to suffer when he has acted honestly and with due caution, but is himself deceived.

No general rule can be laid down upon whom the onus lies to allege and prove the bona fides of a Manager of an estate whose title to alienate is qualified in contracting debts and resorting to loans: the presumption proper to be made varies with the circumstances, and is regulated and dependent upon them.

But if the mortgagee is enforcing his right against the heir, he must allege and prove the facts which embody the representations made to him of the alleged needs of the estate, and the motives influencing the loan.

A mortgage Bond to secure a sum of money lent to a party deceased, in substitution of a previous deed executed by a former proprietor, by way of further security for a sum advanced by the mortgagee to the widow of the deceased, charging part of the ancestral estate; described the widow as having a beneficial proprietary right in the mortgaged estates, although, in fact, she was only the curator of her son, a minor, the deceased's heir: Held, that the description, though inaccurate, was not such an assumption of ownership as was derogative to the rights of the heir, but was to be viewed as an act done by her as curator on behalf of the heir; and as the mortgage was beneficial to the estate, it was binding upon the heir.

Mode of taking account when the mortgagee was in possession of the estates as mortgagee, and also as lessee under a lease.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Sudder Dewanny Court of Agra, which reversed the judgment of the Principal Sudder Ameen of the District of Goruckpore, pronounced in favour of the Appellant, in a suit which was brought by Lal Inderdowun [394] Singh, since deceased, and now represented by the Respondent, his son, against the Appellant, the chief Defendant, and Ranee Degumber Koonweree.

The object of the suit was, first, to recover possession of certain ancestral estates called Daree Deha, Mohundur, etc., situate in the Pergunnah Nugger Bustee, in the District of Goruckpore, with mesne profits and interest; and secondly, to set aside a mortgage Bond, dated Assar Soodee Poornumashee, Fuslee (July, 1839), and to cancel the Appellant's name as mortgagee in the Collector's records.

[395] The circumstances under which the suit arose were these:—

The Appellant, a Banker, carrying on business in the District of Goruckpore, was in the habit of making advances and loans to the neighbouring landholders. His father, Buccus Panday, before him, had been engaged in the same business, and in the course of the latter's transactions he had advanced the sum of Rs. 8002, to Raja Jobraj Singh, the paternal ancestor of Lal Seetla Buksh Bahadur Singh, of whom the Respondent was guardian. On the occasion of this advance, Raja Jobraj Singh executed several deeds, conveying certain villages, part of his estate, by way of usufruct mortgage, to the Appellant's father. In 1235, Fuslee, after the death of Raja Jobraj Singh, an adjustment of accounts took place between Appellant's father and Rajah Sheobuksh Singh, the son and heir of Raja Jobraj Singh, when a balance of Rs. 5252, as against Raja Sheobuksh Singh, was agreed on. For this sum Bonds were given and certain lands and villages were assigned to Appellant's father by Raja Sheobuksh Singh by way of usufruct mortgage. Raja Sheobuksh Singh died shortly after this transaction, leaving an only son, Lal Inderdowun Singh, an infant, whereupon his widow, Ranee Degumber Koonweree, assumed the proprietorship of the estates of her late husband, and the guardianship of his infant son. Her name was registered with that of Lal Inderdowun Singh, the infant, on the records, until he attained his majority, when a deed of gift having been executed by the Ranee in his favour, her name was removed from the Government register of landowners by a petition for mutation in the ordinary way. In 1239, Fuslee, after the death of Raja Sheobuksh Singh, [396] another adjustment of accounts took place between the Appellant (who had in the meantime succeeded to the business and property of his father, then deceased) and Ranee Degumber Koonwerree, as the representative of her late husband, in which a balance of Rs. 3200 was agreed to be debited to the Ranee. In the same year, the family estates being in arrear of the revenue payable to Government, and in danger of sequestration by reason of such arrear, the Appellant, under authority of an order from Ranee Degumber Koonwerree, paid into the local Collectorate, to the account of such arrears, Rs. 3000, for which sum the Ranee afterwards executed three several Bonds, of Rs. 1000 each, and bearing date respectively Phagoon Soodee Poornumashee F.S. 1243, Assar Soodee Poornumashee F.S. 1243, and Katikbudee Poornumashee F.S. 1244. Previous to executing the above-mentioned Bonds, the Ranee had, in consideration of Rs. 1200, part of the balance before found to be due to the Appellant, and of a further loan of Rs. 600 from Goordial Panday (which was afterwards repaid by the Appellant), executed to the Appellant and Goordial Panday a Bond and deed of mortgage, conveying to them the Mouzas Mohunder and Dee Mar in usufruct, granting at the same time a lease of the same to him for the whole term of the mortgage. In the month Sawun, in the same year, the Ranee executed a mortgage to the Appellants, charging 200 beegahs of land lying in Bundeherree, in consideration of Rs. 1000, part of the balance of Rs. 2000, then remaining unsecured. In F.S. 1244, the Appellant, having paid off certain incumbrances to the amount of Rs. 4000, which the Ranee had previously effected on the lands of the Raj, received from her a Deed dated [397] Jeyt Soodee Poornumashee F.S. 1244, conveying to him in usufructuary mortgage the villages Dee Mar, Daree Deha, and Mohunder, also a pottah for the same, bearing the same date: the consideration for the whole being Rs. 5000, of which sum Rs. 1000 was the balance due on the original account, and Rs. 4000 the amount of incumbrance paid off by the Appellant. In F.S. 1246 a final adjustment of accounts took place between the Appellant and Ranee Degumber Koonwerree, in which the items stood as follows:— Monies paid by Appellant to Tahsildah on account of Government revenue due from the Raj, Rs. 5186; amount of monies secured by mortgage of Mohunder, Daree Deha, and lands in Dee Mar, Rs. 5000; amount secured by mortgage of Bundeherree, Rs. 1000; amount secured by three several Bonds of Ranee Degumber Koonwerree for Rs. 1000 each, Rs. 3000; amount due, being balance of Rs. 1500 secured by Bond, Rs. 814; making in the whole, Rs. 15,000. On this balance having been ascertained, the Ranee and Lal Inderdowun Singh, then a minor, by a mortgage Bond, dated Assar Soodee Poornumashee F.S. 1246, conveyed to the Appellant in usufructuary mortgage Daree Deha, Dee Mar, Bundeherree, Rajabaree, Mohunder, and Gundherea Faiz, which transaction formed the subject of the present suit. In this Bond the Ranee was described as being possessed of the mortgaged property in proprietary right.

Apart from these transactions of loan and mortgage, Raja Sheobuksh Singh granted to the Appellant in Birt some thirty beegahs of waste land lying in Bundeherree, in consequence of which grant Appellant expended much money in reclaiming the waste, erect[398]-ing buildings, and otherwise improving the land. Ranee Degumber Koonwerree afterwards, finding that Appellant possessed no evidence of his Birt title, compelled him to pay Rs. 500 for a Birt puttee, which she executed. Besides this portion of Birt lands the Appellant had purchased three and a half beegahs, lying in Dee Mar, from Gosain Musan Nath Fakir, to whom they had been granted for religious services by Raja Pirthee Pal Singh, the ancestor of the original Plaintiff.

On the 10th December, 1849, Lal Inderdowun Singh, having then attained his majority, filed a plaint in the Zillah Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Goruckpore against the Appellant and Ranee Degumber Koonwerree, for the possession of Zemindary right, unincumbered by Birt, of Daree Deha, Mohunder, Gundherea Faiz, and of certain lands lying in Bundeherree, Dee Mar, and Rajabaree; also to set aside the mortgage Bond before mentioned, bearing date Assar Soodee Poornumashee F.S. 1246, and to oust the Appellant. The plaint alleged that Ranee Degumber Koonwerree had acted as the guardian of the Plaintiff and managed his affairs for him during his minority; that she being a Purdah Nusheen and totally ignorant of matters of business, had been imposed on and deceived by her servants and agents, who had, without her knowledge or authority, made contracts of loan and mortgage with divers parties, and effected incumbrances on the Plaintiff's property; that the Appellant, among others, had by collusion and fraud obtained from them, under pretence of mortgage, the possession of certain lands and villages; that the villages and lands so unlawfully possessed by the Ap-[399]-pellant were component parts of Plaintiff's ancestral Raj, and inalienable by the act of a guardian.

The answer of the Appellant set forth the circumstances above stated under which the debts were contracted and the mortgage Bonds executed, and traversed the allegations respecting the Ranee's ignorance of matters of business and the Appellant's collusion with the Ranee's agents; and alleged that the Plaintiff, in F.S. 1255, after he had attained majority, had personally acknowledged the validity of the mortgage Bond and the debt due under it; that the Appellant in expressing a desire to redeem Gundherea Faiz and Baree (which second village was not included in the suit), had proposed to execute a fresh mortgage of Mohunder, Daree Deha, and the lands in Bundeherree, Dee Mar and Rajabaree, and that the Plaintiff, since attaining majority, had borrowed money on Bond from the Appellant, and the Appellant by his answer finally insisted that the amount of mesne profits was greatly exaggerated.

The answer of the Ranee Degumber Koonweree averred ignorance of the matters in issue, asserting that the Appellant had been for some time employed by her in the capacity of Manager.

Lal Inderdowun Singh having died, Mussumat Babooee Munraj Koonweree, the Respondent, was admitted by the Court to prosecute the suit as guardian of Lal Settla Buksh Bahadur Singh, the infant son and heir of Lal Inderdowun Singh.

By a proceeding of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Goruckpore, had on the 3rd of April, 1850, the issues to be disposed of were settled. The first was upon a point of practice arising out of an alleged irregularity of the replication; the second was, whether the mortgage Bond was the act and deed of Ranee Degumber [400] Koonweree, and whether it ought to have effect against the mortgaged villages; also if the mesne profits, as stated, were correct.

Evidence was entered into on both sides, the effect of which is contained in the Sudder Ameen's judgment.

On the 23rd of December, 1850, the suit was heard by the Principal Sudder Ameen, who by his judgment and decree dismissed the suit. The material part of his judgment was as follows:—"My opinion on the second point is this—That the mortgage Bond was written, and that it exists at this time, neither of the parties in their pleadings call it into question; for the witnesses on both sides depose that it was executed on the part of Ranee Degumber Koonweree and Lal Inderdowun Singh. The only dispute is, that the Plaintiff avers it was made without the knowledge of Ranee Degumber Koonweree, the second-named Defendant; while the first-named Defendant declares that Ranee Degumber Koonweree was cognizant of its execution. My opinion is, that the Plaintiff's plea of the Bond having been made without the knowledge of Ranee Degumber Koonweree, the second-named Defendant, is opposed to facts, and on several grounds inadmissible. First; several witnesses, among whom are some who attested the Bond, others who were percipient witnesses of the transaction, have deposed on both sides, especially some who are the servants, dependants, and Malgoozars of the Raja, have deposed to the fact. It is, therefore, impossible that so many persons should be aware of the transaction, and yet the Ranee and Raja remain in ignorance, as stated by the Plaintiff's witnesses. Secondly; had this Bond, by which certain property was mortgaged, been made without the Ranee's knowledge, seeing that she was the Manager of the Raj, [401] the Defendant would not have been able to get possession of the property mortgaged by the Bond: for when the Defendant attempted to take possession he would have been opposed by the Ranee. Thirdly; that at the settlement the Defendant's name would not have been recorded as mortgagee. Fourthly; assuming the Plaintiff's statement to the effect that the Karindas colluded with the Defendant, and executed the Bond as he dictated, and that they moreover filed a petition admitting the mortgage in the settlement, it is obvious that there was nothing to prevent the Defendant, in collusion with the Karindas, from fabricating a deed of sale conveying the disputed property to him: he would not, seeing that he had such great influence, have been content with the mortgage Bond. Hence it is clear to me that Ranee Degumber Koonweree, being in wait, and also wishing to satisfy former debts in order to preserve the estates in her hands, mortgaged the estates in order to pay the debts and put the Defendant in possession; otherwise it is not possible to credit, that in the face of such dishonesty on the part of the Karindas, she should refrain from complaining in the Courts, and preventing Defendant from entering upon the estates: for her experience and sagacity are demonstrated by the fact that she has saved the estates of the Raj, and has continued to manage them herself to the present time. Fifthly; were the plea of the Plaintiff to the effect that the Karindas were ungrateful and dishonest, they would not have given their evidence in favour of the Ranee as supporting her statement: they would unequivocally have declared that the Bond was made with the knowledge and sanction of the Ranee. These witnesses, after the lapse of so long a period, not having [402] the fear of eternity before their eyes, depose that they acted under the tutorage of Defendant, and did not acquaint the Plaintiff with the transaction. Then what more is required to prove their attachment and subservience to the Ranee? Indeed, from the fact that the Defendant has been in that possession, the settlement was concluded with him, that Ranee Degumber Koonweree and Lal Inderdowun Singh, deceased, remained silent for so long a period, it is clearly inferred that the statement of the Defendant and his witnesses is true. On these grounds my opinion is, that there can be no doubt that the Bond was made with the knowledge of Ranee Degumber Koonweree, the Manager of the Raj, and that the statement of Plaintiff and of her witnesses is made with dishonest intentions. Several witnesses have been adduced on the part of the Plaintiff, who state that Ranee Degumber Koonweree and her predecessors had no occasion to borrow money. This assertion is sufficiently rebutted by the exhibits filed on the part of the first-named Defendant. It is opposed to common sense to suppose that although the Raj was to be maintained and that the expenses of the Rajas were great, and moreover that a woman was the manager, that there should have been no occasion to borrow money. Indeed, copies of papers obtained from the office of Register of Deeds, and more especially the decree of the Moonsiff of Captain Gunj, dated 21st of September, 1847, is conclusive evidence to prove the Plaintiff's statement to be false. The second point remains to be considered, namely, whether the mortgage pleaded by Defendant is valid and of effect touching the villages in dispute. The record shows that Ranee Degumber Koonweree was the manager of the Raj [403] during the infancy of Lal Inderdowun Singh, and that all her acts and deeds are recognised in the Revenue Department and in the Special Commission. During her management, with the object of saving the estates, of paying the debts of her predecessors, and of satisfying the claims of Mahajuns, the mortgage Bond was executed. Seeing, moreover, that the settlement was also made with the Defendant by the Settlement Officer, that a Bond of this nature does not extinguish the title of the infant, it follows then, as a matter of justice and equity, that the Bond is valid and of effect. For if it be held to be invalid, two difficulties will arise—First, that when the Raj is under the management and guardianship of a person, should necessity arise to take money on loan in order to pay the Government Malgoozaree and to pay other necessary expenses of the Raj, no person will be willing to lend the money, and the loss of the estates will be the consequence. Secondly, should any person, on the faith of the Raj, and satisfied that there are assets sufficient to liquidate his loan, advance money to the manager of the Raj, and save the Raj from being lost, and subsequently, should this fact be proved, and on the suit of the proprietor, on his attaining his majority, he should be able to repudiate the loan, it would be gross injustice. There next remains to consider the fact that the name of Lal Inderdowun Singh is associated with that of Ranee Degumber Koonweree in the mortgage Bond. I remark that this is not a suit brought by the Defendant, consequently this point need not be tried and disposed of, since in my opinion the claim must be dismissed: and precedents adduced by the Plaintiff do not apply to this case: on the contrary, it is a legitimate inference that these precedents support my [404] view of the case. Finally, since the Plaintiff's claim is dismissed by me, there remains no necessity for an inquiry into the matter of mesne profits. On the ground above stated, it is ordered, that the Plaintiff's claim be dismissed, with costs."

From this judgment the Respondent appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra. The principal grounds of appeal were, that Lal Inderdowun Singh, at the time the Bond was made, was a mere child, that the Ranee was not designated as guardian in the Bond, but as proprietor, and that the Bond, therefore, was totally invalid, since, under the Regulations, or the Hindoo law, a deed made by an infant could have no effect or force; that even admitting the Bond to be genuine, Ranee Degumber Koonweree was not competent by the Hindoo law to make such a Bond; that under the law of the Shastras, the son of the deceased living, the Ranee Degumber Koonweree could have no personal title to the property, but as the son was an infant she was competent to act as guardian; but as such she was not competent to make such a transfer of the property as had been made; and, lastly, that the Ranee was not cognizant of the Bond being executed or of the transaction.

The appeal, which was referred to the full Court, came on for hearing on the 22nd of January, 1852, when the Messrs. Begbie, Deane, and Brown, the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Court, by their judgment, held, that the question which the Court had to deal with, related to the right of the Ranee to execute the deed before them. They remarked that the deed itself assigned to the Ranee a proprietary character, and that it was not among the Defendant's pleas that the Ranee acted as her son's guardian, but [405] that he claimed for her the proprietary character both in his answer to the plaint, and still more broadly and unreservedly in his answer to the pleadings in appeal. That the Plaintiff, on the other hand, had, throughout, argued for the avoidance of the Bond by denying the Ranee's proprietary right in any way; and such being the issue joined between the parties, the Court, looking to the fact that the estates in dispute unquestionably devolved on the Plaintiff, to the exclusion of the Ranee on the death of the Plaintiff's father, Raja Sheobuksh Singh, had no hesitation in declaring that even on the assumption that the Ranee voluntarily executed the Bond and received full consideration for it, the Bond was not binding on the Plaintiff, and that neither he nor his ancestral property could be made liable in satisfaction of it. That it was needless for the Court, their inquiries being thus stopped in limine, to enter on the real merits of the transaction as between the Ranee and Hunoomanpersaud Panday; but that a final judgment could not then be pronounced, the amount of the waisilat (mesne profits) being disputed, and no investigation on that point having been made by the Court below. The Court, therefore, decreed to the Plaintiff, in alteration of the Principal Sudder Ameen's judgment, so much of his claim as related to the avoidance of the Bond, and remitted the suit, with directions, to the principal Sudder Ameen, that he determined what amount of mesne profits from the date from which they were claimed the Plaintiff was entitled to recover. It was ordered, therefore, "that the judgment of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Goruckpore, dated 23rd of December, 1850, be amended; that the Bond set up by the Defendant be set aside; and that a decree do pass in favour of Plaintiff, and [406] that the costs be awarded in the decree to the extent of the jumma of the property claimed."

Against this decree the present appeal was brought.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant; and Mr. Wigram, Q.C., Mr. Bagshaw, Q.C., and Mr. W. Field, for the Respondent.

The Principal points submitted to the Court in the argument, were:—

First. As to the validity of the mortgage Bond, whether it was executed by the Ranee at all, and further, as the Bond purported to be executed by her in a beneficial character, if it constituted a valid incumbrance on the Raj.

Second. Whether the incumbrance created by Raja Sheobuksh Singh entitled the Appellant to retain possession of the villages and lands in the mortgage Bond executed by him until such incumbrance was paid off, or whether it was a personal charge only on the heir; and the Appellant had not a right to stand in the place of the Ranee in respect of the monies he had advanced.

Third. Whether it was competent by the Hindoo law to the Ranee, as the registered proprietor of the family estate and curator of the infant's property, to charge ancestral estates by way of mortgage, in consideration of the advances made for the benefit of the minor's estate, to prevent a sequestration and probable confiscation.

Fourth. Whether after the factum of the mortgage [407] bond was established, and proof of the advances made, the presumption of law was not in favour of the charge, and the onus probandi was not upon the heir to disprove the necessity of the advances.

Upon these points the following authorities were cited:—

Judgment was delivered by

The Right Hon. the Lord Justice Knight Bruce (July 26, 1856).—The complainant in the original suit, was Lal Inderdowun Singh, described in the plaint as proprietor of the Raj of Pergunnah Munsoor Nuggur Bustee. The suit was against the present Appellant, the chief Defendant, and Ranees Degumber Koonweree, the second Defendant, the mother of the complainant. The complainant sought by his plaint the possession of certain immovable property described in his claim, the particulars of which it is unnecessary to state. He sought also to set aside a mortgage Bond bearing date Assar Soodee Poorunmashee, 1246 Fuslee, set up by the Appellant; to oust the Appellant, to cancel the name of the Appellant as mortgagee in the Collector's records, and to recover mesne profits.

To this suit the Defendant put in his answer. The title of the complainant to the lands as heir was not denied by the answer; but the Defendant alleged his title as mortgagee (except as to some Birt lands, the claim to which was abandoned in the suit, and to which it is unnecessary further to refer). The substantial dispute between the parties was, as to the lands for which the suit proceeded, whether the Defendant could resist, under his title as mortgagee to the extent of that interest, the title of the complainant as heir and proprietor of the lands.

It is unnecessary to enter in detail into the plead-[409]-ings or proceedings in the suit. It is sufficient to state, that in the result the Sudder Ameen decided in favour of the security, and dismissed the claim generally, but that on appeal from that decision, the Sudder Court decided against the security, and in substance granted the relief asked by the plaint, except in so far as it was abandoned.

The reasons for the decision of the appellate Court are contained in their judgment. The Court says, "The question with which the Court have first to deal, respects the right of the Ranees to execute the instrument before them." They then remark, "that the Bond itself assigns to the Ranees a proprietary character, and that it was not amongst the Defendant's pleas that the Ranees acted as her son's guardian, but that he has claimed for her the proprietary character, both in his answer to the plaint, and still more broadly and unreservedly in his answer to the pleadings in appeal. The Plaintiff, on the other hand, has throughout argued for the avoidance of the Bond, by denying the Ranees's proprietary title in any way; and such being the issue joined between the parties, the Court, looking to the fact that the estates in dispute unquestionably devolved on the Plaintiff, to the exclusion of the Ranees, on the death of the Plaintiff's father, Raja Sheobuksh Singh, have no hesitation in declaring that, even on the assumption that the Ranees voluntarily executed the Bond, and received full consideration for it, the Bond is not binding on the Plaintiff, and that neither he nor his ancestral property can be made liable in satisfaction of it. It is needless for the Court, their inquiries being thus stopped in limine, to enter on the real [410] merits of the transaction as between the Ranee and Hunoomanpersaud Pandey."

Their Lordships collect from this judgment that the Court thought that a bar was interposed by the pleadings, and by the Ranee's act of assumption of proprietorship, to the further consideration whether the Appellant's charge could in any character be sustained against the estate.

The Court did not enter upon the question of the validity of the charge, in whole or in part, as a charge effected by a de facto Manager, or proprietor, whether by right or by wrongful title, nor advert to the fact that the charge included some items of former charge wholly unaffected by the objection which they considered of so much weight.

This judgment may be considered under the following points of view :

First. Did the appellate jurisdiction rightly construe the pleadings, and take a right view of the issues framed under the direction of the Judge, according to the practice of those Courts?

Secondly. Did it take a right view of the relation in which the Ranee intended to stand to her son's estate? And Thirdly. Did it consider the point, whether the rights of these parties could wholly depend upon the question whether that relation was duly or unduly constituted?

On the first point their Lordships think it right to observe, that it is of the utmost importance to the right administration of justice in these Courts, that it should be constantly borne in mind by them that by their very constitution they are to decide according [411] to equity and good conscience; that the substance and merits of the case are to be kept constantly in view; that the substance and not the mere literal wording of the issues is to be regarded; and that if, by inadvertence, or other cause, the recorded issues do not enable the Court to try the whole case on the merits, an opportunity should be afforded by amendment, and, if need be, by adjournment, for the decision of the real points in dispute.

But their Lordships think that if the wording of the issues be carefully considered, it will be found that the issue in substance is, whether the charge under the instrument bound the lands. The words in which the Principal Sudder Ameen states the issue on this point are: "whether it (the mortgage Bond) ought to have effect against the mortgaged villages." It was not an issue limited to the particular description or character in which this act was done, and a misdescription or error in that respect would not have been fatal to the charge. Consequently, their Lordships cannot agree with the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, upon the first point, that the real question in dispute between these parties, namely, whether the charge bound the lands in the hands of the heir, was not substantially included in the issues, which were evidently intended to raise it. Neither can their Lordships adopt the reasoning or the conclusion of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, upon the second point, as to the relation in which the Ranee meant to stand, and substantially stood, to the estate of her son.

Deeds and contracts of the people of India ought to be liberally construed. The form of expression, the literal sense, is not to be so much regarded as the real meaning of the parties which the [412] transaction discloses. Now, what is meant by the assumption of proprietorship on the part of the Ranee, which the judgment ascribes to her? It is not suggested that she ever claimed any beneficial interest in the estate as proprietor; had she done so, it would have been, pro tanto, a claim adverse to her son; and it is conceded by the Respondent's counsel that she did not claim adversely to her son. The terms of "proprietor" and of "heir," when they occur, whether in deeds or pleadings, or documentary proofs, may, indeed, by a mere adherence to the letter, be construed to raise the conclusion of an assumption of ownership, in the sense of beneficial enjoyment derogatory to the rights of the heir; but they ought not to be so construed unless they were so intended, and in this case their Lordships are satisfied that they were not so intended. They consider that the acts of the Ranee cannot be reasonably viewed otherwise than as acts done on behalf of another, whatever description she gave to herself, or others gave to her; that she must be viewed as a Manager, inaccurately and erroneously described as "proprietor," or "heir"; and it is to be observed, that the Collector takes this view, for, whilst he remarks on the improper description of her as heir, or proprietor, he continues her name as "Surberakar." If the whole context of all these documents and pleadings be taken into consideration, and the construction proceed on every part, and not on portions of them, they are sufficient, in their Lordships' judgment, to show the real character of her proprietorship.

Upon the third point, it is to be observed that under the Hindoo law, the right of a bona fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto Manager a charge on [413] lands created honestly, for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto, with the de jure title. Therefore, had the Ranee intruded into the estate wrongfully, and even practised a deception upon the Court of Wards, or the Collector, exercising the powers of a Court of Wards, by putting forth a case of joint proprietorship in order to defeat the claim of a Court of Wards to the wardship, which is the case that Mr. Wigram supposed, it would not follow that those acts, however wrong, would defeat the claim of the incumbrancer. The objection, then, to the Ranee's assumption of proprietorship, in order to get the management into her hands, does not really go to the root of the matter, nor necessarily invalidate the charge; consequently, even had the view which the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut took of the character of the Ranee's act, as not having been done by her as guardian, been correct, their decision against the charge without further inquiry would not have been well-founded. It would not have been accordant with the principles of the Hindoo law, as declared in Coleb. Dig., vol. i., p. 302, and in the case of Gopee Churun Burrall v. Mussumant Isharree Lukhee Dibia (3 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 93), and as illustrated by the case cited for the Appellant in the argument, against the authority of which no opposing decision was cited. Their Lordships, however, must not be understood to say that they see any ground of probability for the assertion, that the Ranee really meant to deceive the Court of Wards, or the Collector exercising its au-[414]-thority, by any consciously false description of herself. The title to this Raj cannot readily be supposed to have been unknown in the Collector's office, nor is it probable that the Ranee could have deceived the office by such a false description of herself.

It is a circumstance worthy of remark, too, that the complainant does not ascribe this conduct to her in his plaint. The case that the plaint makes is not that she intruded upon him and assumed proprietorship; the plaint itself says she had possession as guardian, that is, as managing in that character; and on a review of the whole pleadings and documentary evidence, and of the probabilities of the case, their Lordships think it a strained and untrue construction to assign any other character to her acts than that which the plaint ascribes to them, notwithstanding the use of terms inconsistent with it. For these reasons, their Lordships think that the judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Court cannot be supported on the grounds which that Court has assigned.

It then remains to be considered whether the judgment is substantially right, though the reasons assigned for it are not satisfactory or sufficient.

If the evidence discloses, as it is contended for the Respondent that it does disclose, no prima facie case of charge at all on this ancestral estate, then, as the only bar to the resumption by the heir of his estate is the alleged mortgage title over it, the proof of which lies on the mortgagee, the complainant's title to the estate, to the mesne profits, and to the other relief, is made out; but if, on the other hand, the evidence discloses even a prima facie case of charge, some inquiry at least ought, as it seems to their Lordships, to have been directed.

[415] The question then next to be considered is, whether a prima facie case of a subsisting charge is made out by the Appellant. This question involves the consideration of two points: first, the actual factum of the deed; and, next, the consideration for it.

First, as to the factum. The execution of the Bond by the Ranee is stated by several of the attesting witnesses. It was argued, however, on behalf of the Respondent, that the Court ought not to act on their evidence. Some discrepancies, —such, however, as are not unfrequently found in honest cases in native testimony.

were dwelt upon. The Sudder Ameen, who decided this case originally, has made some pertinent remarks on the confirmation which circumstances give to the oral evidence that the Bond is the deed of the Ranees. The decision by a native Judge, possessing the intelligence which this judgment of the Sudder Ameen evinces, on a question of fact in issue before him, is, in the opinion of their Lordships, entitled to respect; he must necessarily possess superior knowledge of the habits and course of dealing of natives, and that knowledge would be likely to lead him to a right conclusion upon a question of disputed fact. The Sudder Ameen observes, in substance, that possession went along with this Bond, and that the mortgagee was inscribed in that character as proprietor on the records of the Collector. He was, therefore, put in possession as mortgagee, and was publicly known as mortgagee in the Collector's office.

It is to be observed further, that this receipt of the rents and profits of the lands included in this conveyance would diminish, pro tanto, the annual income of the estate, which would come to be administered by the Ranees, and that this state of things continued for [416] several years after the execution of the Bond. The Ranees' ignorance, then, of such title, possession, receipt, and diminution, is, as the Sudder Ameen justly observes, not a probable supposition. It could be rationally accounted for only on one supposition—that the Ranees was a mere cypher, and entirely ignorant of that which was done in her name. This, however, does not appear to have been the case: she herself denied it on a subsequent contest as to the managership; and the act of the Collector in his decision upon that dispute, in putting her into the management, confirms her own statement of her capacity. Had her incompetency been of so flagrant a character, as the above hypothesis demands to be attributed to her, it is not reasonable to suppose that it would have been unknown in the Collector's office, nor is it reasonable to suppose that the management would have been confided to her had such been her character. It was argued, indeed, that she may have become by that time capable; but it is to be observed that a long course of neglect and mismanagement, which is attributed to her, would not be a school of improvement.

It was argued that the complainant was not to be bound by the Ranees' allegations of her own competency; that she had tasted the sweets of management, and would desire their continuance. Certainly the complainant is not to be bound by her assertion; but it is not the assertion that is relied on as confirmation. What is relied on is the result of the contest, and the acknowledgment of her as one competent to the management of the estate by an officer interested in its right administration.

Their Lordships cannot but concur with the Sudder [417] Ameen in thinking that these circumstances do materially confirm the story of the attesting witnesses as to the Ranees' execution of the deed. The story of her non-execution of it is based, in a considerable degree, on a supposition of her incapacity. That the deed is hers, is, in the opinion of their Lordships, further confirmed by the great improbability of the history which some of the witnesses of the Respondent give as to the factum of the instrument. The story told by the witnesses, Heera Lal and Gyapershad Patuk, is so destitute of probability, so little in harmony with the ordinary conduct of men in like circumstances, that their Lordships can place no reliance upon it. According to the case of the Respondent, this Bond was fraudulently executed in the name of the Ranees, without her sanction or knowledge, in order to fix a false charge of Rs. 15,000, in the Defendant's favour, on the property of the infant Raja. The Defendant and several associates were, according to this story, conspiring together for this object. According to the witnesses, who give nearly verbatim the same account of the transaction, these conspirators had witnesses ready, though not present, who were to attest consciously the false deed as true; yet such is at once the impatience and the folly of these conspiring parties, that every one of the witnesses, each of whom is described as dropping in by chance as it were, is solicited without any assigned adequate motive, and with no previous sounding, to become a party to this fraud by consciously attesting the false deed as true. Each witness declines, and each is entreated to secrecy; and each preserves the secret inviolate, contrary to duty, and without any assigned motive for secrecy. The communication and the con-[418]-cealment are both without motive according to the account which is given us. And the story of this utterly needless communication of his crime, is told of a man used to business, intelligent, and described by the Respondents as the habitual accomplice of crafty and designing men, the Karindas, in acts of fraud.

Taking the whole circumstances as to the factum of this instrument into consideration, their Lordships concur in the finding by the Sudder Ameen as to it.

Next, as to the construction for the Bond. The argument for the Appellant in the reply, if correct, would indeed reduce the matter for consideration to a very short point; for according to that argument, if the factum of a deed of charge by a manager for an infant be established, and the fact of the advance be proved, the presumption of law is prima facie to support the charge, and the onus of disproving it rests on the heir. For this position a decision, or rather a dictum of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra, in the case of Oomed Rai v. Heera Lal (6 Sud. Dew. N.W.P. 218), was quoted and relied upon. But the dictum there, though general, must be read in connection with the facts of that case. It might be a very correct course to adopt with reference to suits of that particular character, which was one where the sons of a living father were, with his suspected collusion, attempting, in a suit against a creditor, to get rid of the charge on an ancestral estate created by the father, on the ground of the alleged misconduct of the father in extravagant waste of the estate. Now, it is to be observed that a lender of money may reasonably be expected to prove the circumstances connected [419] with his own particular loan, but cannot reasonably be expected to know or to come prepared with proof of the antecedent economy and good conduct of the owner of an ancestral estate: whilst the antecedents of their father's career would be more likely to be in the knowledge of the sons, members of the same family, than of a stranger; consequently, this dictum may perhaps be supported on the general principle that the allegation and proof of facts, presumably in his better knowledge, is to be looked for from the party who possesses that better knowledge, as well as on the obvious ground in such suits of the danger of collusion between father and sons in fraud of the creditor of the former. But this case is of a description wholly different, and the dictum does not profess to be a general one, nor is it so to be regarded. Their Lordships think that the question on whom does the onus of proof lie in such suits as the present, is one not capable of a general and inflexible answer. The presumption proper to be made will vary with circumstances, and must be regulated by and dependent on them. Thus, where the mortgagee himself with whom the transaction took place, is setting up a charge in his favour made by one whose title to alienate he necessarily knew to be limited and qualified, he may be reasonably expected to allege and prove facts presumably better known to him than to the infant heir, namely, those facts which embody the representations made to him of the alleged needs of the estate, and the motives influencing his immediate loan.

It is to be observed that the representations by the Manager accompanying the loan as part of the resgestae, and as the contemporaneous declarations of an [420] agent, though not actually selected by the principal, have been held to be evidence against the heir; and as their Lordships are informed that such prima facie proof has been generally required in the Supreme Court of Calcutta between the lender and the heir, where the lender is enforcing his security against the heir, they think it reasonable and right that it should be required. A case in the time of Sir Edward Hyde East, reported in his decisions in the 2nd volume of Morley's "Digest," seems the foundation of this practice. (See also the case of Brown v. Ram Kunnee Dutt, 11 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 791.)

It is obvious, however, that it might be unreasonable to require such proof from one not an original party, after a lapse of time, and enjoyment and apparent acquiescence; consequently, if, as is the case here as to part of the charge, it be created by substitution of a new security for an older one, where the consideration for the older one was an old precedent debt of an ancestor not previously questioned, a presumption of the kind contended for by the Appellant would be reasonable. The case before their Lordships is one of a mixed character; the existing security represents loans and transactions at various times and under varying circumstances: it is a consolidating security; and as to part, at least—namely, the ancestral debt—there is, in the opinion of their Lordships, ground to raise a prima facie presumption in the Appellant's favour of a consideration that binds the estate. It is unnecessary to the decision to pursue the inquiry as to the other items of charge, but that part of it which relates to the advance for payment of the revenue seems to be at least prima facie proved as against the estate. And, as to the whole [421] charge, there is also at least prima facie evidence in the admissions of the Plaintiff, proved by several witnesses, uncontradicted on the point. As to the debt of the ancestors, it was said that it was already secured, and that the estate being ancestral, could not, according to the law current in the North-Western Provinces, be charged, in the hands of the heir, for an ancestor's debt. But it is to be observed as to the change of security, that there was a reduction of interest; it is, therefore, a transaction, prima facie, for the benefit of the estate; and though an estate be ancestral, it may be charged for some purposes against the heir, for the father's debt, by the father, as, indeed, the case above cited from the 6th volume of the Decisions of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, North-Western Provinces, incidentally shows. Unless the debt was of such a nature that it was not the duty of the son to pay it, the discharge of it, even though it affected ancestral estate, would still be an act of pious duty in the son. By the Hindoo law, the freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt, has respect to the nature of the debt, and not to the nature of the estate, whether ancestral or acquired by the creator of the debt. Their Lordships, therefore, are clearly of opinion that a prima facie case of charge for something was made out; and it is not necessary to determine, nor, indeed, have their Lordships the necessary facts before them to enable them to determine, for how much, if for anything, this deed must ultimately stand as a security.

One point remains to be considered, namely, whether, in taking the account between these parties, the Defendant is to be charged, as mortgagee in possession, with the actual rents and profits, or only with [422] the rent fixed by the pottah. It is said for the Appellant, that the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut did not set aside the pottah. In terms they certainly did not. But their Lordships think that it was part of one mortgage-security, consisting of several instruments of equal date with the mortgage Bond; and that it was intended to create, not a distinct estate, but only a security for the mortgage-money. Mr. Palmer contended that a stipulation such as this pottah evidences, may stand in India between mortgagor and mortgagee, and that the Regulations as to interest do not touch such a case. The Regulations provide for the case of an evasion of the law as to interest by invalidating the mortgage security, and forfeiting the claim of the mortgagee to his principal and interest: but Mr. Palmer contends that where there is no such evasion, and a bona fide and fair rent is fixed upon as representing, communibus annis, the rents and profits of the estate, the Court ought to stand on that, the agreement of the parties, and not to direct the taking of the accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee on any other basis. It is certainly possible that, by reason of the provision that the rent shall be a fixed one, notwithstanding losses and casualties the mortgagee might be a loser, in his character of lessee, on an account calculated on this basis; but, notwithstanding that contingency, their Lordships think that, as it was not meant that the principal should be risked, it was virtually a provision to exclude an account of the rents and profits, and that the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, directing an account of the actual rents and profits, therefore, proceeds on the right principle, and is in accordance with the true nature of the security and the spirit of the Regulations.

[423] In the case of Roy Juswunt Lall v. Sreekishen Lall, reported in the decisions of the Sud. Dew. Adaw. in 1852, vol. 14, p. 577, the Court seems to have thought that where a mortgage lease was granted, and whilst the term was running, the mortgage account could not be taken; but it appears from that case, that in former decisions of that Court not reported, where the lease had expired, the Court directed the account to be taken on the ordinary footing of the receipt of rents and profits of the mortgaged estate. Their Lordships think that, under the Regulations, unless the principal is meant to be risked, and is put in risk, the estate created as part of a mortgage security, whatever be its form or duration, can be viewed only as a security for a mortgage debt, and must be restored when the debt, interests, and costs are satisfied by receipts.

Upon the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the case must be sent back for further inquiry. They think it desirable, however, in order to prevent a future miscarriage, to state the general principles which should be applied to the final decision of the case.

The power of the Manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is, under the Hindoo law, a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded. But of course, if that danger arises or has [424] arisen from any misconduct to which the lender is or has been a party, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong, to support a charge in his own favour against the heir, grounded on a necessity which his wrong has helped to cause. Therefore, the lender in this case, unless he is shown to have acted mala fide, will not be affected, though it be shown that, with better management, the estate might have been kept free from debt. Their Lordships think that the lender is bound to inquire into the necessities for the loan, and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the Manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. But they think that if he does so inquire, and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably-credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and they do not think that, under such circumstances, he is bound to see to the application of the money. It is obvious that money to be secured on any estate is likely to be obtained on easier terms than a loan which rests on mere personal security, and that, therefore, the mere creation of a charge securing a proper debt cannot be viewed as improvident management; the purposes for which a loan is wanted are often future, as respects the actual application, and a lender can rarely have, unless he enters on the management, the means of controlling and rightly directing the actual application. Their Lordships do not think that a bona fide creditor should suffer when he has acted honestly and with due caution, but is himself deceived.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly report to Her Majesty in the following terms:—

“ Their Lordships are of opinion that the Ranee [425] ought to be deemed to have executed the mortgage Bond, dated Assar Soodee Poornumashee, in the pleadings mentioned, as and in the character of guardian of the infant Lal Inderdowun Singh.

“ And their Lordships are of opinion that the validity, force, and effect of the Bond, as to all and each of the sums, of which the sum of Rs. 15,000, thereby purporting to be secured, is composed, depend on the circumstances under which the sums, or such of them as were advanced by the Appellant, were respectively so advanced by him, regard being had also, in so far as may be just, to the circumstances under which the same were respectively borrowed.

“ And their Lordships are also of opinion that, assuming the Bond to be invalid and ineffectual, the Appellant would, nevertheless, be entitled to the benefit of any prior mortgage or mortgages paid off by him affecting the property comprised in the Bond, if and in so far as such prior mortgage or mortgages was or were valid and effectual.

“ And their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the decrees of the Zillah and Sudder Courts respectively ought to be reversed, and the cause remitted to the Sudder Court, with directions that inquiry be made into the several matters aforesaid, and that all such accounts be taken and such other inquiries made as, having regard to such matters and to the circumstances of the case, may be found to be necessary and proper, with directions also that the Sudder Court do proceed therein as may be just, both with respect to the said mortgage Bond and the several instruments of even date therewith; and that the costs of the appeal be costs in the cause, to be dealt with by the Sudder Court.”

[426] BODHRAO HUNMONT,—Appellant; NURSING RAO and Others,—Respondents * [July 11, 1856].

On appeal from the Governor in Council of Bombay.

Heard ex-parte.

Enam villages, granted by Government to the grantee and his male heirs, for services rendered to the State, are not, by the Hindu law in force in the Southern Mahratta country, distinguishable from other ancestral real estate; and are divisible among the heirs of the grantee.

The question in this appeal was the right of the Appellant to a partition of certain Enam villages in the Southern Mahratta Country, which had been granted by the Government of Bombay by a sunud, dated the 9th of April, 1823, to Hunmont Rao, the ancestor of the Appellant and Respondents, to hold to him and his posterity in the male line from generation to generation.

The circumstances which gave rise to this question were these:—

The Appellant and Respondents were Hindoo Enam Jageedars, and inhabitants of Hooilgole in the Talook Dunnul, of the Dharwar Zillah, in the Presidency of Bombay. The Respondent, Nursing Rao, being a Sirdar of the second class, was exempt from the Jurisdiction of the ordinary Zillah Courts, but by Reg. [427] VII. of 1830, of the Bombay Code, subject to that of the Political Agent of the Southern Mahratta Country.

On the 10th of January, 1851, the Appellant instituted a suit against the Respondents in the Court of the Political Agent in that District, and, by his plaint, stated, that Krishna Rao, deceased, the father of the Respondent, Nursing Rao; Narragen Rao, deceased, the father of the Respondent, Keshow Rao; and the other Respondents, Shreenewao Rao, Ragvendir Rao, Venkut Rao, were, with the Appellant, the six brothers and legitimate sons of the late Hunmont Rao, to whom Mr. Chaplin, formerly Commissioner at Poonah, gave, in consideration of his having served Government, by order of the then Governor in Council, three villages named Hooilgole, Nagavee, and Kulsupoor, in Surva Enam, yielding a total revenue of Rs. 4094 3a. 6p.; that the sunud granted at the same time to Hunmont Rao, declared that the Enam villages were conferred upon Hunmont Rao and his posterity in the male line hereditary; that in pursuance of the Sunud, Hunmont Rao was put in possession, and that the Appellant and Respondents lived together and managed the villages under their father's directions; that after his death, the Appellant and Krishna Rao, the father of the Respondent, Nursing Rao, jointly managed the villages for some time until disagreements arose between the Appellant and Respondents, which led to a division of their ancestral moveable property; and the Appellant further alleged, that in such division the father of the Respondent, Nursing Rao, and the rest of the Respondents combined against him, and by fraud subjected him to heavy losses; that the management of the three villages had been since in [428] the hands of the Respondents, who had collected the whole income without giving him his share, or showing him the accounts of the same, and he prayed to be put in possession of a sixth share of the three Enam villages held by his father.

The Respondents, Ragvendir Rao, and Venkut Rao, transmitted their answer by letter to the Political Agent, stating the circumstances under which the joint possession of the estate had continued since the decease of their father, and expressing their willingness to a partition, and charging the Respondent, Nursing Rao, with being the sole cause of the non-partition.

The Respondent, Nursing Rao, by his answer insisted that the Enam villages could not be partitioned, as it was understood when Hummont Rao obtained the grant from Government that it was to be continued to his family in perpetuity, that a decision had been made by the Collector of Dharwar, giving him, as the eldest son of the deceased grantee, the management of the villages and the division of the income among his brothers; that the effect of the villages being parcelled among them would be that disputes would arise between the sharers and the Ryots; and he concluded by praying that a decision should be passed confirming the practice of sharing the nett income of the Jaghire, and to determine against a partition.

The Appellant replied, insisting, that neither the Hindoo law, Regulations, or usage, entitled a person empowered by a sunud to conduct the management of a Jaghire to withhold from his brothers their shares in it. In the rejoinder, Nursing Rao reiterated the statements contained in his answer, objecting, that the Appellant claimed a share of the landed property, [429] although he had agreed to receive cash as his division of the Jaghire, and further objecting that the suit should have been instituted for partition of the personalty and of the landed property of the family, and not of the landed property alone.

None of the other Respondents appeared or took any part in the proceedings.

The suit was heard before the Political Agent, when the Appellant put in evidence the sunud granted by the Bombay Government to Hummont Rao, dated the 9th of April, 1823, of the villages in dispute, which provided that he and his sons, and sons' sons, should enjoy the same in male line all succeeding generations in Enam. Also a letter from Krishna Rao to the Respondent, Venkut Rao, in which he expressed his desire for a partition, that each might manage his share. And to show that the usage of the Southern Mahratta country was in conformity with the Hindoo law, he examined witnesses, to prove that ancestral property and Jaghire lands, inherited by several brothers, had been partitioned amongst them. The evidence produced by the Respondent, Nursing Rao, went to the denial of the letter of Krishna Rao above stated, with other evidence which in no way affected the Appellant's claim to a partition.

Mr. Inverarity, the Political Agent, recorded his opinion, that the matter in dispute should be decided by considering whether the Appellant could by the Hindoo law claim a partition of his ancestral landed property, after a division of the ancestral personal property had been made, and he, therefore, directed that question to be laid before the Shastree of the Court of Dharwar, who returned an answer, [430] that if the property was capable of division, and the division did not injure or destroy the property, it might be partitioned; whereupon the Political Agent by his decree, dated the 6th of October, 1852, decided that the partition prayed for by the Appellant should be allowed, and that he should be put in possession of one-sixth share of the Enam villages in question.

The Respondent, Nursing Rao, appealed from this decision to the Governor in Council, at Bombay, urging that as the villages contained both superior and inferior lands, such a partition would be attended with considerable inconvenience, and further stating that the revenue had hitherto been paid to each sharer, and that the Respondent would continue to pay the same in future, and submitting that such a division was not contemplated by the Hindoo law.

The Governor in Council thought that the case involved an important question of law, and referred the case for the opinion of the Shastree of the Sudder Court. That officer reported that on referring to several books on Hindoo law it was laid down that, the sons had a right to divide the moveable and immoveable property of their deceased father, and that, therefore, the land was divisible; and that there did not appear any difficulty in dividing the villages.

On the 17th of July, 1853, the Governor in Council recorded a minute on the appeal, in which he stated that the opinion of the law-officer was not definite enough to dispose of the appeal, and referred the case back for evidence upon one point, namely, whether the division of the villages would be at-[431]-tended with loss: as he thought the merits of the decision rested upon that ground.

The Political Agent in accordance with this direction issued a commission, under sec. I. cl. 31, of Reg. IV. of 1827, to the Mahalkurree of Roan, for him to repair to the villages, and report whether there existed any obstacle to the division of the lands. The Commissioner reported the mode in which the villages might be conveniently divided into six shares. The Governor on receipt of this report referred the case to the Secretary to Government in the Revenue Department for his opinion, whether he concurred in the statement that a division could be made without injury to the property, or proprietors, upon which the Revenue Secretary stated, that he was of opinion, that there were many objections to allowing the revenue management of a village to rest with more than one party, which he pointed out, and expressed an opinion that the management should continue in the hands of one party, the accounts being open to all.

The Governor in Council thereupon, on the 17th of February, 1854, made his decree, the material part of which was in these terms: "The Court having maturely considered the facts adduced in the Mahalkurree's report, together with the proceedings and judgment of the lower Court in the original suit and petition of appeal, and having considered also that Enamdars of villages have no more title to the occupied lands in their villages than Government have to Khalsa lands held by Ryots in Khalsat villages, but only to the revenues of such lands, and that many objections exist to the revenue management of a village resting with more than one party, judges that the division of the [432] lands described in this appeal cannot be claimed, and ought not to be admitted without injury to the property." The decree of the Political Agent was accordingly reversed, and the Court directed that the management should continue in the hands of one party, the accounts being open to all.

From this decree the present appeal was brought, and, as the Respondents did not appear, was heard ex-parte.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. Ayrton, in support of the appeal, contended, that by the usage of the Southern Mahratta Country, and in conformity with the Hindoo law, the villages, though granted in Enam, were, in common with the other moveable and immoveable property of the deceased, Hummont Rao, divisible among his heirs, and that the Appellant was entitled to one-sixth share upon a partition, and they submitted that the decision of the Governor in Council was influenced by a consideration relating to the Revenue, which was quite irrelevant to the question between the parties.

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh.—There appears no reason why the Enam villages in question should not be governed by the general principles of the Hindoo law respecting partition of the father's estate among his heirs. The terms of the sunud are absolute. There is nothing peculiar in the case; it is an ordinary partition suit, which is an every day's occurrence in India, and the division must be according to the Hindoo law. The mode of collecting [433] the revenue has nothing to do with the question. We, therefore, must reverse the decree of the Governor in Council of Bombay, and consequently, affirm the decree of the Political Agent of the Southern Mahratta Country, of the 6th of October, 1852, with costs, as well here as of the appeal to the Governor in Council of Bombay.

HURRYDOSS DUTT,—Appellant: SREEMUTTY UPPOORNAH DOSSEE and
Another,—*Respondents [July 14 and 15, 1856].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

Bill, quia timet, by reversioner, against the daughter of an intestate Hindoo in possession of personalty, dismissed.

A Court of Equity will not interfere, unless it is shown that there is danger from the mode in which the tenant for life in possession is dealing with the property.

The mere fact of the tenant for life keeping in hand for about three months part of the corpus for the alleged purpose of an eligible investment does not amount to waste, nor is in derogation of the rights of those entitled in reversion.

The title of a Hindoo widow to her husband's property, though a restrictive one, is not in the nature of a trust.

Whether by the Hindoo law current in Bengal the interest of a daughter in the estate of her deceased father, is of the same nature as that of a widow. Quære.

This appeal was brought from a decree on the Equity side of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, in a suit instituted by the Appellant against the Respondents, dismissing the Bill with costs.

[434] The facts out of which the appeal arose were as follow:—

Heeraloll Mullick, a Hindoo merchant and Banker, died in the year 1819, seised and possessed of considerable real and personal estate in the Presidency of Bengal, leaving a widow, his heiress and legal personal representative, and four daughters, his only children, him surviving. The widow entered into possession of his real and personal estate, and died on the 30th of April, 1850. At the time of her death, three only of the daughters survived her, one having died in her lifetime without issue. Of the three daughters who survived, one, Rungunmoney Dossee, was a childless widow. Another, Joymoney Dossee, was the mother of the Appellant, and the infant Respondent, Singheechurn Dutt; and the third the Respondent, Sreemutty Upoornah Dossee, the wife of Lall Mohun Roy, by whom she had had two female children, deceased, one of whom, however, Fuloomary Dossee, left a son her surviving. Soon after the death of the widow of Heeraloll Mullick, some litigation ensued between her three surviving daughters with respect to the right of succession to the property of Heeraloll Mullick, which resulted, by compromise and arrangement (subject to a small money payment to Rungunmoney Dossee) in the equal division of the property between Joymoney Dossee and the Respondent, as the only daughters of Heeraloll Mullick having issue or capable of having issue at the death of his widow. The share of the property to which the Respondent succeeded consisted, inter alia, of a sum of Rs. 55,466 10a. and 8p., at that time invested in the promissory notes of 1825 and 1826, called Com-[435]-pany's paper, bearing interest at £5 per cent. On the 23rd of April, 1853, the Government of the East India Company issued a notification of their intention to pay off the whole of their promissory notes of 1825 and 1826, on the 25th of July then next, giving parties who were holders of those promissory notes the option of taking either the par value of such promissory notes to be paid in liquidation, or the nominal equivalent at par in a loan opened in 1842 and 1843, bearing interest at the rate of £4 per cent. only. The Respondent did not at the time approve of the transfer of the £5 per cent. promissory notes of 1825 and 1826 into the £4 per cent. notes of 1842 and 1843; and, on the 25th of July, 1853, she received in cash from the Government of the East India Company, in discharge of the share of the property of Heeraloll Mullick so invested in the promissory notes of the year 1825 and 1826, the sum of Rs. 55,466 10a. and 8p., of which sum, however, she shortly afterwards invested the sum of Rs. 39,340 in the purchase in her own name of Company's paper in the loan of 1842 and 1843, bearing interest at the rate of £4 per cent.; and, at the date of the filing of the Bill, the residue of the sum of Rs. 55,466 10a. and 8p., remained in the hands of the Respondent uninvested, ready for an investment when an advantageous opportunity should in her judgment offer.

The Bill was filed by the Appellant on the 15th of August, 1853, against the Respondent, Sreemutty Upoornah Dossee, and Singheechurn Dutt, an infant, the other Respondent, as Defendants, in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, stating at great length the facts above set forth, and alleging his presumptive [436] title, as grandson of Heeraloll Mullick to the share of the Respondent in the whole of the sum of Rs. 55,466 10a. and 8p., and charging that the Respondent intended to misappropriate the greater portion of the estate of Heeraloll Mullick to which she had so succeeded, and that it was in danger of being entirely lost; and the Bill further charged that by the Hindoo law and usage a daughter succeeding to the estate of her father, had no greater interest in the same than a Hindoo widow, and that she was only entitled to the usufruct and could not alter or vary the securities in the Company's paper, and praying a declaration by the Court that the Respondent, by the acceptance of cash from the Government of the East India Company, in discharge of the promissory notes of 1825 and 1826, instead of having invested the same in the new £4 per cent. loan of the Government in the purchase of Company's paper, had committed waste, and for a decree that all sums received by the Respondent in respect of her share of the estate of Heeraloll Mullick might be paid into Court, and invested in the promissory notes of the Government of the East India Company. The Bill also prayed for an injunction restraining the Respondent from in any way converting into money any of the Company's paper in her possession, power, or control, belonging to the estate of Heeraloll Mullick.

The Respondent by her answer, stated that she had already invested the sum of Rs. 39,340, part of the sum of Rs. 55,466 10a. and 8p., in the promissory notes of 1842 and 1843 of the Government of the East India Company, which she purchased at a discount of 3 to 5 annas per cent., and she denied that she had misappropriated, or that she intended to mis-[437]-appropriate, any portion of the cash so received by her from the Government of the East India Company, and that the residue remained in her hands ready for investment whenever an advantageous opportunity occurred, either in mortgage security, Government paper, or purchase of real estate, and that she had been looking for such investment, and submitted as a matter of law, to the judgment of the Court, the nature or extent of the right of herself, and Joy-money Dossee, as such daughters of Heeraloll Mullick in his estate, whether the same was by the Hindoo law an estate for life only, or a lesser or greater estate, or any portion of the estate of Heeraloll Mullick, and she insisted that there was nothing whatever to show that the money remaining in her hands, or any portion of the estate of Heeraloll Mullick, to which she had succeeded, was in any danger of being lost.

The cause was heard on Bill and answer on the 25th of February, 1854, before the Supreme Court, on which day, judgment was delivered by Sir Lawrence Peel, Chief Justice, as follows:—"The question which has been argued before us is an important one, but, as we think, not difficult of solution. It is, in fact, in a great degree settled by authority, to which all Courts in this country must submit, namely, that of the decision of the ultimate Court of appeal, the Privy Council. The right of the Hindoo widow, as heiress to her deceased husband under the law prevalent in Bengal, to the free and unrestrained possession of the property which she takes by succession, is declared by the judgment of Lord Gifford in the case (Cossinauth Bysack v. Hurrosoondery Dossee: Clark's Rules and Ord. Add. Ca. p. 91) quoted in the argument. [438] This, of course, has no application where she is subject to the tutelary care of the Court of Wards. It is only where she is about to deal with the property in a mode contrary to the Hindoo law in extension of her powers over it, and in derogation of the rights of those who may succeed to it, that the Court would be justified in restraining her in the use, custody, and disposition of it. Now this case shows nothing of the kind. The case comes before us on Bill and answer, and all that the answer admits is, that the Government proposed to pay her off as a holder of certain Government paper in the five per cent. loan, giving her the option of taking an equivalent in a four cent. new paper. This she says she declined, not thinking it an equivalent, or advantageous as an investment. She says also that she has received the money, Rs. 50,000, and has since purchased other Company's paper to the amount of upwards of Rs. 30,000, and that the remainder she intends to invest either in Company's paper, or on mortgage on real security, or in the purchase of land when an eligible opportunity offers. There is nothing whatever admitted to show that the money is in any danger. The mode of custody is not shown. It was stated in argument that she has it in her private dwelling, but that even is not admitted. Now, this is nothing like waste, or like that sort of dealing with the property which would justify a Court of Equity in interfering. We are asked to declare, for such is the prayer of the Bill, that she, having received what her debtors paid her on their notice to pay her off, committed waste in not re-investing it in Government paper. Such a prayer could only be asked on the assumption that the heiress is a trustee, and must [439] invest as that trustee must invest who is directed to invest in Government securities only, and has no option to exercise his discretion as to the investment. But such is not the condition of the heiress. Hers, as is stated in the judgment of this Court in Hurrydoss v. Ranguinnoy Dossee, is a restricted, not a trust estate. Here she does not even change the security. It does not proceed from her act, but she is paid off. If she were about to invest in an unsafe security, that might justify the interference of the Court. It is not even shown that there is imprudence in keeping the money; but if there were, imprudence merely is not waste or misdealing. It is not uncommon for natives, or even for others than natives, to have in plate, jewels, cash, etc., property to a larger amount than this in a private dwelling. There is as much danger from encouraging litigation by lending an ear too readily to complaints from reversionary heirs, in families where no union is, as in declining to listen to complaints of those who show no grave foundations for the alarm which they assert that they feel; but a short time has elapsed since she received the money, and there is nothing to show that she does not really mean to do that which she asserts she intends to do. It was argued that the Legislature has disabled Hindoo and Mahomedan representatives from making transfer of Government paper and Bank shares unless under probate, letters of administration, or certificate; but that notion proceeds in a mistaken reading of the Act; it is mainly for the protection of debtors who may, if they really doubt as to title, or are distracted by rival claims, or by disunion amongst claimants under the same title, refuse to pay debts to representatives unless to persons claiming under Pro-[440]bate, Letters of administration, or certificate. But if the heir merely ask for his own security, the Act does not apply. Where a transfer is sought to be made, not by a representative title simply, but under the title that a certificate confers, then it is true the certificate will not avail, unless that power is conferred by the certificate. In other words, the representative title to make a transfer will not be displaced by a certificate not expressing that that power is given by it; but even if this were otherwise, the objection has no application here, where the debtor in fact takes the initiative, gives notice to pay, and the creditor merely receives the money. The Act is not for the protection of debtors, and the debtor may waive a security intended for his protection."

From the decree founded upon this judgment the present appeal was brought, the Appellant submitting that the same was erroneous, for the following reasons:—

First. Because with reference to the nature of the interest of the Respondent, according to the Hindoo law, in the Company's paper, and the proceeds thereof, the Court below would have been justified in interfering in order to protect the same for those entitled in remainder.

Secondly. Because the facts stated in the Bill, and admitted by the answer, afforded sufficient grounds for the interference of the Court, and that, therefore, the Bill ought not to have been dismissed.

On the other hand the Respondent, Sreemutty Uppoornah Dossee, who alone appeared, contended that the decree was correct, for the following reasons:—

[441] First. Because, according to the Hindoo law prevalent in Bengal, upon the death of the widow of Heeraloll Mullick, the Respondent being and still continuing a married woman, and capable of having male issue, was absolutely entitled, as a daughter of Meeraloll Mullick, to one equal moiety of his wealth.

Second. Because the Respondent had at least a right to the free possession and enjoyment of the share of the property to which she by succession became entitled, without any restraint other than such as might be imposed by her duties as the wife of a Hindoo, and because those who might be entitled to succeed to her property at her death could only be entitled to so much thereof as should remain after the lawful enjoyment thereof by her during her life.

Third. Because, by the Hindoo law, the Respondent, if not entitled to the property to which she succeeded, either absolutely, or in manner mentioned in the second reason, was, at any rate, warranted in devoting a portion of the property to which she succeeded to pious uses, and might, in case of necessity, dispose of a portion of the corpus thereof in support of herself and her family.

Fourth. Because the discretion as to the time and mode of investment or re-investment of the share of the property to which the Respondent by succession became entitled, as well as the management thereof, rested in any event wholly with her.

Fifth. Because there could be no just analogy between the case of a tenancy for life created by a Will or settlement of a Testator or settlor, and the limitations or restrictions upon enjoyment, imposed by the Hindoo law of inheritance and succession.

[442] Sixth. Because, even assuming that the Respondent had not the right to the free and unrestrained possession and management of the property to which she succeeded, yet inasmuch as the discharge by the Government of the East India Company, of the promissory notes of 1825 and 1826, was an act over which the Respondent had no control, her acceptance of such discharge could not be construed as an act of waste.

Seventh. Because the Respondent was not, under any circumstances, bound to invest the share of the property to which she had succeeded in the Company's paper.

Eighth. Because the only possible ground on which the Court could have been justified in restraining the Respondent from having the use, custody, and disposition of the property to which she has succeeded, would have been either on proof by the Appellant, or on the admission of the Respondent, that she had dealt or intended to deal with the property, the subject of the suit, in a mode contrary to the Hindoo law, whereas there was not only no such proof by the Appellant, but there was a positive denial of any such act or intention by the Respondent in her answer, by which answer, having regard to the nature of the pleadings and the course of proceeding adopted by the Appellant, he must be concluded.

Ninth. Because, even on the Appellant's own showing, he had only a bare presumptive title, and the possibility of his succeeding to the property in question was too remote, and could only be realised in the several events of this Respondent dying without male issue, and of the Appellant surviving both his own mother and the Respondent.

[443] Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant.—This is an ordinary quia timet suit, and we submit the facts of the case justified resort to the Court. The Bill was filed by the Appellant, one of the next heirs in expectancy, to prevent the probable loss of part of the corpus of that portion of Heeraloll Mullick's estate to which the Appellant might become entitled, and which, in the circumstances of danger in which it was placed by the Respondent, reasonably led the Appellant to apprehend and anticipate its possible loss, Flight v. Cook (2 Ves. Sen. 619). The Respondent is a married woman, and although she has invested part of the Rs. 55,466, amounting to Rs. 39,340, yet there is an undisposed residue of Rs. 16,126, odd, which by her answer she admits she has retained in her hands. The judgment of the Court below proceeds upon an erroneous presumption of Hindoo law as applicable to this case: the Court puts the Respondent, a daughter, upon the same footing as a Hindoo widow, and justifies such a conclusion upon the judgment of this Court in the case of Cossinauth Bysack v. Hurrosoondery Dossee (Clark's Rules and Ord. Add. Cases, p. 91; S.C. Morton's Rep. 85). That case is distinguishable from the present. A material distinction exists in the Hindoo law between the interest a daughter has in her father's estate, and that which a widow possesses in her husband's estate. Cossinauth Bysack v. Hurrosoondery Dossee was a case of a widow; here a daughter is in possession. By the Hindoo law, the widow, in the absence of male issue, succeeds to her husband's estate as half of his body, and she alone [444] is capable of performing certain funeral oblations; and although she is only tenant for life, yet she possesses for some purposes a power of alienation of the estate. Daya-Bhaga, ch. xi. sec. i. pars. 2, 7, 26, 43, 56, 57, 60 l. F. Macnaghten's "Con. on Hindoo Law," pp. 19, 20-23. According to the cases of Bungsa Dhar Hagra v. Thakoor Pyrag Sing (7 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 114), and Radha Benode Mist v. Sheikh Musherutoollah (7 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 350), she is only a holder in trust for certain purposes, and an action for waste would lie against her. Now, the title of a daughter to a father's estate is widely different, she has no such privilege as the widow, of discretionary alienation, she only enjoys for life the estate which devolves upon her by the failing of nearer heirs, F. Macnaghten's "Con. on Hindoo Law," pp. 6, 7. Her very title depends upon her continuing the line, Daya Bhaga, ch. xi. sec. ii. par. 8; Gunga Mya v. Kishen Kishore Chaudhry (3 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 130), and she cannot give away or sell any portion, 2 W. Macnaghten's "Prin. of Hindu Law," p. 224; 1 Coleb., Dig., p. 496. She cannot defeat the right of her son's or reversioners' succession at her death, Dor drun, Colley Dass Bose v. Debnarain Koberanj (Fulton's Rep. 329); Karuna Mai v. Jai Chander Ghose (5 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 46). It is apparent, then, that the law, as laid down by Lord Gifford in Cossinuth Bysack v. Hurrosoondery Dossee, was wrongly applied by the Court below in this case, as the analogy between the widow and daughter's estate cannot be carried out. That case is treated by F. Macnaghten, "Con. on Hindoo Law," p. 16, as applying to widows only. The fact of the Re-[445]-spondent keeping the residue of the Rs. 36,000, in her house, was a devastavit, which authorises a Court of Equity to interfere. No case can be found in which a person, who, like the Respondent, is entitled to the mere income without any discretion of alienation, has been allowed possession and custody of property which she has neglected to invest in proper securities.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. Macnaghten, for the Respondents, were not called upon to address their Lordships.

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh.—Their Lordships do not think it necessary to trouble the Counsel for the Respondent. This Bill is filed by a party entitled to property secured during the life of the tenant for life; and the Bill proceeds on the ground that the property is endangered from the manner in which the tenant for life is dealing with it. The tenant for life is the daughter of the intestate, Heeraloll Mullick. It has been decided by this Court in the case of Cossinuth Bysack v. Hurrosoondery Dossee, after most full and deliberate argument and consideration, that the principles which are applied in Courts of Equity in England, for securing in the public funds any property to which one person is entitled in possession, and another is entitled in remainder, are not applicable to the case of property in India, where such property is in possession of a Hindoo widow.

Now, the Bill alleges, that, in this respect, the widow and the daughter stand in the same situation. Whether they stand in the same situation or not, with respect to the right of disposition of the property, [446] they at all events stand in the same situation as to the right of administration, and right of enjoyment for their lives; and the principle laid down in the case which has been referred to in this Court was this, that it is not sufficient to say that there is one person entitled in possession, and another entitled in remainder, in order to induce the Court to interfere to take the property out of the hands of the individual who is in possession of it; but it is necessary to show that there is danger to the property from the mode in which the party in possession is dealing with it, in which case, and in such case only, the Court will interfere.

The law, therefore, being perfectly settled by that decision, and that decision having been followed during the time Sir Edward Ryan presided over the Supreme Court, and also of his successor, Sir Lawrence Peel, it must be considered as the settled law of the Courts in Bengal.

The question here is, has anything been shown in this case to justify interference, or has the case alleged in the Bill been established by evidence?—the only evidence which exists being the answer of the Defendant. It appears to their Lordships, it has not been made out at all. It is perfectly true that the property at the husband's death was in Company's paper; and as long as it could remain in that security, the Respondent permitted it so to remain; but in the month of July, 1853, the Company paid off the loan in which it was invested. The property, therefore, could no longer continue on the security in which it was invested. The Respondent received the amount of the money, which was about Rs. 50,000, and before the Bill in this case was filed, (on the 15th [447] of August, 1853,) she had invested Rs. 39,000, of the money so received in other Company's paper; and she says, at the time when she puts in her answer, in the month of October, 1853, that is three months after the date when she received the money, that the remainder of the money was still in her hands uninvested, waiting for an eligible investment. Then can it be said, that the Respondent, who, according to the ordinary Hindoo custom, keeps in her house a certain portion of the money, having, in the course of three months, invested Rs. 39,000, three-fourths, or at least two-thirds, of the money in other securities, was guilty of a devastavit, or showed the slightest intention of committing a devastavit in this respect? Their Lordships are of opinion that no such case is made out; and, as the ground upon which the Bill was filed, therefore, entirely fails, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

We must observe, that if there were any foundation for the law which has been now contended for at the Bar, the cases in which such applications would be made must have been, we should suppose, extremely frequent; yet no such instance has been produced, either from the Native or the Supreme Courts in which any order has been made for such interference, except in a case in which manifest danger, or risk of danger, has been proved to the satisfaction of the Court.

Their Lordships will advise Her Majesty to affirm this decree with costs.

[448] MODEE KAIKHOOSCROW HORMUSJEE,—Appellant; COOVERBHAE, and Others,—Respondents * [Nov. 26, 27, 1856].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Bombay.

Will by a Parsee established.

Semble. There is no restraint upon the testamentary power of disposition by a Parsee.

An appeal lies to the Queen in Council from the decision of a single Judge of the Sudder Court, upon the admissibility of a special appeal. The Bombay Act, No. III. of 1843, enacts that such refusal is final, yet not having received the sanction of the Crown: Held, that its finality was confined to the Sudder Court, and did not affect the prerogative of the Crown, or deprive the subject of his right of appeal to the Queen in Council.

Bom. Reg. IV. of 1827, sec. 27, cl. 2, imposes no obligation on the Court, in the absence of any allegation in the pleadings of family usage or custom, to call for evidence of such fact.

The facts of this appeal are fully set forth in the judgment.

The case was argued by Mr. Le Messurier, and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant; and Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. Ayrton, for the Respondents.

The authorities referred to were:

Upon the alleged refusal of the Court to examine witnesses upon the custom of the Parsees to make, first, a testamentary disposition at all; and second, whether any restraint was imposed upon the Testator disposing of his property, Bom. Reg. IV. of 1827, [449] sec. 27, cl. 2, Jeswunt Sing-jee v. Jet Sing-jee (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 424), Macpherson "On civil procedure," p. 220.

App. Cases, 431).

Judgment was pronounced by

The Right Hon. the Lord Justice Turner (Dec. 1, 1856).—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the Appellant in the Court of Surat, against the Respondents, the widow and daughters, and also a grand-daughter of the Appellant's late brother, Modee Rustomjee Hormusjee, for the purpose of recovering his late brother's estate.

By the plaint in this suit, the Appellant alleged that his father, Modee Hormusjee Bhimjee, died in the year Sumvit, 1877; that he had three sons, the eldest of whom was Modee Muncherjee, the second, Modee Rustomjee, and the third, the present Appellant; that neither of the other two brothers, but only himself, the Plaintiff, had sons, and that according to the custom of the family, and the rules of their Parsee Punchayet of Surat, the brothers of deceased persons, and not their wife and daughters, are entitled to their inheritance; that his elder brother, Modee Muncherjee, died six years past, leaving his wife; and the certificate of heirship to him had been obtained from the Court by the Appel-[450]-lant and his brother, Rustomjee, and the two brothers had received his property. That Appellant's brother, Rustomjee, died on the 16th of August, 1849, and he having no son, the Appellant was the owner and heir to all the property of his deceased brother, Rustomjee, and all the property that had been taken possession of by his widow, Cooverbhaee, his daughters, Dimbaee and Mottebaee, and grand-daughter, Khursetbaee, which they did not make over to him, the Appellant; but alleging their false claim thereto, by the instigation of some people they intended ruining the property, with the object of injuring the Appellant's just claim. He preferred his plaint, therefore, for Rs. 6,18,699, and to obtain possession, according to the following particulars, of the property, ready money, jewels, etc., deed and other documents, and Duffurs, and he requested that Cooverbhaee, widow of Modee Rustomjee, Dimbaee and Mottebaee, daughters of Rustomjee, and Khursetbaee Buchoobaee, grand-daughter of Rustomjee, might be summoned to appear, and after instituting an investigation by means of witnesses and pleadings, the property, ready money, deeds and other documents, and Duffurs, might be made over to him, out of their possession; and he further stated by his plaint, that his brother had lent money to some people, the documents for which he had caused to be written in the names of his widow and daughters, but that the amount belonged to his brother, who was the owner thereof, and the persons therein named had no claim thereto, but that he, the Appellant, had. Then followed the particulars of demand, which were estimated at Rs. 6,18,699.

The Respondents, by their answer, stated that the Plaintiff had unjustly laid a false claim against them, [451] who were females, and the rightful heiresses, seeking to intimidate them. That the Plaintiff and his brother, the deceased, Modee Muncherjee, and the deceased, Modee Rustomjee, all three brothers, in the year Sumvit, 1880 (A.D. 1823), divided the little property of their father between them, and having executed releases to each other respectively, they separated, and they took their meals separate, and traded separately. Therefore, according to the custom of the world, and the rules of their caste, they, the wife and daughters of the deceased, Modee Rustomjee, were his heiresses; and, in like manner, amongst them, the wives and daughters of deceased persons who had separated from their brothers had inherited their property. The Respondents further alleged that the deceased, Modee Rustomjee, made his Will in Sumvit, 1902 (1845 A.D.), appointing them his heiresses and administratrix, by which also, according to the regulations of their religion and usage, the suit laid by the Plaintiff was clearly false. Besides which, the Modeejee of their community, the Plaintiff, and others, gave a written answer, dated the 5th of November, 1842, to a question put by the Judge respecting Parsees, wherein it was distinctly written, that if the deceased had not left a Will and there existed any paternal property, his brother was entitled to inherit the same; that by the admission of the Plaintiff it was publicly known amongst them, that a person might by Will bequeath his paternal property to whomsoever he pleased; and in this case the deceased, Modee Rustomjee, after the division of his paternal property, acquired property by his own labour, and also made a Will in favour of the Defendants, his wife and daughters; therefore, according to the contents of the answer given by the Plain-[452]-tiff, and the other members of their community, with their signatures thereto, his claim was clearly false. That many suits had been heard in the Adawluts relative to Parsees, wherein, although a brother and nephews were living, the Court had decided that the persons in whose names the Wills of the deceased were made were his heirs; and those heirs of the deceased by Will have received the inheritance; and the objections and claim made by the brothers and nephews of the deceased have been rejected. That although this was known, the Plaintiff had unjustly laid this false claim, in order to injure them, and cause them improper loss. That the Plaintiff in his petition stated that his brother, the deceased, Modee Muncharjee, died, and he had become his heir. In answer to which they, the Defendants, begged to state that Modee Muncharjee, had no issue, and his wife was insane; therefore, that she was the same as if she did not exist in the world; and also the deceased, Modee Muncharjee, made no Will, consequently that statement had no connection with their case. That after the release was passed, as above stated, and after the deceased, Modee Rustomjee, made his will, the Plaintiff executed another written release to the deceased, Modee Rustomjee, in the year Sumvit, 1903, (1846, A.D.), wherein it was distinctly written by the Plaintiff as follows: "I have no claim on account of any inheritance, or in any other manner, against you, your heirs, administrators, etc.; and should either of us prefer any claim whatever against each other, or against our heirs, administrators, etc., the same shall be null and void." That by this release also the Plaintiff had no right to lay any claim in any way against them, who were the deceased's legal heiresses and [453] administratrix. That the list of outstanding debts and property, etc., set forth by the Plaintiff in his petition, was mostly false, and in his claim to the inheritance of the deceased, Modee Rustomjee, he had also unjustly included what was due personally to the Defendant, Cooverbhaxe.

The cause was first heard before the Sudder Ameen of Surat, who, after having examined the case, evidently with great care and attention, dismissed the plaint with costs. From this decision the Appellant appealed to the Zillah Court of Surat, by which Court the decision of the Sudder Ameen was affirmed. The Appellant then presented a petition to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Bombay, praying for the admission under Act, No. III., of 1843, of the Bombay Presidency, of a special appeal from the decisions of the Sudder Ameen, and of the Zillah Court, which petition having been heard before a single Judge of the Sudder Court, according to the provisions of that Act, was rejected by him. The decision of the single Judge was afterwards brought under the consideration of the other Judges of the Sudder Court by a petition of review presented by the Appellant, and which was also dismissed.

The appeal before us complains of these four several decisions. In disposing of this appeal, it may be convenient, first, to consider whether the order of a single Judge, dismissing the petition for the special appeal, has been properly made the subject of appeal. The Act, No. III., of 1843, which has been referred to, and which has been followed by an Act, No. XVI., of 1853, to which reference was also made, contains the following enactments:—

"I. It is hereby enacted, that from and after the [454] 1st day of May next, a special appeal shall lie to the Courts of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta and Allahabad respectively, to the Court of Sudder Adawlut of Madras, and to the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Bombay, from all decisions passed on regular appeals in the Civil Courts subordinate to them respectively, which shall appear to be inconsistent with some law, or usage having the force of law, or some practice of the Courts, or shall involve some question of law, usage, or practice upon which there may be reasonable doubts.

"IV. And it is hereby enacted, that every application for a special appeal, duly presented to the proper Court as aforesaid, shall be heard by a single Judge of the Court, in the presence of the special Appellant, or his Vakeel, or Agent; and it shall be competent to the Judge, at his discretion, to call for and peruse any document forming a part of the record of the cause, and to summon the opposite party to answer the application.

"V. And it is hereby enacted, that if it shall appear to the Judge that a special appeal is admissible under this Act, he shall pass an order accordingly, and shall at the same time reduce the points to be determined to writing, in English, in the form of a certificate, which shall be translated into the vernacular language in use in the Court, and the special appeal shall then be brought on the file of the Court, to be heard and determined in due course. Provided, that it shall not be necessary to call for or refer to any part of the proceedings, the reading of which is not required for deciding the point or points of law stated in the certificate.

"VI. And it is hereby enacted, that if it shall [455] appear to the Judge that a special appeal is not admissible under this Act, he shall reject the petition, and his order, so rejecting a petition for a special appeal, shall be final.

"VII. And it is hereby enacted, that in every case of special appeal admitted as aforesaid, the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut shall determine the point or points certified as above enacted, and no other point or part of the case whatever."

By this Act, therefore, the decision of a single Judge as to the admissibility of a special appeal was made final, and, no doubt, the Act has rendered it final, so far as the Sudder Court is concerned; but it is a wholly different question whether the Act could extend to take away the right of appeal to Her Majesty in Council. It is the prerogative of the Crown to do justice between all its subjects, and the Indian Legislature could have no power to limit or affect that prerogative without the sanction of the Crown, which does not appear to have been given. The finality created by the Act must, as it seems to their Lordships, be limited by the jurisdiction of the Legislative power which created it, and their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion, that the order of the single Judge rejecting the special appeal has been properly made the subject of appeal.

That order, however, forms only one of the subjects of this appeal. The appeal goes far beyond it; it extends to the decisions of the Zillah Court and of the Sudder Ameen, and it is plain that this case admits of different considerations, if it be looked at with reference only to the decision of the single Judge, from those which present themselves, if it be looked at with reference also to the previous decisions. In the one case, the question to be considered would be whether a sound discretion was exercised by the single Judge, and by the other Judges of the Sudder Court, assuming them to have been competent to entertain the subject, in rejecting the special appeal. In the other case, the question would be whether the successive decisions sought to be upheld upon the whole merits of the case. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to deal with the question whether a sound discretion was exercised by the single Judge in rejecting the special appeal without entering at large into the merits of the previous decisions. It would also be an unsatisfactory mode of disposing of this case to deal with it simply with reference to this question of discretion, as the result of so dealing with it might be to remit the parties to fresh litigation.

Moreover, the most favourable view of this case for the Appellant must be, that the question should not be regarded as one depending merely upon the exercise of discretion, and their Lordships, therefore, have determined to decide this appeal with reference not merely to the decisions of the single Judge and of the other Judges of the Sudder Court, but with reference to all the decisions which have been pronounced in the cause.

The nature of the case sufficiently appears from the pleadings which have been already stated. It is hardly necessary to add, that if the Will set up by the answer be a valid and effectual Will, the Appellant's case must be wholly at an end. He claims as heir, and as heir only, and his title as heir would be displaced by the Will. It is to the Will, therefore, our attention must be directed. Now, the [457] factum of the Will is not disputed. It is, indeed, proved beyond dispute; but the Appellant's case is this: that the Testator was a Parsee; that among Parsees, there is a rule, or usage, that no disposition can be made by Will to the total disinheritance of the heir, or, at all events, that there was such a rule or usage in the Testator's family; that, under the provisions of Bom. Reg. IV., of 1827, ch. vi. sec. 27, cl. 1, it was the duty of the Court to have ascertained this rule or usage, by examining persons versed in the laws by which Parsees are governed; but that evidence on the part of the Appellant, which would have established this rule or usage, was rejected by the Court. Three points are involved in this argument on the part of the Appellant. First, that there is such a rule or usage, as the Appellant alleges. Second, that under the Regulation referred to, it was the duty of the Court to ascertain it. And third, that evidence on the part of the Appellant, tending to prove it, was rejected.

As to the first of these points, no such rule or usage as is now insisted on upon the part of the Appellant is in any manner set up by the pleadings in the suit; there is no replication to the answer denying the validity of the Will upon any such ground. The existence of any such rule or usage is first adverted to in the supplemental petition of appeal from the decree of the Sudder Ameen; and, indeed, what is alleged in that petition, as well as in the petition to the Sudder Court for the special appeal, is not that the testamentary power of Parsees is limited in the manner now insisted on, but that they have no power whatever to dispose by Will to the prejudice of the heir, which in effect amounts to their having no [458] testamentary power at all, although the existence and constant exercise of the power is notorious and recognised, and well established by authority, and was indeed admitted at the Bar. It is in the petition for the special appeal, too, that we first find the suggestion of the alleged family rule or usage, which it is scarcely necessary to mention, as it rests on no other ground than that some members of the family had died intestate. It was argued for the Appellant that it rested upon the Respondents to prove the power of the Testator to make the Will in question, in order to establish their title under that Will; but it being admitted that the testamentary power existed generally, it was clearly upon the Appellant to show that it did not extend to this particular case, and to allege and prove the limits of the power. He has made no such allegation and adduced no such proof. The Appellant, therefore, cannot maintain this appeal upon the ground of the existence of the alleged rule or usage.

As to the second point, there does not appear to their Lordships to be any foundation for the argument on the part of the Appellant. Whatever may be the duty of the Judge under the Regulation in question, where any particular rule or usage is alleged as to which any reasonable doubt may exist, and the parties have not waived resort to the course prescribed by that Regulation, (and their Lordships are far from considering that in such cases the Judges in India may not well be advised of their own accord to act upon the Regulation,) we certainly would not be disposed to discourage such a practice. But their Lordships, at the same time, have no hesitation in stating their opinion to be, that this Regulation imposes no such obligation [459] upon the Judges, where there is no allegation of any rule or usage as to which any reasonable doubt can be entertained, which is the case in this instance as to the power of disposing by Will, or where the parties have waived resort to the course pointed out by the Regulation, as they have done in this case. The appeal, therefore, cannot be maintained on this ground.

There remains, then, only the third question, that of the rejection of evidence; and most certainly if the Appellant had succeeded in satisfying their Lordships that any evidence bearing, however slightly, upon the question as to the alleged limit of the testamentary power, had been rejected by the Courts in India, this case must have been sent back for the reception of that evidence.

Justice requires that all the evidence which is material to the issue, and which the parties may desire to adduce, should be received before the rights of the parties are disposed of, and their Lordships fully adhere in that respect to the principle on which the case of Jeswant Sing-jee v. Jet Sing-jee (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 424), cited in the argument, proceeded. But the Appellant in this case has wholly failed to satisfy their Lordships that any evidence bearing upon the question of limited testamentary power, which is the only material question in the case, was rejected by the Courts, or was tendered on his part.

It seems to their Lordships to be clear from the language of the Durkhasts, that the witnesses originally proposed to be examined on the part of the Appellant, were proposed to be so examined as to the heirship only. Looking to that language, and to the [460] issues in the cause, and to what is stated in the petition for the special appeal, they cannot adopt the suggestion of the Appellant's Counsel that these witnesses were intended to be examined, not only as to the heirship, but as to the title of the Respondents, as heirs under the Will.

If the Appellant had had any witnesses to examine as to the alleged limit of the testamentary power, it cannot be doubted that he would have claimed the right to examine them when the witnesses to the Will had been examined, and the question of reference to the Moddee Punchayet, which under the minute of the 20th June, 1850, to which all parties must be taken to have agreed, was to be preliminary to the examination of the witnesses, came before the Sudder Ameen; but so far from proposing to examine any witnesses, the Appellant then waived the reference to the Modée Punchayet. The Judge, indeed, in the judgment appealed from, refers to the rejection of some evidence by the Zillah Judge. He says: "The second question is, whether the Judge was justified in refusing to take the further evidence tendered in appeal by the Appellant on the question of custom as to inheritance and the validity of the Will. I think he was, for the reasons assigned by him, namely, that the record contained sufficient evidence of the customs of Parsees in the exposition taken from former cases filed in the Lower Courts, and that those expositions were better evidence, because less unbiassed, than there was any hope of obtaining by the examination of witnesses called by the parties. There was a mass of documentary evidence before the Court, showing the right in Parsees to devise, and the practice obtaining amongst them of devising their property. [461] Indeed the fact is so notorious, that it is difficult to be understood how such a plea as that there is no testamentary right in Parsees could have been set up. It has not been alleged that they are prohibited from doing so by any restrictive law. On the whole, I think the Judge exercised a very sound discretion in refusing to take further evidence, the only result of which would have been to prolong the litigation."

The Judge of the Sudder Adawlut here meant to refer to what was alleged in the petition of the Appellant before him, in which the Appellant sums up his objections as to the rejection of evidence in these terms:—"That, in our caste, the brothers of a deceased dying without male issue are entitled to his inheritance, although the widow, daughters, and grand-daughters may be living; in order to prove which I presented Durkhasts (Exhibits. Nos. 7, 8, 9, and 10) in the original suit, for the evidence of respectable persons of our caste to be taken, such as Ardaseer Dhanjee-shaw, Khan Bahadoor, Jamasjee Bomanjee Bhownguree, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, Vakeel, and others, upon solemn affirmation, which persons were summoned by the Principal Sudder Ameen; but, nevertheless, their evidence was not taken, and my suit, of the value of lacs of rupees, was at once decided, within five months, upon an insufficient investigation. Cherisher of the Poor, if the evidence had been taken of the witnesses in my favour in the Lower Court by the Principal Sudder Ameen, and the question in the case been referred to the Modéejee and other members of the Parsee community, and their answer received, the custom of our caste would have been quite apparent, that the brothers of a deceased person dying without male issue are entitled to the [462] inheritance, although the deceased's widow and daughter are living. But, unfortunately, my suit of lacs of rupees was dismissed without taking the evidence of my witnesses, and the answer of the Modéejee of the community; consequently, I was helpless. But through the justice of your Honourable Court, I entertain the hope that, should the evidence of the witnesses on my behalf be caused to be taken, and the questions below mentioned be referred to the Modéejee, and other members of the Parsee community at Surat, and their answers thereto taken, I shall obtain my just rights."

What was complained of was, therefore, the rejection by the Zillah Judge of the proposal for referring the question to the Modée Punchayet, which, of course, it would not have been proper to do, as the Appellant had, in terms, waived the reference when the case was before the Sudder Ameen. The Appellant's case, therefore, fails upon this third point as completely as it fails upon the other points; and upon the whole case, their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed.

It has not escaped their Lordships' attention, that if they had decided this appeal upon the simple question whether the decision of the single Judge rejecting the special appeal was right or not, and had differed from the single Judge upon that point, the Appellant might have been entitled to a further hearing before the Sudder Court; but their Lordships are satisfied that the Appellant could not have succeeded in that Court upon the case as it stands, and that it would not, under the circumstances of this case, have been right, for that Court to have admitted further evidence; they do not think it necessary, therefore, to give any [463] final opinion as to the decision of the single Judge, although, as at present advised, they see no reason to dissent from it.

Their Lordships also desire it to be understood, that in what has been said as to the testamentary power of Parsees, they are far from having intended to intimate any doubt as to the extent of that testamentary power, or to give any encouragement to the notion that any such limit as the Appellant has contended for in facts exists. They do not mean in any manner to disturb what has been decided in India upon that subject, and they abstain from giving any opinion upon it only because it does not properly arise, and has not been fully argued in this case.

Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly recommend Her Majesty to affirm this judgment, and to dismiss the appeal with costs.

[464] NANA NARAIN RAO,—Appellant: HURREE PUNT BHAO and SHREE NEWAS RAO,—Respondents * [Nov. 29, 1856].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, North-Western Provinces.

Cross appeal allowed from part of a decree of the Sudder Court appealed from to England; although the Respondents had not applied in India for leave to appeal within the proper time; the Respondents being mistaken in the practice of the Judicial Committee upon a cross appeal.

Such cross appeal directed to be prosecuted and heard upon one printed case, if the principal appeal was proceeded with; but in the event of the principal appeal being dismissed for want of prosecution, liberty was reserved to the Respondents to prosecute the cross appeal as a separate appeal.

This was an application by the Respondents for special leave to enter a cross appeal against portions of a decree of the Sudder Court, appealed from to England, so far as it affected their interests in that decree.

The petition stated, that by a decree of the Sudder Dewanny Court of the North-Western Provinces, dated the 2nd of April, 1855, made on an appeal from a decree of the Zillah Court of Cawnpore, in a suit in which the Petitioners (the Respondents) were the Plaintiffs, and the Appellant, Nana Narain Rao, was the Defendant, that Court decided in favour of the [465] Petitioners for two-thirds of the two ana eight pice share in Mouza Bheekur; also for two-thirds of a two ana share of Mouza Brishur; also for two-thirds of each of the two dwelling-houses and gardens specified in the Appellant's schedule; and also for Rs. 3,10,226. 10. 2., being two-thirds of the value of the property, with interest and mesne profits from the date of the institution of suit to that of obtaining possession, with costs in both Courts; and the Court dismissed the rest of the Petitioner's claim which related to Lallpore and Bulwapore, which the Court found that the Appellant was the sole proprietor of by purchase, and the excess in their valuation of the personal property. That the Appellant appealed from this decree, and that the transcript had arrived in England, but that no steps had yet been taken by the Appellant, who had not put in an appearance. That the Petitioners had applied to the Sudder Court for a review of judgment with regard to the two last portions of the decree regarding the Mouzas Lallpore and Bulwapore, and the finding of the Court as to the whole of the personal or movable estate, which the Sudder Court had rejected. That the Petitioners had instructed agents in England to obtain, at the hearing of the appeal, a reversal of the two portions of the decree affecting them, believing that they would be entitled to state their objections at the hearing, to such two portions of the decree, and to obtain a reversal of the decree, so far as had relation to those portions, without any formal and separate appeal being instituted by them, such being the practice of the Sudder Courts in India, when an appeal was brought by one party from the decree of the Zillah Judge to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and that rely-[466]-ing on that practice they had not applied to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut for leave to appeal against the decree within six months, the time prescribed for presenting a petition of appeal. That they had been advised that they had acted in error, and that it was necessary for them to institute a separate or cross appeal against so much of the decree as related to the two portions aforesaid; and the Petitioners prayed that leave might be granted to them to appeal against such two portions of the decree of the Sudder Court.

Mr. Leith in support of the petition.

Their Lordships granted the application upon the terms contained in the following Order in Council:—

“That leave be granted to Huree Punt Blao and Shree Newas Rao, to enter and prosecute their cross appeal from so much of the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of the 2nd of April, 1855, as regards the Mouzas Lallpore and Bulwapore, and also from the finding and decree of that Court, as to the amount and value of the personal and movable estate and property of Soobadar Runchunder Punt, upon lodging in the Council Office the certificate of a recognizance to be entered into by some proper person (to be approved by the Registrar of the Privy Council), before one of the Barons of Her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, in the penalty of £300 sterling, conditioned to pay such costs as might be awarded by their Lordships in case the appeal be dismissed, and the cross appeal to be prosecuted and come on for hearing on one printed case, and on the same printed transcript record as the principal appeal in this suit, provided the same be duly proceeded with by the Appellant [467] herein, but if such principal appeal be dismissed for non-prosecution, then the Petitioners were to be at liberty to prosecute their cross appeal as a separate cause.”

STAFFORD BETTESWORTH HAINES. Appellant: The EAST INDIA COMPANY,—Respondents * [Dec. 2, 1856].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Bombay.

A., in the custody of the Sheriff, and confined in the gaol at Bombay, under a writ of execution issued against him upon a judgment of the Supreme Court at Bombay, was permitted by the Sheriff, with the sanction and authority of the judgment creditors by reason of illness, to go out of prison, and temporarily reside outside the precincts of the gaol, upon the condition that he should continue under the surveillance of the Sheriff's officers, and to which condition A. agreed and continued for a time to reside out of gaol at a private house, where he was constantly under such surveillance. Upon A.'s becoming convalescent, the Sheriff, at the instance of the judgment creditors, took him back to gaol. Upon an application by A., to the Supreme Court at Bombay, to discharge him out of custody, on the ground that the writ of execution was satisfied, that Court held, that A., having agreed to the condition imposed on him by the judgment creditors, of continuing in the custody of the Sheriff's officers while out of gaol, was estopped from saying that he was out of the Sheriff's custody when he was permitted to leave the gaol, and that a change of the place of imprisonment in such circumstances did not amount to a discharge out of custody. Such judgment affirmed, upon appeal, by the Judicial Committee.

Where an execution creditor is willing to allow a debtor to go out of prison for a temporary purpose, the custody continuing, the Sheriff may refuse, unless ordered by a rule of Court; but if, without any rule of Court, all parties agree to the debtor leaving the prison, and from a laxity of surveillance of the Sheriff's officers the debtor escapes, it is a question of fact for the jury, if the judgment creditor brings an action against the Sheriff, whether the judgment creditor did not himself contribute to the escape.

If the Sheriff alone, on the ground of a debtor's ill-health, makes any relaxation of the imprisonment, by letting the debtor reside out of prison, it would be an escape.

The appeal in these cases was brought from a judgment of the Supreme Court at Bombay, which refused an application to discharge the Appellant out of the custody of the Sheriff of Bombay, and to have satisfaction entered of a judgment obtained by the Respondents against him.

The facts of the case were these:—

On the 25th August, 1854, an action on promises was brought in the Supreme Court of Bombay by the Respondents, against the Appellant. On the 26th of the same month the Appellant was arrested by the Sheriff of Bombay on mesne process issued out of that Court in the action, and imprisoned in the gaol of Bombay. On the 4th January, 1855, a verdict in the action passed against the Appellant, and, on the 22nd of the same month, judgment was signed for the Respondents, for Rs. 2,79,917, for damages and costs, and a writ of Ca. Sa. issued against the Appellant, under which writ he was detained by the Sheriff in gaol. During his imprisonment in the gaol, the Appellant in a bad state of health, which being reported by the medical officer of the gaol to the Government of Bombay, that officer was desired by the Government to state "whether he considered it absolutely requisite for his (the Appellant's) recovery, that he should temporarily released from his present confinement." The medical officer reported, that a "temporary [469] release from his present confinement was essentially necessary for the re-establishment of his (Appellant's) health." Upon which, the Secretary of the Bombay Government wrote to the Sheriff and the Superintendent of Police of Bombay the following letters:—"Sir,—Assistant-Surgeon R. Haines, in medical charge of the Bombay gaol, having reported that the temporary release of Mr. S. B. Haines, from his present confinement is essentially necessary for the re-establishment of his health, I am directed by the Right Honourable the Governor in Council, to inform you that, under the Report, Government is pleased to permit him temporarily to reside outside the gaol, under such surveillance as may prove as little irksome as possible to the prisoner, while consistent with its perfect efficiency. The Superintendent of Police has been instructed to render you all the assistance of which you may stand in need, for keeping Mr. S. B. Haines under efficient surveillance while without the walls of the gaol. A copy of my letter of this date to Major Baynes, is inclosed for your information." The communication referred to by the Secretary of the Bombay Government was as follows:—"Sir, I am directed by the Right Honourable the Governor in Council to inform you that Assistant-Surgeon R. Haines, in medical charge of the Bombay gaol, having reported to Government that the temporary release of Mr. S. B. Haines from his present confinement is essentially necessary for the re-establishment of his health, Government is pleased to permit him temporarily to reside outside the gaol under surveillance; and I am to request that efficient measures may be adopted by you, in communication with the Sheriff of Bombay, to prevent his quitting the Island. It is the [470] wish of Government, that while the surveillance over Mr. Haines should be completely efficient, it may be rendered as little irksome to his feelings as may be practicable."

These letters were communicated to the Appellant in the gaol at Bombay, by the Deputy-Sheriff, when the Deputy-Sheriff explained to the Appellant, that if he availed himself of the permission of Government to reside temporarily outside the gaol, Sheriff's peons, or officers, would be stationed in and about the house in which he might take up his residence, and that two of the Sheriff's peons would always remain in the house, and asked him if he was willing to avail himself of such permission, on such terms. The Appellant expressed to the Deputy-Sheriff his willingness to avail himself of the permission, both verbally and by the following letter:—"Sir,—I shall be grateful for any change, and the consideration of my health is indeed most welcome." In consequence of what had thus passed, on the day following the Deputy-Sheriff went to the gaol, and accompanied the Appellant thence to a small Bungalow situated at Omercarry, near the gaol, and, on that occasion, the Deputy-Sheriff pointed out to the Appellant one of the Sheriff's peons, who had accompanied them from the gaol, as one of the Sheriff's officers who would always be in the house. On the 22nd of July, the Appellant, accompanied by the Sheriff's peons, removed to a more convenient Bungalow, at Mazagon. During the whole of the period that the Appellant was residing at Omercarry and at Mazagon, he was in the custody and charge of the Sheriff's officers, and was within the barwick and jurisdiction of the Sheriff of Bombay.

[471] On the 3rd August, in consequence of a communication from the Appellant's wife to the Bombay Government, stating that the Appellant's health was so seriously affected by his recent incarceration that his life might possibly be endangered if he should be again confined in the Bombay gaol, the Government appointed a Medical Committee to examine the Appellant, and report whether the Appellant's life would be endangered by a re-incarceration in Bombay gaol. On the 20th of the same month, the Medical Committee reported to the Government as their opinion that Mr. Haines' impaired health did not arise from any cause connected with the climate of the gaol, but was attributable to mental causes; and that his life would not be endangered by re-incarceration in the Bombay gaol, so far as its climate was concerned, mental suffering often leading to mental and bodily disease, and even to death, in all places and in all climates; but in Mr. Haines' present state of health, bodily and mental, so far as was discoverable by them, they were of opinion that a fatal result would not be more likely to occur in the Bombay gaol than in any other place. In consequence of this report, the Government of Bombay, on the 22nd August, 1855, directed the Sheriff of Bombay to take immediate measures to remove the Appellant "from the place of his (the Sheriff's) custody of him to the gaol," and on the same day the Deputy-Sheriff went to the Bungalow where the Appellant was residing, for the purpose of removing the Appellant to the gaol. On that occasion, Mrs. Haines, the wife of the Appellant, opposed the Deputy-Sheriff seeing him, on the ground that he was so dangerously ill that the presence of the Deputy-Sheriff might violently excite him, and possibly [472] cause his death; and she informed the Deputy-Sheriff that she expected Dr. Haines, the Surgeon of the gaol, every moment, and the Deputy-Sheriff thereupon agreed to wait until Dr. Haines should arrive; and shortly afterwards a note arrived from Dr. Haines, which the Appellant's wife read to the Deputy-Sheriff, and which induced the Deputy-Sheriff to think the Appellant was in such a critical state of health that he ought not to press for an interview with him without further communication from Government, and he accordingly left the house with the note, which the Appellant's wife gave up to him, and which he afterwards forwarded to Government. On the occasion of the above interview, the Appellant's wife told the Deputy-Sheriff that she had been advised he had no right to enter the house, as the Appellant had acquired his liberty by being removed from the gaol; and the Deputy-Sheriff, in answer, explained to her that he considered the Appellant as still his prisoner, as the Appellant had always been in the custody of the Sheriff's officers. It was shown that the Appellant knew that the Sheriff's peons were always in and about the house.

On the 3rd of December, 1855, the Medical Committee having, in pursuance of instructions from the Government of Bombay, examined the Appellant, and reported that his removal to gaol would not endanger his life, the Sheriff of Bombay was instructed by the Government to take immediate measures for his re-incarceration in the gaol; and the Appellant was accordingly removed by the Sheriff from the Bungalow at Mazagon to the gaol at Bombay, where he remained a prisoner in the custody of the Sheriff. Previous to the Appellant's removal from the gaol [473] he received subsistence-money, and, after his removal, the Under-Sheriff regularly received subsistence-money for the Appellant from the Government of Bombay, which, however, the Appellant declined to avail himself of.

On the 21st of December, the Appellant moved the Supreme Court of Bombay to be discharged from the custody of the Sheriff, and that satisfaction might be entered on the judgment-roll. The motion was grounded upon affidavits setting forth the facts to the purport above stated. The Respondents opposed the motion on the ground that upon these facts, as well as those properly to be inferred from the statements in the affidavits, the Appellant never was discharged from custody, and was properly retaken to gaol. The motion was heard on the 21st of December, 1855, when the Court took time to consider its judgment, and, on the 3rd of January, 1856, Sir William Yardley, Chief Justice, delivered judgment. After stating the above facts he proceeded as follows:— "The case was very fully and ably argued on both sides, and a great array of authorities, more or less bearing upon the question, were cited. Most of those authorities related to the question whether or not the facts of this case would render the Sheriff liable to an action of debt for the escape, under the Statute of Westminster the 2nd, if the relaxation of the duress of imprisonment had not been made by the licence of the Plaintiffs; and I may at once say that it is perfectly clear that these facts would render the Sheriff liable to such an action. Any relaxation whatever of the rigour of imprisonment by the Sheriff, of his own authority, would entitle the Plaintiffs to maintain an action against him for the whole amount of the [474] debt and costs. That has been settled by a continued series of authorities, extending over several centuries down to the present time; and, moreover, it is equally clear that, if a Defendant be discharged out of execution by the Plaintiff himself, he can never be taken in execution again upon the same judgment, even though it be agreed at the time of his discharge that if he should fail to satisfy the debt he should again be charged in execution. There are several cases to that effect, which were cited at the Bar, such as Vigers v. Aldrich (4 Burr. 2482); Jaques v. Withy (1 Term Rep. 557); Clarke v. Clement (6 Term Rep. 525); Tanner v. Hague (7 Term Rep. 420); and Blackburn v. Stupart (2 East, 243); which last is an exceedingly strong case, for there it had been expressly agreed that the Plaintiff should be at liberty again to take the Defendant in execution if he failed to perform the conditions on which he was discharged; but, in all the cases cited, there is this marked distinction between them and the present case, that there was an actual discharge of the Defendant out of custody, not merely a relaxation of the rigour of imprisonment; and, secondly, that the Plaintiff relied for the recovery of his debt upon some substitute, actual or intended, for the judgment. It is, however, argued by the Counsel for the Defendant that in every case in which there has been such a relaxation of duress as would, if permitted without the licence of the Plaintiff, render the Sheriff liable to an action for an escape, the Defendant, if the relaxation had been permitted by the Plaintiff himself, would be absolutely discharged from the execution, and would not be again liable to be taken in execution upon the same judgment, unless, indeed, he returned volun-[475]-tarily into custody. Let us illustrate this argument by some of the decided cases. It is laid down by Buller, J., in Benton v. Sutton (1 Bos. and Pull. 24), that if the Sheriff's officer take the prisoner out of the direct road, it is an escape. So if the Sheriff on a writ of habeas corpus carry the prisoner (in execution) round about a great way, for his accommodation, it is an escape, though he be in actual custody all the time. Mosedell's Case (1 Mode. 116). Now, could it have been contended in these cases, that if the deviations had been by the licence of the Plaintiff, the prisoner would have been thereby discharged out of execution? There is no decision to that effect to be found in the books; but in all the cases in which it was held that the prisoner was entitled to be released, there had been an actual discharge of him out of all custody. If he be allowed to go at perfect liberty for ever so short a time, by the leave and licence of the detaining creditor, he cannot again be taken in execution upon the same judgment. But a change of the place of imprisonment by the licence of the Plaintiff, and with the consent of the Defendant, is not a discharge out of custody. It manifests no intention on the part of the Plaintiff, no longer to rely upon the judgment and the process of law for the recovery of his debt. I have not, however, been able to find any case in which it has been actually decided that the Plaintiff may relax the rigour of imprisonment without thereby entitling the Defendant to his discharge. In the absence of authority, therefore, we must be guided by the general principles of the law; and the principle upon which the Sheriff has been made liable to an action for an escape, in every case in which he has allowed an [476] indulgence to the prisoner inconsistent with strict duress, is, that the object of the imprisonment is to compel the Defendant to pay the debt for which he is taken in execution, and the Plaintiff is entitled to the benefit resulting from the full pressure of such duress; and, therefore, if the Sheriff takes upon himself to remove any portion of that pressure, and thereby diminishes the probability of the Plaintiff's recovering the amount of his debt, the Statute of Westminster the 2nd, c. 11, made the Sheriff himself liable to an action of debt, for the full amount—a severe and strict law, which has been mitigated in England by a recent Statute, enacting that the Sheriff shall be liable only on an action upon the case for the damages sustained by the person or persons at whose suit such debtor was taken or imprisoned. But is the principle upon which the Sheriff was held liable for an escape applicable to the cases in which the relaxation of the duress is the act of the Plaintiff himself? Is there any sound reason why the Plaintiff might not allow his debtor an indulgence without sacrificing the whole of his demand? If the argument of the learned Counsel be correct, a detaining creditor could not allow his debtor to be taken temporarily out of the gaol where he was detained, upon the utmost emergency—to visit the death bed of a wife or child, for example,—without the risk of thereby sacrificing the whole of his debt; for, according to the argument, if the prisoner did not choose voluntarily to return to the gaol, he could not be compelled to do so; because, according to the decided cases, such an indulgence, if permitted by the Sheriff of his own authority, would doubtless be an escape, and, therefore, it is argued, if permitted by the Plain-[477]-tiff, would operate as a discharge out of execution. But I think I have shown that the principle upon which it would be such an escape as to render the Sheriff liable does not apply to make it a discharge by the Plaintiff; and, I confess, it appears to me that it would be repugnant alike to reason and to humanity to hold that a detaining creditor might not partially forego the advantages, such as they are, resulting from the pressure of the duress of imprisonment, and might not mitigate the rigour of such imprisonment, except at the sacrifice of the whole debt and costs. It appears to me to be manifest that there was no intention upon the part of the Plaintiffs, in the present case, to set the Defendant at liberty for one moment, nor to rely upon any other security for the payment of the balance of the debt than the judgment and process of the Court; and that the Defendant, although humanely permitted to reside out of the gaol for several months for the benefit of his health, was, during the whole of that time, in the custody of the Sheriff, and that he cannot, therefore, be held to have been discharged out of execution by the Plaintiffs. It is scarcely necessary to add, that the fact of the Plaintiffs being represented by the Government of this Presidency makes not the least difference in the case. The learned Advocate-General did not for a moment contend that the Government had, or pretended to have, any more right to send the Defendant back to gaol than any private individual would have had under similar circumstances. It was, in short, a licence from the detaining creditor to the Sheriff to change for a time the place of confinement, for the benefit and with the consent of the Defendant, upon a representation that such a change was neces-[478]-sary to his health; which licence was withdrawn when, in the opinion of a medical Committee, the necessity for it ceased to exist, and thereupon the Sheriff reconveyed the Defendant to the usual place of confinement." The Court accordingly refused the application.

The appeal was preferred from this judgment.

Sir Fitz-Roy Kelly, Q.C., and Mr. J. J. Powell, for the Appellant.—The Sheriff of Bombay, with the consent of the Respondents, having suffered the Appellant to escape from gaol, the judgment entered against the Appellant at the Respondents' suit was satisfied, and the Sheriff had no legal authority to detain the Appellant in custody. It may be urged that the conduct of the Appellant in availing himself of the legal consequences of his having obtained permission to leave the gaol, is an ungrateful return for the indulgence afforded him by the Respondents; but that cannot affect his right in law to be discharged out of custody. The argument, in this case, is confined to one of a debtor in custody under a writ of execution completely executed, and has nothing to do with mesne process. If a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum be once executed, and the Defendant in custody of the Sheriff and in prison, it is the duty of the Sheriff to keep him in arcta et salva custodia. Comyn's

Dig., tit. "Imprisonment" (I.) If the Sheriff permits a prisoner to quit the gaol for a single moment, even with a keeper, Benton v. Sutton (1 Boss. and Pull. 24), he is "at large," to use the language of the old authorities; the writ is then satisfied, and the custody at an end. In Jones v. Pope (1 Wms. Saunder's, 36), all the authorities upon this [479] point are collected. Viner's Abr., tit. "Escape," (A. 5) and (N 11), Bacon's Abr., tit. "Escape in civil cases (B), Burton v. Home (1 Shower, 174), Atkinson v. Jameson (5 Term Rep. 25), Clarke v. Clement (6 Term. Rep. 525), Blackburn v. Stupart (2 East. 243), Dyer's Reports (296 (b)).—[Sir John Patteson: In Blackburn v. Stupart, there was an agreement between the Plaintiff and Defendant that the Defendant was to be perfectly at large, and if he did not pay the judgment debts and costs within a certain time there was to be another execution: that is an important distinction.]—During the plague in London, in the reign of Charles the First, the prisoners in custody in the King's Bench petitioned that they might be allowed to go at large, upon giving security to return; but by a resolution of the Judges (Croke Car. 466), it was determined that if such permission was granted, except by rule of Court, it would be an escape. By the Common Law and Statutes, 1 Rich. II., ch. 12 (3 Clitty's Collec. of Statutes, p. 1066), and 8th and 9th Will. III., ch. 27, a prisoner must be kept in gaol till the debt is satisfied, or by rule of Court he is permitted to leave the gaol. So long as the Appellant was in gaol he was in lawful custody, but as soon as he was let out of gaol, it amounted to an escape. In law there is no distinction between being at large by consent of the Sheriff, or by consent of the Plaintiff. No contract or Bond can confer any power upon a Plaintiff who has allowed his debtor to go at large, to retake him. The writ of execution is satisfied, and he cannot issue a second writ of execution for the same cause, the first having been satisfied by the custody of the [480] body of the Defendant. Neither will the law allow any agreement between the Plaintiff and Defendant as to what shall be custody or liberty. No consent of parties can make a gaol where there is no gaol. The law has defined what shall be lawful custody.—[Sir John Patteson: The real question here is, whether the Appellant was ever at large. He accepts the terms to be let out of the gaol, but to remain in the custody of the Sheriff. How then can he say he was not in custody?—The Appellant was let out of gaol.—[Sir John Patteson: Yes, but in custody, and continued so.]—You cannot by agreement alter the character of lawful custody. An escape occurs when a Defendant is allowed to be treated otherwise than the writ commands. The prisoner's assent can make no difference, it merely bars an action of trespass at his instance. Neither is it of importance that the Sheriff's officers were in attendance upon the Appellant; it was no less an escape, as he was let out of gaol. At most it was a license revocable at pleasure; and even if the Court should think that up to the 22nd of August, when the Sheriff, went to retake the Appellant, there was such a consent by him to remain in custody of the Sheriff, still when the Appellant's wife refused to let the Sheriff enter the house, the license was determined, and from that day, and up to the 3rd of December, when he was retaken to gaol, he was at large. What authority had the Sheriff to retake him after an escape? An action would lie against the Sheriff for retaking him after the writ of execution was satisfied. Atkinson v. Jameson (5 Term. Rep. 25), Burton v. Home (1 Shower, 174). The judgment of the Court below is unsupported by authority.

[481] Mr. Wigram, Q.C., Mr. Forsyth, and Mr. W. H. Melvill, appeared for the East India Company; but their Lordships, without calling upon them, delivered judgment, by

The Right Hon. Sir John Patteson.—This case comes before their Lordships under peculiar circumstances, as, indeed, it came before the Court at Bombay. It should always be remembered that in all cases we must look at the circumstances of the case before us, in order to see whether or not the principles of law are to be strictly applied to the case, or whether there can be any relaxation of what are supposed to be the strict principles of law.

A question was argued before the Court of Bombay, and has been urged here, as to what will be the consequence to the Sheriff upon the question of escape; but really that is not the question in the case. There cannot be the slightest doubt that if these circumstances had taken place by the authority of the Sheriff alone; if he, upon the representation that the Defendant was suffering very severely in health, had taken upon himself to make this relaxation of the imprisonment, and had permitted the Defendant, accompanied by ever so many of his own officers, to go and reside in a house of his own, it would have been an escape. There can be no question at all about it; and why? Because the Sheriff having taken a party in execution under a capias ad satisfaciendum, is bound to keep him in his own gaol, he cannot of his own authority allow the prisoner to make a gaol for himself; he is bound to keep him in arcta et salua custodia, in order to enforce payment of the debt, and if he relax [482] that arctam custodiam at all, so far the pressure to compel the payment of the debt is relaxed also, which the Sheriff has no right to do. Upon that principle it is, that where the Sheriff had suffered a man to go out of gaol, even in the custody of one of his officers, or, as in the case of Benson v. Sutton (1 Bos. and Pull. 24), he had suffered him, before he was taken to gaol, to go away from the lock-up-house in the custody of one of his officers, it was held to be an escape. Whether it was going at large again, or not, may be quite another question, with respect to the mere words "going at large;" but it constituted an escape so far as the Sheriff was concerned, and entitled the Plaintiff, if he thought fit, to bring an action against the Sheriff for that escape. Formerly he would have recovered the whole amount; latterly the law has been altered, and he would recover damages only; but that is immaterial.

There is no doubt, therefore, that the Sheriff, of his own authority, could not have done this act. But then look to the peculiar circumstances of the case. The Plaintiff in any case, in order to be barred from continuing his execution, and from having the benefit of his judgment, must voluntarily discharge the Defendant out of custody. If he does discharge him out of custody, I agree that if it be only for a week, he cannot, by any agreement which he may have made with the Defendant, afterwards retake him, although the Defendant may possibly have agreed that, if he does not pay the money within a week, he shall be retaken. That is decided law.

But the question in this case really is, whether or not the Plaintiffs ever did consent to discharge, and ever did discharge, the Defendant out of custody. [483] Now, supposing that the Defendant was in a bad state of health, as it is said he was, and supposing that it had arisen from his confinement in the prison, and that he had applied to the Supreme Court at Bombay, from which this execution issued, for a rule of Court, to be allowed to be taken from the prison and put into some other place, and there kept by a Sheriff's officer, and that for the sake of saving his life, or for the benefit of his health, the Court had thought fit to grant that indulgence even against the will of the Plaintiffs, and there had been a rule of Court to that effect, and he had been removed out of gaol under that rule of Court, and had been kept in the charge of a Sheriff's officer in a private house, can there be the slightest doubt that he would then still have been in the custody of the Sheriff? I cannot conceive that there would have been any question upon it. Now, here they did not apply for a rule of Court, but they did it at once. It is said that the Defendant did not solicit it. It is true he did not solicit it, but it was done. We have an account of the Plaintiffs, upon the representation of the medical officer, inquiring into the state of the Defendant's health. What then did they do? they wrote a letter to the Sheriff, and they say that in consequence of the state of the Defendant's health, a temporary release from confinement in the gaol itself is essentially necessary, and that "Government is pleased to permit him temporarily to reside outside the gaol, under such surveillance as may prove as little irksome as possible to the prisoner, while consistent with its perfect efficiency." What does that mean? The perfect efficiency of keeping him in custody; it cannot mean anything else by possibility. Then what is the letter to the Superintendent of the [484] Police? Why, it recites that same thing; that the Defendant has been allowed to be so under surveillance, and directs him also to take care that he does not go out of the Island. This is communicated to the Defendant, who verbally agrees to it, and expresses his willingness to avail himself of that permission. But not only that, he actually writes a letter to the Sheriff, in these words:—"Sir, I shall be grateful for any change, and the consideration for my health is indeed most welcome." Then he goes out of the gaol with a Sheriff's officer. Now, really, can there be a doubt but that the object of the Plaintiffs was, in consequence of the state of his health, a kindness towards the Defendant? Their object was to keep the judgment and the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum still on foot, and to keep the Defendant in the actual custody of the Sheriff. A place where his health might be re-established, was constituted a special prison for that purpose, by consent as it were. The Defendant agrees to that, and is thankful for it. Then, surely, he must be estopped (it is a sort of estoppel), from saying that the custody in which he then was, was not the custody of the Sheriff, when both parties intended it to be so, and that in point of law such custody should be treated as the custody of the Sheriff.

There have been some cases lately, in which a question has been raised whether the party has been estopped from taking advantage of any irregularity, even the non-compliance with an Act of Parliament. There was one case before the Court of Queen's Bench very lately, in which the doctrine was carried to a very considerable extent, and yet I think not further than it may be carried in the [485] present instance. I allude to Tyerman v. Smith (25 Law Journ. Q.B. 359), in which the case had been referred under the compulsory powers of the Statute, 17th and 18th Vict., c. 125, sec. 15. The award was not made within three months, and the time was not enlarged by the Court, or a Judge, as it ought to have been, or by the written consent of the parties; but both parties having gone before the arbitrator after the time had elapsed, it was held that the party against whom judgment had been signed upon the award was estopped from taking advantage of the non-compliance with the Statute. In another case, Andrews v. Elliott (25 Law Journ. Q.B. 1). There, under the Common Law Procedure Act, the parties chose to refer it to a Judge and not to a jury, but that, according to the Act of Parliament, ought to have been done by a written consent. It was not done by written consent, but the Court said, that having chosen to act upon the oral consent, the party was precluded from taking advantage of the want of a written consent. So here this Defendant must be precluded from saying that he was not in the custody of the Sheriff, where he intended to be, and where the Respondents intended him to be all along, unless there be any strict rule of law which prevents his being so considered.

Now, with regard to the observations respecting what took place on the 22nd of August. On that day, it seems that there was an order on the part of the Government that the Defendant should be taken back to prison, and the Sheriff's officer goes to the house where he is, for the purpose of taking him back to prison; because the contention is, that he was always in the custody of the Sheriff. In [486] the case on the part of the Appellant, it is stated that his wife resisted it, and told the Deputy-Sheriff that her husband was not legally in custody. The Respondents in their case state that his wife alleged her husband to be in a very bad state of health indeed, and that it would be very dangerous to remove him; and that she did not allege that he did not consider himself to be in the custody of the Sheriff at all. The Deputy-Sheriff, on account of what he considered to be the state of the Defendant's health, did not act upon the order, and remained quiet. The Sheriff's officers, however, still continued about the premises just the same as before; they never had notice to retire, or were warned off, or told to go about their business by the Defendant, but he continued in this house with these officers until the 3rd of December, and then he was taken back to the gaol. Then it is said, that it may be considered that on the 22nd of August the Appellant revoked his consent, and that from that time he had a right to say that he was at large. But it is to be observed, that the custody, such as it was, remained just the same after the 22nd of August, until the 3rd of December, when he was taken back to gaol, and that there was no voluntary escape permitted by the Sheriff. It was not the intention of the Sheriff to let him go, or that he was to be in any different kind of situation from what he was before, nor was it the intention of the Respondents, nor, as far as I know, the intention of the Appellant; therefore, he was so detained from the first to the last under this agreement.

It is said that if parties can make such an arrangement as this, to substitute one place of imprisonment for another, the Sheriff will be placed in a very unfor-[487]-tunate situation, and may be liable for an escape in a very different manner, and under very different circumstances from what he would be if the prisoner continued in the gaol itself; and that is very true. If the Sheriff had it communicated to him by the Plaintiffs that they were inclined to grant this indulgence to the prisoner, and that he might go to another house in the custody of the Sheriff's officers, I am not prepared to state that the Sheriff might not say, "I will not do any such thing: I have him here under a capias ad satisfaciendum, and unless you have a rule of Court for that purpose, I shall not consent to any such thing, because I cannot have the same strict custody over the party, and the means of keeping him in custody in another house (at this substituted prison as it were) that I have when he is gaol, and, therefore, I will not consent to anything of the sort: if you mean to take him, discharge him; you have authority to do it yourself, and take him yourself: make your agreement as you please with him; I will have nothing to do with it." Still the Sheriff may consent to do it; and here the Sheriff did consent to do it; and all parties consented to it. I apprehend that the Sheriff, when the Defendant was in this private house with his officers about him, might be liable to an action for escape, if it appeared that he had not used proper care, if he had removed his prisoners, or had employed persons who had not taken sufficient care to prevent the prisoner from escaping. Still it would be, under all circumstances, for a jury to consider whether, being in some measure instrumental in it, a Plaintiff ought to recover against the Sheriff at all; it would be a question of fact to be decided under all the circumstances of the case.

[488] Now, really, under all these circumstances, the authorities which have been cited do not appear to bear distinctly (I do not mean to say that they do not bear indirectly) upon the case in question, and I feel that the Chief Justice at Bombay was perfectly right in saying that he had not been able to find any authority for saying distinctly, whether there could be such an arrangement as this or not. In his judgment he says:—"I have not, however, been able to find any case in which it has been actually decided that the Plaintiff may relax the rigour of imprisonment, without thereby entitling the Defendant to his discharge. In the absence of authority, therefore, we must be guided by the general principles of the law (ante [6 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 475)." It is perfectly true that there is no case, as far as I know, which goes to this particular point; but there is nothing to show that it is contrary to any principles of law that the creditor and the debtor may agree. The creditor may, under certain circumstances, or if he feels it to be really material and important to the debtor, change the place of imprisonment, and relax somewhat the rigour of imprisonment, without discharging the debtor from his debt, it clearly not being the meaning of either party that any such discharge should take place.

I should observe, that this opinion must not be taken to go the length of supposing that it would be possible, for instance, for a Plaintiff to say to a Defendant, "Oh, you may go about just where you please, but it shall be considered that you are in custody"; because that would be a fallacy and an absurdity: but here was an actual removal from the gaol to a private house, and an actual custody of some sort [489] continuing, which was intended to continue as a bona fide custody, as far as we can judge from all the circumstances of the case.

Under these circumstances, we think that the judgment of the Court below is correct; that there is a distinction between the duty of the Sheriff to keep a man in arcta et salva custodia, and the question, whether or not any acts of the Plaintiffs have been such as to discharge the Defendant. They are totally different questions, and here there is clearly no intention to discharge the Defendant; there is no act done by the Plaintiffs which, in point of law, necessarily operates to that effect. It was not the intention of either party that he should be discharged; it was a matter of indulgence and kindness to him, and certainly he does not appear to have made a very grateful return for it. However, if in point of strict law he is entitled to be discharged, the law must take its course, whether he is grateful or not grateful, or whether it is a gracious proceeding on his part or not. There is, however, nothing in law to prevent this from being clearly a continuing custody of the Sheriff by the arrangement of the parties, and, therefore, we think that this appeal must be dismissed, and of course dismissed with costs.

The Lords of the Committee, will, therefore, humbly recommend as their opinion to Her Majesty, that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay, of the 3rd of January, 1856, ought to be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

[490] PETER CLARKSON REED,—Appellant; SREEMUTTY GOURMONEY DABEE,—Respondent * [May 9, 1857].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

Recognizance entered into to abide the determination of an appeal vacated upon petition of the Appellant upon the abandonment of the appeal.

In this case leave to appeal had been granted by the Judicial Committee upon terms of lodging in the Council Office a certificate of recognizance, under a penalty of £500, before one of the Barons of the Exchequer conditioned upon the determination of the appeal. These terms were complied with; but the parties having compromised, the appeal was not further prosecuted. The Appellant now presented a petition, praying that the Order granting leave to appeal be dismissed, and the recognizance vacated.

Mr. Elderton, in support of the petition.

Their Lordships rescinded the Order granting leave to appeal, and discharged the recognizance entered into on behalf of the Appellant. The Appellant to apply upon a certificate from the Council office to the Court of Exchequer to vacate the recognizance.

[491] RANEE HURROSOONDREE DEBIAH,—Appellant; RAJAH PRAN KISHEN SING,—Respondent * [May 9, 1857].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, Bengal.

In circumstances showing conflicting and opposite decisions by the Sudder Court upon the same question at issue, between the same parties, an appeal treated under the Statute, 8th and 9th Vict., c. 30, sec. 2, as abandoned for non-prosecution, was restored upon terms of paying costs and undertaking to lodge cases forthwith, and to lodge security or a Bond in England to the amount of £500.

Where an appeal has been treated as abandoned by Statute, 8th and 9th Vict., c. 30, sec. 2, their Lordships have no power to grant leave to institute a new appeal: only a discretion to allow the original appeal to be restored.

This was a petition to restore, or, in the alternative, to admit a fresh appeal, which had been treated as abandoned, under Statute, 8th and 9th Vict., c. 30, sec. 2, for non-prosecution within two years. The petition stated that leave to appeal to England had been granted by the Sudder Court on the 18th of January, 1848, and that the transcript of the proceedings arrived and was registered at the Council Office on the 7th of November, 1850. That an agent had been appointed in England in the month of May, 1852, and that the agent attended at the Council Office on the 24th of that month, with a view of proceeding with the appeal, and was informed that the Respondent had appointed agents in this country on his behalf, and that he immediately put himself in communication with them to join with him in paying half the expense of printing, when the Respondent's agents informed him that they had no remittances [492] from India to enable them to do so, but promised to join when they received sufficient remittances. That the Appellant's agent in consequence delayed taking a copy of the transcript proceedings till the 3rd of February, 1853. That the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Bengal, on the 12th of May, 1856, in another suit in which the same question was raised between the same parties, had held, regarding the family usage as to the division of the Raj in dispute, directly in opposition to their decree made in the suit now appealed. That on learning the result of this decision, the Appellant's agent prepared the transcript for printing in the month of January, 1857, when he became aware for the first time, that on the 24th of December previously, the appeal had been treated as abandoned within the provisions of the Statute, 8th and 9th Vict., c. 30, sec. 2. That the Appellant was desirous of prosecuting the appeal and bringing the same to a hearing, and that the delay was caused by no wilful intention, and the Petitioner prayed that the appeal might be restored or that special leave to appeal against the judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut might be allowed to the Appellant.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., in support of the petition, asked for an order for special leave to appeal.—[The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington: I very much doubt if the appeal is not lost, under the Statute, 8th and 9th Vict., c. 30, sec. 2, or that it can have been intended that their Lordships should have power to grant leave to institute a new appeal. It is a question of great difficulty. The real question is one of restoration, not of granting leave to appeal.] The object of that Statute was to remedy the mischief which existed [493] of allowing appeals to stand over for an indefinite time. It is an inherent right in the Crown to permit appeals at any time.—[The Right Hon. Lord Wensleydale: The Statute meant that the appeal should be finally put an end to, not that there should be a fresh power to appeal.]

Mr. Leith opposed, submitting that conditions ought to be imposed, if the application was granted, for the due prosecution of the appeal.

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington.—Their Lordships, under the very peculiar circumstances of this case, are inclined to allow leave to be given for the purpose of prosecuting this appeal. But their Lordships wish it to be distinctly understood, that it is the very peculiar facts attending this case which induce their Lordships to come to this conclusion. It appears upon the petition of the Appellant that there have been two opposite decisions in India, upon what it seems must be considered substantially the same question; and it might be productive of very great inconvenience, and would certainly not be very creditable to the law as administered in India, if such two conflicting decisions were allowed to stand. Their Lordships greatly lament the delay which has taken place upon the present occasion, and certainly, in many respects, it appears to be utterly unjustifiable; but, for the reasons I have stated, their Lordships are inclined to adopt the course of allowing the appeal to be restored. It must, however, be understood that the costs of this application must be paid by the Appellant, and security given here [494] to the amount of £500, or a Bond in such terms as their Lordships shall think fit to prescribe, and the Appellant must also print and lodge his case without delay.

Mr. Wigram.—Will the Court allow a re-deposit in India, or, if it should be found that the deposit remains in Court in India, will fresh security be required here?

Dr. Lushington.—Security must be entered into here for £500, or a Bond to secure that amount.

JOHN COCKRANE.—Appellant; HURROSOONDURRY DEBIA and Others,—Respondents * [Feb. 2, 3, 7, 1857].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, Bengal.

C., a Hindoo, by his Will appointed G. and others executors, and thereby gave and devised the residue of his estate to his daughter, H., the wife of G. All the executors proved, but G. alone acted in the trusts of the Will. G., being largely indebted to C.'s estate, by deed in 1831, conveyed to H. part of C.'s real estate as security for his debt. In 1833, G. was declared insolvent under the Statute, 9th Geo. IV., c. 73. H. entered into possession of the property so conveyed to her, and continued to hold the same uninterruptedly till the institution of a suit by the Official Assignee of the Insolvent Court, a period of twenty-two years. Held, in the absence of any proof of fraud in the transaction of 1831, or unfairness against H. in obtaining possession, so as to bring the case within the exception in cl. 1, sec. 3, of Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, that the possession by H. for more than twelve years was, by Ben. Reg. III. of 1793, sec. 14, a bar to the suit.

The question in this case was, whether the principal Respondent having been in uninterrupted possession [495] of a Talook, named Durgapoor, the property in dispute, under a conveyance, for more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, the claim of the Appellant was not barred by Ben. Reg. III., of 1793, sec. 14; or whether she had obtained fraudulent possession under a collusive conveyance, so as to bring the case within the exception to that bar provided for by Ben. Reg. II., of 1805, sec. 3, cl. 1.

The facts of the case were as follow:—

On the 1st December, 1824, Goureechurn Bandopadhyā, the husband of the Respondent, Hurrosoondurri Debia, borrowed of Doorgachurn Chuckerbutty, her father, the sum of Rs. 18,500, and gave his Bond to secure the repayment thereof, together with interest thereon at six per cent per annum. On the 3rd July, 1825, Chuckerbutty died, possessed of real and personal estate and property to a large amount, having first made a Will, whereof he appointed Goureechurn, and Bissonauth Mutty Loll, and Obhoychurn Bandopadhyā, executors. By his Will he appointed the Respondent his residuary devisee and legatee. Goureechurn and Bissonauth proved the Will, and obtained probate from the Supreme Court at Calcutta, and thereupon took upon themselves the burden of the execution of the trusts thereof; but Goureechurn alone acted in the management as executor.

[496] On the 7th November, 1826, Goureechurn and Bissonauth, as such executors, filed in the Supreme Court at Calcutta an inventory of the goods, etc., which came to their hands as executors, and in that inventory the Bond of Goureechurn was entered as belonging to the estate of the Testator. On the 1st November, 1829, an account was made up by the executors, of the sum due on this Bond for principal and interest, which amounted to the sum of Rs. 18,500; whereupon Goureechurn executed another Bond in substitution of the first, for that sum.

In the beginning of January, 1831, on an account being taken of what was then due from Goureechurn, as debtor and acting executor to the estate of Chuckerbutty, it was found that Rs. 47,000 was the aggregate amount due, when it was arranged that Goureechurn should mortgage a portion of the real estate to secure the due payment of such sum of Rs. 47,000. Thereupon indentures of lease and release in fee in the English form and language, dated the 13th and 14th January, 1831, were drawn and prepared by Bird, then an attorney of the Supreme Court at Calcutta (since deceased), which deeds were executed and delivered to the principal Respondent by Goureechurn. By the release, in consideration of the sum of Rs.

Assessor,—The Right Hon. Sir Lawrence Peel.

47,000, mentioned therein, the Talooks of Doorlae and Doorgapore (the subject of the suit), and other property attached thereto, were conveyed, released and assigned to the Respondent and her heirs. The Respondent contemporaneously, to render the same a conditional and not an absolute conveyance, executed to Goureechurn certain articles of agreement bearing even date with indenture of release, whereby it was provided that the Respondent should not, within the space of [497] five years from the date thereof, convey or part with the possession of the Talooks and premises, or encumber the same, or any part thereof, but hold and possess the same merely as by way of a collateral security for the sum of Rs. 47,000, and interest.

In the month of April, in the same year, Goureechurn, on the request of the Respondent, determined to raise the sum of Rs. 20,000, in order to pay off a portion of the sum of Rs. 47,000, still due to her. This sum was obtained as a loan from one Radakissen Bysack, and a mortgage of part of the estate of Chuckerbutty made to him; and in order to effect this the Respondent, on the 29th April, 1831, executed a reconveyance to Goureechurn of the whole of the estate previously conveyed to her, on the understanding that Goureechurn would immediately execute to the Respondent another deed of mortgage for the sum of Rs. 27,000, the balance which would remain due on the debt of Rs. 47,000, after paying to her the sum of Rs. 20,000; and on the 29th of the same month, Goureechurn executed indentures of lease and release by way of mortgage, whereby he conveyed to the Respondent the Talooks of Doorlae and Doorgapore, subject to a proviso for redemption on payment by Goureechurn or his heirs, executors, or administrators, of the sum of Rs. 27,000, with interest. And for the further security, Goureechurn contemporaneously executed a Bond, with a warrant of attorney to confess judgment thereon, in the penal sum of Rs. 54,000, conditioned for the payment of such sum of Rs. 27,000.

Default was made by Goureechurn in the payment of the last-mentioned sum and interest, on the 30th [498] of April, 1832, whereupon the Respondent took possession of the Talook of Doorgapore alone, which had become forfeited under the terms of the indenture of release and mortgage, Goureechurn having surreptitiously sold the other Talook, Doorlae; and, being unable to redeem the Talook of Doorgapore, conveyed the equity of redemption in respect to that Talook, to the Respondent, in Benamee (or trust), in the name of one Nilmoney Mutty Loll, for the sum of Rs. 8000, as the estimated value of such interest, and it was then agreed that such sum should be credited to Goureechurn by the Respondent in account. The Respondent, after obtaining possession, paid the Government revenue.

On the 21st of December, 1833, Goureechurn was declared insolvent, under the Statute, 9th Geo. IV., c. 73. In the schedule the sum of Rs. 20,000 was stated as the balance of principal due on the Bond of the 30th of April, 1831, and the balance was entered as a debt due from Goureechurn to the estate of Chuckerbutty.

Goureechurn died in the year 1834, leaving the other Respondents his heirs. Amongst other children, he left a son called Obhoychurn, who was indebted to Messrs. Mackillop, Stewart and Co., of Calcutta, in a large sum of money; who obtained a judgment against him, under which a writ of sequestration issued against the Talook in question, then in the possession of the first Respondent, which was, on the 7th of January, 1846, seized by Messrs. Mackillop and Co., who insisted that the conveyance to Nilmoney was "Benamee" for Obhoychurn, their debtor, or that, at all events, he had some bene-[499]ficial interest in it. Upon this the Respondent, Hurrosoondurri Debia, claimed the property under the purchase; and as there were other properties similarly situated, Messrs. Mackillop and Co. filed a Bill in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, against Hurrosoondurri Debia for the purpose of setting aside her claim to and possession of this and the other properties, and of enforcing their own claim, as being the property of Obhoychurn. In this suit the Respondent, Hurrosoondurri Debia claimed the property in question under the bill of sale to Nilmoney Mutty Loll, alleging that she was the real purchaser on that occasion, and that the conveyance was made to him "Benamee" for her. In support of this case she produced, and put in evidence, and relied upon the absolute conveyance, by her husband, to her of the 13th and 14th January, 1831, which included the Talook Doorbae, as well as other property, and another conveyance to her, dated the 29th and 30th April following, by way of mortgage for securing Rs. 27,000, and the Bond of even date by way of collateral security. The release of the 14th January, 1831, purported to be in consideration of a sum of Rs. 47,000, due from the Insolvent to the estate of Chuckerbutty, the father of the Respondent, Hurrosoondurri Debia, and of whom she was the heiress and residuary legatee; but, although she was only tenant for life of the residuary estate bequeathed by the Will, the conveyance to her was in fee. To account for the second conveyance and the omission in it for the other Talook, a reconveyance to Goureechurn of the whole property was recited, alleged to bear date the 28th and 29th April, 1831, and to have [500] been in consideration of the payment to Hurrosoondurri Debia of the sum of Rs. 20,000, which it was alleged was borrowed by Goureechurn of Radakissen Bysack, for that purpose; but this reconveyance was not produced, nor was there any evidence which it was alleged could be relied upon, to show that any such transaction took place. Messrs. Mackillop, Stewart and Co. contested the Respondent's title to the estate, and thereupon the Supreme Court directed an issue in effect to try the validity of it. Upon the trial of the issue, evidence was gone into on both sides. The Supreme Court, upon the hearing of the issues, found that the deeds upon which the Respondent relied were collusive, and not intended to be acted upon, and that the conveyance to Nilmony was intended to screen the property from the Insolvent's creditors; and, in the absence of his assignee, who was no party to the suit, the insolvency not appearing upon the proceedings, they found that the bar interposed in Hurrosoondurri Debia's favour, being removed, the Talook was to be treated as the estate of the Insolvent, descendible to his sons; and in accordance with this finding (Goureechurn's insolvency having in the meantime been brought before the Court), judgment was afterwards given in favor of the Plaintiffs, and, as the Court assumed that there was a case of fraud made out against the Respondent, she was condemned in costs. A sale took place under a writ of sequestration, and Mackenzie, as one of the firm of Messrs. Mackillop, Stewart and Co., bought the Talook of the Appellant the official assignee, for Rs. 400, on account of his firm; but being unsuccessful in a suit to obtain [501] possession as purchaser under that title, the Appellant, at the instance of Messrs. Mackillop and Co., on the 29th August, 1853, instituted a suit for possession, in the nature of an action of ejectment, in the Zillah Court of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, claiming the Talook in question as a concealed possession of the Insolvent, and making the widow the chief Respondent, and the sons of Goureechurn, except Obhoychurn, Defendants. The Appellant in his plaint alleged in substance the facts above stated, and relied upon the judgment of the Supreme Court. He charged that the possession of the Respondent had been acquired and held by fraud, and that he was entitled to maintain the suit within twelve years from the date of the judgment of the Supreme Court when the fraud was discovered; and, at all events, he was so entitled under sec. 3, Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, by which the ordinary limitation of twelve years is declared not to be applicable to claims where possession had been acquired by violence, fraud, or any other unjust and dishonest means.

The Respondents, in their answers, took various objections to the right of the Plaintiff to sue as assignee; but the substantial defences were:—First, that the suit was barred by the lapse of twelve years from the accrual of the cause of action, under sec. 14, Ben. Reg. III. of 1793, and was not within sec. 3, of Ben. Reg. II. of 1805; and, second, the Respondent Hurrosoondurri Debia's title and possessions as purchaser, under the circumstances above detailed; and the Respondents alleged that the judgment of the Supreme Court was not binding upon them, upon the ground that the Zillah Court had an original [502] jurisdiction of its own; and insisted that Hurrosoondurri Debia received possession from Goureechurn at the time of the transaction in question, and had retained such possession ever since.

Amongst other evidence given by the Plaintiff, he put in authenticated copies of the judgments and orders of the Supreme Court in the former suit; and he also put in the Bengal Hurkaru, of 22nd May, and 18th of July, 1848, and 10th of January, 1849, containing reports of the judgments of the Court, the correctness of which he proved by the certificate of Sir Lawrence Peel, the Chief Justice, and also by the evidence of Mr. Clarke. These printed reports were rejected as evidence by the Zillah Judge, and by the majority of the Judges in the Sudder Court, but were allowed to be referred to as evidence, saving all just exceptions.

On the 13th of April, 1854, the Zillah Judge gave judgment in the Respondent's favour, holding that no fraud was proved against the Respondents, and that the case did not come within the Reg. II. of 1805, sec. 3, and he dismissed the suit with costs.

Against this decision the Appellant appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlat, on the grounds of the rejection of evidence, and also that the decision was opposed to the facts and merits of the case; on the 16th of April, 1855, the appeal came on to be heard before the Sudder Court, consisting of Mr. A. Dick, Sir Robert Barlow, and Mr. J. B. Colvin. Upon the merits, Mr. Dick held that no sufficient case of fraud had been shown. Sir Robert Barlow and Mr. Colvin were of the contrary opinion upon this point; but the latter held that Tarneychurn and [503] the other heirs of Goureechurn had been in possession for twelve years without fraud; therefore, on this point, although there had been fraud (by which he held them not bound) on the part of their ancestor Goureechurn, Mr. Colvin, differing with Mr. Dick in his reasonings, concurred with him in the result, which was, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and which was accordingly done. Sir Robert Barlow dissented from this judgment, and gave his opinion in favour of the Appellant. The majority of the Judges being in favour of the affirmance of the Zillah Court's decree, a decree was accordingly passed affirming that decree. The present appeal was brought from that decree.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. W. Field, for the Appellant, insisted that there was sufficient evidence of fraud to take the case out of the operation of Ben. Reg. III. of 1793, sec. 14.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the principal Respondent, Hurrosoondurri Debia, submitted that the onus of proof lay upon the Appellant to show that it was a collusive transaction for the purpose of defeating Goureechurn's creditors, which he had failed to do, and that, therefore, he had not brought the case within the provisions of Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, sec. 3, cl. i.; and that as the Respondent had held quiet and unmolested possession for more than twelve years before any claim thereto was preferred in a competent Court, under a title she believed just and valid, the suit was barred by Ben. Reg. III. of 1793, sec. 14.

At the conclusion of the arguments, judgment was pronounced by

The Right Hon. Lord Justice Knight Bruce,—After stating the pleadings and proceedings in the suit, The Lord Chief Justice proceeded: In this case the possession of the first Respondent being, in form [505] as well as effect, admitted, the first question for decision is, as to the manner in which such possession originated, and the character of that possession. The account she gives of the matter is this: She was the daughter of a Banian named Chuckerbutty, who appears to have died possessed of considerable wealth. He made a Will, by which, after giving certain legacies, he gave a life interest in the residue of his property to her. Unfortunately, he appointed her husband, Goureechurn, one of his executors, and, therefore, substantially her trustee, and he seems to have been the sole acting executor. Goureechurn appears to have possessed himself of considerable assets of the Testator, independently of his own Bond for Rs. 18,500, upon which it is clearly in evidence he was indebted to the Testator. The exact amount of his debt to the Testator's estate may be matter of fair contention, but it was considerable: and that it must in any event have exceeded the amount of Rs. 20,000 is a matter upon which no reasonable man, upon the materials before their Lordships, can possibly doubt. In these state of things a security, not one of great formality, was prepared in the English form. In one sense it may be said to have been in the shape of an absolute conveyance: but taking the whole transaction together, their Lordships see upon the face of it, that it was intended only as a security. By it, several portions of the landed estate of Goureechurn, including the Talook in question, were, in consideration of a debt of Rs. 47,000, stated to be the amount which he owed to the estate, conveyed, not to any person in trust for the benefit of any parties who might be entitled to the estate, but, singularly enough, to the wife herself, who was the tenant for life of the residue. It seems remarkable that the [506] instrument should have been prepared in such a shape by Messrs. Collier and Bird, who are described, and no doubt accurately, as highly respectable solicitors at Calcutta.

Shortly afterwards, it seems to have suited some arrangement of the husband that a change should be made: and in circumstances which, perhaps, do not clearly appear, a part of the property was withdrawn from the security: the wife was treated as having received Rs. 20,000, or 27,000 of the Rs. 47,000, which it is probable enough she never did receive, and a second mortgage deed was, in April, 1831, taken in her name for the reduced amount. This deed, in all substantial respects, was similar to the former deed.

Now, if the matter had rested here, and the instrument of 1832, upon which so much stress has been laid throughout the argument here and below, were out of the question, it appears to their Lordships, upon the evidence, that the validity and good faith of these transactions could not have been successfully impeached or affected. As I have said, there is every reason to believe, indeed, to be satisfied, that the amount of debt due from Goureechurn to the estate of Chuckerbutty was considerable: it could not have been less than Rs. 20,000, and it may by possibility have amounted to Rs. 47,000. There may not, or may, have been an intention upon the part of Goureechurn to prefer the wife to his other creditors: but if that was his intention, it does not necessarily invalidate the instrument. It is not proved that there was any contemplation of insolvency: the transaction of April, 1831, was more than two years before the insolvency, which did not take place until the month of December, 1833.

The suit was not to redeem her as a mortgagee: it [507] was to impeach her title upon the ground of fraud: nor as a suit for redemption has it been treated by the Appellant, because it has been stated in effect on his part at the Bar, that if the transactions of 1831 are considered as forming a good mortgage, it would not be worth the while or money of the Appellant to redeem: a statement which is not surprising when it is seen that the valuation of the Talook in the plaint is placed at Rs. 12,000: and even considering that as under the true value, we cannot possibly place the value of the Talook higher than the amount of the security upon it. It has been said that all this was a mere fraud for the purpose of cheating the creditors of Goureechurn. Their Lordships are of opinion, that the evidence affords no ground to support such an allegation. Independently of the side on which the burthen lies of supporting such an allegation (even if the burthen had been upon the widow to support the fairness of these transactions), their Lordships are of opinion that the transactions would have been supported, especially considering the great length of time that has elapsed since the year 1831: without laying any stress upon the decease of persons who could give evidence, and who have died in the interval.

This case, indeed, would have been clear of all difficulty, but for two circumstances: one, the transaction of June, 1832: the other, the judgment of the Supreme Court, which has been so often mentioned during the argument.

Now, over the transaction of June, 1832, there seems to hang some mystery. Their Lordships are not perfectly satisfied with any account which has been given of it: but the question is, whether it affords evidence of fraud sufficient to impeach the [508] prior transactions of 1831: and their Lordships think it does not. Whatever may have been the reason which induced those who were parties to that transaction to treat the Talook in question as valued at Rs. 8000, to make a sale of it at that value to the person for whom Nilmoney Mutty Loll took Benanee: whatever may have been the motive for that transaction—whether it was foolish or wise, whether fairly or unfairly intended—their Lordships think that the evidence wholly fails to connect the widow with it as a fraudulent transaction, or as one in any sense unfair. Whatever character, therefore, is given to the instrument of 1852, whatever is believed upon the subject, their Lordships are of opinion that, in the case of the widow, it is wholly immaterial; her title under the instruments of 1851 is in either case not affected by it, and, as far as she is concerned, she cannot be prejudiced by treating the cause as if that instrument has never existed. With regard to the judgment of the Supreme Court, it is plain, that considering the parties to the suit in which that judgment was given, it is not evidence in the present case, but it was treated in the Courts in India, as their Lordships would be disposed to treat it here, with the greatest deference and respect as a decision proceeding from such a tribunal. We must recollect, however, not only that that suit had a different object from the present, independently of the difference of parties, but that the evidence here is beyond, and is different from, that which was before the Supreme Court upon the occasion of delivering that judgment.

Their Lordships have the high authority of Sir Lawrence Peel for saying, that, upon the present materials applied to the present issue, he entirely agrees [509] with the conclusion that the title of the principal Respondent is not impeachable for fraud. He entirely concurs with the opinion of their Lordships in this case, and in the conclusion to which they have arrived, namely, that this has been an unsuccessful attempt, and I fear it may, without impropriety, be called a litigious attempt, after a long lapse of years, to impeach the fair title of a person who, if there has been fraud, has, upon the evidence, as it strikes their Lordships, been a sufferer from that fraud, and in no sense a participator in it.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the case entirely fails upon the merits, and this relieves them from the necessity of deciding some other points on which they might have made some observations. As it is, they cannot part with the case without expressing some regret at the inference they are obliged to draw from the materials before them, with respect to the character of this litigation. It is impossible for them to believe, upon the present materials, that the true state of the case, as between Cockrane and Mackenzie, was brought under the notice of the Insolvent Court. Their Lordships are of opinion, that before obtaining leave from the Insolvent Court to prosecute this suit, the true nature of the case should have been explained, and the Insolvent Court should have had an opportunity of exercising its controlling judgment upon the propriety of the Official Assignee lending his name for such a purpose, and allowing a gentleman, who was desirous of spending a sum of Rs. 100, or Rs. 500, for the purpose of buying a right of this description, to use the name of a public Officer in the way in which the Appellant's name has been allowed to be used; for this, to every substantial pur-[510]-pose, is the suit of Mackenzie, from the beginning to the end, and of him alone. Their Lordships, however, do not decide the case upon that point, whether viewed as the suit of the Appellant or of Mackenzie; it is a case in which their Lordships consider, without the slightest doubt or hesitation, that the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

BEBEE TOKAI SHEROB.—Appellant; DAVID MULICK FUREEDOON BEGLAR and GABRIEL AVIETIE TER STEPHANOOS.—Respondents * [July 15 and 16, 1856].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

A., by four deeds, conveyed certain real estates near Dacca in Benamee, for S., his mistress, by virtue of which she took possession. By a Will made subsequent to the date of the conveyances, A. appointed G., his illegitimate son, executor, and after satisfying certain charges thereby created, which would exhaust his whole estate, gave G. a life estate in the residue. A. was involved and in pecuniary difficulties, and an action was brought against him in the Supreme Court at Calcutta by some of his creditors, which action was pending at the time of his death, and was revived against G. as A.'s heir, and judgment obtained against G. without reference to his character as executor of A. Under an execution sale in satisfaction of this judgment, the Sheriff sold "the right, title, and interest" of G. to V. (whose interest afterwards became vested in B.) for a nominal sum. Ejectment by B. founded on the title under the Sheriff's Bill of sale, against S. and G. to recover possession of the real estate in S.'s possession, impeaching the conveyances made to her by A. as void as against A.'s creditors. The Court in India decreed possession to B. on the ground of the conveyances being fraudulent. Decree of the Sudder Court reversed by the Judicial Committee by reason,—

First, that the title of S. to the lands under the conveyances was established.

Second, that in the circumstances of G. having only an uncertain right in unascertained property, it was not such an interest as could be seized by the Sheriff under a writ of execution, and that the Bill of sale was void.

This suit (see case reported, nom. "Bibi Takoi Sheraab v. Mukeethur Vardoon," 7 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 547) was instituted by the Respondent, Beglar, for possession of four distinct estates consist-[511]-ing of lands and houses in the District of Dacca, with mesne profits, in the possession of the Appellant, claiming as purchaser under four deeds of conveyance from one Avietie Ter Stephanoos, an Armenian merchant of Dacca, and also as mortgagee under a foreclosure. The principal question was, whether these conveyances were bona fide, and for valuable consideration, or collusive and fraudulent as against Avietie's creditors. The Respondent Beglar's title was a purchaser under a Sheriff's Bill of sale in execution of a judgment of the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant, contended that the title of the Appellant as a bona fide purchaser for a good consideration to the four parcels of land, was fully established; and that, so far as related to the particular parcel included in the foreclosure, the decree of the Zillah Court, of the 7th of April, 1843, was a bar to this suit. That this being, in effect, an action of ejectment, the onus of proof lay upon the Plaintiff to prove that a legal title ever became vested in Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanoos, to these[512]four parcels; so as to have been capable of being seized by the Sheriff; but that the Plaintiff had entirely failed to prove that the Respondent, Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanoos, had any "right, title, and interest" in these parcels; or that any right, title, or interest passed to him under the Sheriff's Bills of sale, which would entitle the Plaintiff to possession. That the Will of Avietie had not been proved; but even if it had, it could not affect the real estate of Avietie. Neither was it shown that any interest of Avietie became vested in Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanoos under such Will, other than as executor: the estates were not mentioned, and would not, therefore, pass. That the estates were, in fact, vested in the Appellant under the conveyances. The charges created by Avietie would exhaust his estate, even if the four estates were included, so that there would be no residue, and, therefore, Gabriel's interest was incapable of being seized under a writ of execution. They further insisted that the proceedings in the Supreme Court were altogether irregular; that Court treating Gabriel as heir instead of executor, and that the judgment creditors could only attach, in satisfaction of their debts, such assets of Avietie as came to his hands; and if they were insufficient, then Beglar's remedy was to proceed against the real estate by impeaching the bona fides of the conveyances to the Appellant, and recover the balance due.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Maude, for the Respondents, insisted that the estates in question really belonged to Avietie. That the pretended conveyances by him to the Appellant were without consideration, and, [513] therefore, not being bona fide, were void, Groves v. Groves (3 You. and Jer. 163), and liable to be seized by the Sheriff, the transactions being collusive to defeat his creditors. Archbold's "Practice," p. 431 (Edit. 1840). That at Avietie's death the estate passed to Gabriel under his Will. Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanoos v. Gaspar Malcum Gaspar (7 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 58). That whatever interest Gabriel took under the Will, whether equitable or legal, the title to recover the estates had become vested in the Respondent, Beglar, under the Sheriff's Bills of sale, in satisfaction of the judgment against Gabriel, who was liable to the debts of his father. Shunkerdiel Patu v. Hurnam Singh (6 Sud. Dew. Rep. N.W.P. 6); Macpherson, "On civil procedure," pp. 46, 67, 358, 364-5; Marshman's "Guide to the Civil Law," p. 734.

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh (July 17, 1856).—In this appeal, it is very possible, from the course which the parties have thought fit to pursue, that it may not be in the power of their Lordships to arrive at the substantial justice of the case, whether they affirm or reverse the judgment. But we can deal with the case only in the shape in which it comes before us.

The facts appear to be these:—The Appellant lived with an Armenian merchant, of the name of Avietie Ter Stephanoos, as his mistress. At what time this connection began, does not distinctly appear, but it began before the year 1827. During the continuance of this connection several transactions took place between Avietie and the Appellant, which ap-[514]-pear to have been in the nature of purchases and sales.

Four different conveyances of property were executed by Avietie to the Appellant, all purporting to be conveyances made for a valuable consideration bona fide paid. The first of these transactions took place in the year 1827; the second and third took place in the year 1832. One of the transactions in the year 1832, was a conditional sale in the nature of a mortgage, which was made absolute in the year 1840. The fourth was a transaction which took place in the year 1833, and was of this description. Avietie appears to have fallen into difficulties, and judgments, by a number of his creditors, having been obtained against him, a portion of his property was put up for sale in the year 1833, and purchased by an individual named Hurchundur, who is represented to have been an agent of the family of Avietie, and the conveyance and purchase under that execution was represented by Hurchundur to have been made on behalf of the Appellant, and, in 1837, the property was conveyed to her by him.

Now, before the death of Avietie, several other suits had been instituted against him, one by a person of the name of Petrose, and two by another creditor of the name of Beglar.

On the 17th of April, 1835, Beglar instituted these two suits, one claiming a balance of account, and the other claiming a sum of money for rent alleged to be due. It appears that Avietie lived but a few months, or, perhaps, a few weeks only, after the institution of these suits, and he died in the year 1835, before he had put in any defence to these suits. Upon his death a summons was taken out, calling on his heir, [515] or representative, to appear and defend, and after some delay, Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanoos, his son (though as it appears an illegitimate one only), appeared and took up the defence to these suits. He appeared as the son and heir of his father, Avietie. The suits seem to have been revived against him, without any very particular inquiry as to the nature of the interest he had, but he was treated as the representative of his father. Decrees were obtained in these suits, by Beglar against Gabriel, and the suits being suits originally instituted against the father for debts due from the father, of course the decrees ought to have been against the son in his representative character; decrees in short against the estates of the father. Probably that may have been the intention of the decrees, but the language of them, according to our notion, is a little unsound.

The first decree was made on the 31st of August, 1836, and the other in December of the same year. The terms of that, and the decree in the second suit (which appears to be much the same as the other), are as follow:—"The sum which the Plaintiff is entitled, therefore, to recover from the Defendant (who is the heir), is Rs. 381. 8a. 1c., for interest; and principal, Rs. 2591, making a total of principal and interest of Rs. 2972. 8a. 13g. 1c., because, after the death of Avietie Ter Stephanoos, that Kalwaja Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanoos, Defendant, is his son and heir, is evident from the answer, and the proceeding upon the record. Payment must, therefore, be made by the Defendant."

This is the form in which the decree was pronounced in both suits. It certainly is one which seems in its terms to imply a personal liability on the part of the [516] son, but, at all events, it is a decree against the son in his representative character; and had the proceeding been taken by Beglar as against what is called, in India, the decree-holder, no doubt the estates of the father might have been made responsible for that debt. Having obtained this decree, Beglar proceeded to attach the property which was in the hands of the Appellant as being the property of the deceased, his debtor, and liable, therefore, to the payment of his demand. But in the meantime various proceedings had taken place, partly in suits instituted by other of the creditors and partly in suits in which Beglar himself was a party, in which the Court had so dealt with this property that they had held that, prima facie, at all events, the whole of it was the property of the Appellant, and could be recovered back from her only by a suit instituted against her.

When, therefore, Beglar attempted to attach this property so belonging to the creditor of Avietie, the Sudder Ameen, before whom the case came, held, that he was concluded by what had taken place in the first proceedings, and that although his own opinion was, that these transactions were fraudulent, he could not, after what had been determined on the former suits, give effect to that opinion.

From that decree there was an appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Court, and that Court confirmed the opinion of the Sudder Ameen, and referred Beglar to more regular proceedings to give effect to his claim.

Now, if he had thought fit to pursue that course, the real question between these parties would have properly come on for trial.

That instruments to the effect stated had been executed, appears to their Lordships to admit of no [517] reasonable doubt: but considering the nature of the relation subsisting between Avietie and his mistress, considering the state in which the Appellant appears to have been placed, namely, that of a slave girl; considering the pecuniary difficulties at all events which seem at different times to have pressed upon Avietie; undoubtedly the nature of these transactions, as real transactions of mortgage and sale, purchases for considerations actually paid, were open to great doubt, and those doubts would have been solved, and the whole of the facts of these transactions would have been investigated, had Beglar thought fit to prosecute a suit for that purpose as a creditor of Avietie. And if he had prosecuted a suit in that character, what would have been the effect? Would it have been that he would have recovered the whole of the property against the Appellant? Supposing he had substantiated his case, the effect of it would have been this—that as against his debt, as against his claim, these transactions could not have been maintained; but the moment his debt was satisfied, the moment the amount of these two judgments had been satisfied, the remainder of the property would have remained in the hands of the Appellant, subject only to similar claims by persons who could make out a similar case against it as creditors of Avietie.

For some reason which it is extremely difficult to understand, and to which it is hardly possible to attribute any fair motive, the course which Beglar thinks fit to take is this: He has established a demand which clearly was a demand against Avietie, the father, but the judgments are worded in terms which seem to constitute a personal liability on behalf of Gabriel, and, therefore, in the year 1842, he brings an action [518] in the Supreme Court at Calcutta against Gabriel for the purpose of making him personally responsible to the judgments which had been obtained in the Sudder Court, and which clearly ought to have bound the son only to the extent to which he had either possessed, or neglected to possess, the property of his father.

That action was tried on the 11th of February, 1842, and the only notice we have of what took place on that occasion is a short note, by which it appears that a simple verdict was taken against the Defendant, without reference to his being executor. Upon that verdict the principal and interest are taxed, and the whole amount is found to be Rs. 10,159. Upon that judgment was entered up. But here again, we have no evidence of what the contents of that judgment were.

Under an execution issued upon this judgment, it appears that property alleged to belong to Gabriel, including the property which had been conveyed by the father to the Appellant, was put up for sale in several lots. One of these lots consisted of "the right, title and interest of Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanos" in a portion of a Talook near Dacca, and Mukeethur Vardoon became the purchaser for the sum of Rs. 20.

He became the purchaser also of other lots; whether the price was equally nominal, I do not know; but I think it somewhere appears that about Rs. 1530 were paid for the whole of these estates. By a Bill of sale executed by the Sheriff on the 26th of June, 1843, it is recited that a writ of fiery facias was issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature, at Fort William, dated the 4th of April, 1842, whereby the Sheriff was commanded to levy upon the houses, lands, debts, and other effects, real and personal, of Gabriel Avietie [519] Ter Stephanos in the writ named, to a certain amount therein mentioned, and to have that money before the Justices of the Supreme Court of Judicature on the 15th day of June, to render to Beglar, in the writ also named. It then recites that the Sheriff, by virtue of the writ of fiery facias, did seize "the right, title, and interest of the said Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanos of, in, and to (amongst other property) all that six anas, six gundahs, and two crantees, share of a Talook situate, lying, and being at Roope Gunge, in the District of Dacca;" that under a writ of renditione exponas, this property was put up to sale, and that Mukeethur Vardoon was the highest bidder for the same, at the sum of Rs. 20; and then the Sheriff "doth, as much as in him lies, and he can or may, both at law and in equity, bargain, sell, assign, and transfer to Mukeethur Vardoon, the right, title and interest of Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanos" in this estate. Similar Bills of sale were executed as to the rest of the property.

On the 12th of December, 1843, about six months after the date of this Bill of sale, the present suit was instituted in the name of Vardoon, as purchaser of the interest of Gabriel Avietie Ter Stephanos in these estates; and Gabriel, and the present Appellant (who was in possession of the property and had been in possession of it for a period of fifteen years), and Beglar, were made Defendants. That case came on to be heard before the Sudder Ameen on the 28th of November, 1844. He was of opinion that all these transactions which had taken place between Avietie and the Appellant were fraudulent, as made with the intention of defeating the creditors of Avietie, and he pronounced a decree in fa-[520]-vour of the Plaintiff in that suit. The case was carried by appeal before the Sudder Dewanny Court, and that Court, by a majority of two Judges against one, confirmed the judgment, and against that judgment the present appeal is brought. There can be little doubt that Beglar was the real purchaser of these estates in the name of Vardoon; and Vardoon having died pending these proceedings, Beglar, on his death, became his representative, and he revived the suit in that character as Plaintiff.

Now, it is not very clear, upon the terms of this decree, what it was that the Court intended to give to the Plaintiff by the effect of its order? The terms of it are: "It is, therefore, ordered, that the Plaintiff's claim be decreed in this case, and that the Plaintiff take possession of four anas of the share of this Talook, and all other property set forth in the plaint, together with the wasilat (mesne profits) from May, 1844, the day of the purchase, to the date of possession."

Now, the first objection which is made to the decree which has been thus pronounced, is this: It is said, "The property which is sought to be recovered in this suit was originally the property of Avietie; you must, therefore, show first, that Avietie on his death, by some means or other, passed this property to Gabriel, either as his heir, or by devise, or in some other form, and you do not show any mode by which any interest whatever in this property, which belonged to Avietie at the time of his death, could become vested in Gabriel." But it is said further, "If you do show that the property became vested in Gabriel, the next point that you have to make out is this: you must show that the property of Gabriel has become vested [521] in Beglar, and you cannot show that, because the interest of Gabriel, if he had any interest, was such as was not capable of being seized or sold under a writ of execution from the Supreme Court." And they say further, "Supposing these difficulties to be out of the way, Gabriel can claim, under the father, only as a mere volunteer; you can claim only in the same right, as being in the same position in which Gabriel himself claimed; and if these deeds were good against Gabriel, they are good against you. If he could not impeach these transactions, neither can you."

Now, upon the first point, namely, the transmission of interest from Avietie to Gabriel, the case seems to stand thus: It is admitted that Gabriel, although the son, was the illegitimate son of Avietie, and was not the heir of his father, and, in that character, therefore, could not take this property. But then it is said there was a Will, which was made by Avietie, in February, 1835, a few months before his death; under which Gabriel became the devisee and general legatee of the whole of the Testator's property, subject to the charges which were created by that Will. It is said on the part of the Appellant, that that Will was not properly in evidence, for although a Will was produced (or rather an official copy of a Will was produced), there was no examination of witnesses, and though that Will had been proved by Gabriel, as to the personal estate, that would be no evidence against the Appellant; at all events it would not affect the real estate.

If it would be necessary to decide that question, their Lordships would be inclined to hold that the Will was sufficiently in evidence for the purposes of [522] this suit. The Regulation provides that where documents are produced, and they are not disputed, they shall be received without proof.

As to the pleadings on that subject, the case was this: The Appellant, when called on to answer as to the factum of this Will, said, "What does it signify if there is such a Will? If such a Will be produced it cannot have any effect against my interest." The official copy of the Will was produced at the hearing, and there does not appear to have been any objection taken to the reception of that instrument, or any demand made on the part of the Appellant that the instrument should be regularly proved by witnesses. If, therefore, it were necessary to determine that point, their Lordships would be of opinion that the Will was, for the purposes of the suit, as against the Appellant, sufficiently established.

Then it is necessary to look to what the nature of the Will really is, in order to see whether it is of such a character as that it would pass to Gabriel the legal estate in this property, in a form in which it could be the subject of seizure under a writ of execution from the Supreme Court, as the law at that time stood.

The Will in substance is this: The Testator declares that his son, Gabriel, shall be his heir and executor for the purpose of executing the intentions of his Will, and thereby, no doubt, he became trustee for the purpose of executing the different dispositions contained in that instrument. Those dispositions were to this effect: there was first a charge by way of annuity of Rs. 1200, in favour of the present Appellant, all the debts were to be paid, there were very large legacies to be discharged, and after all these [523] charges, debts, legacies, and annuities had been satisfied or provided for, as to the remainder of the estate, Gabriel was to be tenant for life, with remainder to his sons. He, therefore, was entitled to nothing for his own benefit but a life-interest in the residue of the real and personal property of the Testator after all the charges upon it had been satisfied and provided for, and after a full administration had taken place of the assets for the purpose of discharging these several dispositions.

Now, was that an interest which could be sold under an execution issued in the Supreme Court against the property of the Testator? We have the concurrent opinion of the two very highest authorities in this country, on the subject, Sir Edward Ryan and Sir Lawrence Peel, who are most clearly of opinion that no such interest could pass under such an execution, and that, therefore, the Bill of sale under it was absolutely null and void. Indeed, the grossest injustice would be done if the transaction, as it has taken place, could stand. For what is the effect of it? The effect of it is merely this; that there being some uncertain rights in some uncertain property in the District or City of Dacca, at a distance from Calcutta, and being uncertain whether the property was worth Rs. 100,000, or whether the interest of the debtor is worth anything; that property is put up for sale (that is, the right and interest of the debtor in that property is put up for sale) in Calcutta, and I think it appears here to have been bought for mere nominal sums, it being utterly impossible that there could be any satisfactory means of determining the value, or procuring a fair price by the competition of purchasers acquainted with the value, or capable even of ascertaining the [524] value of the property. But beyond that, the effect of it is this; that for these nominal considerations the purchaser is to obtain the whole of this property; although supposing all these deeds to be void against creditors of Avietie, the very utmost that ever could have been demanded against the Appellant out of this property by this suit, would have been the amount of the debt originally due from Avietie, and properly recoverable against his assets.

Now, the fact that the Bill of sale was void and passed nothing to the purchaser would alone be sufficient to dispose of this case, but as it was not the ground on which the Court below proceeded, it will be more satisfactory to advert to the other grounds. The other grounds are these: Although these instruments are open to suspicion, they are open to suspicion at whose instance? They are open to suspicion as between the creditors of Avietie and the Appellant. They are open to no suspicion at all as against the creditors of Gabriel. Gabriel is a mere volunteer. Gabriel's creditors might well dispute any fraudulent assignment which Gabriel had made; but how can Gabriel's creditors, or a purchaser from Gabriel, dispute the validity of transactions which Gabriel, before the institution of this suit, and long before the institution of the suit on which the present claim was established (that is, before the institution of any suit in the supreme Court), had recognised and abundantly confirmed? And, therefore, even if these different objections to which we have adverted, in respect of the form of the suit, and the nature of the proceedings, were removed, the character of the Plaintiff—the character in which he sues, of a personal creditor, asserting a personal liability against Gabriel—would effectually exclude those considerations upon which, and upon which alone, the transactions which are now disputed could be subject to question.

Their Lordships, therefore, are very clearly of opinion that the judgment which has been pronounced must be reversed.

It appears to their Lordships that this has been not only a most irregular proceeding, but that it is impossible to attribute to it any fair motive; we heard none at least assigned at the Bar for the course which had been taken. A most unfair advantage would have been gained if these decrees could have been maintained.

Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion, that the Appellant is entitled not only to have the decree reversed, but to have the costs repaid to her, which, under the decrees of the Court below, she has paid; to have her costs of those proceedings, and, also, to have her costs of the present appeal. If there be any means by which Beglar can now revert to his original position as a creditor of Avietie, and in that character dispute these different gifts or sales, of course it will be competent to him to do so. If not, by attempting to obtain an unfair advantage in an irregular manner, he will have lost the opportunity of which at one time he, no doubt, might have availed himself.

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

Rules for construing Wills of Hindoos.

Primarily the words of a Will are to be considered. They convey the intention of the Testator's wishes, but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, among which is the law of the country in which the Will is made, and its dispositions are to be carried out. If that law has attached to particular words a particular meaning, or to a particular disposition a particular effect, it must be assumed that the Testator, in the dispositions he has made, had regard to that meaning or to that effect, unless the language of the Will, or the surrounding circumstances, displace that assumption.

A Testator by his Will made an absolute gift of his real and personal estate to his five sons (an undivided Hindoo family) in equal shares, and in a subsequent part of his Will, in the event of any of his five sons dying without a son or son's son, there was a gift over to such of his sons or son's sons as should be alive. After the death of the Testator the sons lived together, and no partition of the estate was made, the surplus income and the increment being kept with the common stock. Upon the death of one of the sons without leaving a son or son's son, his widow, who was entitled to a life interest in her husband's estate, claimed her husband's share of the accumulation of income, and the increment thereon. Held, upon a construction of the Will, that in the absence of any direction of the Testator that his sons should continue a joint family, such an intention could not be imported into the Will, and that the Testator's intention was that his sons should enjoy during their lives the interest of their respective shares of the property; and, therefore, that, although the deceased co-sharer's share went over to the survivors, the widow of the deceased was entitled to one-fifth of the surplus income which had accumulated since the Testator's death, and during her husband's lifetime, and the increment arising out of such accumulations.

The question raised by this appeal was, whether the accumulations made to and incorporated with joint and undivided immovable and movable property by the manager of a joint and undivided Hindoo family, with the assent of his co-sharers, by means of the surplus income, proceeds, and profits [527] of the movable and immovable property, ought to be, on the death of one of such co-sharers, considered and treated as an increment to the original corpus, and of the same nature, so as to pass entire with such corpus to his co-sharers, or whether the accumulations were to be traced and ascertained by means of an account to be directed by the Court, and then severed from the original corpus and treated as if they formed a part of the separate and self-acquired estate of the deceased co-sharer.

The Bill was filed on the 20th of August, 1855, by the Appellant, the widow of one of five co-sharers, against the Respondents, on the equity side of the Supreme Court at Calcutta. The statements in the Bill were to the following effect: That Bustomdoss Mullick, then deceased, was a Hindoo inhabitant of the town of Calcutta, and there carried on the business of a Banian, and that he left five sons, namely, Beernursing Mullick (since deceased), Surroopchunder Mullick (also since deceased, the husband of the Appellant), and the Respondents, Denobundoo Mullick, Brijobundoo Mullick and Gostobeharry Mullick (since deceased), who was the father of the Respondent, Koonjoobeharry Mullick and the husband of the Respondent, Sreemutty Bhuggobutty Dossee. That, during the lifetime of their father, none of the sons ever, at any time, had any trade or business independent of and apart from their father, or acquired or became possessed of any property or estate separate or apart from him; that Surroopchunder Mullick was, for a few years previous to his father's death, perfectly blind, which rendered him totally unfit to take part in or personally interfere with the management of the estate of his father, or [528] the expenditure of his own family after the latter's death. That Bustomdoss Mullick died on the 10th of March, 1841, having duly made his Will, the principal parts of which were the first, eleventh and fourteenth items, which were as follows:— "First Item I have five sons, you four persons, and middlemost son, Surroopchunder Mullick (whose eyes becoming diseased he has become blind), for this reason whatever estate I have in ready money, in loan papers, in jewels, in gold and silver personal ornaments in dresses and cloths and chandeliers and lanterns and lands homesteads etc. agreeably to my ledger book and abstract book and according to the cash book with my own writing therein all the said property remains for you five brothers in equal shares, but so long as the said middlemost Baboo's eyes are not cured so long you four persons will protect and look after all the said estate mentioned above and in drawing the interest of the Company's papers and realizing the outstandings and liquidating the debts and in suits causes and the like whenever it becomes necessary to sign and affix signatures to anything you four persons will do that and in consulting etc. about the worldly affairs and the expenses and disbursements that may become necessary at any time you four persons will be unanimous in that also and incur the same and the said expenses will fall equally to the five shares and among the abovementioned immovable property, if it is requisite to sell any parcel of land in that matter you four persons will affix your respective signatures and one among you four persons whoever he may happen to be having written and signed the name of the said middlemost Baboo will write his own name adding " by his pen " to the same therein no [529] one will be able to make any objection or dispute having sold such parcel of land you will credit the money to the estate. By the will of the Issore should the eyes of the said middlemost Baboo get well in that event the said middlemost Baboo becoming an executor in association with you you five persons will transact every business with unanimity. Eleventh Item. The Issore avert but should peradventure any among my said five sons die not leaving any son from his loins nor any son's son in that event neither his widow nor his daughter nor his daughter's son nor any of them will get any share out of the share that he has obtained of the immoveables and moveables of my said estate. In that event of the said property such of my sons and my sons' sons as shall then be alive they will receive that wealth according to their respective shares. If any one acts repugnant to this it is inadmissible however if my sonless son shall leave a widow in that event she will only receive Rs. 10,000 for her food and raiment. Fourteenth Item. The orders that I have given to you in the above-written items you will be unanimous and do every act agreeably to those and remaining joint in food you will uphold the expenses and disbursements of the family in the manner the same have been hitherto only." That after Bustomdoss Mullick's death his sons, Beernursing and the Respondents, Denobundoo Brijobundoo, and Gostobeharry, proved the Will in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, and took upon themselves the execution thereof. That upon and after the death of the Testator, the whole of the real and personal property of the Testator, was transferred into the joint names of the five sons, and jointly held and possessed by them as owners and [530] proprietors thereof under the Will. That, with a view to improve the estate and property left by the Testator, his son, Beernursing, after the death of his father, as the eldest son and principal manager of the joint estate, with the consent and concurrence of his brothers, made loans of money to divers individuals, upon the security or pledge of portions of the joint property, real as well as personal, bearing interest at high rates, and thereby the joint estate was considerably increased, and very large accumulations accrued thereon; and that from the death of the Testator down to the time of the death of Surroopchunder, the annual income and profits of the joint estate actually received by Beernursing and the Respondents, Denobundoo, Brijobundoo, and Gostobeharry, very greatly exceeded the disbursements and expenses of the five brothers and of the whole of the family of the Testator; and very large accumulations accrued from year to year, and from month to month, by reason of the surplus of income over expenditure, the whole of which accumulations were realised by Beernursing, Denobundoo, Brijobundoo, and Gostobeharry, and were from time to time invested and employed by them in the same manner as the corpus of the estate and very large gains and profits were thereby realised and the accumulations greatly increased. That there used to be a yearly surplus of about Company's rupees two hundred and ten thousand, which surplus was accumulated and invested, in the manner aforesaid by Beernursing, Denobundoo, Brijobundoo, and Gostobeharry. That after the death of Bustomdoss Mullick, and up to and until the death of Surroopchunder, the five brothers continued to live together, and no division [531] or separation in estate ever took place between them, but that each of them respectively drew and received from and out of the joint estate for the expenses and maintenance of himself and family, such sums of money as he required, and that entries of such respective disbursements were entered in the joint khattah books of account relating to the joint estate; and that during his lifetime Surroopchunder drew or received from the joint estate a very much smaller sum than his other brothers, and that no account was ever rendered to him by his brothers, in respect of the surplus and accumulations, or of their dealings therewith, or of the profits arising therefrom. That Surroopchunder died on the 25th of November, 1847, intestate and without male issue, but leaving the Appellant, his sole widow, heiress and personal representative, according to Hindoo law and custom, and two married daughters, respectively him surviving. That in the month of July, 1849, Beernursing also died, leaving the Respondents, Toolseedoss Mullick and Soobuldooss Mullick, his two sons, him surviving, having first made his Will and thereby appointed the other Respondents, Denobundoo Mullick, Brijobundoo Mullick, and Gostobeharry Mullick, executors thereof. That, subsequently, Gostobeharry died, leaving the Respondent Koonjoobeharry Mullick, his only son, him surviving, having first made his Will, in and by which he appointed the other Respondent, Sreemutty Bhugobutty Dossee, his widow, the sole executrix thereof. That the above several persons respectively had taken possession of the whole of the joint estate, and of the accumulations, additions, and increase thereof, including the share of the late Surroopchunder in such increase, additions, and accumulations accrued during [532] his lifetime, and that they continued to use the same indiscriminately with the corpus of the estate. And the Appellant submitted that she, as such Hindoo widow and immediate heiress and representative, was entitled, for and during the term of her natural life, to the share of Surroopchunder Mullick of or in the surplus income and accumulations that accrued during the lifetime of Surroopchunder Mullick from or in respect of the joint estate, to be held and possessed by her as a Hindoo widow in the manner prescribed by Hindoo law, and that she also became entitled, on her husband's death, to have the legacy of Rs. 10,000 given by the Will of Bustomdoss Mullick paid to her for her food and raiment, and to such further sum out of the joint estate as this Court might consider requisite for her suitable maintenance, including the performance by her of the usual religious acts and ceremonies; and the Bill prayed, First, that it might be decreed and declared that Surroopchunder Mullick, as one of the five sons of Bustomdoss Mullick, and as taking a vested interest under his Will in one-fifth share of his property, became and was, from and after the death of Bustomdoss Mullick, absolutely entitled to one-fifth share of the accumulated income of the joint estate which accrued during his, Surroopchunder Mullick's, lifetime, and to one-fifth of the additions to and increase of the original estate of Bustomdoss Mullick, and that, on the death of Surroopchunder Mullick, the Plaintiff, as his widow and immediate heiress and representative, became entitled to all accumulations and additions to the fifth share of the undivided estate made or accrued in the lifetime of Surroopchunder Mullick, as and being estate absolutely vested in Surroopchunder Mullick, deceased, at [533] the time of his death, and which passed to his own legal heirs and representatives in estate. Second, that an account might be taken of the real and personal estate of or to which Bustomdoss Mullick died seised, possessed, or entitled, and of the total and annual value and proceeds thereof at the time of his death, and that a like account might be taken of all and singular the proceeds and income of the estate which during the lifetime of Surroopchunder Mullick were possessed or received by the Defendants, or by Beernursing Mullick and Gostobeharry Mullick, and of all investments of such proceeds and income, or by any part thereof, and of the profits arising therefrom, the Plaintiff thereby offering to allow to the Deendants, and of the estates of Beernursing Mullick and Gostobeharry Mullick respectively, credit for all moneys which, on taking the account, should appear to have been received by or paid on account of Surroopchunder Mullick during his lifetime. Third, that the Defendants might be decreed and directed to pay or to transfer to the Plaintiff, as such immediate heiress as aforesaid of Surroopchunder Mullick, one-fifth share of the amount of the annual income of such estate of Bustondoss Mullick, deceased, during the lifetime of Surroopchunder Mullick, and of all accumulations and increase which should appear to have been made or to have accrued during the lifetime of Surroopchunder Mullick upon taking the accounts, after deducting from such one-fifth share all monies received by or paid for Surroopchunder Mullick during his lifetime as aforesaid. Fourth, that the rights of the Plaintiff, under the Will of Bustondoss Mullick, might be declared, and that the Defendants might be decreed and directed to pay over to the Plaintiff, out of the joint [534] estate, the legacy or sum of Rs. 10,000 for food and raiment in the Will mentioned, with interest thereon from the death of Surroopchunder Mullick. Fifth, that if the Court should be of opinion that the Plaintiff, as widow of Surroopchunder Mullick, was entitled to maintenance, including the performance by her of the religious acts, out of the joint estate, irrespective of or in addition to the legacy or sum of Rs. 10,000, then that it might be referred to the Master to inquire and ascertain what would be a sufficient and proper sum to be allowed to the Plaintiff for such maintenance, and that all necessary directions might be given for payment of such maintenance to the Plaintiff as from the death of her husband, and for securing the payment thereof for the future, and for further relief.

The Respondents, Denobundoo Mullick and Brijobundoo, filed a joint demurrer and answer to the Bill, and thereby demurred generally, for want of equity, to the whole of the Bill, except so much of it as sought for payment of the legacy of Rs. 10,000, and the other Respondents also filed a joint demurrer generally, for want of equity.

The demurrers were argued on the 4th of December, 1855, when the Supreme Court delivered judgment as follows:—"The material question raised by these demurrers is novel and important, but it seems to us to lie in a narrower compass than that to which the very able and ingenious arguments which have been addressed to us on the subject were confined. The Testator, a Hindoo, had five sons, one of whom, Surroopchunder, was afflicted with a partial blindness that incapacitated him from business. With reference to this state of his family, the Testator [535] made a Will whereby he appointed his four other sons executors, but gave to the five sons (subject to a few legacies) the whole of his property in equal shares. He gave very particular directions as to its management, and amongst them, a direction that, should the eyes of Surroopchunder get well, he also should become an executor. The clause, however, upon which the principal question in the cause arises is the eleventh. By that it was provided that if any of the five sons should die without leaving a son from his loins, or any son's son, in that event neither his widow, nor his daughter, nor his daughter's son, nor any of them, should get any share out of the share which the son so dying had obtained of the immoveables and moveables of the Testator's estate. In that event such of the Testator's sons and sons' sons as should then be alive were to receive that wealth, according to their respective shares, and the widow of the son dying without issue in the male line was to receive a legacy of Rs. 10,000, for food and raiment. On these pleadings it must be taken as admitted (and we see no reason for doubting what is so stated), that the brothers during the lifetime of Surroopchunder constituted an undivided Hindoo family, joint in estate, as in food and worship; that the joint and separate expenditure of the members of this family fell far short of the income of the joint estate; that the surplus income was during the lifetime of Surroopchunder profitably employed, and by its accumulations greatly increased the joint estate; and further, that the sums drawn or received by Surroopchunder out of the common stock for the expenses of himself and his family, were to a much smaller amount than those drawn by his brothers for similar [536] purposes. Surroopchunder died on the 25th of November, 1847, intestate, and without issue in the male line. His immediate heiress and representative was the Plaintiff, his widow, but he also left daughters who have sons. The effect, therefore, of the eleventh clause, so far as it is operative, is not merely to disinherit the widow in favour of those who would take in her absence, but to break the legal order of succession altogether. That this has been effectually done, so far as relates to that which actually passed to Surroopchunder under his father's Will, i.e. the corpus of his share, the Bill properly admits, for in the present state of the authorities it would have been idle to contend that under the Hindoo law, as it exists in Bengal, the Testator had not the power of disposing of his property by Will, or that by that particular instrument he has not to the extent just stated effectually altered the right of succession to it. But the Plaintiff seeks to distinguish that part of her husband's share being the principal which passed to him under his father's Will, from that which arose from the accumulations of income which accrued during his life. She would treat the latter as his own estate, unaffected by his father's disposition, and claims it as his heiress-at-law; and the first and principal object of her Bill is to have these latter funds ascertained, separated and made over to her. It was, we apprehend, competent to this Testator, if he had been so minded, expressly to provide for the accumulation of the surplus income of his estate, within the limits allowed, by law, and to make these accumulations subject to the limitation over in the event of any son dying without leaving issue in the male line; but he does not appear to us to have done so, either [537] expressly or by necessary implication. If, therefore, we were to decide this case by English law, adverting to the jealousy with which that law protects the rights of the natural heirs, and regards all attempts to put fetters on the enjoyment of an estate actually given; and to the effect of the first clause of the Will, which, however controlled by the eleventh clause, cannot be taken to have given less than a life estate in his one-fifth share of the residue to Surroopchunder (in our opinion it gave him an absolute interest, subject to be divested in the event which happened), we should be of opinion that the Plaintiff's contention was correct. The annual income as it accrued would have been Surroopchunder's own absolute property, and his father, to whom it never belonged, could have had no power of disposing of it by Will or otherwise. But in dealing with this case we must not only put ourselves as far as possible in the position of a Hindoo father making a Will, in order to collect the Testator's intention from his expressions, but we must consider what, according to Hindoo law, is the nature and what the incidents of property taken by the five brothers under their father's Will, and held and enjoyed by them during their joint lives as joint estate; because upon that consideration must very much depend the effect to be given to the Testator's intention, when ascertained. The Testator's general intention of making a limitation of each son's share in a certain event in favour of his surviving sons and their sons, and to the exclusion of the widow, or heirs, in the female line of the deceased son, as already said, is admitted. We cannot collect from the Will the further intention attributed to him in the course of the argument for the Defendants, that his property [538] should continue to be held and enjoyed as joint estate; we think that he contemplated such an enjoyment as probable and proper, but we cannot find that he has made it imperative, or by any clear expression of intention has taken away from the co-sharers that right of demanding a partition which under the general Hindoo law each would have. Our view of his Will is, that, subject to the legacies and certain special direction, he left his property to his five sons as an undivided Hindoo family, controlling their rights as co-sharers in a joint Hindoo estate in one particular only, namely, that in a certain event, certain substituted heirs should succeed to a son's share to the exclusion of his natural heirs. If, then, Surroopchunder during his lifetime had claimed and exercised his right of having a partition, we are disposed to think that the income of his share after the partition and its accumulations being his separate property, could not have been treated as subject to the limitations of his father's Will; nothing more than the corpus of his share are taken on the partition could have passed under that disposition. But there was no partition in his lifetime, and the question simply is, whether his heir after his death, who, it is admitted, cannot stand in his shoes as to his whole interest in the common stock, can sever from that common stock his share of the increment which was made to it in his lifetime; or whether the increment is of the same nature with and follows the principal, and must, therefore, pass with it. Now, what are the peculiar characteristics of joint property held and enjoyed by an undivided Hindoo family? Dealing here with persons and property in Bengal, we must of course follow the Daya Bhaga, whenever it differs [539] from the Mitashara, upon the authority of which some of Sir Thomas Strange's propositions rest. Yet, according to the law as modified in Bengal, these propositions concerning property so held and enjoyed seem to be incontrollable. First. Each of the co-sharers has a right to call for a partition (Daya Bhaga, ch. iii. sec. i. par. 16), but until such partition takes place, and even an inchoate partition does not seem to vary the rights of the co-sharers; see Pran-kissen Mitter v. Sreemutty Bomasoondery Dossee (Fult. 110), the whole remains common stock; the co-sharers being equally interested in every part of it. Second. On the death of an original co-sharer his heirs stand in his place and succeed to his rights as they stood at his death; his rights may also in his lifetime pass to strangers, either by alienation, or, as in the case of creditors, by operation of law, 1 Strange's 'Hindu Law,' p. 178, and the authorities there cited; but in all cases those who come in, in the place of the original co-sharer, by inheritance, assignment, or operation of law, can take only his rights as they stand, including of course the right to call for a partition. Third. Whatever increment is made to the common stock whilst the estate continues joint, falls into and becomes part of that stock. On a partition it is divisible equally, no matter by what application of the common funds, or by whose exertions it may have been made; the single exception to the rule being, that on the acquisition by one co-sharer of a distinct property, with the aid only of the joint funds, the acquirer may take a double share in that property. The case cited of Gooroochurn Doss v. Goluckmanoy Dossee (Fult. 165), and the authorities there collected and enforced, [540] abundantly prove both the rule and the exception; the increment arising from the accumulations of undrawn income is obviously within the general rule. Fourth. A question arose in the course of the argument: it related to the right of co-sharers on a partition to make those who, whilst the jointure of estate continued, had drawn more than their due shares out of the common stock, account for the difference. The authorities certainly show that in respect of those expenses which properly fall upon the joint funds, as disbursements for marriages and certain religious and charitable purposes, there exists no liability to account, though from the largeness of his family or other cause, one co-sharer may have received greater benefit from the joint funds than another. But, on the other hand, there are authorities, and those ancient authorities (we may instance Colebrooke's Digest, art. cccxxviii. vol. iii. p. 391), which plainly show that a co-sharer may make himself liable for money spent for enjoyment, or other purposes, which are not for the benefit of the family considered as a whole. And we apprehend that at the present day, when personal luxury has increased, and the change of manners has somewhat modified the relations of the members of a joint family, it is by no means unusual that in the common Khatta Book an account of the separate expenditure of each member is opened and kept against him; and that on a partition, even in the absence of fraud or exclusion, those accounts enter into the general account on which the final partition and allotment are made. It is not, however, necessary to go at length into this consideration for the decision of the question before us, because the right to demand such an account, when it exists, is [541] incident to the right to require a partition; the liability to account can only be enforced upon a partition. If then this be the state of an undivided Hindoo family, and these the rules relating to their joint property, does it not follow that if the law permits an ancestor by Will to substitute for the natural heirs of a co-sharer certain haeredes facti, the persons so substituted must stand with reference to the joint property precisely in the shoes of the deceased co-sharer? If they take his share of the corpus, they have clearly, in respect of that share, the right to demand a partition. Now, if we were to suppose that the substituted heir was not, as in this case, the co-sharers themselves, but another person, and that a partition had taken place on the death of Surroopchunder, the four surviving brothers would each have been entitled to one-fourth of the joint fund, including the increment as it then stood. They could not, we think, have been subjected to a double account, to an account with the substituted heir in respect of the original share, and to an account with the natural heir in respect of the increment. Nor do we think that there could have been an account between the two classes of heirs, the haeres natus and the haeres factus, in order to distinguish principal from increment. We think it more agreeable to the Hindoo law to hold, that what the person substituted by the Will for the natural heir takes is the right, whatever it may then be, of a co-sharer in the joint estate, and that in that, as in the ordinary case, the fund is single, and the increment passes with the principal. The difficulty is caused by engrafting, as has happened in Bengal, the testamentary power on the Hindoo law. The precise point before us has never, so far as [542] we know, been decided; but we are of opinion, that we do less violence to the Hindoo law in holding that the effect of such an exercise of the testamentary power is to substitute, for all purposes, as regards the joint estate, the person in whose favour the disposition is made, for the natural heir, than we should do were we to admit the principle of a double representation as to a share in an undivided estate. We have already said that we should apply a different rule to the separate estate of Surroop-chunder, even though it had become separate by partition in his lifetime, and as to its principal remained subject to the testamentary disposition. On the whole, therefore, we think the demurrer on the principal question must be allowed. The result is, that the suit will be dismissed against all the Defendants but the executors, and will continue as against them as a mere legatee's suit. A further question arises, however, on the demurrer of the Defendants represented by Mr. Peterson, which it is necessary to consider, as it may have a bearing on the question of costs. It was argued by him, that whatever might be the judgment of the Court on the principal question, the general demurrers of his client, or of some of them, must be allowed, because they were not necessary parties to the trial of that question. To that view we cannot accede. We, of course, fully admit the general principles laid down in Holland v. Prior (1 Myl. and Keen, 237); and as regards the necessity of making the representative of a deceased representative (which seems generally to depend on the question whether the suit involves the general administration of the estate), we bow, as we are bound, to the English authorities. But the present suit is a peculiar one: so far as it involves the board [543] question with which we have dealt at such length, it is a contest between one claiming a portion of a fund adversely to a joint and undivided Hindoo family, who claim to retain the whole as their joint estate. That some of the parties may be only the legal personal representatives of deceased co-sharers, and others only beneficially interested in the joint funds sought to be diminished, does not, we think, materially affect the question. If we had decided in favour of the right to the accumulations claimed by the Plaintiff, we should not in this stage of the suit have seen our way to dismiss any of the Defendants. All are interested in the joint defence of the common fund. Therefore, on the reason of the thing, as well as upon the language of the twenty-first paragraph of the Bill, the general demurrer cannot prevail on the ground that these parties, or any of them, are improperly made Defendants. The joint demurrer filed by these particular Defendants is peculiar in form. There is a general demurrer for want of equity and for multifariousness, but the last point was not pressed in the argument. There is a partial demurrer to so much of the Bill as seeks an account of the legacy of Rs. 10,000, and also a demurrer on different grounds to the rest of the Bill. The two last are well founded, but in fact they are not necessary, because the whole benefit of them is gained by the allowance of the general demurrer for want of equity, which on our construction of the Will must, as to these Defendants, prevail. The partial demurrer of the executors must be allowed, but the suit will proceed against them in respect of the legacy. This being our view of the case, we cannot but feel that this being a suit by an heiress-at-law, seeking to have the judgment of [544] the Court on the construction of an unusual and not very simple testamentary disposition, in order to ascertain to what extent she has been deprived of her natural rights of inheritance, the costs of the litigation ought on general principles to come out of the estate. The misfortune is, that we are not now in a condition to decree costs out of the estate, and it is necessary to provide for the costs of the Defendants who are to be dismissed from the suit. This might be done by allowing their demurrer with costs to be paid by the Plaintiff, and giving her leave to add those costs to her own costs of suit. But as this might expose her to being harassed by executions, and the Defendants have personally the means of obtaining payment of their own costs out of the estate, we think it best to allow the demurrers without costs, and without prejudice to the question whether the Plaintiff will be entitled to her costs of these proceedings out of the estate as part of her general costs of the cause."

The present appeal was from two Orders founded upon this judgment, and now came on for hearing.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. W. Pearson, for the Appellant. No doubt the point in dispute is novel and important, as stated in the judgment of the Court below; but the error of that Court proceeds upon the reasoning that by the Hindoo law the accumulations follow the corpus, and that the co-shares in this case are to remain a joint undivided family, instead of looking for the intention of the Testator to be collected from the Will, according to the rules of construction adopted by Courts of Equity in England, which must, we submit, be applied to this case. The fact of the [545] power to make a Will is not questioned, although the exercise of testamentary power by Hindoos was first engrafted by the Supreme Courts in India, on the native law of succession, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 121 (2 Edit.); for an instrument in the nature of a Will was not known by the ancient Hindoo law, yet a testamentary instrument like the present is now held valid as a Will. The only question, then, is one of construction, which is not inconsistent with the Hindu law. Now, by the first item of the Will, there is an absolute gift of one-fifth of the Testator's property to each of the five sons, but that devise and bequest is cut down by the eleventh item, which provides that the share of any of the sons of the Testator who should die without leaving any son, or son's son, shall go over to such of the Testator's sons or sons' son as should be then alive; but this applies only to the real and personal estate of the Testator, which passed by the Will; it was clearly a gift of one-fifth part of the specific property the Testator then had, and does not affect any surplus income which accrued on such share during the lifetime of a son who should die, or any accretions derived from such surplus income. The Appellant's husband, therefore, had an absolute vested interest in one-fifth part of the surplus income accruing during his lifetime from the joint estate after paying the joint expenses and disbursements, and also one-fifth share of the accretions and increment arising from such surplus, which, by the Hindoo law, at his death passed to the Appellant for life, as his widow, 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 121 (2nd Edit.); Daya-Bhaga, ch. xi. sec. i. par. 7. There is nothing in the Will to carry over the accumulations, or to show that the Testator intended the [546] continuation of the five sons to remain joint in estate. The fourteenth item expressly requires that they should be joint "in food." But there is nothing to show that they are to be joint in worship, or that it was the Testator's intention that they should remain joint in property. He leaves them perfectly free to separate and divide. The Hindoo law does not require that a joint Hindoo family should be joint in all respects. F. Macnaghten's "Con. of Hindoo Law," p. 55; 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 225 (2nd Edit.). These five co-sharers had all the rights of absolute ownership except those expressly divested by the eleventh item of the Will. The Testator in fact has done nothing to prevent the exercise of the inherent right by the Hindoo law in each co-sharer to obtain a partition. Daya-Bhaga, ch. iii. sec. i. par. 16; Praonkissen Mitter v. Sreemutty Bomasoondery Dossee (Fulton's Rep. 110). An alienation may take place before partition. The Hindoo law says nothing as to the rights of a stranger, it treats only of the joint Hindoo family; but it must be admitted, that equality cannot enure so as to affect a stranger, intervening as assignee or purchaser. Suppose the case of the property diminishing in value, and the remainder man had been a stranger, he would be entitled to be paid his full share. The case of Goorouchurn Doss v. Goluckmoney Dossee (Fulton's Rep. 165) establishes an exception to the rule of equal partition, when part of the estate is by the acquisition of one co-sharer; he was in that case held entitled to a double share of the accumulations. No authority is given by the Court below to show that the increment arising from the accumulations [547] of income of the joint stock becomes part of that stock.

The Attorney-General (Sir Richard Bethell), Mr. Cairns, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Respondents. The difficulties in this case have been caused by what the Court below describes by "engrafting testamentary powers on the Hindoo law;" but we contend that the Appellant is not, upon the statements contained in the Bill, and with reference to the Hindoo law applicable to the subject, entitled, as widow and heiress of her deceased husband, to any share of the increment formed of the surplus income and proceeds of the joint property. The income with the principal passed by the eleventh item of the Will to the four surviving brothers. Both by the plain language of the Will in question, and by the admission of facts in the Bill, these five brothers are to be considered as a joint and undivided family. The Hindoo law shows that the whole estate, corpus and increment, is indivisible until partition. An improved estates is equally divided; Mitaeshara, ch. i. sec. iv. par. 30; Daya-Bhaga, ch. vi. sec. i. pars. 1. 5. 50, ch. viii. par. 1; 1 Strange's "Hindu Law," p. 198 (2nd Edit.); 2. W. Macnaghten's "Princ. of Hindoo Law," 162: increment, therefore, follows the principal. These authorities show that the improved estate is to be equally divided. The case of Gooroochurn Doss v. Goluckmoney Dossee (Fulton's Rep. 165) expressly points out the difference between distinct property and increment. Now, the [548] Bill admits that the additions are increment. Our notion of the English law relating to tenancy in common is likely to mislead, but by the Hindoo law there can be no separate share of co-sharers till partition takes place.—[The Lord Justice Turner: Do these authorities go further than to say, that between co-sharers there is no right to an account of increment, as distinct from capital? but when capital goes one way and increment another, would there not be a right to account?—Until partition, there is no distinction between capital and income.—[The Lord Justice Turner: Suppose each son had a life estate only.]—That would be a gift of the usufruct only, and does not resemble this case. The Testator obviously intends that the family should continue a joint family; he addressed his sons as an undivided family; they were in the father's lifetime a joint family; he even treats of their commensality, which is evidence by itself of their constituting a joint family. They in fact continued joint. One of the tests by which partition is proved is separate income. Daya-Bhaga, ch. xiv. par. 8; Colebrook's Digest, art. cccxviii. (vol. iii. p. 386). Here the unity of the fund is admitted by the Bill. If then we only refer to the Hindoo law in ascertaining what the Will gives, it is plain that the Bill must be dismissed. The share of the Appellant's husband could not be ascertained until separation and partition. With regard to the other point urged by the Appellant, as to the remainder man having a right to the full share in the event of any loss of the corpus, we submit that if there was not enough income to provide for the charges created by the Will, the principal would be rightly expended, and the share to go over would be less than expenditure.

[549] Mr. Rolt, Q.C., in reply.

The consideration of the judgment was reserved, and was afterwards delivered, as follows, by

The Right Hon. The Lord Justice Turner (Feb. 5, 1858).—Sree Mutty Soorjee-money Dossee, the Appellant in this case, is the widow and personal representative of Surroopchunder Mullick; who was one of the five sons of Bustomdoss Mullick, the Testator in the cause out of which the appeal arises. Bustomdoss Mullick, by his Will, dated the 8th of March, 1841, made the dispositions contained in that instrument. He died on the 10th of March, 1841. Surroopchunder Mullick survived him; but afterwards died on the 25th of November, 1847. On the 20th of August, 1855, the Appellant filed her Bill in the Supreme Court of Judicature at Calcutta, in Bengal, against the Respondents, who are, or represent, the four other sons of Bustomdoss Mullick, claiming to be entitled to one-fifth of the income which arose from his estate in the interval between his death and the death of Surroopchunder Mullick, and to one-fifth of the accumulations made from that income. This Bill was met by demurrers for want of equity, and as to some of the parties, upon other grounds also; which, however, were not insisted upon in the argument before us. Upon the argument of these demurrers they were allowed by the Supreme Court, and the appeal before us is from the Orders by which they were allowed. The decision having been made upon demurrer, it must, of course, depend upon the allegations of the Bill, whether it ought to be upheld or not. [His Lordship here stated the Bill, as already set forth (ante, [Moo. Ind. App.] p. 527).]

[550] The case, therefore, which is made by this Bill is, that the income of the estate of Bustomdoss Mullick, which accrued between the time of his death and the death of Surroopchunder Mullick, was joint estate of the five brothers, and that the Appellant, upon the death of Surroopchunder Mullick, became entitled to his share of that income. That the Appellant, or the Appellant and her daughters, would be so entitled if the income in question is not affected by the gift over, contained in the eleventh item of the Will, is not attempted to be denied; but it is insisted on the part of the Respondents, that by virtue of the gift over, the income passed with the principal to the four surviving brothers.

This, therefore, is the question which we are called upon to decide. It is a question between the estate of Surroopchunder and the parties claiming under the gift over; and, as it seems to us, it must depend wholly on the construction of the Will. In determining that construction, what we must look to, is the intention of the Testator. The Hindoo law, no less than the English law, points to the intention as the element by which we are to be guided in determining the effect of a testamentary disposition; nor, so far as we are aware, is there any difference between the one law and the other as to the materials from which the intention is to be collected. Primarily the words of the Will are to be considered. They convey the expression of the Testator's wishes; but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, and where this is the case those circumstances no doubt must be regarded. Amongst the circumstances thus to be regarded, is the law of the country under which the Will is made [551] and its dispositions are to be carried out. If that law has attached to particular words a particular meaning, or to a particular disposition a particular effect, it must be assumed that the Testator, in the dispositions which he has made, had regard to that meaning or to that effect, unless the language of the Will or the surrounding circumstances displace that assumption.

These are, as we think, the principles by which we ought to be guided in determining the case before us; and we must first, therefore, consider what was the intention of this Testator to be collected from the words of his Will. Now there is here, in the first item of the Will, an absolute gift of one-fifth of all the Testator's property to each of his five sons; but in the eleventh item of the Will, in the event of any of the five sons dying without a son, or a son's son, there is a gift over to such of the other sons, or sons' sons, as may then be alive. Upon the literal construction of these dispositions, what is given in the first item is, in effect, taken away by the eleventh; for if full effect be given to the eleventh item, it would rest in contingency during the life of each son, whether his share would belong to him, or to his brothers, or nephews, depending upon whether he should die leaving a son or a son's son; but this construction cannot, of course, be admitted. To adopt it, would be to impute to the Testator this inconsistency, that he intended at the same time to give absolutely and contingently. This cannot have been his meaning. He must have intended that those to whom he gave absolutely should have some enjoyment of that which he gave to them. That enjoyment could not be less than the enjoyment of the income of their shares. It was suggested, in-[552]-deed, in the argument before us, that the words "the share that he has obtained of the immoveables and moveables of my estate," would reach the income no less than the capital. But, independently of what has been already said, this suggestion cannot, as we think, be maintained. The Will of a Testator must, prima facie at least, be taken to refer to that which is the subject of his disposition; the property which he has himself to give; and if he has evinced his intention to give that property, very strong and clear language must be required to counter-vail that intention, and subject the property which he has once given to his further disposition. No such intention can, as it appears to us, be collected from this Will; and so far, therefore, as the intention of this Testator is to be gathered from the words which he has used, we think that we are safe in concluding that his intention was, that his sons should, in any event, enjoy, during their lives, the income of their shares of his property. It is satisfactory to find that, in this respect, we agree in opinion with the Court whose judgment we are called upon to review.

Such, then, being the intention of the Testator, to be collected from the first and eleventh items of the Will, it is next to be considered whether the other dispositions of the Will evince any different intention, and it does not appear to us that they do. They seem to relate only to the mode in which the estate is to be administered, and to the burthens to which it is to be subjected.

If, therefore, we are to impute to this Testator any intention different from that which is to be collected from the words of his Will, it must be upon the ground that there are intrinsic circumstances which [553] disprove the expressed intention, and prove the different intention. The expressed intention ought, as we conceive, to prevail, unless the different intention be clearly demonstrated. We may doubt whether the Testator really intended what his words import, but a Court of construction must found its conclusions upon just reasoning, and not upon mere speculative doubts. What, then, are the extrinsic circumstances upon the faith of which we are called upon to conclude that it was the intention of this Testator that the income of his sons' shares of his property should not form part of their estates, but should go over with the principal of their shares? They are two: first, that this was a joint family, and that the sons were joint in estate; and secondly, that by the Hindoo law, where parties are joint in estate, the increment follows the principal. As to the first of these grounds, it does not seem to us at all to affect the question we are called upon to decide; for, admitting the family to have been joint, and the sons joint in estate, the right of any one of the co-sharers would not, under the Hindoo law, pass over, upon his death, to the other co-sharers; it would be part of the estate of the deceased co-sharer, and would devolve upon his legatees, or his naturel heirs. It does not, therefore, seem to us that it would follow from the sons having been joint in estate, that what was given to one was meant upon his death to go over to the others, even if the joint estate had been constituted by the Will; much less so if, as the Court in India had thought, and as we think, the Testator has not by his Will imposed upon his sons the obligation of continuing joint in estate.

[554] Then as to the rule of the Hindoo law, that the increment follows the principal where the parties are joint in estate. It is not necessary for us to give any opinion upon the extent and limits of this rule, and we desire not to be understood as intimating any opinion upon those points. The question in this case, as we view it, is, whether the rule is properly applicable to the case before us; and we are of opinion that it is not; assuming that the Testator could, if he had thought fit, have attempted to impose upon his sons the obligation to continue joint in estate; a point on which also we give no opinion. He has not, as we think, imposed that obligation, and we do not think that a rule which might well have been applicable had the obligation been validly imposed, can properly be applied in a case where the obligation has not been imposed. It was argued, indeed, at the Bar, that the Testator contemplated that his sons would continue joint in estate, and the learned Judges of the Supreme Court seemed to have so considered, and thence to have deduced the inference that he meant the income of each son's share to go over with the principal. We think, however, that the learned Judges were not justified in applying this assumption to the construction of the Will. The Testator must, of course, have known that his sons were joint in estate, and he has not attempted to interfere with their election whether they would continue so or not. If they had several in estate, there can be no doubt that the income of each share would have belonged to the owner of that share. Can we say that the Testator did not contemplate that there might be such a severance? and if not, on what ground are we to rest the inference which the Court has deduced? [555] Can we say that the Testator intended that if his sons continued joint in estate, the income of their shares should go over with the principal, but that if they severed in estate each should take his share of the income? We think not. Such an intention might have been expressed, but the Testator has not expressed it, nor, so far as we can see, does his Will furnish any sufficient ground for presuming that he so intended. In the absence of express declaration, or of what may be called necessary inference, we are of opinion that such an intention cannot be imported into the Will. The effect of it would be to render the disposition of the property dependent, not upon the Will of the Testator, but upon the subsequent acts of his legatees. The character and position of a legatee may well form the inducement to the gift in his favour, but we think it is going too far to say that in the absence of express declaration or necessary inference, the extent of the gift can be measured by the legatee's continuing or not continuing to hold that character and position. Such considerations do not, as we conceive, form legitimate elements in the construction of a Will. We collect from the judgment, that the learned Judges considered that it was more constant to the principles of the Hindoo law to hold that the increment should go over with the principal than that it should pass to the naturel heirs; but the construction which the learned Judges have put upon the Will by enlargement of its terms, seems to us to be at variance, rather than in consonance, with the spirit of the Hindoo law. Equality among the heirs is, as we understand, the spirit of that law. The law does not treat the principal and the increment as undistinguishable in their nature, [556] for there is no doubt they may be severed, but it treats them as united for the purpose of dividing them equally amongst all the united family, that is, all the heirs; and if that entire equality cannot, as in the present case in consequence of the dispositions of the Will it cannot, be attained, the partial attainment of it seems to us to be more in the spirit of the Hindoo law, than its total rejection.

Upon these grounds, we find ourselves unable to agree in the opinion of the Supreme Court, and are of opinion that these demurrers ought to have been overruled; we shall, therefore, humbly recommend to Her Majesty that these Orders be reversed, and the demurrers overruled. The Supreme Court has thought that the costs of the demurrers in that Court ought to be paid out of the estate, and we think that the costs of the appeal ought to be so paid also, and we shall accordingly add this provision to our recommendation.

APPENDIX

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE.

ORDER IN COUNCIL, 31st of March, 1855.

Whereas doubts have arisen with reference to the power of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to suspend or relax, under certain special circumstances, the Regulations in Appeal Causes established by Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853; Her Majesty, by and with advice of Her Privy Council, is pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, That in Appeal Cases, in which a Petition of Appeal to Her Majesty shall have been lodged, and referred by Her Majesty to the Judicial Committee, the said Regulations shall be subject to any Order or Direction which, in the opinion of the Lords of the Judicial Committee, the justice of any particular case may seem to require.

C. C. Greville.

REPORTS OF CASES heard and determined by the Judicial Committee and the Lords of the Privy Council, on Appeal from the Supreme and Sudder Dewanny Courts in the East Indies, 1857-60. By EDMUND F.
MOORE, Barrister-at-Law. Vol. VII.

GOOROOCHURN SEIN,—Appellant; RADANAUTH SEIN and Others,—Respondents * [June 15, 1857].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

After an appeal from Calcutta had been set down for hearing, intelligence reached England shortly before the day appointed for the hearing, that the Appellant had been adjudged an Insolvent under the Indian Insolvent Act, 11th Vict., c. 21.

Upon the appeal being opened, the Court postponed the hearing for six months, to enable the Official Assignee in Insolvency at Calcutta, to revive the appeal and prosecute the same; and, in default, the appeal to be dismissed; and directed the Respondents to serve the Official Assignee in India with such notice.

No steps having been taken by the Official Assignee within the time limited for prosecution, their Lordships refused a further extension of time, and dismissed the appeal.

After this case was set down for hearing, intelligence reached this country just before the day ap-[2]-pointed for hearing, that the Appellant had been declared an Insolvent under the provisions of the Indian Insolvent Act, 11th Vict., c. 21, and that by an Order of the Court for the relief of Insolvent debtors at Calcutta, dated the 25th of February, 1857, the estate and effects of the Appellant were vested in the Official Assignee of that Court. The fact of the insolvency of the Appellant, and the vesting of his estate, was verified by an affidavit of the Respondents' agents in the appeal. No communication from the Official Assignee of the Insolvent Court at Calcutta had been received at the Council Office.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant, offered to proceed with the appeal, if the Court would permit the hearing.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. W. Knox Wigram, for the Respondents, submitted that the Court had no authority to bind the Official Assignee in Insolvency, in his absence, by any Order they might make in the appeal.—[The Lord Justice Knight Bruce: We have no authority.]—That being so, we then ask that the appeal be revived within a reasonable time by the Official Assignee in Insolvency, or that the same be dismissed with costs.

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—It is impossible to make an Order binding, in his absence, the Official Assignee in Insolvency at Calcutta; therefore, their Lordships cannot now enter into the merits of the appeal. The course their Lordships will pursue is this: to let the appeal stand [3] over for a limited time; the Respondents to serve the Official Assignee in Insolvency with notice, that unless the appeal be effectually revived, so as to be ripe for hearing at the sittings of this Court in February next, it will be dismissed with costs; liberty being given to the Official Assignee in Insolvency to take such steps as may be advised.

By the Order made thereon it was directed that the hearing of the appeal should stand over till the sittings of the Judicial Committee after Hilary Term, 1858, in order that notice should be served by the Respondents on the Official Assignee of the Court for relief of Insolvent debtors at Calcutta, and that the Official Assignee should be at liberty to take such proceedings as he might be advised therein, in default of which their Lordships would dismiss the appeal.

This order was served on the 8th of August, 1857, upon the Official Assignee at Calcutta, but no steps were taken by him to revive and prosecute the appeal.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., now moved on behalf of the Appellant for an extension of the time for reviving the appeal. The application was supported by an affidavit of the Appellant's agent in London, stating, that there was a prospect of the Appellant arranging with his creditors so as to supersede the adjudication of insolvency.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., in opposition.—The delay has already been prejudicial to the Respondents. The Official Assignee in Insolvency has been served with notice so long back as the 8th of August last, but he does not appear, or ask for time. [4] The Order of the Court made in June was conclusive that the appeal was to be revived by this sitting, or in default to be dismissed.

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—It was clearly understood at the last sittings, that the Appellant was in no circumstances to be heard. Justice to the Respondents requires that there should be no further delay. The Official Assignee in Insolvency has been served with notice so long ago as August last, but has not revived or even appeared here. The appeal must be dismissed, but each party must pay their own costs.

SREE MUTTY BRINDASOONDERY DOSSEE, and MUDDOOSOODUN GHOSE, —Appellants; ROODERPERSAUD MOOKERJEE, and Others,—Respondents * [Nov. 26, 27, 1857].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

Where a long lapse of time since the right to sue arose, appears upon the face of the Bill, although there be no statutory bar, it may be met by demurrer; but to entitle the Defendant to demur to the Bill instead of putting in an answer, the case must be perfectly clear [7 Moo. Ind. App. 13].

Disputes arose in a joint Hindoo family, and a suit was brought in 1810 in the Supreme Court, to ascertain the respective rights of the members of the family in the joint estate. In 1811, a compromise was entered into by two of the Defendants, members of the family, and the Plaintiff, who executed a release to them. The litigation of the suit continued, and, in 1820, these two Defendants were allowed by the Court to rely upon the release, and the Plaintiff to impeach it; but it did not appear that the release had ever been the subject of adjudication. In 1853, the cause was heard upon further direction, when a considerable sum was found to be due to the then Plaintiff, by one of the Defendants so released in 1811, by the original Plaintiff. Upon a Bill filed by the representatives of one of these Defendants, setting up the release, which was charged by the Bill not to have been at issue in the previous litigation, a demurrer overruled upon appeal, as it was not clear by the Bill that the length of time from the date of the release operated as a bar to the relief sought, so as to allow of such a demurrer. Liberty, however, was allowed to the demurring Defendants to insist upon the same ground of defence by answer, and no costs given.

The question in this appeal arose on a general demurrer of the Respondents to a Bill filed by the Appellants, on the equity side of the Supreme Court.

[5] The Bill stated the details of former proceedings in equity, commencing in the year 1810, and terminating by a second decree, on further directions, in the year 1853. From the statements in the Bill it appeared, that the object of the litigation was for the division of the joint estate of a Hindoo family, which, in 1805, consisted of two brothers, named Kistnochunder Paul Chowdry, and Sumbhochunder Paul Chowdry, and the son, Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, of a deceased brother, named Ramneedy Paul Chowdry. Buddinauth Paul Chowdry was the Plaintiff in this original litigation. The two brothers had both died before the commencement of the suit, each leaving children who were the original Defendants to the suit. Two of the children of Kistnochunder Paul Chowdry, named Premchunder Paul Chowdry and Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, defended separately, and, after their answer to the Bill was put in, a settlement and release of all claims, dated the 29th of March, 1811, was come to between them and Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, the Plaintiff, in consideration of the sum of Rs. 49,000, paid by them to the Plaintiff. They, and their repre-[6]-sentatives after their respective deaths, were, however, kept before the Court in the original litigation, and the settlement and release were stated on their behalf in an answer to one of the many Bills of Revivor, and supplemental Bills, in the suit; and by a Decree, dated the 12th of December, 1820, after directing (inter alia) accounts of the joint estate, liberty was given to these Defendants to rely on the release of Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, with liberty also to Buddinauth Paul Chowdry to impeach it. Afterwards, in the year 1825, on the occasion of another supplemental Bill by Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, the release was pleaded in bar by Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, and the representatives of Premchunder Paul Chowdry, who was then dead. This plea was overruled. The Master's report was made in 1847, and confirmed; and the decree on further directions was made in 1850, whereby the rights of Buddinauth Paul Chowdry in the joint estate, as found by the Master's report, were declared, and an account of his share with interest directed, and also a partition of the immovable estate. A further report was made in 1853, and, afterwards, on the 1st of April, 1853, a second decree on further directions, was made by the Court, by which considerable sums were ordered to be paid by the Defendants, including the representatives of Premchunder Paul Chowdry and Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, to the representatives of Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, the Plaintiff, who had in the meantime died; and proceedings were afterwards taken to enforce this Decree.

In consequence thereof, the Bill which gave rise to the present appeal was filed on the 2nd of March, 1854, by the representatives of, or parties claiming under, Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, one of the original [7] Defendants claiming under the release, and, after stating the proceedings in the former litigation and the facts above detailed, the Bill set up the agreement and release of the 29th of March, 1811, charging to the effect that the release was a valid and subsisting release, and had not been pronounced upon or referred to in any of the Orders or Decrees of the Supreme Court, except that of the 12th of December, 1820, and that the Plaintiffs, as Executrix and Executor, were entitled to the benefit of it, and praying, in substance, that the Plaintiffs in the original litigation might not have execution of their decree against the Plaintiffs in the present suit, or against any other party in respect of anything released by Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, by the release, and that an injunction might be granted to restrain the execution of the Decree contrary to the effect of such release.

The Respondents, the representatives of Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, filed a general demurrer to this Bill, for want of equity, and also because the Bill was altogether novel and unprecedented, and was filed contrary to the course and practice of the Court, and was defective in form as well as substance, being neither a Bill of Review nor a Bill in nature of a Bill of Review, nor a Bill of Supplement, and yet seeking to restrain the effect of Decrees and Orders made in former suits therein referred to, and to set those Orders and Decrees aside.

The demurrer came on for argument on the 7th of April, 1854, when the same was allowed by the Supreme Court, with costs. Against the Order allowing the demurrer, the present appeal was brought.

[8] Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellants.—The demurrer ought to have been disallowed, and the Defendants made either to answer or put in a plea to the Bill. The facts stated and charged by the Bill, disclosed a case which entitled the Appellants to the relief prayed, and it was for the Defendants to answer and to explain any facts relating to the release which might not appear upon the Bill. In Bainbrigg v. Baddely (13 Beav. 355 (reversed on appeal, 3, Mac. and Gor. 413), there was great delay on the part of the Plaintiff, but the Master of the Rolls held that the Plaintiff was not thereby deprived of any right he might have. The Bill in this case is to establish the release and settlement executed in 1811, and there is no bar to the Plaintiff's rights. The Bill was properly framed according to the principles and practice of equity pleading in the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., Mr. Rogers, and Mr. W. Jervis, for the Respondents.—No case is shown by the Bill to entitle the Appellants to any relief in equity against the Respondents. The alleged release and settlement was dealt with by the Supreme Court in the former litigation, and it must be presumed that the rights of all litigant parties in any way depending thereon, were finally determined by the Court in that litigation. The release upon which the Appellants rely, is by the Bill alleged to have been executed more than forty years ago: if, therefore, the questions arising thereon have not been fully and finally determined, the Appellants [9] have lost all right to relief in respect thereof, by lapse of time, laches, and acquiescence. But the Bill is altogether novel and unprecedented, and is contrary to the practice of Courts of Equity, and in any view of the cases no such relief as prayed for can be had. The Bill seeks to reverse or vary the effect of Decrees and Orders in former suits and proceedings, and yet it is neither a Bill of Supplement nor a Bill of Review, nor a Bill in the nature of a Bill of Review. The demurrer, therefore, was properly allowed by the Court below.

Judgment was delivered by

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—This is a question of allowing or overruling a demurrer to a Bill. The Bill was filed in 1854, by the executors of a Hindoo, named Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, and the story which it tells is in effect this, that in or before the year 1810, disputes arose in a numerous and wealthy family of Hindoos, concerning the division and amount of a large property, and the accounts connected with it. The disputes produced a suit, in which the Plaintiff was Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, a member of the family: the Defendants were many. Two among them became desirous of settling the matter, either generally, or so far at least as they were concerned, with the Plaintiff, and in the year 1811, a compromise was negotiated and arranged on the terms of paying the Plaintiff Rs. 49,000, and giving him certain other benefits which it is not necessary to specify, in exchange for a general release to be executed by him: and in that year the sum of Rs. 49,000 was accordingly paid by the compromising Defendants to the Plaintiff, who thereupon [10] executed a release to them. The suit appears to have continued: deaths from time to time happened (as they were likely to happen among so great a number of persons), and a Bill of Revivor, or Revivor and Supplement, having been filed in or shortly before the year 1819, Sumboochunder Paul Chowdry and Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, who were released by the instrument of release, if valid and effectual, and of whom the latter is represented by the Appellants now before us, in answering that Bill, stated and relied upon the release of 1811, as a bar, or as binding the Plaintiff.

In the following year the cause was heard. By the Decree, certain directions were given and accounts ordered: among which directions it was, with reference to the release already mentioned (it having been proved in the cause), provided that the Defendants should be at liberty to rely on the release before the Master, and that Buddinauth Paul Chowdry should be at liberty to impeach before the Master the validity of it.

Nothing more is heard of the cause until the year 1825, when another death, or more deaths, having happened in the ordinary course of humanity, a plea was put in by Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, alleging the release as a ground why the suit should not be prosecuted. That plea was (and probably with propriety) overruled; there were numerous Defendants before the Court, and it might have been essential to justice among them all, that Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, whether released or not released by the Plaintiff, should remain on the record. That plea contains the last that we know or hear of the release: but after the lapse of nearly half a century, a report [11] is obtained in the cause, dated in February, 1847, which report, so far as the Bill before us states, and so far as we know, is absolutely silent with respect to the release, notwithstanding the direction, or at least permission, concerning it, contained in the Decree made more than twenty-six years before, which had produced the report; a report confirmed in the month of July, 1847. The cause is heard on further directions in the month of August, 1850. Still nothing is said of the release; the Order on further directions being just such an Order as would have been made if the release had never existed. This Order, as I understand, sends the matter, or part of the matter (of course not the release), again to the Master, which produces a further report in February, 1853. Still he was silent as to the release. The case was again heard on further directions in the month of April, 1853; the result being, that a considerable sum is found due to the original Plaintiff, or his representatives, and directed to be paid by various Defendants, including Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, or those representing his estate: against whom execution appears to have been issued accordingly. Whereupon this Bill was filed, stating circumstances previous to the release, and (among other allegations) containing this charge: "Your oratrix and orator charge, that the instrument of release signed and sealed by Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, and delivered to Premchunder Paul Chowdry and Isserchunder Paul Chowdry, as aforesaid, is a valid and subsisting release, and has in no way become void or vacated, set aside or cancelled; and that your oratrix and orator, as the surviving executrix and executor as aforesaid, are entitled to the full benefit and advantage thereof, and to [12] have the same carried into effect. And your oratrix and orator further charge, that the release, though after the original cause was at issue it was set up and relied upon by Isserchunder Paul Chowdry and Joynarain Paul Chowdry, in their answer to the Bill of Revivor and Supplement filed by Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, on the death of Premchunder Paul Chowdry, was not a matter in issue in the original, revived, and supplemental suits; or if in issue at all in the suits, was in issue only as to the right to revive the suit against Isserchunder Paul Chowdry and Joynarain Paul Chowdry by the Bill of Revivor of Buddinauth Paul Chowdry, or the supplemental matter thereof. And your oratrix and orator charge, that the release was never pronounced upon, nor the validity or invalidity or effect thereof decided by this Honourable Court, nor is the release mentioned in any of the Orders or Decrees of this Honourable Court in the suits, except in the Decree hereinbefore mentioned, bearing date 12th day of December, 1820, whereby liberty was given to Isserchunder Paul Chowdry and Joynarain Paul Chowdry to rely thereon, as evidence before the Master."

To this Bill the demurrer before us has been filed, and the question is, whether a case has been stated by the Bill, requiring to be met by plea or answer: a question in some degree embarrassing, if not distressing. Litigation has been existing in this family for very nearly half a century. All the original parties, I believe, are dead, and it is impossible, I think, to read these papers, without being impressed with an opinion of the probability that much of what is important to the case is kept back, and that those who have to deal with the record in its actual shape must [13] be dealing with less than half of the merits. Still, as Mr. Palmer has said, this may, in a sense, be through the act of the demurring Defendants, who may be said to prevent the whole story from appearing, if now it does not appear. We cannot say that they are much, if at all, to blame for desiring that a term should be put as speedily as possible to a litigation which, at so exhausting an expense, has lasted so many years. Still, however, if the case upon the Bill is one requiring a plea or an answer, a plea or an answer there must be; and their Lordships, almost with regret, find themselves obliged to come to that conclusion: a conclusion as to which they would possibly have felt even more unwillingness than they do, had they been informed of the reasons upon which the Judges of the Supreme Court proceeded in allowing the demurrer. They have been unable, however, to procure from either side, or from any quarter, a statement of what those reasons were.

The first point on which reliance has been placed by the Defendants in support of the demurrer is, the length of time that has elapsed since the transactions of 1811, coupled with the other circumstances appearing on the Bill; and it is unquestionably true, that there are cases in which length of time, the lapse of time appearing on the Bill since the right to sue arose, may be effectual in favour of Defendants on a demurrer: but such cases, especially where the bar is not statutory, as here it is not statutory, must be perfectly clear.

Their Lordships are of opinion, that it is not so clear upon this Bill that time has operated as a bar, as to render it right to allow the demurrer on such [14] a ground; especially (and what I am now about to say belongs also to the rest of the case), as the release was brought under the attention of the Master by the Court, at least so far as the Court could do it without the intervention of the parties in the Master's office. So far as this record shows, it is not afterwards noticed: a circumstance to be possibly accounted for in this way—that the presence of the released Defendants might have been reasonably considered necessary to the obtaining of justice between the Plaintiff and the other Defendants, so as to delay the practical operation of the release until the conclusion of the cause.

The next point was, that the invalidity of the release must be regarded as having been adjudicated by reason of the long silence in these proceedings on the subject, and the absence of notice of it in the first report. Their Lordships are of opinion that, as far as at present appears, it would be unsafe to ascribe that effect to the proceedings which have taken place; and that mainly for the reason already given, namely, that justice, as between the Plaintiff and the Defendants not released, and among all the Defendants, might have required the released parties to continue to the end of the cause, an end (wonderful as it may seem) which the representatives of the original parties have only just reached.

The third point raised was, that a new Bill was unnecessary, and was superfluous: especially by reason of the reference or permission upon the subject of the release contained in the Decree.

Their Lordships, however, are not of that opinion: they consider that it is at least very uncertain whether, without a Bill, effect could be given to the release for [15] any purpose useful to either of the parties, and that if the Plaintiffs (the Appellants here) are entitled to the benefit of the release, the proper course seems to have been to file a Bill for that purpose. Their Lordships, though impressed, as I have said, with a belief of the probability that ultimately the Appellants may be found to have no case, and impressed with a strong suspicion that important facts remain behind, of which no knowledge, no information, has been communicated by the present record, still think, that if the Plaintiffs will insist upon having this Bill met by a plea or an answer, they are entitled to do so; but considering the great length of time which has been allowed to elapse, considering the long silence on the subject of the release in the proceedings, considering that in effect the Bill seems almost to have invited a demurrer, their Lordships think that, overruling the demurrer, they should do so expressly without any costs, either in the Supreme Court or here, and without prejudice to the right of the demurring Defendants to insist upon the same ground of defence by answer.

[16] RANEE HURROSOONDREE DIBIAH,—Appellant; RAJAH PRAN KISHEN SING,—Respondent * [Dec. 7, 1857].On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, Bengal.

Restoration of an appeal allowed, upon condition of the Appellant lodging in England security for costs of the appeal. Six months having elapsed without the Appellant having lodged the required security, the Respondent applied to dismiss the appeal by reason of the non-performance of that condition. As it appeared that the Appellant's agent was in daily expectation of funds from India, the case was, upon the Appellant paying costs of the day, ordered to stand over for three months, for the Appellant to perform that condition: in failure thereof the appeal to stand dismissed.

The facts relating to the restoration of this appeal are reported in 6 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, p. 491. A petition was now presented by the Respondent to dismiss the appeal. The petition set forth that six months had elapsed since the date of the Order in Council, but that the Appellant had not complied with the terms on which the conditional Order restoring the appeal was made, and, in particular, had not given such security for costs as therein prescribed, or any security whatever, and, that the Appellant had not lodged a petition of appeal, although she was proceeding with the printing of the transcript, and thereby involving the Respondent in unnecessary expense and costs before any petition of appeal lodged, or security given. This petition was opposed and an affidavit filed by the Appellant's agent, setting forth, that a petition of appeal had been lately lodged and that the printing was going on, but that the appeal could not [17] be heard before the February sittings; that he had not yet received from India the amount of the securities required to be lodged in the Council Office for costs, etc., but that he was in daily expectation of receiving the same.

Mr. Leith, for the Respondent, urged that there was no excuse for the delay and non-compliance with the Order in Council.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., for the Appellant, submitted that there had been no real delay, and that the only fault arose from not depositing security, which the agent of the Appellant being without remittances, had been compelled to omit, but being in daily anticipation of receiving funds, that omission would be immediately supplied.

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—In the circumstances, we think that the Appellant should have three months more time, but she must pay the costs of this application, and expedite proceedings so that the case may be heard at the sittings in February next. A peremptory Order will be made that the appeal stand dismissed, unless within three months from this day the security be perfected as previously ordered.

It was, therefore, ordered by their Lordships, that the costs of the Respondent on this application should be forthwith taxed by the Registrar of the Privy Council and paid by the Appellant, or her agents in this country, and, that their Lordships would report to Her Majesty, that the appeal be dismissed, unless the sum of £500, for security for costs, be deposited with the Registrar on or before the 7th of March next.

[18] The costs were taxed accordingly, but the Appellant having failed to comply with the condition imposed by the Order, it was finally ordered, that the appeal be dismissed, and the Appellant further condemned in the costs incurred by the Respondent on the application on the 7th of December, 1857.

CHUOTURYA RUN MURDUN SYN. —Appellant: SAHUB PURHULAD SYN
Respondent * [Nov. 27, 28, and 30, and Dec. 8, 1857].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlat at Calcutta.

An illegitimate son of a Khatri, one of the three regenerate castes, by a Soodra woman, cannot by the Hindoo law of inheritance, succeed to the inheritance of his putative father; but he is entitled to maintenance out of his deceased father's estate [7 Moo. Ind. App. 50, 51].

So held in the case of a disputed succession to the Rajdom and Zemindary of Rannuggur, in the Presidency of Bengal, the Rajah last seized, the putative father, being a Rajpoot of the Khatri class.

Secus. In the case of the Soodra class, illegitimate children being qualified to inherit.

Inquiry into the history of the Khatri class. Such class held not to have lost caste and sunk into the Soodra class [7 Moo. Ind. App. 45, et seq.].

The Rajpoots of Central India, and in the District where the Rajdom of Rannuggur is situate, held to be of the Khatri class, and that the right of succession to the Raj and Zemindary was to be determined by the laws and customs of that class.

The question in this appeal involved the right of succession to a Raj; the issue raised being, whether [19] the Appellant was, according to the Hindoo law and right of caste, entitled to succeed to the Rajdom and Zemindary of Rannuggur, in the District of Sarun, in the Presidency of Bengal.

The circumstances out of which the appeal arose were as follow:—

The late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn died on the 26th of November, 1834, being at the time of his death in the undisputed possession of the estate, the right to which formed the subject-matter of this appeal. He was the half brother of Rajah Tej Purtab Syn, who died on the 1st of June, 1832, leaving three widows, Maharanee Telotman Dabee, Ranee Shree Kanta Dabee, and Ranee Tej Koomaree Dabee, him surviving. Soon after his death, his widow, Maharanee Telotman Dabee, asserted a claim to the whole of the Rajdom, by virtue of a deed of gift alleged to have been executed by her husband in his lifetime; and a dispute having arisen between her and the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, as to the right of succession to the Rajdom and Zemindary, such dispute was ultimately compromised by the Maharanee Telotman Dabee agreeing to accept during her life the revenue of thirty-nine of the villages belonging to the Rajdom and Zemindary for her maintenance, and she thereupon withdrew her claim to the rest of the property.

The late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn was a Rajpoot, and had, as it was alleged, three wives. By the first alleged wife, Ranee Lutchmee Dya Dabee, who predeceased him, he had one son, the Appellant. This marriage was denied by the Respondent, and that fact was one of the questions in dispute. He had no children by his two other wives, one only of whom, Ranee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee, survived him. For [20] several months previous to his death, the Rajah, being unequal to the transaction of public business, with the view of providing for the efficient discharge of the duties of the Rajdom, formally invested the Appellant co-ordinately with himself with all proper authority for the conduct and management of the affairs of the Rajdom. For about three weeks previously to his death, the Rajah was both physically and mentally incapable of any effort. Upon his death, the Appellant performed his obsequies. His widow, Ranee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee's name was entered on the Collector's books as heir, and she entered into the possession and beneficial occupation of the Rajdom, and continued in such occupation until her death, which event took place on the 24th of February, 1840. Shortly after her death, the Collector of the District was directed to keep the estate under attachment until the title to its succession, which had in the meantime been claimed by several persons, and, among others, by the Government claiming by escheat, was ascertained.

The first of such claims was made on the 31st of August, 1835, by a suit instituted in the Zillah Court at Sarun, by Oodey Purtab Syn, against Maharanee Telotman Dabee, Rancee Sree Kanta Dabee, and Rancee Tej Koomaree Dabee, the three widows of the Rajah Tej Purtab Syn, and against Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee, and the Appellant, in which suit the Plaintiff alleged that the Appellant was the son of a slave girl. The Plaintiff founded his claim to the succession as being heir to the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn.

On the 5th of May, 1836, another suit was instituted for possession of the entire villages appertaining [21] to the Rajdom by the Respondent, then suing as father and guardian of his son, Futeh Bahadoor Syn, an infant, against the aforesaid widows of the Rajah Tej Purtab Syn; Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee; and Oodey Purtab Syn. The claim of the infant, Futeh Bahadoor Syn, was based on the allegation, that the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn had, while dangerously ill and despairing of life, executed an Ijazut Puttur (Power and Will) in favour of the three widows of his deceased brother, the Rajah Tej Purtab Syn, and of his own widow, Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee, directing them to confer the Rajdom after his death, upon the infant, Futeh Bahadoor Syn; that, in pursuance of such direction and authority, a Soorut Hal (representation of facts) acknowledging the right of Futeh Bahadoor Syn, had been agreed to by the four widows, and duly attested by the Raj Gooroo and Purohuts (Head Priest and Priests) and other respectable men; and that, after the expiration of the usual term of Birkhee (mourning) the Rajdom had been duly conferred, by the above named four widows, upon the infant, Futeh Bahadoor Syn.

On the 9th of June, 1836, Maharanee Telotman Dabee put in her answer to the plaint of Oodey Purtab Syn, and in that answer, for the purpose of showing the invalidity of the claim in that suit, she relied upon the alleged bestowal of the Rajdom on the infant, Futeh Bahadoor Syn, in the manner asserted by the Respondent in his plaint; and she also alleged that Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee had, some time previously thereto, recognised and acknowledged the Appellant as the son of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn.

The answer of Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee to the plaint of the Respondent, was put in on the 6th [22] of October, 1836, some time before the Appellant was made a party to that suit; and in that answer she urged among other reasons, against the validity of the infant's claim, that the Ijazut Puttur could never have been executed by the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn while the Appellant, his son, was alive; and she there inaccurately stated, that the Appellant was the son of the second wife of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn.

On the 11th of March, 1837, the Respondent, in his then character of guardian of his infant son, Futeh Bahadoor Syn, filed his replication, relying upon the validity of the Ijazut Puttur, and on the subsequent bestowal of the Rajdom in pursuance thereof by the above-named four widows.

On the 7th of January, 1838, Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee filed her rejoinder to the plaint, wherein she repudiated the claim made on the infant's behalf by the Respondent as fraudulent.

By an Order of the Zillah Court, bearing date the 26th of March, 1838, the Appellant was for the first time called upon to oppose the claim asserted by the infant son of the Respondent; the Appellant accordingly appeared, and was instrumental in refuting and exposing the fabricated evidence and forgery upon which the claim of the Respondent's son was based: but, as that claim was also founded upon the imputation of the Appellant being illegitimate, and as such incapable of inheriting, the Appellant's pleading and evidence was principally directed to the repudiation of such a charge, and he adduced several witnesses to prove the marriage between the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn and his mother.

On the 7th of July, 1838, a supplementary [23] petition was filed in this suit by Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee and the Appellant, for the purpose of correcting the statement made in the answer of Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee, to the effect that the Appellant was the son of the second wife of the late Rajah Umur Purtab

Syn, and of recording that the Appellant was the son of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn by his alleged first wife, Rancee Lutchnnee Dya Dabee.

The suit of the infant, Futeh Bahadoor Syn, by his guardian, the Respondent, together with the other suit, in which Oodey Purtab Syn was Plaintiff, came on for hearing before the Zillah Court at Sarun, on the 7th of May, 1849, on which occasion both suits were dismissed with costs, and the claim of the infant, Futeh Bahadoor Syn, was adjudged to have been based on fabricated evidence and forgery. The reasons given by the Court for dismissing the suit of Oodey Purtab Syn were, that, although the present Appellant had been proved to be the son of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, the question of his title to succeed to the Rajdom in the lifetime of Rancee Umur Raj Lutchnnee Dabee was not one which arose in that case, because between him and the Rancee Umur Raj Lutchnnee Dabee there was no disagreement or complaint; and, whether the present Appellant was entitled or not to the Rajdom, the Plaintiff, Oodey Purtab Syn, on the plea of being connected in the agnatic line, could have no right to possession during the life of the Rancee.

Against the dismissal of these suits, Oodey Purtab Syn, and the Respondent on behalf of his infant son, respectively appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Court.

[24] After the appeal of Oodey Purtab Syn had been presented, before any further proceeding was taken, and on the 24th of February, 1840, Rancee Umur Raj Lutchnnee Dabee died, and thereupon the Plaintiff, Oodey Purtab Syn, and the Respondent (as father and guardian of the infant, Futeh Bahadoor Syn), each presented separate petitions to the Sudder Dewanny Court, claiming the heirship to the deceased Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, and Mr. John Fleming Martin Reid, one of the Judges of the Sudder Court, ordered that the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Zillah Court should receive their proofs of being heirs to the deceased, while in the interval the estate of the deceased was to be attached by the Collector under the order of the Judge, and placed under a manager. A proclamation was also issued, under the Order of the Sudder Court, for the attendance of the heirs of the deceased, under which the Plaintiff, Oodey Purtab Syn; the Respondent, as guardian aforesaid; the two surviving widows of Rajah Tej Purtab Syn, and the present Appellant, attended before the Zillah Court to prove their respective claims to heirship; such proofs as were offered by them respectively were taken by the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Zillah Court, and forwarded to the Sudder Court.

After these proceedings had been taken, and on the 7th of November, 1840, the papers were again brought before Mr. Reid, who considered it proper to take a Bywasta (opinion) from the Pundit attached to the Sudder Court, on the question, whether among Hindoos, a son by a woman of unequal rank, while lineal relations were forthcoming, would be entitled to inherit the estate of his deceased father. To which the Pundit stated his opinion to the following effect:—[25] "To the best of my judgment, among Hindoos of the Rajpoot caste, a son who is not born from a woman of equal rank and caste, can be reckoned as son, and will be entitled to the estate of a deceased father, a near relative of lineal descent living notwithstanding; because a Rajpoot is of the Soodra caste, and a son born to an individual of the Soodra caste, even from the womb of a slave, etc., such son is reckoned his son by the Shaster laws, and is entitled to succeed to his father's estate, a near relative of lineal descent living notwithstanding;" and he added, "The meaning of the Guranth Mootuchtera, etc., is, that a son born of a slave woman, that is, of an unmarried woman of the Soodra caste, during the lifetime of his father, according to his father's pleasure, can obtain a share of his property; and after the death of his father, brothers born in wedlock from a woman of the Soodra caste are required to give to their illegitimate brother a share in the property of the father, in proportion to one half of their own share; but if there be no legitimate offspring, that is to say, no issue from a married woman, in such a case the illegitimate son from an unmarried Soodra woman will be entitled to the whole of his father's estate."

On the 5th of February, 1841, the case in which Oodey Purtab Syn was Appellant, was again brought before Mr. Reid, together with the Bywasta and the papers in the infant's suit; when Mr. Reid held, that although the Bywasta was in favour of the present Appellant, it was inexpedient to consider the case summarily and without going into its full merits, as well as into the case of the infant then suing by the Respondent, his guardian, inasmuch as it also related to a claim of inheritance of the property of the late [26] Rajah Umur Purtab Syn; and he accordingly adjudged that, until the decision of the two cases, the property in dispute should continue attached by the Collector; and that it was proper that the two cases should be taken up and tried together, without regard to their respective numbers; and that all claimants should be left at liberty to come forward; and that the name of the individual whose claim to the estate should be found good and valid, was to be entered in the Collector's records; and that it was incumbent on all parties to take early steps to bring the subject-matter of both the cases to a speedy termination.

On the 23rd of May, 1842, the two cases came on to be heard before Mr. Edward Lee Warner, and Mr. James Shaw, two other of the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Court, who said that, after deliberate consideration, they perfectly agreed in the opinion pronounced by the Principal Sudder Ameen on the 7th of May, 1839, in regard to the invalidity of the Ijazut Puttur, filed by the Respondent, and of certain letters filed by Oodey Purtab Syn; but they added, "As inquiry into the agnatic descent of the Appellants in both cases, and the objections made by Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn, and his marriage in a Rajpoot family, has been neglected by the Principal Sudder Ameen, we return the decisions of the Principal Sudder Ameen, dated the 7th of May, 1839, as incomplete; and, under cl. 2, sec. 2, of Reg. IX, of 1831, hereby order that the papers of this case and of case No. 50, of 1840 (the case now under appeal), with copy of this proceeding, be sent back to the Principal Sudder Ameen of Sarun, accompanied with a precept with this order, that he restore both the cases to their [27] former number; and, as regards this case, he should inquire whether the marriage of Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn, who declares himself to be the son of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, and whose marriage by the papers appears to have taken place in the village of Bel Ghat in Zillah Goruckpoor, in the family of Hindoo Saltee, of the Rajpoot caste, had actually taken place in a Rajpoot family, and whether he eats and drinks with them or not, and whether the marriage of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn with Lutchmee Dya Dabee, the mother of Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn, was solemnized according to the custom and practice of his family or not; and after requiring and obtaining from Sahub Purlulad Syn, father and guardian of Futeh Bahadoor Syn, the Plaintiff in case No. 50, of 1840, a petition in regard to his agnatic descent and a genealogical table and documentary proofs and witnesses from both the parties, to try and decide the two cases, as may be most consistent with justice and equity, as regards the heirship of Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn to the estate of his father Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, and the relationship of the parties according to the genealogical table given in by both."

Under this Order, the Respondent, on the 5th of November, 1842, filed a supplemental petition, wherein he abandoned all claim on behalf of his infant son, under the Ijazut Puttur previously set up by him, and for the first time claimed in his own right to be entitled to succeed as heir to the Rajdom and estates, by reason of an agnatic descent in the seventh degree alleged by him from one Rajah Purtab Syn, whom he alleged to have been the common ancestor of himself and the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn; and that petition, among other statements, averred, [28] that the Principal Sudder Ameen had stated that the mother of the Appellant was not of equal caste with the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, and that the Ranee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee had presented a petition on the 19th of February, 1836, in which she had stated that the Appellant was illegitimate.

The whole question as to the right of succession to the Rajdom and estates having been remitted by the Order of the 23rd of May, 1842, to the Zillah Court at Sarun, various other claimants came forward, including Oodey Purtab Syn, and the surviving widows of Rajah Tel Purtab Syn, and the Government, claiming by escheat; but inasmuch as none of these claimants, except the Appellant, appealed from the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, ultimately pronounced on the 9th of September, 1846, it is unnecessary to refer more particularly to any of such claims.

On the 17th of July, 1844, the Vakeel of the Appellant stated in answer to a question from the Court, that Reet Ram was the maternal grandfather of the Appellant; and that he (Reet Ram) resided in the mountains of Bhurkut, in Nepaul; and at a subsequent sitting of the same Court on the 3rd of August, 1844, the Appellant's Vakeel corrected a statement made by the Vakeel of the Respondent, to the effect that Oomraotee Dabee was the first wife of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn; and stated, that the name of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn's first wife was Ranee Lutchmee Dya Dabee, the mother of the Appellant. The Appellant and the Respondent, and the other claimants for the right of succession, produced various depositions and documentary evidence in proof of their respective claims, before the Principal [29] Sudder Ameen, to establish that the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn was married according to the custom of his family to Ranee Lutchmee Dya Dabee; that he was a Rajpoot; that the Rajdom was duly conferred upon the Appellant by his father, the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, by the ceremony of investing him with the sacerdotal cord, and by placing him on the Guddee; and that the title of "Choturiya" was accorded to him by the late Raja Umur Purtab Syn; that such title was, in conformity with the custom of the family, only assumed by the heir apparent to the Rajdom, and had been assumed by the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn in the lifetime of his half-brother, the late Rajah Tej Purtab Syn; that the Appellant was in the habit of eating and drinking, both with the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, and his half-brother, the late Rajah Tej Purtab Syn; that he duly performed the funeral rites of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn; that he was married to the daughter of Hindoo Sahee, a Rajpoot; and that the Appellant was in the habit of eating and drinking with Hindoo Sahee. The Appellant examined no witnesses to establish the marriage, but he gave evidence to show that the Rajdom and estates were neither founded nor acquired by Purtab Syn, whom the Respondent alleged to have been the common ancestor of himself and the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, the Rajdom having been founded by Doorg Bijey Syn, the grandson of the alleged common ancestor, and the estates having been acquired by Run Dutt Syn, the son of Doorg Bijey Syn. He also gave evidence to show that in the year 1829, five years before the death of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, an estate had been purchased by him in the name of and for the Appellant, [30] as his acknowledged son; and that such relationship was substantiated by the fact of the Appellant being described as the son of the late Rajah in the receipt and bill of sale of the estate, as well as by the corroborative testimony of the witnesses before alluded to. In addition to the above evidence, and with the view of refuting an imputation made in the course of the proceedings, that the Appellant's mother was not of equal caste with the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, the Appellant filed a genealogical table of his maternal ancestors, whereby it appeared that his mother, Ranee Lutchmee Dya Dabee, was the daughter of Baboo Urut Ram, who was the son of Rajah Anunt Khan, who was the son of Raja Moon Muhdur Khan, who was the Rajah of Bhurket. The Appellant, moreover, contended that, even assuming his father and mother not to have been married, or that he was unable to adduce sufficient evidence of their marriage, yet, that as the late Rajah was a Rajpoot and a Soodra, the Appellant, as his son, was capable of inheriting the Rajdom and estates, and was entitled, in default of a legitimate son, to succeed thereto in preference to all collateral relatives whomsoever.

Witnesses were also examined by the Respondent to show his agnatic descent from a common ancestor of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn. The Respondent also entered into evidence to prove that the Appellant's mother was not the wife, but the concubine, of the late Raja Umur Purtab Syn; and in support of such allegation, he relied upon a proceeding before a magistrate on the 3rd of March, 1836, in which the Appellant's mother was described as "Bhutranees," or a concubine.

On the 21st of September, 1844, the Principal [31] Sudder Ameen deemed it necessary previous to entering on the merits of the several claims, to call for a Bywasta of the Pundit of the Patna Court upon certain questions respecting the title of the Claimants to succeed to the Rajdom. The Appellant remonstrated, by petition dated the 23rd of September, 1844, against such a course of proceeding, on the ground that a Bywasta had been already obtained at the instance of Mr. Reid, one of the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Court, upon the main point, and that the Respondent and Sree Kanta Dabee were both very largely indebted to influential merchants at Patna, by whom in all probability the Pundit there would be biassed. The Principal Sudder Ameen, however, called for the Bywasta of the Pundit of the Patna Court. The question submitted to that Pundit stated that the Appellant's mother was of a different caste from that of the deceased Rajah Umur Purtab Syn. The Bywasta of the Patna Pundit was to the effect, that the Appellant was entitled to maintenance only.

On the 27th of February, 1845, the Principal Sudder Ameen of Sarun delivered his judgment, rejecting the Appellant's claim to the inheritance, and affirming the title of the Respondent as heir to the deceased Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, and finding the Appellant entitled to Rs. 6000 per annum for his maintenance, and he ordered that each party should bear his own costs of the suit. In coming to these conclusions, the Principal Sudder Ameen grounded himself principally upon the Bywasta obtained from the Pundit of the Patna Court, and upon the assumption that the decree of the Sudder Court, dated the 23rd of May, 1842, was limited only to an inquiry whether the mother of the Appellant was married, and that he [32] was precluded thereby from entering into the question of the Appellant's right to succeed as heir, even if not born in wedlock.

The Appellant appealed from this decision to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, which Court, on the 9th of September, 1846, affirmed the decision of the Zillah Court, with the exception of that portion which gave the Appellant maintenance out of the deceased Rajah's estate, which was reversed and disallowed, and also the costs of the Respondent in the Zillah Court, which the Appellant was ordered to pay; and the Court dismissed the appeal with costs, holding that it was not open to the Appellant, after the pleadings and proceedings in the original suit, and the Order of the 23rd of May, 1842, to claim the succession as heir, without establishing the marriage of his parents, and that he had failed to establish the fact of such marriage.

The present appeal was from this decree.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Macnaghten, for the Appellant.—The evidence adduced established that the Appellant was the legitimate son and heir of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn; and as such he was entitled to inherit the Rajdom and Zemindary in dispute. Even if the evidence of the factum of the marriage be not as conclusive as it might have been, yet the fact of the recognition of the Appellant's legitimacy by his father, Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, is clear from the title he gave him of "Chuoturya;" a title which, according to the custom of the family, can only be assumed by the heir apparent. The fact that the Appellant was so designated is not disputed. Again, the evidence [33] of the witnesses as to the treatment of the Appellant by his father, the uniform affection shown him, his living and eating in common, his investiture with the sacerdotal cord, and his marriage into a Rajpoot family, all establish his acknowledged legitimacy. No credit can be given to the Respondent's witnesses that no marriage took place. They are the very witnesses who spoke to the fabricated Ijazut Puttur. The decree appealed from cannot be supported. It is founded in a great measure on evidence taken in suits between other parties, and not between the Appellant and Respondent. We conceive that by the presentation of the petition in November, 1842, by the Respondent, an entirely new litigation was commenced, and a fresh issue joined between the Appellant and Respondent, and that for the purposes of his defence against the Respondent's claim, the Appellant was not limited to the precise manner in which his defence had been stated upon the pleadings in the original suits. Supposing, however, that it should be held that it was competent for the Respondents, after the Order of the Sudder Dewanny Court, of the 23rd of May, 1842, to assert his own title as heir of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, and as such to claim the Rajdom and Zemindary against the Appellant, then we insist that the suit must from that time be considered as having been constituted between new parties without written pleadings, and the Appellant ought not, as between himself and the Respondent, to be limited by pleadings in a suit between himself and the Respondent's infant son, or by the form of any proceedings which had been taken, or orders which had been made, in that or any other suit before the final and sub-[34]-stantial issue was joined between himself and the Respondent. Indeed, the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Court proceeded upon an assumption altogether erroneous; namely, that the only question at issue in the case, so far as the Appellant was concerned, rested upon the legitimacy of birth and not upon the title of the Appellant generally as heir, and the Courts have not taken that point into consideration. The cause, therefore, ought to be remitted to the Court below with special directions on this point. Another objection to the decrees of the Zillah and Sudder Dewanny Courts is, that those decisions were founded upon an opinion of the Pundit of the Patna Court, on an assumed state of facts neither admitted nor proved; namely, that the Appellant's mother was a Soodra, and a different class from that of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn. This opinion was, however, contrary to the Hindoo law, for even if she was a Soodra, and he of the regenerate class, such marriage is good, and the issue legitimate. The Mitacshara, ch. i. sec. xi. p. 302, note.

Assuming, however, the Appellant to have failed in substantiating by evidence the marriage between the late Rajah and his mother, or his own legitimacy, the fact of his being the only son, though illegitimate, of the late Rajah, is sufficient by the Hindoo law to entitle him to succeed to the whole of the deceased father's estate. That was the opinion of the Pundit consulted by the Sudder Court in this case. His paternity is not in dispute. Rajah Umar Purtab Syn was a Rajpoot, and must be considered as one of the Soodra caste. All Rajpoots are Soodras. There are now only Brahmins and Soodras, the two intermediate regenerate classes having lost caste, and become [35] merged into the Soodra class. Ward's "Account of the Hindoos," vol. i. pp. 66, 91. Tod's "Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthani," vol. i. p. 53. Malcolm's "Memoir of Central India," vol. ii. p. 125. Steele's "Summary of the Law and Custom of Hindoo castes," pp. 95, 96. The "Vishnu Purana," ch. vii. and viii., by Wilson. The "Ayeen Akbery," vol. ii. p. 377. The Appellant, therefore, as the illegitimate son of a Soodra, was capable of inheriting the Rajdom and estates, and was entitled, in default of any legitimate son, to succeed in preference to any collateral relatives. The Mitacshara, ch. i. sec. xii. Daya Bhaga, ch. ix. sec. 31, p. 151. Inst. of Menu, ch. ix. p. 179. Strange's "Hindu Law," vol. i. pp. 69, 132, 173 (2nd. edit.). Colebrooke's Dig., vol. iii. ch. cxxiv. Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 18. Chendrabham v. Changooran (S.D. Decis. Mad. 50).

In any circumstances the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Court cannot be maintained. If the Appellant should be declared not to be entitled to the inheritance, he is, as the illegitimate son, at all events, entitled to maintenance out of his deceased father's estate, Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," vol. ii. p. 119, which the Sudder Court has wrongfully disallowed.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Respondent.—The Appellant, notwithstanding that he had every opportunity afforded him, has signally failed in establishing the marriage and consequently his legitimacy; and his title, therefore, to succeed to the ancestral Raj and Zemindary, as the heir-at-law of the [36] late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn. It was satisfactorily proved that he was the illegitimate child of a Rajpoot by a slave-girl, and as such has no right of property. Steele's "Summary of the Law and Custom of Hindoo castes," p. 182. Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," vol. ii. p. 15, note. Such a marriage with a Soodra woman by a Khatri is prohibited by law. Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 59. His assumption of a title used by the heir apparent in the family, and the other acts relied upon by him, would, no doubt, be corroborative evidence entitled to some weight, if the factum of the marriage had been proved. The Appellant failed, however, to prove such marriage, although the onus lay on him to prove that fact. Now, the evidence of the Respondent's witnesses upon the new trial is positive and uncontradicted, that no marriage between the deceased Rajah and the Appellant's mother ever took place, either at the time or in the manner alleged by the Appellant. It was also proved that the Respondent was the nearest male relative of the late Rajah, and in that character he was the heir, according to the Hindoo law and custom, and entitled to succeed to the Raj and Zemindary. The argument of the Appellant, that Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, a Rajpoot, and as such one of the regenerate, or twice-born classes, was to be considered as a Soodra; and by that means to let in the Appellant to the succession, though illegitimate, is contrary to fact and utterly untenable. A Rajpoot is of the Khatri class, which still exists in its integrity. The "Ayeen Akbery," vol. ii. pp. 377, 481. Inst. of Menu, ch. i. p. 31. The "Vishnu Purana," ch. vii. and viii., by Wilson. Ward's "Account of the Hindoos," vol. i. p. 66. [37] "An Historical Sketch of Princes of India." As to the argument of the right of inheritance by an illegitimate son, we submit that, in the absence of any proof of a custom to that effect, he clearly has no title. Mohun Sing v. Chumun Sing (1 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 28, and note to page 23).

Neither is the Appellant as an illegitimate son entitled to maintenance and to have the same made a charge upon the Zemindary in dispute. We submit that as the Appellant's mother was a slave-girl, he may, as the son of a regenerate man, be entitled to simple maintenance, Pershad Singh v. Rancee Mulesree (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 132); Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," vol. ii. p. 119; The Mitaeshara, ch. i. sec. xii.; Colebrooke's Dig., vol. iii. secs. cexviii. and cexix.; but that only is allowed during youth, Steele's "Summary of the Law and Custom of Hindoo caste," p. 181.

Mr R. Palmer, Q.C., in reply, referred to The Calcutta Review, vol. xv. p. 62, upon the question of the caste of a Rajpoot.

Judgment was reserved, and now delivered by

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Ryan (Feb. 25., 1858).—In June, 1832, Rajah Tej Purtab Syn died, in undisputed possession of the Raj and Zemindary of Ramnuggur, in the Zillah of Sarun, the right to which Raj and Zemindary is the subject-matter of this appeal. He left surviving him three widows, and an only brother of the half-blood, Rajah Umur Purtab Syn. A dispute arose between Telotman Dabee, his eldest surviving widow, and his brother, as to who [38] should succeed to the Rajdom and estates; but this was ultimately compromised, and Telotman Dabee relinquished her claim in consideration of certain revenue secured to her for her life. Rajah Umur Purtab Syn continued in possession of the Raj and estates until his death, which took place in November, 1834. Upon his death, Lutchmee Dabee, his widow, obtained possession of the property, and a Wirasutnamah was filed in her name on the 5th of December following, stating that she was in possession, and claiming for her the Raj and Zemindary, as sole heir to the deceased. After the usual proclamations, the Government Collector entered her name in the books of record as the heir and sole proprietor of the Raj and Zemindary. Subsequently, claims were set up to the property by Telotman Dabee; by Oodey Purtab Syn; and by the Appellant; and also by the Respondent.

Two suits were commenced: one in August, 1835, by Oodey Purtab Syn, against the widows of Rajah Tej Purtab Syn, and Lutchmee Dabee, the widow of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, in which he claimed as heir from a common ancestor of the deceased Rajah and himself— one Mukoond Syn. The plaint in this suit is not set out in the transcript, and it is not clear whether the Appellant was originally a party, or became so by a supplementary petition: but in the plaint he is stated to be the son of a slave-girl.

The other suit was commenced on the 5th of May, 1836, by the Respondent on behalf of his son, Futeh Bahadoor Syn, an infant, against the widows of Rajah Tej Purtab Syn: Lutchmee Dabee, and Oodey Purtab Syn; and by an Order of the Court, dated the 26th of March, 1838, the Appellant was also made a Defen-[39]-dant. This suit was founded on an Ijazut Puttur, alleged to have been executed by Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, empowering Lutchmee Dabee and his brother's widows, to bestow the guddee of the Rajdom on the Respondent's son.

These suits came on for hearing together before the Principal Sudder Ameen at Sarun, on the 7th of May, 1839, and were dismissed with costs. The grounds on which the first suit was dismissed are stated in these words, "that although Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn was the son of Umur Purtab Syn, yet whether he, not being born of a woman of equal caste, was entitled to the Rajdom during the life of Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee, was a question, the investigation of which did not become necessary in this case, because there existed no dispute or disagreement between Rancee Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee and Run Murdun Syn: but, whether Run Murdun Syn was entitled to the Rajdom, or not, while Umur Raj Lutchmee Dabee lived; Plaintiff had no right to the Rajdom whatever on the score of relationship, the Zemindary being a separate one altogether." In the suit of the Respondent it was held that, as the claim rested solely on the Ijazut Puttur, which was found not to be genuine instrument, it was not necessary to go into the matter of relationship.

From these decisions, Oodey Purtab Syn and the present Respondent, on behalf of his infant son, appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, on the 24th of July, 1840. After the appeal, and before any further proceedings Rancee Umur Lutchmee Dabee died: upon which the present Appellant and the Respondent, as father and guardian of Futeh Bahadoor, presented to the Sudder Court separate pe-[40]-titions, in which they set forth their respective claims to be considered as heirs to the deceased Rane. Mr. Reid, the Judge before whom these petitions came, directed the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Zillah of Sarun to receive proof of their claims as heirs to the deceased. In the meantime, the estate was attached by the Collector under order of the Judge, and placed under a manager, and a proclamation issued for the attendance of heirs. Oodey Purtab Syn, the Respondent, in his character of father and guardian; the surviving widow of Rajah Tej Purtab Syn; and the Appellants, attended to prove their respective claims. On the 7th of November, 1840, the papers relating to proof of succession were brought before Mr. Reid, and in an order made by him of that date, he states that as from the decision of the 7th of May, 1839, it appears that Run Murdun Syn is the son of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, but by a woman of unequal rank, it has, therefore, become imperative on him, before going into the merits of the case, to require a Bywasta (law opinion) from the Pundit of the Court, on the point, whether among Hindoos a son by a woman of unequal rank, while lineal relations are forthcoming, will be entitled to inherit the estate of his deceased father, and the Pundit is accordingly ordered to give his opinion on the point. In January, 1841, the Bywasta of the Pundit is filed: it states, "that among Hindoos of the Rajpoot caste, a son who is not born from a woman of equal rank and caste can be reckoned as son, and will be entitled to the estate of his deceased father, a near relative of lineal descent living notwithstanding, because a Rajpoot is of the Soodra caste, and a son born to an individual of a Soodra caste, even from the womb of a [41] slave, etc., is reckoned his son by the Shaster laws, and is entitled to succeed to his father's estate, a near relation of lineal descent living notwithstanding"; and he also states that if there be no legitimate offspring, that is to say, no issue from a married woman, in such a case the illegitimate son of an unmarried Soodra woman will be entitled to the whole of his father's estate.

This Bywasta was brought before Mr. Reid on the 5th of February following, and he then proceeded with the further hearing of the cause, and he was of opinion that, although this Bywasta of the Pundit was in favour of Run Murdun Syn, yet that considering the claims of the parties, it was inexpedient to dispose of the case summarily without going into its full merits, and he ordered that both cases should be tried together, and that all the objecting parties and claimants should be at liberty to come forward, and that the name of the party whose claim should be found good, should be entered in lieu of the name of the deceased widow.

On the 23rd of May, 1842, the proceedings taken before Mr. Reid, and all the other papers in these suits, were, by an Order of the Court, brought before a full Bench, and the Judges, consisting of Mr. Lee Warner and Mr. James Shaw, recorded their opinion in these terms: "We perfectly agree in the opinion pronounced by the Principal Sudder Ameen in regard to the validity of the Ijazut Puttur. But as inquiry into the agnatic descent of the Appellants in both cases, and the objections made by Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn, and his marriage in a Rajpoot family, has been neglected by the Principal Sudder Ameen, we return the decisions of the Principal Sudder Ameen, [42] dated 7th of May, 1839, as incomplete; and, under cl. 2, sec. 2, of Reg. IX. of 1831, hereby order that the papers of this case and of case No. 50, of 1840, with a copy of this proceeding, be sent back to the Principal Sudder Ameen of Sarun, accompanied with a precept with this order: that he restore both the cases to their former number; and, as regards this case, he should inquire whether the marriage of Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn, who declares himself to be the son of Umur Purtab Syn, and whose marriage, by the papers, appears to have taken place in the village of Bel Ghat, in Zillah Ghomkhpoor, and in the family of Hindoo Sahee, of the Rajpoot caste, had actually taken place in a Rajpoot family, and whether he eats and drinks with them or not; and whether the marriage of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn with Lutchmee Dabee, the mother of Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn, was solemnized according to the custom and practice of the family or not; and after requiring and obtaining from Sahub Purhulad Syn, father and guardian of Futeh Bahadoor Syn, the Plaintiff in case No. 50 of 1840, a petition in regard to his agnatic descent, and a genealogical table and documentary proofs and witnesses from both parties, to try and decide the two cases as may be most consistent with justice and equity, as regards the heirship of Run Murdun Syn to the estate of his father, Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, and the relationships of the parties according to the genealogical tables given in by both."

In November, 1842, the Respondent filed a supplementary petition, setting forth his genealogy, and claiming in his own right as the next male heir of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn.

In February, 1845, the Principal Sudder Ameen gave [43] judgment on the re-trial of these causes, and held the Respondent to be the nearest next of kin to the deceased Rajah Umur Purtab Syn; that Oodey Purtab Syn being only remotely related, had not established his claim; that the marriage of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn with Lutchmee Dya Dabee was not proved; that the Appellant, as the illegitimate son of Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, was entitled to maintenance.

Against this decision, Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn, in April, 1845, appealed; and on the 9th of April, 1846, the Sudder Dewanny Court dismissed the appeal, affirming the decree of the Zillah Court in all respects, except as to the allowance of maintenance to Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn; which part of the decree was reversed.

From the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Court the present appeal comes before their Lordships, and the Appellant objects to that decree.

First. Because he claims to be entitled to the Raj and Zemindary, as the legitimate son of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn.

Secondly. Because, if the alleged marriage and legitimacy be not established, he claims to be entitled to the inheritance as the illegitimate son of the Rajah.

Thirdly. That if not entitled to the inheritance he is, as the illegitimate son, entitled to maintenance out of the estate, which the Court has disallowed.

In 1838, the Appellant endeavoured to establish by evidence, on the first question, that the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn was married, according to the custom of the family, to Lutchmee Dya Dabee, and the Respondent endeavoured, by evidence, to show that the Appellant was the illegitimate son of a slave-girl; but it is alleged on behalf of the Appellant that [44] to this evidence of the Respondent little credit should be given, because the witnesses also attempted to prove the genuineness of the Ijazut Puttur, which proved to be forged and fabricated. Upon the re-trial of these cases before the Principal Sudder Ameen in 1845 no fresh witnesses were called by the Appellant to establish the marriage, although special directions were given as to the issues on this point; but many witnesses were called by the Respondent to show that no such marriage took place. The Counsel for the Appellant have abstained from entering into a review of the evidence given by the witnesses, on the factum of marriage; but have contended that the legitimacy of the son is recognized by the conduct of the father; by the title given him of "Chuoturya"—a title assumed, according to the custom of the family, by the heir apparent—and which it is admitted by the Respondent he was called; by his living and eating with the father; by the investiture of the sacerdotal cord; by what is urged to be a still more important mark of his condition, the admitted fact of his marriage into a Rajpoot family; and by the great kindness and affection with which he was treated by the late Rajah. No doubt evidence of this description is entitled to weight as confirmatory of testimony in support of the factum of the marriage: but it is not sufficient to outweigh the positive testimony of a great number of witnesses called on the re-trial, many of whom are native gentlemen of rank, some of them Rajahs in the immediate neighbourhood, and all of whom speak to the illegitimacy of the Appellant from their knowledge of the family, and from the marriage never having taken place at the time and in the manner alleged by the Appellant. Their evidence, it [45] must be recollected, was given before a native Judge understanding the language, usages, and customs of the people; nor is it easy, consistently, to explain why, upon this issue, the affirmative of which the Appellant was bound to prove, no further oral evidence was produced on his behalf. Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion, that no satisfactory grounds have been alleged for disturbing the finding of the Court below on this matter of fact, confirmed by the judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Court, and are of opinion, that the Appellant has failed to establish the alleged marriage of his father with Lutchmee Dya Dabee, and that consequently his claim as the legitimate son of the late Rajah cannot be sustained.

Then arises the second question, whether the Appellant is entitled to the inheritance as the illegitimate son of the late Rajah?

There is no dispute as to the paternity of the Appellant, and the principal matter for inquiry is the Hindoo law of inheritance, with regard to the right of succession of illegitimate children.

This law, it appears, varies according to the different classes of the Hindoos, and it is necessary, therefore, in the first instance, to consider what those classes are, and where they are to be found. It is undoubted that there were originally four classes: First, the Brahmins; second, the Khattris; third, the Vaisyas; fourth, the Soodras; the first three were the regenerate or twice-born classes, the latter the servile class. It was contended on the part of the Appellant, that the Khatri and Vaisyas classes have ceased to exist, and were sunk into the Soodra class, and that there are now two classes only, namely, the Brahmin and the Soodra. The Appellant, in order to show that the [46] proper genuine Khatri are extinct, cites as authorities in support of this position. The "Ayeen Akbery, or, the Institutes of the Emperor Akber," vol. ii. p. 377, in which there is this passage: "At present there are scarcely any true Kelterees to be found, excepting a few who do not follow the profession of arms."—"Those among them, who are soldiers, are called Rajpoots." Tod's "Annals and Antiquities of Rajast'han," vol. i. p. 53, where it is said, "Of the fifth dynasty of eight princes" "four were of pure blood, when Kistra, by a Soodra woman, succeeded." Ward's "Account of the Hindoos," vol. i. p. 66 (edit. 1815). Sec. 2, which treats of the Kshutryas caste, has this passage: "Some affirm, that there are now no Kshutryas in the Kulee yogu, that only two castes exist, Brahmins and Sudras and that the second and third orders having sunk in the fourth." Steele, "Summary of the Law and Customs of Hindoo castes," p. 95, says, "The Brahmuns assert that Purseram destroyed the whole of the Kshutryus;" and at p. 96: "The Rajpoots, Maratha chiefs of the Sattara or Blonsle, and Kolapoor families, etc., and other houses, lay claim to the title of Kshutryi, and wear the Jenwa. But they are considered Soodrus by the Brahmuns;" and there is an opinion to the like effect expressed by Mr. Sterling, in a paper on Orissa Proper, in vol. v. of the "Asiatic Researches," p. 195: "The proper genuine Khattris are, I believe, considered to be extinct, and those who represent them are, by the learned, held only to be Sudras."

Whatever weight may be due to these authorities in support of a speculative opinion, entertained, perhaps, by learned Brahmuns and others, their Lordships have, nevertheless, no doubt that the existence of the Khatri class, as one of the regenerate tribes, is [47] fully recognized throughout India, and also that Rajpoots in Central India, and in this District, are considered to be of that class. No doubt, as far as we are aware, has ever been raised in the Courts in India as to the existence of the Khatri class as one of the regenerate tribes. The Courts in all cases assume that the four great classes remain. Thus Sir W. Macnaghten, in his marginal note to Pershad Singh v. Ranee Muhesree (3 Sud. Dew. Rep. 132), says, "According to the Hindoo law, an illegitimate son of a Rajpoot or any of the three superior tribes, by a woman of the Sudra or other inferior class, is entitled to maintenance only." In the statement of the case, he takes it as an admitted fact that a Rajpoot is one of the three superior tribes; although it is true, as has been observed, that the point ultimately decided in this case, was only that the paternity was not established. In the second volume of Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," p. 119, the marginal note is, "The illegitimate son of a person belonging to one of the regenerate tribes (in this case a Rajpoot) is entitled to maintenance only." Accurate information as to the distinction of classes, especially in this part of India, is to be found in the statistical survey of Dr. Francis Buchanan, conducted under the direction of the Government of India. The second volume of M. Martin's "India" contains Dr. Buchanan's report on the district of Goruckpoor, and at p. 456 he says, "The Rajpoots are here, everywhere and by all ranks, admitted to be Khattris, although they claim all manner of descents, except from the persons who, according to the Vedas, sprang from the arms of Brahma." Other passages in the same report have been referred to by Mr. Leith to the same effect. [48] The Rajpoots are mentioned in Elphinstone's "History of India," vol. i. p. 607, as the military class in the original Hindoo system; so also in Cunningham's "History of the Sikhs," p. 202. Thornton, in his "Gazetteer," tit. "Rajpootana," says, "The widely-spread sect of Rajpoots are considered offsets of the Kshettriyas, one of the four great castes into which the Hindoos were originally divided." Sir John Malcolm, in his "Memoir of Central India," vol. ii. p. 125, enters fully into the state and condition of the Rajpoot tribes. They are treated of throughout his history as belonging to the superior class; he mentions that although their intercourse with females of a lower tribe may have, in some instances, produced a mixed race, yet even in this class, which he terms the bastard Rajpoot tribes, the lowest of them who aspire to Rajpoot descent, consider themselves far above the Soodras.

In the report of Dr. Buchanan, mention is made of the existence of this mixed race in the District of Goruckpoor, and that there are several persons of the mountain tribe, called Khattris, who are a spurious race, but who claim all the dignities of the military order. One of the witnesses in this case, the Rajah of Gopalpore, a Khatri Kossuck, states that his family do not intermarry with the mountain Rajahs. It seems to us, therefore, not only that the Khatri class must be considered as subsisting, but that according to the Hindoo law generally prevailing in this part of India, and independently of exceptions arising out of any well established usage or custom to the contrary, as to particular places or families, Rajpoots are to be considered as of the Khatri class.

From these premises it seems to us to follow, that [49] (it being indisputable that Rajah Umur Purtab Syn was a Rajpoot) the true question to be decided in this case as to the Hindoo law of inheritance is—not whether the illegitimate son of a Soodra man by a Soodra woman can inherit but—whether the illegitimate son of a Khatri can in any event inherit, whether his mother be a Soodra or of any other caste.

The law relating to the right of succession of illegitimate children, is thus stated in the first volume of Sir W. Macnaghten's "Hindu Law," p. 18:—"Among the sons of the Sudra tribe, an illegitimate son by a slave-girl takes with his legitimate brothers a half-share; and where there are no sons (including son's sons and grandsons), but only the son of a daughter, he is considered as a co-heir, and takes an equal share." In the second volume of the same work, in a note, p. 15, he states: "According to the Hindoo law, the illegitimate son of a Sudra man by a female slave, or a female slave of his slave, may inherit, but not the illegitimate child of any of the three superior classes;" and he adds, "If the woman were not his female slave, the son begotten on her by him would have no right to the inheritance, but only a claim to maintenance." As an authority in support of the passage in his text, Sir W. Macnaghten refers to Colebrooke's translation of the Mitacshara, on Inheritance; which, as is well known, is the standard authority on this subject in all the schools of Hindoo law, from Benares to the southern extremity of the Peninsula of India. In chapter 1, section 12, of that work, on "The right of a son by a female slave, in the case of a Sudra's estate," it is thus stated: "The author next delivers a special rule concerning the partition of a Sudra's goods. 'Even a son begotten by a Sudra [50] on a female slave, may take a share by the father's choice. But if the father be dead, the brethren should make him partaker of the moiety of a share; and one, who has no brothers, may inherit the whole property, in default of a daughter's sons.' In clause 3, it is stated, that the rule does not apply to the three superior regenerate classes. 'From the mention of [a Sudra in this place it follows that] the son begotten by a man of a regenerate tribe, on a female slave, does not obtain a share even by the father's choice, nor the whole estate after his demise. But if he be docile, he receives a simple maintenance.'"

In another treatise on the Hindoo law of inheritance, also translated by Colebrooke, and which is the great authority in Bengal, The "Daya Bhaga of Jimutavahana," p. 151, the same doctrine is to be found. Also in the "Treatises on Adoption," translated by Mr. Sutherland, The Dattaka Mimansa, sec. ii. cl. 26, p. 32, and The Dattaka Chandrika, sec. v. cl. 30, p. 205: the third volume of Colebrooke's Dig., clxxiv. p. 143. Strange's "Hindu Law," pp. 69-132 of vol. i.; and p. 68 of vol. ii.

A decision on the right, among Soodras, of illegitimate children to inherit, is reported in Sir Thomas Strange's Notes of Cases at Madras, Vencataram v. Vencata Lutchemee Ummall (vol. ii. p. 305). In his judgment he says, illegitimate children of Soodras inherit; but in the case of illegitimate children begotten by a regenerate man, the law is different; they are entitled to maintenance only.

It seems, therefore, to be established by an unusual concurrence of authority, that according to the law prevalent where this property is situated, the illegitimate son of one of the three regenerate or twice-born [51] races cannot succeed to the inheritance of his father. We think, therefore, that the Appellant's case fails on the second point no less than on the first.

In the course of the argument on this point, great reliance was placed, on the part of the Appellant, on the Bywasta of the Pundit of the Sudder Dewanny Court, but their Lordships are not disposed to attach much weight to this opinion, as it proceeds on the ground that Rajpoots are Soodras, and their Lordships are fully satisfied that this ground is wholly without foundation.

It was contended, however, on the part of the Appellant, that as this case has been presented to us, we ought not now to come to any conclusion affecting the Appellant's rights, but ought to remit the case to India, for the determination of those rights. It was urged that there has been a miscarriage in the Courts below; that both the Zillah and the Sudder Courts have proceeded on an erroneous assumption that the only question at issue, as regards the Appellant, was legitimacy of birth, and not the title of the Appellant generally as heir, and that the Courts have not considered or adjudicated upon either the law or the facts as respects the Appellant's right to succeed independently of the alleged marriage or of his own legitimacy.

It is true that the pleadings in this case are unusually—even for cases from the Mofussil Courts—loose and imperfect, and no distinct issues have been framed between the parties under the Regulations for that purpose: indeed, to the original suits of 1835 and 1836, the Appellant appears to have become a party only by an Order made after their commencement: and though we are disposed to think that the [52] Appellant's claims were distinctly before the Zillah Court in 1839, yet it must be admitted that neither the Principal Sudder Ameen nor the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Court appear to have thought it necessary to adjudicate upon them. Still, however, the question for decision is one of Hindoo law, involving, in no inconsiderable degree, what is matter of history, and we do not think that it would be right for us to send back the case for the purpose of the Courts in India considering such a question; we are the less inclined, too, to adopt such a course because the particular inquiries directed by the Sudder Court's Order of 1839, as to the marriage of the Appellant's father and mother, and as to his own marriage, appear to us to have involved every element on which the Appellant's right to inherit could depend, and the Appellant, therefore, had every opportunity of adducing evidence to establish his claim.

The only remaining question is the reversal by the Sudder Dewanny Court of that part of the judgment of the Zillah Court which directed that an annual sum of Rs. 6000, should be set aside out of the estate, given by the decree to the Respondent, for the maintenance of the Appellant. The grounds upon which the Sudder Dewanny Court reversed this part of the judgment do not appear on these proceedings. The right of an illegitimate child of one of the three regenerate classes to maintenance out of the estate of his father, is recognized by all the authorities on Hindoo law relating to this subject; and as to this, there was no difference of opinion between the Pundit of the Sudder and the Pundit of the Zillah Court, although they differed on the right to the inheritance. It is not shown that the allowance is in excess of [53] what the Appellant is justly entitled to receive with reference to the value of the estate; and on this question, the Native Judge of the Court of the District in which the Zemindary is situated had the best means of forming a correct opinion. If the Court had thought the amount in excess, means might have been taken to ascertain what would be a proper allowance. In this part, therefore, of the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Court, their Lordships are unable to concur: they are of opinion that although the Appellant is shown to have no right to the inheritance, either as the legitimate or the illegitimate son, he is still entitled to maintenance out of the estate of his deceased father.

Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly recommend to Her Majesty to reverse the decision of the Sudder Dewanny Court, in so far as it reversed the decision of the Sudder Ameen, with respect to the maintenance, to declare that the Appellant, as the illegitimate son of the late Rajah Umur Purtab Syn, was, and is, entitled to maintenance out of his estate, at the rate fixed by the Sudder Ameen, and to remit the case to India for the purpose of effect being given to that declaration, but in other respects to dismiss this appeal, although without costs, the appeal having, in part, succeeded.

[54] SOONDUR KOOMAREE DEBBEEA,—Appellant: GUDADHUR PERSHAD TEWARREE,—Respondent; and GUDADHUR PERSHAD TEWARREE,—Appellant: SOONDUR KOOMAREE DEBBEEA,—Respondent * [Feb. 8, 9, and 11, 1858].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

A childless Hindoo, a member of a divided Hindoo family in Bengal, by an Unomuttee Pottah authorised his widow to adopt a son for him after his death, and by that instrument made her his heir. His widow exercised the power, and adopted a son for her deceased husband; who died before attaining his majority. The deed was impeached as a forgery. Upon appeal reversing the decrees of the Sudder Ameen and Sudder Dewanny Court, such deed was upheld.

Held also, that the widow was entitled to a life estate in her husband's estate after the adopted son's death, either under the deed or as heir of the adopted son.

A verbal power to adopt is good by the Hindoo law.

In a suit in which the only points in issue were the validity of a deed of adoption and a charge of misconduct to deprive a Hindoo widow of her marital rights, the Courts in India decided that the deed was forged, and that the widow had committed no act to forfeit her rights, and further declared that the Plaintiff was entitled to succeed at her death to the estate as heir. Such decree reversed, as the declaration as to heirship was ultra vires, the proper parties not being before the Court, and the suit not raising that question.

These appeals were heard together. The first appeal was from a decree of the Sudder Dewanny [55] Court, dated the 23rd of July, 1845, in a suit instituted in the Zillah Court of Burdwan, Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree against the Appellant, for possession of real estate, which he claimed to be entitled to as heir of Hurree Pershad Tewarree, his nephew, who had died without leaving issue, on the grounds, first, that the Appellant, Hurree Pershad Tewarree's widow, had forfeited her right as widow and heir by misconduct; and secondly, that an adoption made by the Appellant under an Unomuttee Pottah, or deed authorizing her to adopt, after Hurree Pershad Tewarree's death, and constituting her heir, which power of adoption she had exercised, but which adopted son had, however, died before attaining majority, was altogether void and invalid, the Unomuttee Pottah being a fabricated instrument. The Sudder Dewanny Court's decree appealed from, declared that this instrument was a forgery, and decreed the Respondent to be the heir, and entitled to Hurree Pershad Tewarree's estate, after the life estate of the Appellant, the deceased's widow, whom the Court held had not forfeited her rights as widow.

The other appeal was brought from a decree of the Sudder Dewanny Court, dated the 30th of August, 1848, which confirmed the final judgment of the Zillah Court of Burdwan in a suit brought by the Respondent in the second appeal, against the Appellant in that appeal, to recover a large sum of money, the alleged value of moieties of certain real estates, cash, and jewels; the profits and interest of the Zemindary, which had been withheld from her and her deceased husband by that Appellant.

The facts common to both cases and the nature of the pleadings appear fully in the judgment.

[56] Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant in the first, and

* Present: The Right Hon. The Lord Justice Knight Bruce, the Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh, the Right Hon. Sir Edward Ryan, and the Right Hon. The Lord Justice Turner.

Respondent in the second, appeal; and Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. W. Field, for the Respondent in the first, and Appellant in the second, appeal.

The principal arguments were:

First. Upon the evidence, whether it established the genuineness of the deed of Unomuttee Pottah and the validity of the act of adoption by the Appellant, Soondur Koomaree Debbeea. The case of Purmannund Bhattachary v. Oomakant Lahoree (4 Ben. Sud. Dew. Reps. 318) was referred to.

Secondly. As to the Appellant's right to inherit by the Hindoo law, under the Unomuttee Pottah, in her character of widow, the estate of her deceased husband, Hurree Pershad Tewarree, after the death of the adopted son, or as the adopted son's heir.

Thirdly. It was insisted that the declaration in the decree that the Respondent, Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, was entitled to the estate and property of Hurree Pershad Tewarree, after the death of the Appellant, was unauthorized and erroneous, prejudicing the future rights of parties not before the Court and ultra vires, in suit so framed.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

The Right Hon. The Lord Justice Turner (Feb. 15, 1858). These cases came before us upon two appeals, in the nature of appeal and cross-appeal. The appeals arise out of two suits in the Zillah Court of Burdwan, in the nature also of suit and cross-suit. The first of [57] these suits was instituted on the 9th of May, 1834, by Soondur Koomaree Debbeea against Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, for the purpose of recovering from him some property of Hurree Pershad Tewarree, the late husband of Soondur Koomaree Debbeea.

In this suit Soondur Koomaree Debbeea claimed as the widow of Hurree Pershad Tewarree, and as the mother of Rada Pershad, a minor whom she had adopted, as she alleged, by the permission of her late husband.

It appears that she was non-suited by the Sudder Ameen, in the first instance, on the ground that Rada Pershad, the adopted son, had died, and that a second adoption which she had made was not valid; but that, on appeal, the Sudder Dewanny Court set aside the non-suit, and directed that on her proving her title, as heir of Rada Pershad, the first adopted son, the case should proceed. It further appears that Soondur Koomaree Debbeea accordingly proved her heirship; and that she then also put in a claim to be entitled in her own right, under a deed of Unomuttee Pottah, alleged to have been executed by Hurree Pershad Tewarree, and which had been produced on the first hearing before the Sudder Ameen in support of the authority to adopt, and that the case was then again heard before the Sudder Ameen, and she was again non-suited upon the ground that the Unomuttee Pottah was invalid, and that her suit having been instituted on behalf of Rada Pershad, as heir, she was not entitled to recover in her own right as widow and heir, but that she again appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Court, and that that Court then pronounced the following decision:—"As the Appellant sued in the first instance as widow of Hurree Pershad Tewarree, and as mother [58] of her adopted son, a minor, and when she appealed from the non-suit, claimed to be heard as widow, according to the Shasters, as devisee under the twofold deed called Unomuttee Pottah, and as heir of her adopted son, it is clear she never gave up her claim as widow, though she was preferring a claim to be heard as mother also of Rada Pershad. Her right as widow has been decided by the Principal Sudder Ameen himself in his decision, confirmed on appeal by the Sudder Court; therefore, it is indisputable. As she never gave up this right, though she brought more prominently forward her right by adoption, equity requires that she should be allowed to prosecute her claim on the former, notwithstanding the latter had been adjudged invalid. Ordered,—That the case be returned to the Zillah, to be restored to the file, and retried on its merits."

It appears that the case was accordingly retried upon its merits, and the following decree pronounced by the Sudder Ameen, and subsequently upon appeal, affirmed by the Sudder Dewanny Court:—"On a consideration of the foregoing circumstances, Ordered, that this case be decreed. The Plaintiff is to get from the Defendant the sum of Rs. 54,914. 12a. 7g. 2c. 2k., being a moiety of the ready cash in the Malikanah and profits of the Zemindary, etc., and the amount of fine remitted, and Rs. 3660. 15a. 15g. 2k., the amount of exchange for Sicca rupees into that of the Company's, making a total of Company's Rs. 58,575. 12a. 2g. 3c., and interest thereon from date of suit to this day; and the Plaintiff to get possession by demarcation and partition, a moiety of the remaining lands, tanks, and gardens, with trees and places as specified in the plaint, the partition to [59] be made by deputation of an Ameen, save and except the lands, tanks, gardens, and places, etc., and the house of Shoodhakrishn Ghose and the Asareeah mangoe-trees specified in the first paragraph, and denied by the pleader of the Defendant. Let the worship of the idol, with Lot Raylah appertaining thereto, the Asareeah mangoe-trees and other goods of the Debshowah, be performed and continued in the custody of both the parties. The Plaintiff is to get a moiety of the rent of the house of Shoodhakrishn. The costs of Court proportionate to the claim established is to be borne by the Defendant, and the Plaintiff is to get interest on the amount decreed from to-morrow's date.

The second of the appeals before us, that of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, is from these decrees of the Sudder Ameen and of the Sudder Dewanny Court.

It may be as well, at this point of the case, to state that there is no appeal before us from the Order of the Sudder Court of the 29th of July, 1845; and that we feel bound, therefore, to regard Soondur Koomaree Debbeea as suing, and of course as defending, also, in all the characters referred to by that Order. We agree with the Sudder Dewanny Court, that she ought to be so regarded.

The other suit in the Zillah Court of Burdwan, to which we have referred, was instituted on the 9th of August, 1834, by Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree against Soondur Koomaree Debbeea, for the purpose of recovering the whole estate of Hurree Pershad Tewarree, upon the ground that Soondur Koomaree Debbeea had forfeited her rights as widow and heir by unchaste and un-widow-like conduct, and that the Unomuttee Pottah was fabricated, and the adoption under it invalid.

[60] In this suit Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree was non-suited by the Sudder Ameen, upon the ground, that Soondur Koomaree Debbeea had not forfeited her rights as widow and heir; but the Sudder Ameen, in the judgment pronounced by him, declared his opinion that the Unomuttee Pottah was a fabricated instrument, and that Soondur Koomaree Debbeea was only entitled to Hurree Pershad Tewarree's property for her life, and that upon her death, Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree would be entitled to it.

From this decree of the Sudder Ameen, Soondur Koomaree Debbeea appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Court, but the Sudder Dewanny Court was also of opinion that the Unomuttee Pottah was fabricated, and dismissed the appeal.

The first of the appeals before us, that of Soondur Koomaree Debbeea, is from these two latter decrees.

It was objected to this first appeal, that it is merely an appeal from the reasons from which the decree is founded, and is, therefore, incompetent; but their Lordships are of opinion that the decree cannot be regarded otherwise than as establishing the invalidity of the Unomuttee Pottah as between Soondur Koomaree Debbeea and Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, and all parties claiming under them, and they are of opinion, therefore, that this objection cannot be maintained.

They have felt it their duty, therefore, to examine these cases upon their merits. Upon proceeding to examine them, the first question plainly is, the validity of the instruments on which the right to adopt is claimed, and more especially of the Unomuttee Pottah, on which the claim to the property is founded, failing the adoption.

[61] In examining this question, the facts of the case require particular attention. Some of them are common to both parties. Byjnath Tewarree died, leaving two sons, Ram Pershad Tewarree, and Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, the party to these proceedings. Ram Pershad Tewarree afterwards died, leaving one son, Hurree Pershad Tewarree. He married Soondur Koomaree Debbeea, the other party to these proceedings. Hurree Pershad Tewarree was a minor at the time of the death of Ram Pershad Tewarree, his father, and Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree was appointed to be his guardian. After Hurree Pershad Tewarree had attained his majority, and in the year 1842, a separation took place between him, and his uncle, Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, and the joint property was divided between them. Thus far both parties are agreed. The question we are now considering depends upon what took place after this partition. It is alleged by Soondur Koomaree Debbeca, that in the month of August, 1831, Hurree Pershad Tewarree, being in a state of approaching dissolution, determined to empower her to adopt a son, and to constitute her sole heiress and proprietor and owner of his property; and that he accordingly, on the 15th of August, 1831, lodged with the Judge and the Collector two petitions, each of which was in these terms:—"As I have no son or daughter, I wish to adopt a son agreeably to Shaster, and I wish to arrange about it; but lest death should prevent my taking this course I have empowered my wife, Soondur Koomaree Debbeca, to adopt a son, and my wife will, in furtherance of my command, adopt a son according to Shaster; and whatever gifts, etc., she makes, I acknowledge and confirm the same as my own doing. As you, my Lord, are master, I have, agreeably to [62] Shaster, made my wishes known to you through this petition. I am ill. Not being able immediately to meet with a child that would suit me, I have empowered my wife to adopt a son. As soon, therefore, as she fixes upon a suitable child she will adopt him, and now my wife is the heir of all my property and Zemindary, and will hereafter continue to be the sole heir and proprietress and owner. For your Lordship's information I have stated this fact." And, that he also, on the same 15th of August, 1831, executed an Unomuttee Pottah, in the name of the Appellant, in these terms: "As I have neither a son nor a daughter, and I am ill, and as you are my wife, and in consequence the heir and proprietress of my property, and as from our having no son our funeral obsequies cannot be performed, it is, therefore, very desirable to adopt a son according to Shaster, and I have been on the look-out for a suitable child for that purpose, and not being able to get one to please me, I have not been able to adopt one to this day. Now, I am ill, and if by God's will I should not live to adopt a son, in such an event after my death you are to adopt a son according to Shaster on getting a fit child, and I hereby give you power to adopt a son with my free will and consent, and if you should expend any thing in charity, and also if you give away the immovable property, etc., to any one, all this you have full power to do. I give you power to do so. In witness whereof I give this writing as a deed of power." This instrument was signed and sealed by Hurree Pershad Tewarree, and it was urged that under the authority given to her by these instruments, she, on the 15th of January, 1832, adopted Rada Pershad, the son of her sister. On the other hand, Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree [63] wholly denies the validity of these instruments, and alleges that they were fabricated: that Hurree Pershad Tewarree's signature to them was forged, and his seal affixed to them at a time when he was wholly insensible; and he relies upon the contents of the instruments, and upon some erasures which appear upon the Unomuttee Pottah, as conclusive in his favour upon the question.

It was much pressed upon us in the argument on his part, that the Judge of the Zillah Court, by whom these questions were first decided, had the opportunity of seeing the original Unomuttee Pottah and petitions, and the witnesses on whose testimony the case was said to depend; and that both the Courts in India had better means than we have, of knowing the customs and habits of the people, and of judging whether such instruments as those which are in question were likely to have had existence. Their Lordships are fully sensible of the weight which is due to these considerations, and they would not lightly differ from the Courts in India upon questions of evidence or of custom; but it is their duty carefully to examine the cases which are brought before them, giving, of course, full weight to the decisions which have been pronounced upon them; and, if upon the result of that examination they are satisfied that those decisions are not well-founded, it is not less their duty to declare that opinion.

In this case their Lordships have the misfortune to differ from the Courts in India; and they have less difficulty in doing so, as the question to be decided depends much more upon the documentary than upon the parol evidence. Both, however, must, of course, be regarded; and it is scarcely necessary to say, that [64] from the very nature and constitution of these suits, the evidence taken in each of them must be looked at in determining the other.

In considering the validity of instruments of this description, it is of great importance, in the first place, to ascertain the position of the parties at the time when the instruments are alleged to have come into existence, and the motives which may have led to the execution of them. This case presents no difficulty in that point of view; for the evidence on the part of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree abundantly proves that at the time when these documents are alleged to have come into existence, there could be no other state of feeling between Hurree Pershad Tewarree and Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, than the most determined enmity. Nearly every witness examined on the part of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree proves that they were continually quarrelling. Neither can any one doubt of the great importance attached by the Hindoos to the existence of a son—their salvation depending upon it. We start, therefore, with every probability in favour of these documents.

It is not, however, upon probabilities that this case can be decided. We must look to the facts. The first and most important fact to be attended to, is that of the petitions to which we have referred, having been lodged in Court, and before the Collector, on the 15th of August, 1831. Nothing can be more strong than the language of these petitions, if they are authentic. They purport not merely that there was to be power to adopt, but that the property was to be the wife's. A power to adopt may, as we understand the Hindoo law, be given even verbally. Surely, then, these documents, if authentic, must be taken to have given it, [65] or, at all events, to prove that it had been given. Is there, then, any sufficient reason to doubt their authenticity? They bear not merely the seal, but the signature, of Hurree Pershad Tewarree. The Respondent has given no proof that the signature is not genuine. His witnesses are silent upon the subject. He has not even attempted to prove the forgery he alleges. The absence of any such evidence, under such circumstances, furnishes, as their Lordships think, strong ground for assuming the authenticity of these petitions; and if authentic, they would alone, as it appears to their Lordships, be sufficient to dispose of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree's case; for it has not been disputed at the bar, though it was disputed in the pleadings, that if there was power to adopt, there was a valid adoption of Rada Pershad, and Soondur Koomaree Debbeea is the heir of Rada Pershad. It was said, however, that the Unomuttee Pottah was, at all events, fraudulent, and it was sought to affect the authority of these petitions by the fraud in fabricating the Unomuttee Pottah. The case was presented to us, in this respect, as if the petitions and the Unomuttee Pottah depended wholly upon the same evidence; but this is not so. The petitions, having been lodged in Court, have the stamp of authority, which is wanting in the case of the Unomuttee Pottah. As to the Unomuttee Pottah itself, however, how does the case stand? This instrument purports also to be signed and sealed by Hurree Pershad Tewarree; and there is the same absence of evidence to prove that the signature to it was forged, as there is with respect to the signature of the petitions.

The Sudder Ameen, in his judgment, places reliance upon the date of the instrument having been erased, [66] and some other date having been substituted; but whatever alteration may have been made in the date, it is plain that the deed was executed in the lifetime of Hurree Pershad Tewarree. Not only does this appear by the answer of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, but the very date of the alleged fabrication of the deed is mentioned in the petition presented by him on the 9th of August, 1838, and is fixed as being the day before the death of Hurree Pershad Tewarree; unless, therefore, there was an alteration in the state of mind of Hurree Pershad Tewarree, between the 15th of August, 1831, and the time of his death, the alteration in the date cannot, as it seems to their Lordships, have been material; and as to the other alleged erasures in the names of the witnesses to the deed, it is to be observed, that the Sudder Ameen does not at all refer to them. He appears, in his judgment, to have relied upon the circumstance of Hurree Pershad Tewarree not having himself adopted Rada Pershad; but their Lordships do not consider that the mere fact of non-adoption by Hurree Pershad Tewarree himself, weighs much against the validity of the deed. Many circumstances may have induced Hurree Pershad Tewarree rather to trust the adoption to his widow, than to make it himself; and no instrument, giving a power to adopt, could be held valid, if the non-adoption by the party making the instrument, be held to prevail against it. Reliance was also placed on Soondur Koomaree Debbeea having, soon after the death of Hurree Pershad Tewarree, claimed as heir in the suit No. 6996; but it is to be observed that at this time, the adoption had not been made: and besides, from what has been already stated, it appears clear that the Unomuttee Pottah was in existence in the lifetime of Hurree Pershad Tewarree. [67] Some reliance appears also to have been placed upon some slight discrepancies appearing in the evidence of the witnesses examined on the part of Soondur Koomaree Debbee; but, in their Lordships' judgment, such discrepancies tend rather to support, than to discredit, the testimony of those witnesses. There are also other slight circumstances on which the Sudder Ameen has relied, which do not appear to their Lordships to require any comment: but the Sudder Ameen, in some degree, relied upon, and the Sudder Dewanny Court almost wholly relied upon, the inconsistency of this deed—that the gift of the property to Soondur Koomaree Debbee was at variance with the power of adoption given to her. This, no doubt, is a circumstance to which, if unexplained, great weight would be due, but the circumstances of this case appear to their Lordships to explain it. It is obvious that in the state of the relations existing between Hurree Pershad Tewarree and Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, the natural desire of Hurree Pershad Tewarree would be to prevent his property from falling into the hands of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, into whose hands it would have gone if he had not otherwise disposed of it. That this was the feeling of Hurree Pershad Tewarree appears from the evidence of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree's own witness, Bheekum Sing, who, upon his examination, states:—"Formerly, when the Defendant and Hurree Pershad Tewarree were joint in mess, I was in their employ. On the death of the Defendant in the year 1230, there was a partition made of the Zemindary, etc., in the year 1231. After that both the parties were in possession of their shares. In the year 1238, Hurree Pershad Tewarree became very weak from illness. I [68] had left the service then, and was not in employ, but frequented him still; when I used, Hurree Pershad Tewarree was indeed very weak. One or two days before his death I, and many others, had gone to see him, and at the same time Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree had also come to see him, when he said to Hurree Pershad Tewarree, 'You are very weak; what are you doing with the Zemindary?' On this Hurree Pershad Tewarree said, 'I have a wife; she will sustain my honour. I have transferred the whole to her by writing.' On hearing this the Defendant went away in a rage. I also went away. The other people also left the place."

The evidence of this witness is the more material as it shows that Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree was aware of the execution of this deed even in the lifetime of Hurree Pershad Tewarree; and this leads us to the consideration of his conduct. Knowing of the existence of this deed, as appears by the evidence of this witness: by his answer; and by the petitions already referred to, he instituted no proceedings until the 9th of August, 1834, and then only when he had been sued by Soondur Koomaree Tewarree, and was called upon to put in his answer in the suit instituted by her. The question, therefore, as to the validity of the deed of Unomuttee Pottah, appears to their Lordships to be reduced to the question of the alleged insensibility of Hurree Pershad Tewarree; and on this point their Lordships fully concur in the opinion of the Sudder Ameen, that no credit whatever can be given to the testimony of the witnesses examined on the part of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree upon this point. Their Lordships have thought it right to examine this case with reference to the evidence on [69] the part of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree; but, having done so, they think it right to add, that they are disposed to attach more weight to the evidence on the part of Soondur Koomaree Tewarree, than the Sudder Ameen appears to have done; and they see nothing to impeach the evidence of Ram Mohun Surkar, upon whom the Sudder Ameen, in his judgment on the first appeal, casts no imputation whatever. It is true, indeed, that in the copy of the same judgment, to the other appeal, he is made to speak of him in these terms:—"Witness, Ram Mohun Surkar, is one of those attached to the Court for the purpose of giving evidence, and is not worthy of reliance. Without even looking to the conflicting nature of the testimony of each of these witnesses, their evidence in my opinion has no weight in this case."

Their Lordships, however, are not disposed to place reliance upon this latter copy of the judgment, for they find that in the reasons of appeal presented by Soondur

Koomaree Debbeea against the judgment of the Sudder Ameen there is the following passage:—"The Principal Sudder Ameen, after his deep research, could state nothing against Ram Mohun Surkar, my witness, and a Vakeel of the Court, in his decision, except that nothing could be carried by the evidence of a single witness." And, in the answer to these reasons, there is no mention made of any such observation having been made by the Sudder Ameen, as appears in the second copy of the judgment.

Upon the whole, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion that upon the first appeal the decisions of the Sudder Dewanny Court and of the Sudder Ameen ought to be reversed.

The case, however, between these parties does not [70] require that any decision should now be given as to the rights of parties who may become entitled after the decease of Soondur Koomaree Debbeea: and feeling, for the reasons which have been already assigned, that these rights (if any) will be better investigated in India, their Lordships are not disposed to go further than the necessity of the case requires. They intend, therefore, upon the first appeal, humbly to recommend to Her Majesty that the decrees of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and of the Principal Sudder Ameen be reversed, and that in lieu thereof the decree stand and be as follows:—

"It appearing to their Lordships that Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree cannot, under any circumstances, have any right to the property in question in this suit during the life of Soondur Koomaree Tewarree, it is ordered that the suit be dismissed without prejudice to any question as to the rights of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree (if any) after the death of Soondur Koomaree Tewarree, and without prejudice, also, to the rights (if any) of any person not before the Court in this cause, either in the lifetime or after the death of Soondur Koomaree Tewarree; and their Lordships will order Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree to pay the costs both in the Zillah and Sudder Courts."

Upon the second appeal, that of Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, three points were raised:—

First. That all the accounts had been settled up to the time of the partition, and that the Appellant, Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree, had been improperly charged in respect of his receipts before that time: and, further, that he had been improperly charged with rents which he had not received.

Second. That he had been improperly charged with [71] a moiety of a fine which had been paid to Government, and afterwards repaid to him; and,

Third. That he had been improperly charged with the amount and value of property which had been abstracted from the Treasury in the year 1830.

The second point was abandoned at the hearing: upon the other two points it is unnecessary to say more than a few words. It appears to their Lordships from the partition papers, to be clear that accounts were to be afterwards rendered, and their Lordships see no evidence to show that any such accounts ever were rendered, and certainly none to show that any such accounts were settled: nor do their Lordships find that it is alleged by the answer, that there ever was any settled account; and with respect to the rents, the Appellant being in possession, was bound to keep the accounts of his receipts, and not having produced any such accounts, is properly chargeable with the full rents. There remains then only the third point, as to which, upon carefully looking into the evidence which was referred to on the part of the Appellant, their Lordships are fully satisfied that the property abstracted from the Treasury was not stolen, as the Appellant has alleged, but was possessed by the Appellant himself. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion, and will humbly recommend to Her Majesty, that Gudadhur Pershad Tewarree's appeal be dismissed, with costs.

[72] NGA HOONG and Others,—Appellants; THE QUEEN. — Respondent

[Dec. 5, 1857].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

Appeal to the Queen in Council allowed from a judgment on a conviction of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, in a case of murder.

Statute, 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, sec. 56, extends to the British territories in India, the provisions of the Statute, 9th Geo. IV., c. 31, sec. 8, with respect to offences committed in two different places, or partially committed in one place and completed in another, but such Statute does not render a person liable to punishment for the commission of a complete offence, who was not liable before the passing of that Statute.

The words "within the limits of the charter of the said United Company," in the 56th section of the 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, held to mean, within the limits of the trading charter of the East India Company [7 Moo. Ind. App. 101].

The Supreme Court at Calcutta has no jurisdiction under the 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, sec. 56, to try an indictment for murder committed and wholly completed at a place within the trading limits of the East India Company's charter, by native subjects of Burmah under the government of the East India Company, representing the Crown, who would not under former Statutes regulating the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, have been amenable to its criminal jurisdiction [7 Moo. Ind. App. 100-102].

In this case the appeal was allowed by the Supreme Court at Calcutta (a), from a sentence on the criminal side of that Court in a case of murder.

In the month of June, 1856, the Appellants, natives of Burmah, and native subjects of the East India Company, representing the Crown, were apprehended [73] on the charge of murdering a boat's crew of natives of Tavoy, in certain uninhabited Islands called the Coco Islands, in the Bay of Bengal: and were subsequently sent to Calcutta, to be tried in the Supreme Court there.

By the charter establishing the Supreme Court at Calcutta, the criminal jurisdiction of that Court extends to all murders and other crimes committed within the town of Calcutta and factory of Fort William, and the limits thereof, and the factories subordinate thereto: and also extends to all murders and crimes committed in Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa, by any British subject, or any other person in the service of the East India Company or of any British subject. By the Act, 39th and 40th Geo. III., c. 79, sec. 20, the limit of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa was extended to Benares, and to all such Districts as should thereafter be made subject to the Presidency of Fort William. By the Act, 26th Geo. III., c. 57, sec. 29, all the servants of the East India Company, and all other British subjects resident in India, were made subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for all murders and other crimes committed in any parts of Asia, Africa, or America, beyond the Cape of Good Hope to the Straits of Magellan, within the limits of the exclusive trade of the East India Company.

By the 56th section of the Act, 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, it was enacted, "That where any person, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt, at any place whatsoever, either upon land or at sea, within the limits of the Charter of the said United Company, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, at any place without those limits: or, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt, at any [74] place whatsoever without those limits, either upon land or at sea, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, at any place within the limits aforesaid, every offence committed in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory before or after the fact to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined and punished, by any of His Majesty's Courts of Justice within the British territories under the Government of the said United Company, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been wholly committed within the jurisdiction of the Court within the jurisdiction of which such offender shall be apprehended or be in custody" (a).

(a) By the Charter of Justice, dated the 26th of March, 1774, sec. xxxiii., creating the Supreme Court at Calcutta, that Court, in criminal suits, has sole power and authority to allow or deny appeals to the Queen in Council. See The Queen v. Eduljee Byramjee (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 468); The Queen v. Alloo Paroo (ib. 488).

At the Criminal Sessions holden before the Supreme Court on the 4th of February, 1857, an indictment against the Appellants was presented to the grand jury, the seventh count of which was as follows:—"The jurors of our Lady the Queen, upon their oath, further [75] present, that Nga Hoong, Nga Dzeen, Nga Thoon, Nga Tzeen, and Nga Than Keh, on the first day of November, in the year of Our Lord, 1855, being natives and inhabitants of the parts of India within the dominions of our Lady the Queen, and as such being persons owing allegiance to and under the peace and subjects of our Lady the Queen, and who now are in custody in Calcutta, within the local jurisdiction of this Honourable Court, did within the limits of the charter of the East India Company (to wit, at a certain Island in the Bay of Bengal, in Asia, called Wah (Gyoon), feloniously, wilfully, and of their malice aforethought, kill and murder a male native of the parts of India within the dominions of our said Lady the Queen, whose name is to the jurors unknown."

A true Bill was found by the grand jury against all the Appellants; and on the 7th of February, 1857, they were brought to trial in the Supreme Court, before the Chief Justice, Sir James William Colvile. At the trial the Appellants pleaded "Not guilty"; and the Counsel for the Appellants objected and contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, and that the Appellants were not subject to the criminal jurisdiction of the Court.

The question as to the jurisdiction was reserved by the Chief Justice for the decision of the full Court upon further argument. The jury found a verdict, as to all the Appellants, of "Guilty" upon the seventh, and three other counts not material to the question at issue.

The question of jurisdiction was argued, on the 12th of February, 1857, before the full Court consisting of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Buller, and Mr. [76] Justice Jackson, and the judgment of the Court was pronounced on the 17th of the same month. The Chief Justice delivered the opinion of himself and Mr. Justice Buller, that the Court had jurisdiction. Mr. Justice Jackson was of opinion that the Court had no jurisdiction.

The judgment of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Buller was in these terms:—"The following are the considerations upon which we think that the Court has jurisdiction to try and determine this case: The 56th section of the 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, is unlimited as to persons. It must necessarily receive that reasonable limitation which applies to every penal enactment, namely, that it cannot be taken to affect any person who does not owe a permanent or temporary allegiance to the Crown. But there is nothing in its terms which restricts its operation, whether within or without the Queen's dominions, to one class of Her Majesty's subjects; it comprehends every case of criminal homicide in which the person killed dies within the

(a) Shortly before the passing of this Act, the 9th Geo. IV., cap. 31, consolidating and amending the Criminal law in England, was passed, the 8th section of which provided, "That where any person, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt, upon the sea, or at any place out of England, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, in England; or, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt, at any place in England, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, upon the sea, or at any place out of England, every offence committed in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory before the fact to murder, or after the fact to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished, in the county or place in England in which such death, stroke, poisoning, or hurt, shall happen, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been wholly committed in that county or place."

wide limits of the Company's charter, and in which the offender is in custody within the jurisdiction which we understand to be the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court. It contemplates two classes of such cases, one in which the mortal injury is inflicted beyond the limits of the Company's charter, and the other in which the whole offence is completed within those limits. The words, therefore, of this enactment, if construed literally, unquestionably comprehend the present case. There is no general rule of law which militates against that construction. The jurisdiction over offences committed beyond the territories of the East India Company, and within these wide geographical limits, is undoubtedly of an exceptional character, but it is beyond dispute that Parliament has granted it over British subjects, and that in respect not only of these heinous offences against the person, but of many other offences, by the 26th Geo. III., c. 57, s. 29. There can be no doubt that the object of that enactment was to provide for the punishment in India, of offences committed by British subjects within those geographical limits, which, if not altogether punishable by any British Tribunal, could only be tried in England under such Statutes as the 33rd Hen. VIII., c. 23, the 57th Geo. III., c. 53, or now by the 9th Geo. IV., c. 31, s. 7. Even as regards offences which could be tried in England, it was obviously expedient to provide some Tribunal, with power to try such offenders in the country of their residence, and in one presumably less distant than England from the place in which the offence was committed. The same reasons would apply to those offences committed by native subjects of the Crown which by reason of their locality would not fall within the ordinary jurisdiction of either the Crown or the Company's Courts, and there is, therefore, no antecedent improbability in the hypothesis, that the section under consideration was designed to give to the Crown Courts such a jurisdiction over offences touching life (to which the extraordinary jurisdiction created by several of the English Statutes is limited), when committed by natives. But it has been contended that other parts of the Statute in question, as well as particular expressions in the section itself, afford strong arguments against the construction which the Counsel for the Crown would put upon it. It is said that the preamble tends to show that there was no intention to confer upon any [78] of the Crown Courts in India a new jurisdiction, or to do more than introduce here some of those amendments in the administration of the criminal law which had been effected at home by the 9th Geo. IV., c. 31, and other Statutes. It is said, in particular, that the real object and intention of the 56th section of the Indian Statute, were to do no more than was done by the 8th section of the English Statute, and a further objection to the construction contended for by the Counsel for the Crown, which, when I first considered the subject, struck me as plausible, is drawn from the provision in the first section, which says, that the Act shall extend to all persons over whom the criminal jurisdiction of the Crown Courts does or shall hereafter extend, whence it is argued that the general provisions of the Act are not to be taken to apply to natives, who are not subject to the ordinary criminal jurisdiction of the Court. The answer to the first objection seems to be that, in whatever degree the passing of the Indian Statute was prompted by the contemporaneous amendments in the criminal law of England, that Statute does unquestionably in several instances give to the Crown Courts a new and extended jurisdiction, and confer upon them the power of trying natives, who would not otherwise be triable there. The 7th and 8th sections relating to accessaries, the 70th section relating to the offence of bigamy, the 109th section relating to receivers of stolen property, afford instances of this. Nor can it be said that the jurisdiction supposed to be given, was wholly unconnected with the recent amendments of the criminal law of England; on the contrary, the argument of the Crown Counsel assumes, that the intention was to make some kind of provision in India [79] for the trial of that kind of offence, which was the subject of the 7th section of the 9th Geo. IV., c. 31. That enactment consolidated and amended the English law relating to the trial of murder and manslaughter committed out of England, and if a similar jurisdiction was to be given to the Courts here, their circumstances required some modification of the machinery by means of which it was to be exercised. Again, it is clear that whatever the 56th section of the Indian Statute means, it means something different from, if not something more than, the introduction into India of the 8th section of the English Statute. The latter section seeks merely to provide for the cases in which the deceased being stricken in England dies abroad, or, being stricken abroad, dies in England; and it does so by enacting, that in either case the trial may be had in that country in which either the death or stroke happened, as if the offence had been wholly committed in that place. But the 56th section of the Indian Statute does not merely contemplate a stroke without, and a death within, certain limits, or vice versa; it seems to contemplate also offences wholly committed within the limits defined (the words are, 'or being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt, at any place whatsoever, either upon land, or at sea, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, at any place within the limits aforesaid'), and it provides for the trial of the offenders, not by any Court within the limits of whose ordinary jurisdiction either the stroke or the death has happened, but by any of the Crown Courts within whose ordinary jurisdiction the offender may be apprehended or be in custody. And as Mr. Advocate-General has shown by several of the cases put by him, it is quite consistent with this [80] section, that the offender should be tried by a Court within whose jurisdiction neither stroke nor death has happened; or by one within whose jurisdiction both or either of those events has happened. The word 'wholly' which has been contrasted with the word 'actually' in the 70th section, is not inappropriate, because the section does embrace some cases in which the stroke may have been given beyond, and the death may have taken place within, certain limits. In some of the other cases which are embraced by this section, it would not be strictly appropriate; but we cannot, from the use of it, infer that the object of the section was merely to incorporate into the Indian Act a provision analogous to those of the 8th section of the English Statute. On the contrary, we think that it was intended to answer the double purpose of introducing provisions analogous to those of the 7th as well as to those of the 8th section of the English Act; and to provide the means of trying, by any of the Crown Courts within whose ordinary jurisdiction he might be found, a person guilty of murder or manslaughter, whether his offence had been wholly or only partially committed within the limits of the Company's charter. It may possibly be argued that in that member of the section which contemplates a crime completed within the limits of the Company's charter, the Legislature may have had in view cases in which the stroke might be given at sea, and the death happen on the land, or vice versa, within these limits; but surely, if that were the intention, it would have been easy to express it by words importing either contingency; the words used are applicable to either case, but they equally include every case of murder or manslaughter, in which the party [81] injured dies within the limits of the charter. Nor do we think that the first section of the Statute really affords any intrinsic reason for excluding from the operation of this section the native subjects of the Crown. That clause at most declared that the operation of the Statute should be confined to the places and persons over whom or which the criminal jurisdiction of the Crown Courts did or should thereafter extend. This would of course exclude those who owed neither permanent nor temporary allegiance to the Crown; it would also exclude such native subjects as might commit offences beyond the local and ordinary limits of the jurisdiction of those Courts; but it would include British subjects committing offences within the limits of the Company's charter or any of the narrower limits within which, by Statutes, other than the 26th Geo. III., c. 57, jurisdiction has been given over that class of persons, and it would also include natives who either by reason of the commission of the offence within the Presidency towns or upon any special ground might be amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court, and such a special jurisdiction over natives might, notwithstanding that clause, be given by the subsequent provisions of the Statute itself. We find it unquestionably given by the 70th section, given also as they are generally understood, by the 7th, 8th and 109th sections, why then should it not be given by the 56th section? Again, this section either applies to the native and East Indian subjects of the Crown or it does not. If it does not, what becomes of the assumption that the intention was to introduce a provision analogous to that of the 8th section of the English Statute? Why should such a provision be confined to British subjects? We [82] learn from the comments on this Statute contained in the charge of Mr. Justice Ryan to the grand jury, that in a case tried not long before in this Court, one Anthony had escaped from justice, because the murdered man having been stricken in the town of Calcutta had died in the Twenty-four Pergunnahs; that that case had been brought to the knowledge of the advisers of the Crown, and that in the opinion of the learned Judge that defect in the law was remedied by this very clause of the Act. It is quite clear that had Anthony been proved to be a British subject, the difficulty in that case could not have arisen. Therefore, it cannot but be supposed that in so far as this section was designed to remedy that defect in the law, it was intended to apply to natives, as well as to British subjects. And, if it were intended to apply to the former, we cannot see by what rule of construction the words of the enactment are to be expanded or narrowed according to the character or status of the person to whom they are applied. It cannot be said that the first section or any other part of the Statute makes the applicability of the 56th section depend upon the circumstance of the person being subject to the general jurisdiction of the Court; for the criminal jurisdiction of the Court is never exclusively determined by the charter or status of the person. The local limits of that jurisdiction may be wider in the case of British subjects, and narrower in the case of natives; but in either case its existence is determined by the locality of the offence. A native who has never slept a night in Calcutta, who commits an offence in Calcutta, can only be tried here. If one whose domicile is unquestionably in Calcutta, who has never slept a night out of Calcutta, walks beyond the ditch and [83] commits a larceny in the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, he cannot be tried here. Therefore, to make this section applicable to natives in those cases only in which the offence has been partially committed in Calcutta, you must re-write every clause, I had almost said every word of it. If the intention had been merely to provide for the trial by the Court, of cases of murder and manslaughter when the offence was partly but not wholly committed within its jurisdiction, it would have been easy to express by apt words such an intention with reference to both natives and British subjects. It is more reasonable to suppose that the Legislature omitted to do so, because, by this section it had provided generally for the trial and punishment of every case of murder and manslaughter, committed wholly or partially within the broad limits of the Company's charter, either by native or British subjects in the Crown Court within whose jurisdiction the offender should be in custody. It did not express the smaller because it was included in the larger proposition: in fine, we think that the clause must apply to natives to some extent, since otherwise there would be no law for such cases as that of Anthony. We think it cannot, as against natives, be limited to cases in which some part of the offence has been committed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, both because the Court is empowered to try in any of the Crown Courts within whose jurisdiction the prisoners may have been apprehended or be in custody; and also, because the application of the clause cannot be so narrowed without doing great violence to its language; and lastly, we think that a construction which makes it a necessary condition to the application of the clause, that the stroke should be given in [84] one place, and the death happen in another, is neither necessary nor reasonable. In such a case as this it would have given the Court jurisdiction over these prisoners, if the man killed had been wounded on the smaller and had died on the larger Island, whilst it denies the jurisdiction of the Court over them, because the man killed died on the spot on which he was wounded. Another argument against the jurisdiction that has been suggested is, that any construction of the 56th section which supports it against these prisoners, must also give to this Court, in every case of murder, or manslaughter, committed in the Mofussil, a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the Company's Courts. The word used is, however, 'may,' not 'shall,' the jurisdiction is at most concurrent with that of the local Courts, and though this consequence may not have been foreseen by the framers of the Statute, and might lead to practical inconvenience, it cannot control the construction of the enactment. It is further to be observed that the existence of the jurisdiction depends upon a further circumstance which can rarely happen, and can never be created in order to oust the jurisdiction of a Company's Court, namely, that the prisoner must be apprehended or be in custody within the local limits of the Crown Court's jurisdiction. Upon the whole, then, we are of opinion that this Court, as a Court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, had power to try the prisoners for the felony of which they stand convicted on the seventh count of the second indictment. In coming to this conclusion we have not been influenced, and we ought not to be influenced, by the consideration, that, if we decide otherwise, great crimes, and in this and perhaps in other [85] like instances, would either go unpunished, or be left to such uncertain remedy as proceedings in England might afford. But, if we ought not to be astute in seeking for jurisdiction, so neither ought we to be astute in evading a jurisdiction, which, upon the best consideration which we can give to this difficult and novel question, we think has been conferred upon us. We would not unduly strain the Statute, either to avoid or to cause a failure of justice; we have tried fairly to interpret it, and the result is, that we think this conviction can be supported. Having come to this conclusion, we have considered anxiously what course it is the duty of the Court to follow, and in this I believe we are all agreed. The crime of which these men have been convicted is of the deepest dye. It involves not merely the murder charged in the indictment, but nine others. In such a case, but for this question of jurisdiction, we should unquestionably have deemed it our duty, however painful, to let the law take its course against some, if not all, of the prisoners. But to inflict capital punishment, if there is the slightest doubt of our jurisdiction, is a serious responsibility. On the other hand it would be objectionable to allow great criminals to escape with inadequate punishment, because on the trial a question of this kind had been raised and determined against them; though with that uncertainty which necessarily attaches to the decision of any Court but one of ultimate resort. In the present case the Court is not unanimous, and that affords a strong additional reason for the course which we intend to pursue. But had we been unanimous, we should have felt that this is the first decision on the section in question; and that the practice of the Court, whenever it has [86] tried a case of homicide committed in the Mofussil, has been to require proof that the accused is a British subject in the strict sense of the term; and so far affords an argument against the construction which two of us have to-day adopted. If these unhappy men had the means of appearing by legal advisers regularly instructed, and had petitioned for leave to appeal against our judgment, we should not on these circumstances have refused to allow their appeal. It is in every way desirable, as regards the public, that this question of jurisdiction should be authoritatively settled. What we propose to do, therefore, is to pass sentence on them now upon the second indictment; but to suspend the execution of that sentence until the Queen's pleasure can be known. We shall, whether there is a regular appeal or not, send home the proceedings, and endeavour to obtain, in the manner which may be thought most satisfactory, an authoritative decision, which will both determine the propriety of this conviction, and set at rest the question on which its legality depends."

The other Judge, Sir Charles Jackson, delivered his judgment as follows:—"As I take a view somewhat different from the rest of the Court upon the question of jurisdiction under the Statute, 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, I think it as well to express that opinion shortly. It appears from the preamble of that Act, that it was passed with the view of introducing some of the alterations of the criminal law contained in the English Act, 9th Geo. IV., c. 31; and clause 56 of the 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, appears to be the one which was intended as an introduction, to some extent at least, of section 8 of the English Act into this country. This is admitted by the Counsel for the Crown, who contend, however, [87] that the 56th section was intended as an introduction of the 7th section of the English Act, as well as the 8th—an argument to which I shall hereafter advert. The general intention of section 8 of the English Act, was to provide for cases of murder or manslaughter where the blow was struck upon the sea, or at any place out of England, and the death occurred in England, or where the blow was struck at any place in England, and the death occurred out of England. The words of the 56th section of the Indian Act are certainly different. At first it provides for the case of a person struck at any place on land or sea within the limits of the Company's charter and dying without those limits. So far this section resembles the second state of circumstances referred to in section 8 of the English Act; but, instead of proceeding with a provision for the case of a person struck at any place without the limits, and dying within those limits, the phraseology is changed, and the section runs thus: 'or being feloniously stricken,' etc., 'at any place whatsoever either upon land or sea shall die of such stroke,' etc., 'at any place within the limits aforesaid.' The section then proceeds to give jurisdiction to the Court to try and punish all such cases, 'as if such offence had been wholly committed within the jurisdiction of the Court within the jurisdiction of which such offender shall be apprehended or be in custody.' It is not difficult to account for the language being different in the English and Indian Acts. If the Indian Act had merely provided for cases where the blow was struck without the limits of the Company's charter, and the death occurred within, there would have been many cases of murder and manslaughter, in which the blow was struck in one [88] jurisdiction and the death ensued in another, which would be excluded from the operation of the section. The framer of the Act, if he glanced at the map, would see that he had not to deal with limits consisting of a compact territory under one jurisdiction like England, but with limits including a large portion of the surface of the globe, with many independent jurisdictions, native and foreign, within them, and he would be anxious to provide for cases where the offence was committed in one of these jurisdictions within the limits of the Company's charter, and consummated in another, also within the same limits, as well as for offences committed without the limits, and consummated within them. As instances, suppose two Lascars, natives of India, but not inhabitants of Calcutta, were on shore at Madagascar, or at the Isle of Bourbon, and one of them inflicted a mortal wound on the other; that both natives then embarked, and the wounded man died at sea, and the slayer was afterwards arrested in Calcutta; or suppose the case of two native subjects, quarrelling on the road from Lucknow (in the then Kingdom of Oude) to Cawnpore, and that one of them received a mortal wound from the other, and afterwards both crossed the river to Cawnpore, where the wounded man died. Numerous other cases might be put, in which the blow would be given within one jurisdiction and the death would take place in another, and yet both jurisdictions would be within the geographical limits of the Company's charter, and it is, I think, more probable that the phraseology was changed to meet such cases as these, which are similar in their nature to those provided for in section 8 of the English Act, than that it was altered with a view of giving this Court concurrent jurisdiction with [89] the Mofussil Courts in all cases of homicide committed in the Mofussil, when the prisoner is in custody in the Presidency town. I see no ground for supposing that the words were altered with the view of embodying into this section the 7th section of the English Act, as well as section 8; for section 7 of the English Act deals with an entirely different matter to that contemplated in section 56 of the Indian Act, inasmuch as section 7 applies exclusively to cases where the whole offence is committed out of England, whereas section 56 applies to cases committed partly within and partly without, or wholly within, the limits of the Company's charter, and does not in any aspect contemplate a case of murder wholly without those limits. We have next to consider the effect of the words as they stand in this section 56. It first provides for cases of murder, etc., where the blow is struck within the limits and the death occurs without, and it then proceeds—'or being feloniously stricken,' etc., 'at any place whatsoever, either upon land or at sea, shall die of such stroke,' etc., 'at any place within the limits aforesaid.' I concede at once that this language gives the Court jurisdiction when the blow is struck without the limits of the Company's charter, and death ensues within those limits, and also in cases where the blow is struck in one jurisdiction or place within the limits of the Company's charter, and death ensues in another jurisdiction or place within those limits. I think the clause was expressly framed to meet such cases, but I doubt whether the section was ever intended to apply to a case of murder or manslaughter where the offence was completed, that is, where the blow was struck and the death ensued at one and the same place within the [90] limits of the Company's charter. It is true that the words 'being stricken at any place whatsoever,' and the words 'shall die of such stroke at any place within the limits aforesaid,' if taken literally, admit of the construction that the blow may be struck and the death ensue in one place, if within the limits; but I nevertheless doubt the propriety of such a construction. The whole section must be taken together, and the general intent of the provision, and the other words contained in it, must also be considered. I think that the whole section is framed diverso intuitu, and solely with the view of providing for certain exceptional cases where the blow is struck in one jurisdiction and the death ensues in another; and, if I am right in my premises, that this section is merely an adaptation of the 8th section of the English Act, that section supports my view, inasmuch as it does not contemplate the blow and the death occurring at the same place, but is expressly framed with the view of meeting the difficulty of cases where the blow is struck in one place, and the death ensues in another. I also think that the word 'wholly,' which is found towards the end of this section, is unnecessary and inappropriate to the case of a murder committed in one place, and that it, therefore, throws a doubt on construction insisted upon by the Crown. The passage in which it stands, runs thus: 'may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished by any of His Majesty's Courts,' etc., 'in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been wholly committed within the jurisdiction of the Court within the jurisdiction of which such offender shall be apprehended or be in custody.' The section here again reverts to the language of section 8 of the [91] English Act, which also contains this word 'wholly,' 'wholly committed in that county,' and it seems clear that the jurisdiction here spoken of is that jurisdiction which we exercise within our local limits, and in which the prisoner is in custody. Bearing this in mind, the word 'wholly' would be most appropriately used if applied simply to the case of an offence commenced or consummated partly within the local jurisdiction. Still that expression would not be inappropriate, if applied to offences consisting of two parts, respectively committed in different jurisdictions without the local limits. But the word 'wholly' is both inappropriate and unnecessary if applied to the case of a murder committed in one place within the Company's charter, though without the local jurisdiction: for in such a case, there is no question whether it was committed wholly or in part in any particular place, and it would have been sufficient in such a case to say 'as if such offence had been committed within the jurisdiction of the Court,' omitting the word 'wholly' altogether. And if it were the intention of the draughtsman to include offences committed in one place, he might have added the words 'or actually,' words which he could appropriately use in the 70th section of this Act, in which case the words might be read distributively, and the word 'actually' applied to cases where the offence was committed in one place. If this 56th section was framed, as the Counsel for the Crown insist, with a view of giving this Court jurisdiction in all cases of murder and manslaughter occurring within the limits, one would not expect to find so important a jurisdiction, one that gives us concurrent jurisdiction with the Mofussil Courts in all cases of murder and manslaughter occurring in the Mofussil, when the offender is in custody in the Presidency town, to be thus incidentally and obscurely given in a section which has for its main object, at least, a provision for cases where the blow is given in one jurisdiction, and the death ensues in another. It is hardly possible to conceive, that, if it were the intention of the Legislature to give us so important a concurrent jurisdiction, it would have remained undiscovered and unknown until this argument: for if the argument for the crown be correct, this Court has been in error for the last twenty-eight years, inasmuch as it has always, during that period, required proof in all cases of murder and manslaughter committed in the Mofussil, that the offender was a British subject. On the whole, then, I have great doubts whether this section applies to a case where the murder was committed at one place within the limits of the Company's charter. I am inclined to think that the section was framed diverso intuitu, with the intention of giving this Court jurisdiction in a few exceptional cases, where the blow occurs in one place and the death in another, and the person is in custody at the Presidency town, and that it is very difficult to extract out of these obscure words, an entirely new range of jurisdiction, which no other Statute, authority, or practice, has ever treated as existing. I am glad, therefore, that the course about to be adopted by the Court will set at rest all doubts on this question before the execution of the sentence."

The majority of the Court being of opinion that the Court had jurisdiction, judgment of death was recorded against the Appellants on the seventh count: but execution of the sentence was respite.

The Appellants having obtained leave of the Su-[93]-preme Court to appeal from this judgment to Her Majesty in Council, the same now came on for hearing.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and W. H. Melvill, for the Appellants.—The Supreme Court at Calcutta had no jurisdiction to try this indictment, as the Appellants were not subject to the criminal jurisdiction of that Court, or liable to be tried before it for the offence with which they were charged. That Court was created by the Act, 13th Geo. III., c. 63, sec. 13, which enabled the Crown to erect a Supreme Court with civil and criminal jurisdiction; and by the Charter of Justice, dated 26th of March, 1774, founded upon this Statute, the Supreme Court at Calcutta was established, with a criminal jurisdiction extending to all murders and other crimes committed within the town of Calcutta, in Bengal, Bahar and Orissa, by any British subject, or any other person in the service of the East India Company. The term "British subject" did not include native subjects, but only Europeans, it being intended to exempt British subjects from the Mofussil jurisdiction. Statute, 39th and 40th Geo. III., c. 79, sec. 20, extended the limits to Benares. The Statute, 26th Geo. III., c. 57, sec. 20, made all the servants of the East India Company resident in India amenable to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for all murders or other crimes within the limits of the trade of the East India Company. The principles of these enactments were fully considered in their application to the Supreme Courts at Madras and Bombay in the cases of Nagapan Chetty v. Rachummar (1 Strange's Mad. Cases, 152), and In re The Justices of the Supreme Court of Judicature [94] at Bombay (1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 1). Under the provisions of these Statutes the criminal jurisdiction of the Supreme Court has always practically been treated as applying only to crimes committed within the Presidency town of Calcutta, and its factories, and to crimes committed by the British subjects of the Crown within the mercantile limits of the Company's charter, or over natives, for crimes committed within the limits of the town of Calcutta. Here the Coco Islands are not within the town of Calcutta, and the Appellants are not British, but native subjects of the Crown. This was the position in which the law stood at the time of the passing of the Statute, 9th of Geo. IV., c. 74. Now, the object of that Statute, as it appears by the preamble, was to extend to India, and to those persons who were then subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court before the alterations made in the criminal law of England, the benefit of the English Statute, 9th Geo. IV., c. 31, sec. 8; and section 56 of Statute, 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, was framed and intended to be an adaptation of section 8 of the Statute, 9th Geo. IV., c. 31, so as to make similar alterations in the criminal law administered in India, but was never intended to render any person subject to the criminal jurisdiction of the Supreme Court who was not previously subject to that jurisdiction. Certainly it was never intended to give the Supreme Court a general jurisdiction over all natives in cases of murder and manslaughter. Nor even over aliens in the service of the East India Company, Re v. Francisco Jose (Morton's Rep. 218), where that Court held, that a foreigner who had committed an offence beyond the province of Bengal was not subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, under the Statute, [95] 26th Geo. III., c. 57, sec. 29. If the offence was committed by a native subject in the town of Calcutta, the Court would have jurisdiction, Jannokee Dass v. The King (1 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 67; S.C. Morton's Rep. 222). The language of the Statute in question clearly shows that it was to be solely applicable to English subjects. Sections 2, 59, 60, 67, 69 and 97, respectively contain the word "felony." This is a technical phrase of English law, and not in general use, like "misdemeanour," showing it was intended only to apply to British subjects. It is not to be found in the Bengal Regulations relating to the administration of the Foujdarry, or Criminal Courts, which are in force in the Mafussil. Ben. Regs. Dec. 3rd, 1790; IX. of 1793; XII. of 1825; and XII. of 1829. It follows, therefore, that the use of the word "feloniously" in the 56th section implies that the persons committing the offences to which that section refers were already under the English jurisdiction. Again, the word "person" in that section cannot apply to native subjects as contradistinguished from British subjects. If the Supreme Court at Calcutta had jurisdiction over natives before the passing of this Statute, then the word used in this section is superfluous. The first section should be incorporated with the other sections where that word occurs, and to the word "persons" should be added "subject to the jurisdiction of the criminal law." Such a construction would make all the sections intelligible. Courts in this country have done so, Fallance v. Siddel (6 Ad. and Ell. 932), Lyde v. Barnard (1 Mee. and Wels. 101). Again, the phrase "within the limits of the charter" must be taken to mean the judicial and administrative limits, not the trading limits. Section 56, under [96] which this conviction is founded, therefore, cannot apply: the murder took place indeed within the trading limits of the charter, but not the judicial limits. Whenever the trading limits are intended, such intention is expressly mentioned in the Acts of Parliament; as in the 26th Geo. III., c. 57, sec. 29; 53rd Geo. III., c. 155, sec. 2; 7th Geo. IV., c. 56, sec. 3; 9th Geo. IV., c. 73, secs. 19, 21, 54; 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 52, sec. 119; 3rd and 4th Vict., c. 56, sec. 9.—[Mr. Pemberton Leigh: In this particular case would there be any other Tribunal, than the Supreme Court, to entertain the charge?—The native criminal Courts, the Foujdarry and the Nizamut Adawlut, had jurisdiction by Ben. Regs. V. of 1809, sec. 3; VIII. of 1813, sec. 2; I. of 1822, sec. 6; VIII. of 1829, sec. 3. These Regulations were repealed by Act of the Government of India, No. I. of 1849, and fresh enactments made for that purpose. Another fatal objection to the conviction under this 56th section of the 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, is, that the murders were “wholly” committed at one place. This section was intended to meet a case of difficulty, where the blow was struck in one place and death took place in another, and to that extent only has the English Act, 9th Geo. IV., c. 31, sec. 8, been introduced into India by the Act, 9th Geo. IV., c. 74. The judgment cannot be sustained.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Henry S. Keating), and Mr. Welsby, for the Crown.—The whole question turns upon the proper interpretation of the 56th section of the 9th Geo. IV., c. 74. Our contention is, that the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to try the Appellants by virtue of that section, which was passed to meet a case of this [97] kind. It is true that in former Statutes a distinction was made between English and native British subjects, but we submit that no such distinction is to be found in the Act, 9th Geo. IV., c. 74. The preamble fully bears this out. There the word “extend” is used, which clearly indicates that its operation is not to be confined to British subjects, but on the contrary to embrace native subjects, and to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Court. The first object of the 56th section is protection. There is, therefore, no reason why any class of natives should be excluded from the benefit of that protection. There is nothing which can justify the Court in construing this Statute so as to limit the word “person” to British subjects and not to native subjects. The words relied upon by the Appellant’s Counsel, “within the limits of the charter of the said United Company,” necessarily mean the geographical or trading limits, and such an interpretation must be so put on the Act, 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, as in the former Statute, 26th Geo. III., c. 57, sec. 29. The object of the charter was to give the East India Company a monopoly of trade, therefore the limits of the charter must mean the trading limits. Where those limits are intended they are expressly mentioned. Another ground taken by the Appellants, as an argument against the application of this Statute to native subjects, was the use of the word “feloniously,” and it was contended that it was a technical word which applied only to individuals liable to the English law: we submit, however, that the word “feloniously” refers only to the nature of the crime, and not to the person who commits it.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., was heard in reply.

[98] The Right Hon Lord Wensleydale.—Their Lordships in this case have had an opportunity of consulting the judgments in the Court of Calcutta, which are ably and perspicuously stated by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Buller on one side, and by Mr. Justice Jackson on the other. They have heard as well every argument which could be advanced, either in favour of the conviction, or against it, at the Bar; and having formed their conclusion, and entertaining no doubt upon the question, they think it would be improper to create any further delay for the purpose of considering this case. They are all quite satisfied that the judgment cannot be supported, and that the conviction was wrong.

The question in this case depends entirely upon the construction of the Act, 9th Geo. IV., c. 74, and of the 56th section of that Act, taken in conjunction with the preamble. Now, there is nothing more clear than that, with respect to the criminal law, the construction is always to be strict; and putting a strict construction upon the 56th section of this Act, we have no doubt that it was not meant to apply to a case of this kind, but that in the first place it extends only to persons who were otherwise amenable to the criminal jurisdiction of the Court at Calcutta, who are the persons described in the first section, and that by the language of the section in question, it applies only to cases in which the felony or crime has been committed, by persons who committed that crime, partly within the jurisdiction, and partly without.

The object of the Statute, as appears by the recital, was for the purpose of applying and extending to the British territories in India the same provision as had [99] been recently made for England with respect to offences committed in two different places, or partially committed in one place, and accomplished in another, which provisions had been the subject of a recent enactment in the Statute, 26th of Geo. IV., c. 31. The preamble describes that to have been the object of the Statute; and there can be no doubt that we must consider the preamble as a key to the construction of the Statute, though it would not, of course, control every provision, for we very often find that the subsequent provisions of a Statute extend beyond the limits of the preamble.

The Statute goes on to say, that the object being that the "alteration should be extended to the British territories under the Government of the United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies," it is, therefore, enacted that the Act "shall extend to all persons and all places, as well on land as on the high seas, over whom, or which, the criminal jurisdiction of any of His Majesty's Courts of Justice erected, or to be erected, within the British territories under the Government of the United Company does or shall hereafter extend." Now, that clause clearly shows that the object of the Statute was that it should apply to such persons. The Solicitor-General says that the word "extend" is not to be construed to confine it to such persons, and that it is not to limit the jurisdiction. But the word "extend" is to be explained by the preamble, which states the object of the Statute to be to extend the recent enactments of the Act which is in force, to the East Indies, and the word "extend" is to be read the same as if it were "apply."

Then we must consider whether the 56th section [100] applies merely to those persons, or whether, as the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Buller have stated, it extends beyond the preamble, and applies to an offence completely committed within the limits of the Company's trading charter, but not within the limits of the town of Calcutta. Now, reading that clause, we think that there is really no difficulty in saying that the sole object of it was, that it should apply to offences partially committed in one district and completed in another. The words of the clause are, "That where any person being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt,"—the word "feloniously" seems to show that it was meant that at the time when the person gave the original stroke, he was a person capable of committing felony—"at any place whatsoever, either upon the land or at sea, within the limits of the charter of the said United Company, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, at any place without those limits; or being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt, at any place whatsoever, either upon land or at sea, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, at any place within the limits aforesaid, every offence committed in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory before or after the fact to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished by any of His Majesty's Courts of Justice within the British territories under the Government of the said United Company, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been wholly committed within the jurisdiction of the Court within the jurisdiction of which such offender shall be apprehended or be in custody."

[101] One question raised before us by the learned Counsel for the Appellants, is as to the meaning of the term "within the limits of the charter of the said United Company." On that point I believe their Lordships have not the slightest difficulty. Those words are to be construed in the same way as they are used in the Statute, 26th Geo. III., c. 57, to which this Statute forms an addition. They are to be construed to mean "within the limits of the trading charter of the Company." So far, therefore, as regards the place of committing the offence, this was an offence committed within those limits, and the Court had in that respect jurisdiction. But the words of the section do not apply to entire offences, begun and completed within the jurisdiction, but to those partly committed within, and partly without, which are put on the same footing as if they had been "wholly committed within the jurisdiction." It is perfectly clear that the term "wholly" shows the intention of the Legislature to be, that the section shall apply only to that description of case: and it cannot have the sense of "actually committed" put upon it, as is contended on the part of the Crown, without doing violence to the words. Therefore, it appears to us, proceeding upon the ordinary rules of the construction of penal enactments, that the object of this section was merely to apply the improvement of the law, which had lately taken place in England, to the case of persons amenable to the Court of Justice at Calcutta, who had partly committed an offence in one place, which was afterwards completed in another; that it does not apply at all to a case of this kind, where the persons committing the offence were not amenable to the Court of Calcutta, and where the [102] whole offence which has been committed was within one jurisdiction.

The Court are confirmed in their opinion as to the meaning of the Statute with respect to the persons to whom it is applicable, by the last section. It is introduced at the end of this Statute obviously with the purpose of showing what class of persons were liable to the provisions of this Statute; and it extends the liability of persons to the jurisdiction of the Courts beyond what it had been before. That section enacts, "That all persons, whether British subjects or others, employed by or in the service of His Majesty, shall be held subject and amenable to the criminal jurisdiction of His Majesty's Courts of Justice, erected or to be erected within the British territories under the Government of the said India Company, in the same manner as persons employed by or in the service of the said United Company are now by law subject and amenable to the said jurisdiction." Before the Statute, British subjects, properly designated as British subjects, that is, British-born subjects, and persons in the service of the East India Company, were liable to the jurisdiction of the Court of Calcutta; persons not in the employment of the East India Company, but in the employment of His Majesty, were not so liable. This Statute extends the liability to those who are servants of the Crown; and that provision, finding its place in this Act of Parliament, raises, in their Lordships' opinion, a strong inference that the Statute was meant to apply to no other persons than those who were liable to the jurisdiction of the Court of Calcutta, to which the last clause makes a considerable addition.

Therefore, looking at this Act of Parliament alto-gether, [103] their Lordships have not any doubt what the object of that Statute was: it was only to apply the law which had been lately enacted in England, as to an offence partly committed in one part and completed in another, to the East Indies, and not to make a new enactment rendering persons liable to punishment for a complete offence, who would not have been liable before. If the result of our decision should be, that these Appellants are to escape from justice, we shall regret it; but that is a matter which cannot influence our judgment. If the Mofussil Court has no jurisdiction now, by virtue of the East India Company's Regulations, to dispose of this case, they must escape justice; but we are not, in any way, to alter or construe differently the rules of the criminal law in consequence of the supposed justice of a particular case. The rule is, that such law is to be strictly construed; and so construing it, or even without that strictness, the construction of this 56th section appears to us to be such as to require us to pronounce in favour of the Appellants.

Ben. Reg. II. of 1803, sec. 18, cl. 3, prohibits the Court from hearing, trying or determining the merits of any civil suit, if the cause of action arose twelve years antecedent to the institution of the suit, unless the Plaintiff prove "that either from minority or other good and sufficient cause he was precluded from obtaining redress."

A cause of action arose in 1836. In 1842, the party entitled to seek redress was found a lunatic by a Commission de lunatico inquirendo in England, and in 1844, a Committee to his estate was appointed, who in 1848, more than twelve years from the time when the cause of action arose, brought a suit in the Zillah Court of Delhi, in the North-Western Provinces, on behalf of the lunatic's estate. The Zillah Court at Delhi, and the Sudder Court at Agra, held that the Committee was barred by the Ben. Reg. II. of 1803, sec. 18, cl. 3, from filing his plaint.

Such judgments reversed upon appeal by the Judicial Committee, by reason:

First. That the words "other good and sufficient cause" in cl. 3, sec. 18, of Ben. Reg. II. of 1803, included "insanity" [7 Moo. Ind. App. 125].

Second. That it made no difference, so far as concerned the lunatic, that under the Commission of lunacy a Committee of the lunatic's estate had been appointed in 1844 [7 Moo. Ind. App. 125, 126].

Third. That in computing the limitation of twelve years mentioned in cl. 3, sec. 18, of this Regulation, there should not be reckoned any time elapsing, while the person for the time being entitled to seek redress was not free from disability [7 Moo. Ind. App. 126].

After an appeal to England, and before any petition of appeal was lodged, the appeal abated by the death of the Appellant. Appeal revived by the Appellant's special administratrix.

In these appeals, the points raised in the Courts in India and upon appeal in both suits, were substantially the same; the questions being, first, whether the limitation of twelve years prescribed by cl. 3, sec. 18, of Ben. Reg. II of 1803 (a), operated as a bar to the right of action by the Committee of the estate of a lunatic,

* Present: The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington, the Right Hon. The Lord Justice Knight Bruce, the Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh, and the Right Hon. Sir Edward Ryan.

(a) By Ben. Reg. II. of 1803, sec. 18, cl. 3, it is enacted as follows:—"After the period of twelve years shall have elapsed from the date of the cession of the Provinces ceded by the Nawab Vizier to the Honourable the English East India Company, the Courts of Adawlut are prohibited from hearing, trying or determining the merits of any civil suit whatever, if the cause of action shall have arisen at a period being twelve years antecedent to the date on which the petition for the institution of such suit shall be presented to the Court, unless the Complainant can show, by clear and positive proof, that he has demanded the money or matter in question, and that the Defendant had admitted the truth of the demand, or promised to pay the money, or that he directly referred his claim, within that period, to the matter in dispute, to a Court of competent jurisdiction, or person having authority, whether local or otherwise, for the time being, to hear such complaint and to try the demand, and shall assign satisfactory reasons to the Court, why he did not proceed in the suit; or shall prove that, either from minority or other good and sufficient cause, he was precluded from obtaining redress."

the cause of action having accrued more than twelve years before the institution of the suit; secondly, whether the lunacy of Dyce Sombre, and [106] certain intermediate proceedings taken by him to obtain redress, brought the case within the exceptions in cl. 3, of the 18th section of that Regulation; and thirdly, whether the provisions of Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, sec. 3, applied to the case.

The first suit was brought to recover possession of the Altumgha Jaghire of Badshapore Jharsa near Delhi, on the North-Western Province, with mesne profits. The facts, as they appeared in the pleadings, were as follows:—

On the 17th of April, 1834, the late Begum Sumroo, of Sardanlia, conveyed and assigned, by a deed of gift, the Altumgha Jaghire of Budshapore Jharsa, to Dyce Sombre, who entered into possession, subject to certain bequests and trusts given and declared by her Will previously made. The execution of this instrument was formally communicated to the Secretary of the Government, who did not at that time advance any claim to the Jaghire. The Begum Sumroo died on the 27th of January, 1836, and on the 30th of that month the Government took possession and resumed the Jaghire, on the ground that her right to the Jaghire ceased at her death (a). On the 4th of July, 1836, Dyce Sombre presented a [107] memorial to Sir Charles Metcalf, the then Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, in which he complained of the illegal resumption of the Altumgha Jaghire, and urged his claim thereto as donee and devisee of the late Begum. The reply to that memorial was sent through the Secretary of the Lieutenant-General, and was unfavourable to the memorialist. Being dissatisfied with that reply, Dyce Sombre, on the 23rd of August, 1836, presented a memorial to the Governor-General of India in Council, again urging his right to the Altumgha Jaghire. That memorial was referred to the Lieutenant-Governor for his report thereon, which was subsequently sent to the Governor-General under date, the 19th of October, 1836, and on the 21st of November, 1836, the Secretary to the Supreme Government addressed a letter to Dyce Sombre, stating that the Governor-General in Council could discover no sufficient ground for questioning the propriety of the decision which had been given on the case by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces. Subsequently Dyce Sombre, in prosecution of his claim to the Altumgha Jaghire, presented a memorial on the subject to the Court of Directors in England, and to the board of Commissioners for the affairs of India; but those applications were unsuccessful.

On the 31st of July, 1843, an inquisition was held to inquire into the state of mind of Dyce Sombre, in pursuance of a commission issued under the Great Seal of Great Britain, when he was duly found and declared to be a person of unsound mind and unable to manage himself or his property, and to have been in the same state of unsoundness of mind from the 27th of October, 1842. By an Order made by the [108] Lord Chancellor of England, on the 8th of February, 1844, John Pascal Larkins was appointed the Committee ad interim of the estate and effects of the lunatic; and by another Order of the Lord Chancellor, bearing date the 5th of August, 1847, such Committee was ordered to institute the suit out of which the first of the present appeals arose.

The plaint in the suit was filed in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen at Delhi, on the 17th of August, 1848, by Larkins, as such Committee, and on behalf of the lunatic, Dyce Sombre, against the East India Company, to recover possession of the Altumgha Jaghire, and prayed that the Plaintiff, Dyce Sombre, might be declared entitled in perpetuity to the Altumgha Jaghire of Badshapore Jharsa, and to the maal and sayer, and other privileges and profits appertaining thereto; and the mense profits and revenues arising from the Altumgha Jaghire, and the maal and sayer and privileges aforesaid, which have accrued due and been received by them, from and after the date of the resumption thereof, together with interest.

(a) By an Act of the Indian Legislature, No. xvii. of 1836, passed on the 20th of June, 1836, it was enacted, that "whenever the Governor-General in Council should order that any of the territories which were lately held by the Begum Sumroo, and which elapsed to the East India Company on the 27th of January, 1836, should be annexed to any District under the government of the Company, all Laws and Regulations then in force within such District should be in force in the territories so annexed to such District;" and under the powers of this Act, Pergunnah Badshapore Jharsa was incorporated with Zillah Goorgaon, in which it now continues as a portion of the British territories.

The answer of the East India Company, among other pleas, set up as a plea in bar, that if the cognizance of the suit even appertained to the Civil Courts, it could not be entertained, as the period of limitation of twelve years had elapsed, the cause of action, the resumption of the Altumgha Jaghire, having arisen on the 30th of January, 1836; and that measure being afterwards approved and confirmed by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, who was invested with full powers for such purposes. That the Government had since then been in possession of the estates in question, and that as the Plaintiff's plaint was dated the 17th of August, 1848, seven months [109] in excess of twelve years since the resumption had elapsed.

The replication to this plea pleaded, that although the period of limitation, counting from the date on which the Plaintiff received notice of the resumption to the date of institution of suit, had not elapsed, yet, supposing that it had elapsed, even in such case the hearing of a suit of this nature was not barred by lapse of time for two reasons: First, that the Plaintiff became a lunatic before the period of limitation had expired, and a lunatic, like a minor, was disabled from suing; second, that the Government had in an illegal manner, amounting to violence, resumed the estate in dispute, and brought it by an act of power into their possession; that a suit against one who, in a mode contrary to that prescribed in the Regulations, does by force or violence, or an act of power, seize and possess any immoveable property, may be heard within a period of sixty years; and that, therefore, the exception taken fell to the ground.

The suit was afterwards transferred to the Civil Court of Zillah Delhi.

The suit was not heard upon the merits, but only upon the point of limitation raised by the Defendant.

On the 19th of July, 1849, the case was brought up for final hearing before Mr. John Panton Gubbins, who pronounced judgment in the following terms: "The particulars of the case are, that the Pergunnah Badshapore Jharsa was long held in Jaghire by the late Begum Sumroo, whose chief possession lay around the town of Sirdhana, in the Meerut District, where she also resided at her death, which happened [110] on the 27th of January, 1836; the whole Jaghire of the Begum, both on this and on the other side of the Jumna river, was resumed by the British Government without any opposition on the part of the Begum's heirs, and incorporated with the Zillah Goorgaon, in which it now continues, as a portion of the British territories. Matters continued in this state till Dyce Sombre, who succeeded by Will to the bulk of her personal and private property, was found and declared a lunatic, and in August, 1848, the person appointed by the Lord Chancellor to manage the lunatic's estate, preferred this suit, in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen, which was afterwards transferred to the Civil Court of Zillah Delhi, on the ground that as the Pergunnah Badshapore Jharsa was held by a special tenure, an Altumgha Jaghire quite different from that of Sirdhana, the Government had acted illegally in resuming it in the same manner as the rest of the Jaghire of Sirdhana. At the very outset of the case the following question suggested itself to me, whether under such circumstances the Lord Chancellor's order declaring Dyce Sombre a lunatic must of necessity be acted upon by the Indian Courts; this, I confess, appears to me to be very doubtful, but after carefully weighing the point, which I may observe is not noticed by the other party, I thought it best to admit the lunacy, and proceeded first to examine the Defendants' objection under the Regulation of Limitation, namely, that more than twelve years had elapsed from the date of resumption to the preferring of this suit; to this the Plaintiff replied in his replication, first, that the period of twelve years had not even yet elapsed, if reckoned from the date on which he received notice of [111] the resumption; secondly, that Dyce Sombre became a lunatic within the period of twelve years fixed by law, and was, therefore, unable to sue; and, thirdly, that as the Government had acquired possession by violence, the Plaintiff became entitled to the benefit of the full term of sixty years allowed in such cases by cl. 1, sec. 3, Ben. Reg. II. 1805, no one of which pleas were however advanced in the first instance, as the Plaintiff had not, to all appearance, anticipated the objection on the score of limitation, and it was only when pleaded by the Defendants in bar of the suit that the Plaintiff took it on his replication. In my opinion these pleas are not sufficient to enable me to examine and dispose of this case on its merits, it being clearly barred by the Regulation of Limitation. My reasons are as follow:—In the first place it appears to me that the period of twelve years can only be reckoned from the actual date of resumption, the 30th of January, 1836, of which Dyce Sombre, from his peculiar relation with the Begum, could not but have been informed, as the terms on which the Jaghire was generally supposed to be held, and its consequent liability to resumption on the Begum's death, were well known all over the Upper Provinces. Besides, the officers of Government, immediately on the resumption taking place, took charge of the administration of the estate in question. Secondly, the Plaintiff has, neither in his Plaint nor replication, brought forward any proof of violence on the part of Government, nor from the circumstances of the case can any such be presumed. It is evident that on the death of the Begum, the Government, according to previous stipulation, resumed the Pergunnah. In his plaint and replication the Plaintiff explains the term [112] 'violence' as denoting illegal and forcible dispossession. It ought to be known, however, that omission to fulfil any condition prescribed in the Regulations, while carrying out the instructions of the Government, is a different matter from 'violence,' possession by which or in a fraudulent manner of anybody's land or property was alone intended by the law to be liable to question during the larger period allowed for admission of suits. No act of the Government can be construed as falling under the head of violence anticipated by that Regulation. The assertion, moreover, on the part of the Committee of the estate, of 'violence,' is directly opposed to the line of conduct pursued by Dyce Sombre himself, who, for the period of seven years from the date of resumption, while he had the management of his own affairs, never preferred any claim of this sort, which would scarcely have been the case had he really thought he possessed any such. As regards the question of lunacy, I can find no law whereby a Plaintiff is entitled as a matter of course to indulgence on that ground, even had it been applied for, which is not the case. The law on the contrary is clear; it makes no exception in favour of lunatics, and Dyce Sombre himself had ample time before his lunacy, and so had his agent during five years from the time when he was appointed to the charge of the estate, to bring forward a claim to the Pergunnah within the period of twelve years fixed by law; but neither of them did so. I, therefore, consider the plea of lunacy insufficient to protect the Plaintiff's claim from the operations of the Law of Limitations, and dismiss it accordingly with costs.

The Plaintiff appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of the North-Western Provinces.

[113] The case was brought for hearing, before a full Bench of the Sudder Dewanny Court at Agra, and on the 9th of December, 1850, that Court pronounced the following judgment:—"To understand the principal plea of the Plaintiff, it is necessary to note the following dates: The Begum Sumroo died on the 27th of January, 1836. The Government authorities assumed management of the territory on the 30th of January, 1836. Notice of the intentions of Government was received by the Plaintiff on the 18th of August, 1836. The commencement of lunacy, as declared by the Commission, was on the 27th of October, 1842. The Committee of the lunatic's estate was appointed on the 8th of February, 1844. The present suit was instituted on the 17th of August, 1848. As more than twelve years had elapsed since the 30th of January, 1836, previous to the institution of the present suit, the claim was dismissed. The pleas in appeal are those which were brought forward in the Zillah Court. In regard to the first, namely, that the limitation began to run on the 18th of August, 1836, and not on the 30th of January preceding, the Court are of opinion, that such plea cannot be sustained. The actual dispossession of the Plaintiff, and the assumption of management by the Commissioner of Delhi, are the acts which constituted the cause of action: and it has ever been the practice of the Courts to hold that the proceeding of the officer of the Government by which an injury was actually inflicted, and not the sanction of that act by the Government, indicated the commencement of the period within which remedy might be sought in the civil Courts. This has been repeatedly ruled in the numerous suits which arose out of the late Settlement proceedings, and is a point not open to discussion. In regard to the second plea, namely, that the Plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of cl. 1, sec. 3, Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, the Court is of the same opinion, that it cannot be admitted. The allegations of the Plaintiff are set forth in a very vague manner, whereas clause 2 of that section requires that the alleged violence shall be 'distinctly' pleaded, and subsequent decisions have enforced this provision of the law (Mussunaut Ommut-o-Zuhra Begum v. Lootpollah Khan, Select Reports, volume vii. p. 399). Neither do the proceedings of the Government officers, however distinctly they might have been pleaded, constitute, in the judgment of the Court, that 'violence, fraud, or unjust means' contemplated by the law; the Government acquired possession of the disputed Pergunnah as they acquired possession of the rest of the Territory, by a fair title, believed to have conveyed a right of possession and property (clause 1). It has been urged that evidence should have been taken of the fact of violence, but the Court hold such evidence to be superfluous; the facts themselves are not disputed, and it remains only for the Court to determine whether those facts bring the case within the meaning of the Regulation or not. In regard to the third plea, namely, that the Plaintiff is entitled to a deduction from the twelve years of the period which elapsed between the 27th of October, 1842, and the 8th of February, 1844, the Law of limitation does not continue to run under all circumstances, as it does in England, but may be suspended in its operation by a variety of causes, as has been urged on the part of the Plaintiff. It does not, however, follow, that the whole period during which a cause of suspicion has been [115] in operation shall always be deducted from the twelve years. The amount of indulgence to be granted to the party who has failed to bring his suit within the time appointed depends upon the circumstances of each case, and is not determinable by any general rule. The law (sec. 18, Reg. II. of 1803) upon this head is the same for the Upper as the Lower Provinces, but the construction which has been put upon that law by the Sudder Dewanny Courts is different. The practice of the civil Courts is consequently different also. The Plaintiff has referred to precedents of the Presidency Court, and of the Agra Court, which are unquestionably in his favour; but, according to the latest decisions in the North-Western Provinces those precedents are not agreeable to law, and are, therefore, of no avail. The case in which this doctrine was first held is that of Rajah Chetpal Singh v. Sheo Gholam Singh, decided by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra, on the 30th of August, 1848, an account of which is to be found in the printed decisions (3 Dec. N.W.P., 306). The point there ruled was, that a minor (and this Court admit generally the analogy between minority and lunacy) must sue as soon as he can after coming of age, if the period allowed by law has elapsed during his minority; and that opinion was founded on the words of the Regulation, which declares that Courts are prohibited from hearing civil suits, unless the Complainant shall prove that, 'either from minority or other good and sufficient cause he was precluded from obtaining redress.' If a Plaintiff, on attaining his majority after the lapse of the period, unnecessarily delayed to bring his suit, he could not prove that he had been precluded from obtaining redress, [116] and accordingly the prohibition would remain in force. He could not be heard. The principle of the decision in Rajah Chetpal Singh v. Sheo Gholam Singh was again recognized and upheld by a full Bench in the case of Ramchul Singh v. Koonwar Sarrubdawan Singh, decided at Agra, on the 2nd of September, 1850. It has, therefore, become law in the North-Western Provinces. In the case before the Court, the period which the Plaintiff claims to deduct is that which passed between the 27th of October, 1842, the date of the commencement of lunacy, and the 8th of February, 1844, the date of appointment of the Committee of the estate; and the plea is to be disposed of on the same principles as if minority had intervened. The case of Rajah Chetpal Singh v. Sheo Gholam Singh is directly in point. In both cases, disability occurred after the time had begun to run; in both, many years of the legal term had yet to run when the disability ceased. The only question that could be raised was, whether there were any other circumstances peculiar to the condition of the Plaintiff, by which he was precluded from bringing his suit before the expiration of the legal period, and this is not even asserted. The Court, therefore, dismiss the appeal, and confirm the decision of the Zillah Judge, with costs."

The Plaintiff appealed from this judgment to Her Majesty in Council.

The other suit was instituted on the 18th of August, 1848, by Dyce Sombre and Larkins, the Committee of the lunatic's estate, against the Government, in the same

Court, to recover the value of certain arms, guns, military stores, equipments and cattle, which it was alleged the Begum Sunroo had bequeathed [117] by her Will to Dyce Sombre, and which had been taken possession of by the Government. The question of limitation in this suit, as raised by the pleadings, slightly differed from the other case in this respect. The Begum Sunroo died on the 19th of January, 1836, and at her death the Government took possession, but, as contended by the Plaintiffs, not adversely, but only for safe custody until the claim of Dyce Sombre was investigated by the Government; that it was until the 18th of August, in that year, that he received intimation by a letter from the Government, dated the 13th of that month, which distinctly notified to him the intention of the Government to appropriate to their own use the arms, etc., as belonging to the Government, and not to the estate of the deceased Begum; and it was insisted by the Plaintiffs, that the cause of action then took place, and that from that period the limitation of twelve years prescribed by cl. 3, sec. 18, of Ben. Reg. II. of 1803, was to be calculated. In the view their Lordships took of the effect of the lunacy during the running of the twelve years, this point was not decided by them, and, therefore, it is immaterial further to notice it. The same defence was pleaded by the Government to this suit, and the determination of the Courts in India was confined to the question of limitation, the merits, as in the former suit, not having been entered into. The Zillah Court at Delhi and the Sudder Dewanny Court at Agra held that the hearing of the suit was barred by Ben. Reg. II. of 1803. Hence this appeal, as in the former suit, to the Queen in Council.

Before any steps were taken in the appeals or petition of appeal lodged, and on the 1st of July, [118] 1851, Dyce Sombre died intestate, still continuing up to that time a lunatic. Special administration of the estate and effects of Dyce Sombre was granted to Mary Anne Dyce Sombre, his widow. Larkins, the Committee of the lunatic's estate, also died on the 14th of September, 1856.

In these circumstances a petition was presented (Feb. 17, 1857*) to revive, in which it was submitted, that the Petitioners, Ann May Troup and Georgiana Solaroli, by reason of Dyce Sombre dying intestate, as his sisters and only coheirresses, were entitled to the Altumgha as an inheritable Jaghire; and that the other Petitioner, Mrs. Dyce Sombre, as such administratrix, was entitled to the mesne profits which accrued in respect of the Jaghire during the lifetime and up to the death of her husband, and it was further submitted, that under the circumstances the appeal was abated, and that the Petitioners were entitled to have the same revived; and the petition concluded by praying that the appeal might stand revived, and that the Petitioners might be allowed to come in and prosecute the appeal in the place of Larkins, as such Committee. Another petition to revive and prosecute the appeal in the arms suit in the place of Dyce Sombre and Larkins, was also presented by Mrs. Dyce Sombre, as the administratrix and sole legal personal representative of her husband's estate.

Mr. Leith, for the Petitioners, moved in both appeals to revive.

By Orders in Council, it was directed that the ap-[119]-peals should be revived, and that leave be granted to the Appellants to prosecute the same.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Ayrton, for the Appellants, in the first appeal.

The Attorney-General (Sir R. Bethell), Mr. Leith, and Mr. Wm. Jervis, for the Appellant, in the second appeal.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. W. H. Melvill, for the East India Company, in both appeals.

The arguments turned upon the following points:—

As to the operation of the Ben. Reg. II. of 1803, sec. 18, cl. 3, as a bar to the suits. Upon the facts admitted by the pleadings—First, the lunacy of Dyce Sombre, whether that fact brought the case within the exception contained in that Regulation as a "good and sufficient cause" to take it out of operation of the limitation of twelve years; and, secondly, whether the period of limitation applicable to the case was twelve years, or the more extended period of sixty years provided by Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, sec. 3, cl. 3. The authorities relied upon were—upon the construction of Ben. Reg. II. of 1803, sec. 18, cl. 3, by the Courts in the North-Western Provinces, in the cases of Rajah Chetpal Singh v. Sheo Gholam Singh (3 Dec. N.W.P. 206), Ramtchul Singh v. Koonwur Surruddowun Singh (5 Dec. N.W.P. 280), and Dharmee Dhur v. Sookhee Chund (11 Dec. N.W.P. 280), being contrary to the decisions of the Bengal Courts, upon that Regulation and upon the Ben. Regs. of 1793, sec. 14, 11 of 1819, and XIV. of 1825, the cases Sheikh Imdad Ali v. Mussumat Kauthy Begum (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 1), The Collector of Rung-pee v. Gudadhur Chatterjee (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 443), Rancee Bhooabun Maya v. Bhgrub Indernarain Rancee (S.D.A. Decis. Ben. 513), Bhgrub Indernarain Rancee v. Rancee Bhooabun Maya Deba (S.D.A. Decis. Ben. 676), Imaun Buskh Khan v. Nanab Dehaur Jung (1 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 190), Syed Hussein Reza v. Ameroonissa (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 124, 316), were referred to, and also by the Madras Courts, upon the Madras Regulation of Limitation II. of 1803, sec. 18, cl. 11, which followed the construction put by the Bengal Courts, Madras Civil Proc., pp. 236-7-8. As to the time occupied in applying to the Government, Oma Dial Singh v. Mussumat Tej Rancee (S.D.A. Decis. Ben. 378), Rup Chand Sahu v. Jivan Lal Ray (5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 168). So with respect to the operation of the English Statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. I. ch. 16, sec. 2, Her Highness Ruckmabhoy v. Lulloobhoy Mottichund (5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 234), Douglas v. Forrest (4 Bingh. 686).

That laches would not be imputed by the English law to a lunatic, Burcher's case (Hobart's Rep. 137). Or to a lunatic, or an infant whose guardian had neglected to sue, Macpherson "On Civil Procedure," p. 70 (Edit. 1850). They also referred, by way of analogy, to the Law of Scotland, where in cases of prescription, disability has been held to operate as a suspension, Erskine's "Principles of the Law of Scotland," pp. 384-9, Burton's "Manual of the Law of Scotland," p. 446.

And, in the second suit, upon the question when the conversion took place, and the cause of action arose, the cases of Smith v. Young (1 Camb. 411), Phillpott v. Kelley (3 Ad. and El. 106), Montague v. Lord Sandrich (7 Mod. 99), were referred to.

[121] Their Lordships' judgment in both appeals was delivered by

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce (Feb. 2, 1858).—The main question raised by these appeals is the true construction of a passage contained in the third clause of the eighteenth section of the Bengal Regulation II. of 1803, with reference to the undisputed facts, affecting or not affecting the suits brought by the appeals before us. I say the "undisputed facts," for the facts disputed are, in the view taken by their Lordships, not, for the present purpose, material. The clause is thus worded—[His Lordship here read the clause, ante [7 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 105].

The appeals are against judgments of the Sudder Dewanny Court of Agra, affirming judgments of the Zillah Court of Delhi, which, in two civil suits instituted against the Respondents in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen at Delhi, and transferred afterwards to the Zillah Court of Delhi, gave effect to so much of their defence in each case as, founded on the clause before referred to of the Regulation, was analogous to what in England is called a plea of the Statute of Limitations. The residue of their defence, therefore, did not—the merits did not—in either Court receive any determination.

The suits were instituted in the year 1848; the original Plaintiffs having been Dyce Sombre, a person of mixed European and Asiatic descent, who had become insane some years before, and the Committee of his estate, under a Commission of lunacy issued against him in England, where Dyce Sombre passed some portion of his life after the year 1836, the year in which the alleged causes of action in the [122] suits took place. He was living when each of the judgments were pronounced, but died in the year 1851, and some time after that event, the suits having been commenced in respect of property, movable and immovable, in the North Western Provinces of India, which he, before his lunacy, and the Committee for him after the Commission, claimed against the Respondents, the proceedings were revived by the present Appellants, the representatives respectively of the lunatic after his death, as to the lands and goods in litigation—an amount of property, together, of considerable extent and value; all which had been in the possession of a wealthy Begum called "Sumroo," who resided, and was, nominally at least, a kind of small Sovereign, at Sirdhana in those Provinces, and died there at an advanced age in the year 1836.

Dyce Sombre seems to have stood towards her in the relation of an adopted son, or in an analogous position, and succeeded to the bulk, at least, of her riches: which included, as he said and insisted, the lands and movables in dispute, of which, indeed, or some at least of which, she appears to have, so far as was within her power, made to him a donation, in her lifetime; and he seems to have had them, or some part of them at least, in his possession, accordingly, before and at the time of her decease. Soon after that event, and in the same year, 1836, the Respondents claiming the property in controversy seized it—we do not say with violence, but seized it: asserting and acting upon their alleged right in the most practical manner. They have never relinquished the property thus rightfully resumed (as the Respondents say), or, as the Appellants contend, wrongfully taken.

[123] Dyce Sombre never submitted to this, except that he instituted no suit. He objected, remonstrated, memorialized, represented himself as unjustly treated; but, whether wisely or otherwise, did not resort to a Court of Justice. It was the Committee of his estate, that, in the year 1848, did so, using both their names.

Dyce Sombre was at Sirdhana, we believe, when the Begum died; he was then, we also believe, upwards of twenty-one years of age; and (as for every present purpose it must be taken) was, at that time, neither insane nor under any other disability, a state of things which must be deemed to have continued uninterruptedly for several years next after her death, except as to his residence. He probably remained at Sirdhana for some weeks at least next following her decease, and in Asia during the whole of the year 1836, and part, at least, of the year 1837. He came to Europe about the end of the year 1838, and never was again in the East Indies. The Commission of lunacy issued in the year 1843. He was found under it to have been a lunatic from some time in the year 1842. The Commission of lunacy was never superseded, and we must, for the purpose of these appeals, consider it as clear and admitted, that from a time previous to the end of the year 1842, and thenceforth continually to his death, he was an insane person (see the case of Prinsep and The East India Company v. Dyce Sombre and others, 10 Moore's P.C. Cases, 232, upon the question of the sanity of Dyce Sombre's mind at this period). The acts of which the suits complained, were done in the year 1836. It was in that year that the Respondents took possession of the disputed property of each kind, which, alleged by those proceedings to be wrongful, was the groundwork of the suits.

[124] And, we assume that possession to have been taken and those acts to have been done before August, 1836, while it was in August, 1848, and not before, that the complaints were filed. The Respondents, on this ground, by their answers to the complaints, set up the 3rd clause of the 18th section of the Bengal Regulation II. of 1803 (already mentioned), as barring the suits. They set up also other defences, valid or invalid, just or unjust, with which we are not at present concerned. The Zillah Judge, considering the limiting Regulation to apply to the cases, dismissed the complaints for that reason in the year 1849, and his opinion was affirmed on appeal in the year 1850, by the Sudder Dewanny Court at Agra. From which judgment, in each instance, the appeals now before us have been brought.

The representatives of Dyce Sombre, being by revivor the present Appellants, allege with truth, that the acts of which the complaints complained, and for which they sought redress, having been done in the year 1836, were, therefore, done less than eight years before the time of issuing the Commission of lunacy, and less than seven years before the commencement of the state of insanity in which Dyce Sombre, as I have also said, was continually from some time in the year 1842 until his death. And the only question that we can, or at least need, now decide is, whether, in that condition of circumstances, the alleged bar is effectual: whether indeed such a bar has taken place. Their Lordships think not.

The words of the clause of the Regulation upon which the controversy mainly or altogether turns, are, "shall prove that, either from minority or other good and sufficient cause, he was precluded from obtaining redress;" words the last four of which are [125] especially remarkable, and which, of course, to be construed without reference to the context, seem to their Lordships of difficult interpretation, nor are they surprised that the meaning should have been viewed differently by different minds.

But we conceive, that "other good and sufficient cause" must include insanity

(whether there has been a Commission of lunacy or Committee of the estate appointed, or any analogous measure, or not); and that the word "precluded," which must necessarily be understood as referring to some time or period, does not mean "precluded" during the whole of the term of twelve years, or at its commencement, but means, in effect, "precluded" during any part of it. The conclusion at which we have arrived on the subject is rather, therefore, that reached by the Sudder Courts of Bengal in analogous cases, than that of the Zillah Court of Delhi and the Sudder Court of Agra, in the present. Those two Courts, it is right to add, having acted, or intended to act, conformably to the spirit of former decisions of Courts within the North-Western Provinces, in holding, as they did, on the hypothesis of twelve years and more, from the time of the accruing of the cause of action, in each case, having elapsed before either plaint was filed, and Dyce Sombre having been in the North-Western Provinces, and under no disability when such cause of action accrued, and for a considerable period afterwards, and having been a free man, of sound mind, until some time in the year 1842, and the Committee of his estate in the lunacy having been appointed to that office in the year 1844, that the question, under the Regulation, was substantially whether the lunatic and his estate (so to speak) had been guilty of negligence; [126] and had not exhibited reasonable and due diligence in prosecuting the claims; and the Delhi and Agra Judges, being of opinion that that question ought to be answered against Dyce Sombre and the Committee of his estate, decided accordingly. Their Lordships are of opinion, with the Bengal Sudder Courts, that the meaning and intention of the framers of the Regulation are shown by it to have been that, in computing the twelve years mentioned in it, there should not be reckoned any time elapsing while the person, for the time being entitled to seek redress, was not free from disability. Here, if we are right, the Appellants are certainly clear of the Regulation, the time between the commencement of Dyce Sombre's lunacy, in the year 1842, and his death, being not to be counted against him. The suits having been instituted in the year 1848, were, therefore, in their Lordships' judgment, as effectually instituted as if they had been so in the year 1844; their Lordships considering themselves bound to give effect to the language of the Regulation as they interpret it: language very different from that of the English Statute law on such subject. They deem it right to say, in addition, that had they, with the Courts at Delhi and Agra, considered it to be properly, under the Regulation, a question of judicial discretion, whether in the circumstances of the particular cases, or either of them to hold the actions, or either of them, barred, their Lordships would have been disposed to think the Respondents wrong on that point also.

Their Lordships do not consider it necessary to intimate an opinion as to any other point raised in the argument of either appeal, nor do they wish to be understood as suggesting, that if Dyce Sombre had [127] in the year 1844 recovered from his insanity, and without any relapse or interruption continued a sane man from that time until his death, and lived, in fact, until some time in the year 1852, and had in that year instituted against the Respondents suits such as those instituted in 1848, mutatis mutandis, and the suits of 1848 had not existed, the suits of 1852 would not have been effectually barred by the Regulation. As matters, however, are, their Lordships, on the grounds that have been stated, hold, that the judgments under appeal should be reversed, and, with that reversal, the whole matter remitted; the Respondents paying the Indian costs so far as occasioned by the defence on the ground of lapse of time founded on the Regulation, and the cost of the appeals to Her Majesty, to whom their Lordships will report accordingly.

[128] UNIDE RAJAH RAJE BOMMARAUZE BAHADUR, -Appellant; PEMMASAMY VENKATADRY NAIDOO and Others.—Respondents * [Dec. 12, 13, 1858].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras.

Amaram, or service tenure, in Madras, is resumable at the will of the Zemindar for the time being in possession, where the lands held under an amaram grant form part of his Zemindary [7 Moo. Ind. App. 132, 133].

A grant in Enam, is in perpetuity, and not resumable [7 Moo. Ind. App. 132, 133]. Lands held under an amaram grant from a former Zemindar, at a fixed rent, resumed by the Zemindar in possession, for the purpose of full assessment of the lands, upon extinction of the services.

The rules with regard to the admissibility of evidence are not to be observed with the same strictness in proceedings in the native Courts in India as in the Courts in England.

Copy of a document coming out of a public office, and certified by the proper officer of that department as a copy of a copy deposited there, admitted as evidence [7 Moo. Ind. App. 139].

In this case the appeal was brought from a decree of the Sudder Dewanny Court at Madras, by which the claim of the Plaintiff (the Appellant's father), the then Zemindar of Karvetinugger, to resume a village named Veraraghavapuram, forming part of his Zemindary, was dismissed, on the ground that the Respondents and their ancestors had been in uninterrupted possession of the village for fifty years, and that the Zemindar had failed to establish that the village was [129] held by the Respondents on Amaram, or service tenure, so as to justify the resumption for assessment.

The question was one of tenure and of the right of resumption. The main issues between the parties being these:—

First. What was the nature of the tenure under which the Respondents held the village in question. The Appellant contended that it was held by the Respondents under a grant by his great-grandfather in favour of an ancestor of the Respondents on his joining the military adherents of the Zemindary, and that it was subsequently, down to the year 1840, granted to such of the members of the Respondents' family as were employed in the service of the Zemindar for the time being, by way of remuneration for such services; that in 1840, the Zemindar dismissed his servants and resumed, among others, this village, it being from the nature of the tenure liable to be resumed at the will of the Zemindar. The case of the Respondents, on the contray, was, that they and their ancestors had, since the year 1798, held the proprietary right of soil in the village as an Enam, or gift in perpetuity, from the Appellant's ancestor; that they never paid rent for the same either in money or services, and, consequently, that the village was not liable to be resumed at the will of the Zemindar for the time being. Secondly; assuming that the village was held by the Respondents only upon an Amaram tenure, they denied that the tenure was determined, and the village resumed by the Appellants' father in the year 1840.

The principal facts of the case, as they appeared from the pleadings, are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The documentary and oral [130] evidence bearing on the points at issue is also fully set forth therein.

The appeal was argued by Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. Blaine, for the Appellant; and Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Mackeson, for the Respondents.

Upon the question of tenure in Madras, of lands held under an Amaram grant being vested in the Zemindar, and his right to resume them for the purpose of assessment, Mad. Reg. XXV. of 1802 was referred to.

And as to the admissibility as evidence of a copy of a Kaifiynamah, out of the Collector's Office, Syud Abbas Ali Khan v. Faderm Ramy Reddy (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 156) was cited.

Their Lordships, without calling for a reply, delivered judgment by

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington.—Considering that the decision in this case may affect a very considerable amount of property, besides that which is the proper subject of this suit; and seeing that the two Courts in India have pronounced conflicting judgments, we should, had we entertained any doubt whatever as to the advice which we should tender to her Majesty, have been anxious to have heard a reply, and to have taken time for consideration; but the case is, in our judgment, so clear, that only one result can possibly be come to, and, there[131]-fore, we proceed at once to declare the opinion we have formed upon the questions before us.

The parties to this appeal are, the Zemindar of one of the four western Zemindaries of Arcot, the original Plaintiff, and now Appellant; and certain persons occupying lands within the Zemindary, who were the Defendants, and are now the Respondents.

The suit commenced in 1848, in the Zillah Court of Chittore. The plaint stated that the Zemindary was originally granted by the Rajah of Arcot to the ancestors of the Plaintiff; and that on the accession of the British Government, that grant was confirmed under certain conditions. It then sets forth that certain grants were made to the ancestors of the Respondents, in the nature of "Amaram" grants; that these grants were resumable; and that, in the year 1811, the Plaintiff resumed those grants, and required the Respondent to pay the full assessment on their lands; and it concluded by stating that the demand was for Rs. 13,597, being the amount due on such assessment, including interest.

The answer of the Respondents was to the following effect: that their ancestors rendered great services to the ancestors of the Plaintiff; that, in requital for these services, a grant was made to them of several Districts, then a jungle, amongst which lands was the village in question; but they denied that they held it on condition of rendering any service, or that they rendered any; and alleged that they held it under a Sunud from the Appellant's ancestors. They then stated that this action ought not to have been brought for the recovery of the arrears, but ought to have been brought for the village itself. They did not deny that a Jodi or quit-rent was paid for the village, but [132] alleged that that Jodi was fixed, and permanent, and never was, or could lawfully be, increased. They distinctly denied the power of the Zemindar to resume or alter the grant enjoyed by them.

The reply called upon the Court to ask for the document under which the Respondents alleged they held the village, and referred to various facts and circumstances as tending to establish the Appellant's right, as set forth in the plaint. There was a rejoinder on behalf of the Respondents, which was, as the other pleadings are, in great part, an argument on the evidence to be produced.

It seemed prudent to the advisers of the Appellant to file a supplemental plaint for the recovery of the village.

The real question between the parties is; under what tenure the Respondents held the village? On the part of the Respondents they say it was of Enam tenure. The Appellant contends that it was an Amaram tenure.

Before proceeding further, it may be expedient to consider the nature of these tenures, and the incidents consequent thereon.

There has been much controversy, in argument at least, as to the meaning of these words, though we find no such doubt in either the Zillah or Sudder Dewanny Courts. We apprehend that the word "Enam" originally meant a grant generally; that such grants were of various descriptions—as an Altumgha Enam, which meant a grant in perpetuity, not resumable by the Zemindar. That there were various other grants, as set forth in the statement of Mr. Stratton, hereafter referred to, as grants for religious or charitable purposes; and also two other descriptions of grants, [133] called "Amaram," and "Kattubady," and that the latter grants were grants resumable. Probably, in process of time, when the word "Enam" alone was used, it meant a grant in perpetuity, not resumable. But there is not the least reason to suppose that when the term "Amaram" was applied, it did not mean a grant resumable at the pleasure of the Zemindar. We think that this explanation will, in very great measure at least, be confirmed by the reference we shall presently make to the evidence in the cause. For instance, in the judgment of the Zillah Court, the Judge states that the Defendants contend that the grant was not a service Enam, evidently showing that "Enam" was a word to be qualified according to its own conditions. That an Amaram grant was resumable, is assumed throughout the judgment.

The title of the Appellant to the Zemindary is not a matter in dispute; but we will refer to the documents upon which that title is founded, in order to ascertain the powers which he was authorized to exercise under that title.

What were the powers of a Zemindar, of one of these Zemindaries, prior to the year 1802, it might be difficult to define with perfect accuracy; but we may presume, as we think we are fairly entitled to do, and with no disadvantage to the Respondents, that they were at least commensurate with the powers stated to belong to a Zemindar in 1802. The most important documents on this subject are, first, a letter of Mr. Stratton, the Collector of the Northern division of Arcot, to the Board of Revenue, which is dated the 14th of July, 1801, put in evidence by the Plaintiff; in the fourteenth paragraph of that letter, he [134] states that the Poligars, that is, the Zemindars, are at liberty to resume the Amaram Enams, without assigning any reasons to the respective occupants; the word "Amaram" being used by him as an adjective. The next document, and a most important one it is, is dated the 24th of August, 1802, and is produced by the Respondents; and it may be remarked, by the way, that it is verified as a true copy by Mr. Bourdillon, the Collector. It is a letter from Lord Clive, then Governor of Madras, to the then Zemindar of this Zemindary. That document states that, from 1792, the Zemindary was subjected exclusively to the British Government, that the established Peish Cush alone was paid, and that the Zemindary was free from all other charge except the military establishments; it proceeds to relieve the Zemindar from all military services, and to fix a payment instead: and this letter further states that a Sunud, fixing the sum of star pagodas to be paid, is transmitted. In the seventh paragraph of this letter, Lord Clive refers to the revenue which will revert to the Zemindar from the Amaram Peons; or, in other words, he points out that the military service on which such Amarams were held, being discontinued, the revenue would revert to the Zemindar. The eleventh paragraph is to the same effect.

The Sunud mentioned in that letter sets forth the facts already stated, provides for a transfer by a sale or gift, commits the police to the Zemindar, requires engagements with the Ryots to be in writing, and confirms to the Zemindar in perpetuity the Zemindary.

The next document is a letter from Mr. Stratton to [135] the Judge at Chittore, dated the 17th of January, 1807, and in that letter he expressly declares that Amaram grants were resumable.

Now, without going further, the following facts appear to be established:—

First. That the Appellant is the Zemindar of the Zemindary, with the authority, and under the obligation, already stated.

Secondly. That the lands in question are within the Zemindary.

Thirdly. That the Respondents hold under a grant either in perpetuity or resumable.

Fourthly. That Amaram grants are resumable at pleasure.

It may not be necessary in this case to consider minutely upon whom the onus probandi is—under the circumstances stated—thrown: it is more convenient to look at the evidence in the case, and to see what the result is, when all the facts proved in evidence are taken into consideration. We will proceed then to the Respondents' evidence as to their title to a grant in perpetuity, or what is called, in these proceedings, an Enam grant.

It must be recollected that in the defence of the Respondents, they state that they and their ancestors enjoyed this property under the Sunud granted by the Appellant's ancestors, and that they paid the prescribed Roosums. Now, the only document upon which any reliance can be placed in support of this avowal, is a statement of the boundaries of the village Kaverirajpuram, and is dated the 24th of July, 1798. It is difficult to say from whom this document comes, or to whom it is addressed. The Zillah Court apprehended it to be an order from the chief officer of the [136] then Zemindar to the Respondents' ancestor. Now this document has neither the name of the grantor nor grantee, nor are there any words of grant in it, nor any conditions of any kind: it is simply a statement of certain limits to certain villages, concluding with an order that they should be reclaimed through Vellore Vama Naidoo.

Giving the utmost latitude of construction to this instrument, it appears to us wholly impossible to contend that it is a grant of any description whatever, though it may be a direction that the ancestors of the Respondents should be permitted to reclaim the lands in question. There is no other documentary evidence whatever to establish the Respondents' title, and, therefore, we must presume that this document is the Sunud, or grant, upon which they rely, as mentioned in their answer to the plaint.

The claim of the Respondents, therefore, is founded upon an existing grant, and the case is not, and cannot be, assimilated to a claim founded upon a long continuous possession, where the title-deed is alleged to have been lost, and, therefore, that its existence and contents might be presumed. There is no such averment in this case, neither is there any other documentary evidence whatever tending to prove any grant. We must now turn our attention to the documents brought forward by the Appellant.

In considering the further evidence produced, the document entitled to the greatest weight, provided it be clearly admissible in evidence, is a copy of a Kaiifynamah. That document purports to be addressed to the East India Company, and to have been given by the third Defendant in this suit; it is dated the 19th of July, 1842, and is certified to be a true copy, [137] by J. D. Bourdillon, the Collector; and it is an admitted fact that Mr. Bourdillon was appointed Collector in 1848, about the time when this suit commenced. Objections have been taken to the admissibility of this document as evidence, and it has been contended to be a copy of a copy. With regard to the admissibility of evidence in the Native Courts in India, we think, that no strict rule can be prescribed. However highly we may value the rules of evidence as acknowledged and carried out in our own Courts, we cannot think that those rules could be applied with the same strictness to the reception of evidence before the Native Courts in the East Indies, where it is perfectly manifest the practitioners and the Judges have not that intimate acquaintance with the principles which govern the reception of evidence in our own Tribunals; we must look to their practice, we must look to the essential justice of the case, and not hastily reject any evidence, because it may not be accordant with our own practice. We must endeavour, as far as the materials will allow us, having received the evidence, to ascertain what weight ought properly to be ascribed to it, and, more especially, where we find that it has been the practice of the Court to receive documentary evidence, without the strict proof which might here be considered necessary, we must not reject that evidence; indeed, the consequence of so doing would inevitably be, if the strict rule were adhered to, to reject the most important evidence, not only in this case, but almost in every other. Looking through the whole of these papers, we see that both on the side of the Appellant and Respondents, copies of documents coming out of a public office have been received upon the certificate that [138] they were true copies, signed by the officer in the charge of that department, and that whether produced by the Plaintiff or the Defendants in the cause.

We entertain no doubt, therefore, that this document must be received in evidence, but what weight is to be ascribed to it still remains to be considered; all we know of it at present from the certificate of the Collector is, that it is a copy of a document remaining in his office, whether the copy of an original, or of the copy of an original, at present non constat. It has been contended on the part of the Respondents, that it is a document of no authority, being merely the copy of a copy; but they have not in their pleadings denied its authenticity, nor have they produced any evidence to prove that it is undeserving of credit, nor is it impeached in either of the judgments. Now, whether this Kaiifynamah was given by one of the Defendants or not, is a fact within his own knowledge. This document, however, is attempted to be impeached through the medium of the evidence of one of the Appellant's witnesses, and to that evidence we shall now direct our attention. That witness was Balagurunada Pillay, a Sampratee, or accountant under the Zemindar, and he was cross examined on behalf of the present Respondents, and the commencement of that cross examination relates to certain Sunuds. After that cross-examination, he is questioned as to this Kaiifynamah. He states the contents of that Kaiifynamah, that it was given to the Seristadar, and forwarded by him to the Collector, and that he has a copy of it. He is asked when he got the copy. He says it is in a book which was returned to the Zemindar by the Collector, [139] and he says he has brought that book. He says the copies of the Sunuds were taken when the Defendant gave the Kypheyut, and were there in the book, and that no copies were kept in the Collector's office, either of the Sunuds or other vouchers. He is asked whether the copies of the Kypheyut and Sunuds entered in the book bear the signatures of the Seristadar, or of one of the Defendants; and he says, "No." He is asked whether they bear the signature of the Collector to prove that the book was returned from the Collector's office. He says they do not.

Now, it is perfectly manifest, upon consideration of this evidence, that it in no degree whatever proves that the document, called a Kaiifynamah, was the copy inquired of by the question; but, on the contrary, that the question put to this witness related to the book by him produced, and the copies therein contained, and not to that document; and this is more especially evinced by his deposing, that the copies of which he was speaking did not bear the signature of the Collector; whereas upon the face of this document, it does bear that signature.

This evidence, however, is of importance, and great importance too, to show that the original Kypheyut was deposited in the Collector's office, and that this document is a copy of that original. The witness swears that the original was forwarded to the Collector.

We entertain no doubt whatever that this document is entitled to be received as evidence in this case, and we proceed to consider its contents, and the inferences to be drawn from them.

It is not denied that this Kaiifynamah was given by one of the Respondents, and he describes himself as an Amardar. This Kaiifynamah states the history of [140] the family and of the grants made to them, and it especially refers in the third paragraph to a Sunud dated the 31st of July, 1798, to a grant under Amaram tenure, stating it to be Doomballa, or rent-free Kandighy; and in the sixth paragraph, which more especially relates to this property, the grant is stated of this village to be under Amaram tenure, with a Jodi of fifty star pagodas, under a Sunud, dated the 1st of April, 1818. The eleventh paragraph refers to a Sunud, dated the 31st of July, 1835, relating to another grant of this village.

This is a very brief summary of the contents of this document. It is a possible case looking at the extensive powers with which the Zemindar is invested, that the grant being originally "Amaram," and resumable, might, when the military service was dispensed with, and circumstances had changed, been converted into a perpetual grant upon a fixed payment. Had this been the case, it ought to have been distinctly pleaded, and the grants themselves, if produced, would have shown whether such defence could be supported.

Now, bearing in mind that this is a document coming from the Respondents themselves, and setting forth the Sunuds under which they hold the village, and claiming in 1812, rights in respect thereof, we necessarily ask why the Respondents have not produced those documents? In every view of the case it was incumbent upon them so to do: first, as tenants of the Zemindar, holding property under him; secondly, as being in possession of the titles upon which they held their property, and on which in this document they found their claims.

In the argument which was addressed to us from [141] the bar, we have not been able to discover any reason whatever why this obligation has not been fulfilled. Much time has been occupied in endeavouring to prove that the copies of these Sunuds produced by the Appellant ought not to be received in evidence; whereas it had been much more beneficially employed in showing, if it had been practicable, why the Respondents had not produced in evidence the very documents which they vouched as their titles.

As to the parol evidence of the Respondents, it is clearly entitled to no weight whatever; indeed, it is wholly inadmissible. How can we receive parol evidence of the contents of documents from those who have the custody of those very documents? We need not add that such parol evidence is in direct contradiction of the Respondents' own statement in the Kaifiynamah.

Now, if the case rested here, to what conclusion must we necessarily come? Why, that the Respondents held under Amaram tenure; and if they held under Amaram tenure, it is equally clear that such grants were resumable at pleasure; if this be not the true construction to be put upon their own representation, it is the fault of the Respondents themselves that they did not produce those very documents, which, upon a perusal of their contents, would have set the question entirely at rest.

Such being the necessary inference to be drawn from the case, so far as we have considered it, we deem it wholly unnecessary to enter into an investigation of the subsidiary evidence, not that we mean thereby to say that any part thereof ought to be rejected, but that it is not necessary to take it into our consideration.

[142] We shall not, therefore, expend time in considering the admissibility or weight of the copies of the Sunuds produced, nor of the Jumabundy accounts, or the muster-rolls, and much less is it necessary to look to the parol evidence of the Appellant. We have the admission of the Respondents themselves that they hold under Amaram grants, which, in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, are resumable grants; the grants, or Sunuds, themselves are their own proper evidence to clear up any difficulty; and those they have not produced. We have no hesitation, therefore, in coming to the conclusion, that the Respondents held under grants which were resumable at the pleasure of the Zemindar.

The question of resumption remains to be disposed of. The contest in this case is, whether what is called an "attachment" took place or not: the precise meaning of this word "attachment" is not explained. We apprehend the fact to be, that so long as the lands remain in the actual possession of the Respondents, upon payment of a certain Kist, and the rendering certain services, the Zemindar, though entitled to resume, was of course bound to give notice, and that in some public form. The resumption consists in putting an end to the grant under which the Respondents held, remitting the services, and requiring them to pay the full assessment. It does not appear that an absolute dispossession was either attempted or intended, though means were taken to prevent the Respondents reaping the crops.

In the account for 1831, there is an entry of a Jodi paid by the Respondent, Pemmasamy Venkatadry Naidoo, of fifty pagodas, and increased thirty pagodas. In the accounts for 1841, there is no entry of pay-[143]-ment of Jodi at all. This is the year in which it is alleged the resumption took place. In this account is found a statement that the village having been taken under attachment, certain accounts were not furnished. Now, this entry is strong evidence to show that an attachment did take place in 1841. We see not the least reason to suppose that this document is not genuine and trustworthy, nor the slightest cause to suspect that such an entry as this could be forged for the purposes of this suit. Whether it be the attachment of the Zemindar, or of the Sircar, is not so certain.

There is a document relative to this question on which the Respondents have greatly relied, and which, therefore, it may be desirable to notice. It is an extract from the proceedings of the Session Court of Chittore, dated the 19th of July, 1849, and produced by the Respondents, though erroneously classed with the Appellant's evidence. It appears from that document, that certain Enamdars of the village in question had been filed by the Magistrate for a riot; one of them is a Respondent in this case; the alleged riot was in September, 1848, the charge being that the Respondents molested the Appellant's servants when they went to make the account of the lands. The Head Assistant Magistrate was of opinion that the Zemindar was justified in pursuing this course under an order of the Collector, and fined the tenants, and the Magistrate confirmed this order. The case appears to have been appealed to the Session Court, and that Court was of opinion that the order of the Collector was simply to attach the property of Ryots, or others in arrear, as prescribed by the Regulation. The Court thought the Zemindar was the first trespasser-[144]-passer, that there had been no regular attachment of the village, and set aside the fine. The importance of this document is the denial of an attachment; but be it remembered that the plaint was filed on the 21st of October following.

It is remarkable that the Judge of the Sessions Court was Mr. Lovell, and that this same gentleman was, in 1850, the Judge of the civil Court of the Zillah of Chittore; that he had to decide upon this very question, attachment or no attachment, that being the first issue before him. He held that the attachment was proved, and he relies upon the evidence, documentary and parol, therein cited. The first document is an order in writing from the Zemindar to the Amildar to resume the lands. This order is dated the 9th of June, 1840, and is proved by the eighth witness. This document proves the intention of the Zemindar to resume.

The parol evidence is to the following effect:—The third witness for the Plaintiff, Jampuram Tirupatirauze, deposes to the fact of the village being sequestered about 1842, and from a subsequent question it is apparent that the sequestration and attachment mean the same thing. This witness was present when the Zemindar ordered the resumption of the village, though not at the actual resumption. It is proper to observe that prior to the resumption of these grants, various services fully set forth were remitted to the Respondents. The fourth witness, Ramaya, saw the order of resumption written, though not present at the resumption. Many witnesses depose that from the time of the resumption the personal services ceased. Amongst other duties were those of attacking tigers. The eighth witness, Balagurumada Pillay, gives [145] very important testimony: but after the decision we have already come to as to the description of the tenure under which the Respondents held the village, it is not necessary to refer to that evidence save as it bears on the question of resumption or attachment. This witness gives a detail of the various Sunuds under which this village was held from 1798; but we need not travel through this evidence. It appears that in 1831, when the village was under the management of the Court of Wards, the former Jodi of 50 pagodas was raised to 80 pagodas; that the Respondents, or their ancestors, continued to hold the village on service tenure, at a Jodi of 80 pagodas, till the 13th of May, 1840, when, according to the evidence of this witness, a resumption took place and has ever since continued. He annexes an account showing what is demanded. One of the Respondents was from 1839-40, Moniegar of the village till 1846-7, and it was his duty to collect the revenue. Part of the time, namely, in 1842, the Zemindary was under Sircar attachment. In 1845-6, in consequence of the alleged resumption, demand of the arrears was made from the Respondents. In answer to the 79th question, he states that he was not present at the resumption: that the village has been in the Respondent's possession since Keelaka (January); and prior to that year in that of the Zemindar.

Several of the witnesses speak in general terms to the resumption of the village. The thirteenth witness, Shashirekha Peroomal, a Moniegar, proclaimed the resumption, and carried out the order. The deposition of the fourteenth witness, Verasawmy Pillay, explains the whole transaction in answer to the fourteenth question. The village was attached, and the Respondents directed to collect the revenue according to the rules observable when a village is under attachment, and this accounts for the Respondents remaining in possession. The seventeenth witness, Streenevassiengar, saw the attachment published. A letter from the Acting Collector, dated the 24th of June, 1843, tends to establish the truth of these statements; for it proves that in 1843, a representation was made to the Collector by the officers of the Zemindar, that though the former Jodi was paid, the remainder, that is, the assessment, was withheld.

The only contradiction to this is, that the two first of the Respondents' witnesses say that they never saw the village resumed. The third witness knew nothing about it, nor does the fourth.

Then what is the result of our examination into this question of resumption or attachment? We do not find in any of these papers, that the law has prescribed any particular form in which such resumption shall take place; nor, if there was such form prescribed by law, that it has in any specified particular not been complied with. Of course justice requires that a resumption should take place with due publicity and upon reasonable notice. We have abundance of evidence that a formal instrument of resumption was executed by the Zemindar, that such resumption was publicly proclaimed, that the Respondents were allowed to retain possession, but required to pay the full assessment; but, when they were in default, complaint was made to the Collector that the Zemindar took forcible measures, perhaps erroneously, to obtain his claim. All the accounts correspond with the evidence of the witnesses; and against this, is only the isolated fact, that Mr. Lovell, upon one occasion, with imperfect information (for [147] the case was one of a riot), thought that no regular attachment had issued—an opinion which he altered when the case came regularly before him, and he was supplied with that evidence which before had been deficient. It is true that the Collector, when the Zemindar complained that he could not pay the pesh cush by reason that the Respondents withheld their payments, expressed an opinion that the grants could not be resumed, and that an attempt to do so would lead to litigation; but this was merely the opinion of the Collector, manifestly ignorant of the true state of the case.

In the judgment pronounced by the Sudder Dewanny Court, they say that the probability is, that the attachment never actually took place, although no doubt there was an attempt made to effect it. At all events, they say the village appears never to have been taken out of the possession of the Respondents; we cannot think that this reasoning ought to prevail against the evidence in the case. The Respondents, if left in possession at all, were in possession as the servants of the Zemindar, and on condition of collecting the revenue.

The short history of the case is this:—The Respondents were grantees under resumable grants; that those grants were resumed by the Zemindar; and they remained in possession without payment of that assessment which they were lawfully bound to discharge, and for such arrears of assessment this suit is brought. We are of opinion, that the decree of the Zillah Court of Chittore was well founded in all respects, and, therefore, we must humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and with costs. The decree of the Zillah Court will be affirmed.

[148] BUNWAREE LAL, — Appellant; MAHARAJAH HETNARAIN SING and Others,—Respondents * [Feb. 20, 22, 1858].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

A letter in the nature of a guarantee, wholly in the handwriting of A., written upon stamped paper, sealed, but not signed or attested by witnesses, or registered, to B., a co-Plaintiff with A., undertaking to indemnify B. from costs, if he would join as a co-Appellant with A. in an appeal to England, established, and held to operate as a release in an action brought by A.'s heirs against B. to recover his pro rata share of the costs of the appeal.

The latitude with which documentary evidence is received in the Native Courts in India observed upon, and such practice condemned, as involving unnecessary costs, the administration of justice requiring that the admission of documents should be strictly conducted with reference to the principles regulating the admission of evidence [7 Moo. Ind. App. 168].

This was an action brought by the Respondents, the heirs of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, to recover from the Appellant and others, their respective shares of the costs of an appeal to England realized from Maharajah Hetnarain Sing, in execution of the decree of the Privy Council. The appeal was confined to the claim against the Appellant for his share of the costs.

The question in the case depended on the single issue raised; whether a document dated the 15th of May, 1832, produced and alleged by the Appellant to have been written by Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, the deceased father of the Respondents, was a genuine instrument.

In the year 1817, Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing and [149] two others, named Meer Abdoollah and Gokhul Dass, purchased at an auction sale Talook Belkharah, in shares: Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing had an 8 anna share, and the other two 4 anna shares each. This sale was afterwards reversed in a suit instituted for that purpose by the Ranee, widow of Rajah Jeswunt Sing, the former owner. Pending this suit the now Appellant purchased the 4 anna share of Gokhul Dass in the Talook, and with the object of asserting his title to maintain the sale, he intervened in the appeal then pending to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. That appeal was unsuccessful, and thereupon a further appeal was carried to England, but with the like result; and by an Order of Her Majesty in Council, dated the 11th of August, 1842, the then Appellants, Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, Meer Abdoollah, and Bunwaree Lal, were ordered to pay the costs of such appeal (see case reported, "Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing v. The Heirs of the Ranee, widow of Rajah Jeswunt Sing," 3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 42; S.C. 5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 192). The Maharajah not having taken the necessary steps to bring the appeal to a hearing, the East India Company prosecuted the same under the provisions of the Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., secs. 22 and 23. The costs of the appeal were ascertained by a proceeding of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, dated the 30th of March, 1843, at the sum of Rs. 70,926. 9. 6., and the necessary papers were transmitted to the Zillah Court of Behar, with directions to realize this amount from the then Appellants in the appeal to England, or their heirs. The Zillah Court, on the 29th of July, 1843, passed an order directing the payment of such costs by the then Appellants in proportion to their shares.

[150] Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing had died pending the appeal to England, and his 8 anna share of liability was represented by the Respondents, Maharajah Hetnarain Sing and Modnarain Sing, two of his sons, in the proportion of 9 annas to the former and 7 to the latter; so that in this state of things one-half of the costs was payable by them in those proportions, and the remaining half by Meer Abdoollah and Bunwaree Lal, the present Appellant, in equal moieties. For the purpose of compelling the payment of the costs, the properties of the various parties were put under attachment, and a sale of Maharajah Hetnarain Sing's having been directed, he paid into Court Rs. 43,910. 15. 11., on account of the costs ordered to be realized. As his nine-sixteenths of the moiety payable by him and his brother only amounted to Rs. 20,588. 10. 5., he contended that he had paid in excess Rs. 23,322. 5. 3.; and he accordingly, on the 27th of August, 1847, instituted the suit now under appeal in the Zillah Court of Behar, to recover this excess, with interest, from the present Appellant and the other co-sharers in the appeal, in proportion to their respective shares. These shares having been ascertained and liquidated, there was no question in this appeal in respect of them.

Bunwaree Lal by his answer admitted that he was a purchaser from Gokhul Dass of the 4 anna share, and that he had appealed on his own account to the Sudder Dewanny Court; but he set up as a defence that he only became a party to the appeal to England at the request of the deceased Maharajah, and that the latter had, in order to induce him so to do, on the 15th of May, 1832, with his own hand written him a letter in lieu of an Ikrarnamah, requesting him [151] to join in the petition of appeal to England, engaging that if, on the appeal, an adverse decision should be passed, the Maharajah would pay the costs of the Appellant.

The genuineness of this instrument having been denied in the replication, the Appellant produced the alleged document, and put it in evidence. It was in these terms:—Lala Mahadeo Dutt, of good caste, having returned from you, stated that you are not willing to become a co-sharer in the appeal to England, in the case of Talook Belkhourah, on the ground of your having had nothing to do with the auction-purchase. This is a great impediment, because by an appeal not being preferred for the whole Talook, there will be a defect in the appeal. Under these circumstances it is incumbent on you, hoping in the blessing of God, you will conjoin in the petition of appeal to England. If (God forbid) in the appeal to England an adverse decision be passed, I will, without any objection, pay the costs charged to you from my own funds; for the present I accordingly also get Rajah Khan Beliadoor Khan, Behadoor, to execute a Zaminee (security bond) for costs of the appeal for your satisfaction. I have written this letter with my own hands for your greater satisfaction. You will retain it as a document. The 15th of the month of May, 1832 A.D., corresponding with the 1st of the month of Jyē, 1239 Fuslee."

This document was proved to be in the deceased Maharajah's own handwriting, but it was neither attested by subscribing witnesses nor registered. It was written upon a stamp of Rs. 8, which was alleged to have been done at the instance of the Maharajah himself. Eight witnesses were examined: three of [152] them, named Nath Buksh, Kedaree Singh, and Dial Singh, spoke to the fact of the writing by the Maharajah, and the seal; and of other persons being present when it was written, but who were not called to prove that fact; and of Lala Mahadeo Dutt, being son of the Dewan of the Maharajah. Besides them there was no direct evidence upon this head; for although copies of depositions of other witnesses in a former matter to which the Respondents were not parties, and which were in no way admissible in evidence against them, were filed, the latter were not produced for examination in this suit. The other witnesses spoke to their belief as to the handwriting and seal of the Maharajah; but although it was alleged upon the Appellant's evidence that the Maharajah wrote several letters about the same time, and in reference to the same matter, no document was produced except the one relied upon. The Appellant also put in evidence a great many documents, consisting of copies of decrees in other suits, and copies of depositions of witnesses examined therein, and of proceedings in the Foujdarry Courts relating to the parties but not affecting the question at issue.

On the 21st of May, 1849, the Principal Sudder Ameen pronounced judgment in favour of the Appellant, establishing the validity of the letter or instrument of guarantee, and exonerating him thereunder from payment of the portion of the costs of the appeal to England; but upon appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, this judgment was, on the 19th of August, 1851, reversed by Sir Robert Barlow and Mr. John Robert Colvin, two Judges of that Court, Mr. Abercrombie Dick, the other Judge, dissenting. The material portion of this decree was [153] as follows:—"Is it in any way probable that a deed of such importance, if intended to be used as a public instrument, should have at its execution been unattested by subscribing witnesses, and remained unregistered by the Maharajah, or at least by the Defendant, Bunwaree Lal, whose exemption from all responsibility in a heavy appeal to England would have been thus publicly recorded and secured? If again it is to be looked upon in the light of a private and friendly communication to the Defendant, in order to satisfy him that he was to be held irresponsible by the Maharajah for the results of the appeal to England, what was the use of a stamp, and by whom was the necessity of a stamp suggested? All that we learn from the Defendant's witnesses is, that Mahadeo Dutt, the Maharajah's Dewan, produced stamp paper for the intended letter. Now, it cannot be supposed that the Dewan would, as a safeguard to be used against his own master, and in anticipation of ulterior proceedings, prescribe the necessity of a stamp in order only to prepare the document for admission to Court, should occasion require it, on behalf of the adverse party. Again, it is hardly necessary to advert to the well-known fact, that men of the rank which the late Maharajah held, are not in the habit of writing such letters of business in their own hand. It is alleged by the Defendant's witnesses that they had received themselves many letters of business from the Maharajah, yet not one have they produced, though said by one witness, Nath Buksh, to be at hand. The same witness also deposes that he himself despatched two or three letters from the Maharajah on this very business to Bunwaree Lal: not one of these letters have been laid before the Court. In short, nothing is [154] produced but the one deed, or letter, by which the Defendant desires to evade his responsibility. The writing of the paper must be noticed as remarkably clear and firm, and very unlike that of a person far advanced in years, as it is notorious that Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing was in the year 1832. The deed, as now before us, is in a most suspicious state. It bears on the face of it the manifest proof of having been cut or punched in a uniform manner by some sharp instrument, a circumstance not noticed by the Principal Sudder Ameen; but as our decision will be irrespective of the condition of the deed, and would be the same if the paper had been in no way tampered with, we do not dwell further on this point. We think that the direct evidence to the execution of the deed is very unsatisfactory, and that all the presumptions of the case are strongly against its genuineness; we, therefore, reverse the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen," and the Appellant was ordered to pay the Respondent, Maharajah Hetnarain Sing, one-fourth of the whole sum realized for the costs.

Against this decree, Bunwarree Lal brought the present appeal.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant; and Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. W. Field, for the Respondents.

The argument was exclusively confined to the credibility of the evidence of the witnesses speaking to the genuineness of the document of the 15th of May, 1832, and to the fact whether it was written by Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing. In support of the position that [155] the onus probandi was upon the Appellant to establish such fact, the case of Bahoo Kasi Persad Narain v. Mussumat Kawalbasi Kooer (5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 146) was relied upon.

Their Lordships without calling for a reply, delivered judgment by

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington.—The sole question in this case is, whether the Appellant has produced adequate proof that a document upon which he relies, is a true and genuine instrument. It is not denied on the part of the Respondents that if that document be genuine, the effect of it will be to exonerate the Appellant from the demand made against him, nor is it said on the part of the Appellant that he would not be liable, if not protected by the document in question.

It has, we think, been truly urged on behalf of the Respondents that the onus probandi lies upon the Appellant: it is not necessary for the Respondents to contend that the instrument is forged; it is sufficient to say that there is a deficit probatio.

Amongst other arguments urged for the Respondent it was said that, with regard to instruments of this kind, considering the habits and customs of the native inhabitants of India, their well-known propensity to forge any instrument which they might deem necessary for their interest, and the extreme facility with which false evidence can be procured from witnesses, that the probability or improbability of the transaction formed a most important consideration in ascertaining the truth of any transaction relied upon. With this argument we agree; and, therefore, it will [156] become our duty to examine with care how far the defence relied upon is consistent with all the probabilities of the case.

It has been also said that this defence stands exclusively upon oral evidence, and though to a considerable degree that observation may be true, yet it cannot be received to the full extent to which it has been urged. The defence in this case does, it must be admitted, depend upon the proof of a given instrument; but, there is a very clear distinction, and not an unimportant one, between pleading a written instrument, as an answer to a demand, and the setting up a defence founded exclusively upon oral evidence: for instance, if the defence were adoption, where there was no written record of the transaction, and the fact was to be established merely by the evidence of witnesses who swear they were present at it, there the proof would be purely oral evidence, and might be liable to all the imputations which are in these cases cast upon it; but, where the defence is rested upon a written document as a release, there is an essential difference, for its genuineness, on the contrary, may be shown by many facts and circumstances very different from mere oral evidence; and, moreover, the witnesses who are to prove a written document cannot resort to that latitude of statement which affords such opportunity of fabrication to purely oral evidence.

There are more means of trying the genuineness of a written instrument than there can be in disproving purely oral evidence. This is quite manifest, even upon the present occasion: for the truth of the transaction may, as it has been, be investigated by reference to the handwriting, to the seal, to the stamp, [157] the description of the paper, and the alleged habits of him who is said to have written it.

It is now expedient to investigate the facts of this case, with the view of discovering what is probable, and what is not. It appears that Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, before the year 1825, had purchased a certain Talook. Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing was the father of the present Respondent, Maharajah Hetnarain Sing. In this property other persons were interested. Gokhul Dass was the proprietor of a fourth share under an asserted auction-sale, and the present Appellant purchased that share of him. A suit had been instituted against Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing and the other asserted proprietor before this last purchase. The Provincial Court of Patna set aside the auction-sale, and the present Appellant intervened in that suit after that decree, and filed a petition of appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, as did Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing and the other asserted proprietor. On the 21th of April, 1832, the Sudder Court affirmed the judgment of the Court below.

Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing appears to have been a person of high rank and great wealth, and also to have enjoyed a high character for his integrity. In the suit to which we have adverted, some serious imputations were made against him. Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing was very deeply interested in this suit, both as concerned the property at stake and the exoneration of his character from the charges preferred against him. He had, therefore, the strongest motives for the most effectual prosecution of an appeal to the ultimate Tribunal. The present Appellant was in a very different position. His share of the property was but small, and, if evicted from it, he [158] had his remedy over against the vendor. He had already experienced the evils of a suit in two Courts, and it appears to be quite consistent with prudence and the ordinary motives by which men are actuated, that he should not have embarked afresh in a long and renewed litigation.

The Appellant alleges that, under these circumstances, Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing urged him to become a co-Appellant, so that the appeal might be prosecuted in the names of all aggrieved by the decrees in the Courts below; and that to induce him so to do, Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing offered to indemnify him from all costs. The Respondents contend that such alleged transaction was improbable, because Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing might have effectually prosecuted his appeal without the Appellant being joined in it; and that, therefore, Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing had no adequate motive for indemnifying the Appellant. Now, it is true, Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing might have prosecuted the appeal solely and without the name of the Appellant; but, we are of opinion that, though this position is legally true, yet that there was an adequate motive, under the circumstances, for the anxiety of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing to retain the Appellant as party to that appeal. We think that it was by no means contrary to probability that Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing would conceive that his case would be dammified, if the Appellant withdrew from the suit; he might well suppose that his own case would be injuriously affected by the secession of a party standing, in some respects, in a similar predicament. It may be true, legally speaking, that he would not be so, but, we think, that he had rational grounds for believing that such would be the case: in-[159]-deed, we doubt whether, even in this country, such an opinion may not have been entertained. We, therefore, think that the wish of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing to retain the Appellant in the suit was rational, and his proposal to indemnify him probable; and we might further observe that Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing must, in any case, have incurred the main expense of the proceedings in the appeal; and he might well consider the additional costs of the present Appellant worth the countenance and support which he might derive from the countenance of his name in the appeal. We have, therefore, upon a review of all these circumstances, come to the conclusion—and a most important one it is in the view of the Respondents themselves—that the alleged conduct of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing was entirely consistent with probability.

The document purports to be a letter in the handwriting of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, to be sealed with his seal, though not signed. It is dated the 15th of May, 1832, and the summary of its contents is to desire the Appellant to join in the appeal, undertaking to indemnify him from the costs, and stating that he had got a person to execute the security bond. That person is said to have been a son, or a natural son, of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing.

The next important question is the time and circumstances of its production.

In the year 1842, the decree was pronounced by Her Majesty in Council with respect to the appeal which had been so brought. The decree of the Sudder Adawlut, setting aside the auction sale, was affirmed; but, from the peculiar circumstances of the case, each party was left to bear his own costs. This [160] appeal had been conducted under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, the 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 41, secs. 22 and 23, now repealed. In virtue of that Statute, the East India Company conducted the case, both on behalf of the Appellants and Respondents, and were authorized to recover the costs from the parties in India.

Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing died pending the appeal; and in March, 1843, the East India Company proceeded against all the Appellants and their representatives for the amount of costs they were liable to pay to the East India Company: further proceedings were had, and in the course of them, in June, 1843, the document in question was produced.

It has been contended on behalf of the Respondents that the production of the letter at that time cannot be considered as a circumstance favourable to the Appellant, nor assisting the probability of his case; because, as against the claim of the East India Company, it would not have any operation or effect. Now, this again is legally true—that the guarantee of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing could not be a defence to the demand of the East India Company; but that the present Respondent, Maharajah Hetnarain Sing, being one of the parties on whom the demand for costs was made, and which Respondent the Appellant contended must, by virtue of this instrument, ultimately defray his, the Appellant's, share of the costs; that the Appellant should on that occasion produce this document, and expect some benefit from so doing, appears to us the most natural and probable line of conduct, considering the loose notions prevailing in India as to the form in which justice is administered. It is by no means incredible that the Appellant should believe that the [161] East India Company would recover directly from the Respondents those costs which he might be compelled ultimately to pay.

We think, then, that the production of this instrument came at a very natural time, and so strongly are we of that opinion, that had it been altogether kept back at that period, we should have thought that the non-production militated against the Appellant's case. It was produced at the natural time, because it was the first occasion when there was any reason for its production, namely, when the demand for costs was first made.

Then as to the circumstances attending the production, it is not worth while to consider whether the evidence taken to handwriting is, or is not, admissible. To the benefit of the fact that the Appellant then offered to prove the document to be genuine, and of the handwriting of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, the Appellant is clearly entitled. We do not take into consideration the opinion formed, or said to be formed, by the Zillah Court, that the document was proved.

In August, 1847, the present suit was commenced, being a proceeding by the Respondent, Maharajah Hetnarain Sing, the son and heir of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, to recover from the Appellant a certain amount of costs already paid by the Respondent, and which he would have been entitled to recover, if Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing had not indemnified the Appellant.

The Appellant pleaded in defence the document in question, and we will now look to the evidence produced; we leave out of our consideration all that has previously passed, excepting so far as relates to the production of the instrument upon a previous occa-[162]-sion, and we proceed to look at the testimony of Nath Buksh, and others, the witnesses produced in the suit instituted in 1847. We need not minutely detail the testimony given by them; but, the short history of it is this: Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing having been informed that the Appellant would not join in the appeal, sent Mahadeo Dutt (a son of the Dewain of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing) to the Appellant to induce him to consent to be an Appellant in the appeal to England; the Appellant declined to give his consent without a document written by Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing; accordingly the document in question was written by Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing and sent to the Appellant. Speaking now of the evidence of the four witnesses produced to establish this statement, it has been strongly contended that, besides the general objection to oral evidence, the witnesses, considering the length of time which has elapsed since the transaction in question, and the period when they gave their testimony, have deposed, with a minuteness of facts and circumstances which could not, probably, have been so deeply impressed upon their memories. It is true that they have given a very detailed description of the transaction in question; but were not the circumstances which then existed calculated to make a deep impression on their memories? Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, in whose service they were, and with whom they were connected, had been engaged in an important lawsuit: he had been ultimately defeated in that suit, and that under circumstances which were very likely to excite strong feeling on behalf of Maharajah

Mitterjeet Sing and all his dependents. We think, therefore, that though sixteen or seventeen years may have elapsed, the impression made of what occurred immediately afterwards, may have been so lasting as to leave a lively recollection of the transaction; and we must further remark that in evidence so taken, we must allow some degree of latitude for the question put to the witnesses, and their answers. We do not deem it necessary minutely to go through that evidence; if it be deserving of credit at all, it satisfactorily establishes that the document in question was written by Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing. There are various reasons which induce us to think that it was credible; we see no reason to suppose, looking at the whole history of the transaction, that it was improbable that Mahadeo Dutt should have been sent to the Appellant, for the purpose of obtaining his consent to join in the appeal, nor that the Appellant should decline unless he was indemnified from the costs. The witnesses further deposed to the persons who were present at the writing of this document; not one of them has been produced to contradict any part of their statement, either as to the interview with the Appellant, or with respect to the making of the document itself: their testimony is wholly and altogether uncontradicted; and yet, if untrue, there seems to be a fair opportunity of proving the falsehood of their evidence.

Some discussion has arisen with respect to the non-production of Mahadeo Dutt, and it has been said, perhaps not untruly, that Mahadeo Dutt was more properly the witness of the Appellant. Now, conceding all possible weight to that argument, and presuming, which we must say is contrary to all experience in Indian cases, that suitors in those Courts had any knowledge who was the proper witness of Plaintiff or Defendant, yet what does it come to? If there was insufficient evidence on the part of the Appellant to establish a prima facie case, that argument might be used with advantage; but if their evidence was sufficient for such a purpose, then it cannot be said that it was indispensably necessary for them to produce further testimony; and this is perfectly clear, that if Mahadeo Dutt were alive and capable of being produced, and would have contradicted the evidence of the Appellant's witnesses, he might, as far as appears, have been produced on behalf of the Respondents.

Other attempts have been made, and very properly made, to discredit the testimony of the Appellant's witnesses. It has been said, and it appears to have been the opinion of persons conversant with the usages and habits of individuals in the high rank of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, that they would not write with their own hand any document of this description. We give due weight to the strength of this objection, confirmed as it is by the opinion of two of the Judges of the Sudder Adawlut; but we feel ourselves also bound to look to the evidence in the cause, and the probability of deviation from this rule under the particular circumstances of the case. We have distinct and uncontroverted evidence that Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing was in the habit of writing with his own hand: it may be true that there is no accurate description of the species of documents he so wrote, but one of the witnesses brought with him a bundle of papers said to be in his handwriting, and no demand was made for their production; and further, we think, that the nature of the transaction itself, especially if the evidence as to what passed with the Appellant be true, renders it extremely probable, that in order to comply with the requisition of the Appellant, Maharajah Mitterjeet [165] Sing would, according to that requisition, have given him a letter in his own handwriting, and that, even though it might not be his usual habit so to do.

With respect to the letter having been written upon stamped paper, it seems to us extremely difficult to attribute any great importance to this fact either the one way or the other; it depends so much upon what we cannot by possibility ascertain, namely, what passed in the mind of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing upon that occasion. It is very reasonable to suppose that he wished the document to be effectual, and that he conceived, in order to render it so, that it must be written upon stamped paper. We cannot attribute to him, or to any persons in his situation, any very precise knowledge of the stamp laws of India: assuming him to be an honest man—and such was his character—he would seek to render the document effectual.

With respect to the stamp itself, it appears to have been the proper stamp which would have been affixed in the year 1832, the date of the letter. It is said that such a stamp even in 1843 might have been fraudulently affixed: it is unnecessary to deny the truth of that proposition: but we cannot presume fraud. All that is necessary to be said upon this point is, that however little weight may be attributed to the stamp in favour of the Appellant, it is perfectly clear that the impression of the proper stamp does not tend in the slightest degree to impair the validity of the instrument.

We do not think it necessary to enter into any disquisition as to the seal, for nothing important arises thereon: and as to the absence of a signature, it is abundantly clear, that a signature might have been [166] forged with as much ease, or even more easily, than the document itself.

The case came on for hearing before the civil Court of Behar, in May, 1849; and the Judge of that Court, being a native, and the Principal Sudder Ameen, pronounced a decree in favour of the Appellant, thereby declaring that the document was a genuine instrument. Upon appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, the Judges of that Court differed in opinion; the cause was heard on the 19th of August, 1851, and two of those Judges, Sir Robert Barlow and Mr. John Russell Colvin, were of opinion that the decree of the Inferior Court ought to be reversed; the other Judge, Mr. Abercrombie Dick, expressed a different opinion, and in affirmance of the decree of the Court below.

In the preceding observations we have discussed, as we believe, all the important reasons assigned by the majority of Judges in support of their decree. We are very sensible how great a weight ought justly to be attributed to the opinion of persons so much more conversant with the habits and usages of natives than ourselves; but we are not, upon the present occasion, placed in the painful predicament of opposing our own opinion solely, against the judgment of those who are conversant with India, for we have to pay due deference also to the judgment of the Zillah Court, and the opinion of the dissentient Judge: however this may be, we are bound to look, with due allowance to the practical knowledge of the Courts in India, to the merits of the case, and to the evidence produced. Then how does this case stand? We have already expressed our opinion that the whole of the transaction is perfectly consistent with probability, [167] and in support of the genuineness of the document relied on, is the evidence of witnesses against whose veracity no solid objection has been raised, beyond the general observation that oral evidence in India is untrustworthy. This evidence is wholly uncontradicted, and yet, surely, if capable of contradiction, some evidence might have been adduced to impeach its credibility—some evidence either to show that the facts did not take place as stated, or to throw a doubt upon the testimony as to the handwriting. We have no such evidence; we must, therefore, necessarily come to the conclusion that the genuineness of the document is established. It would, indeed, be most dangerous to say that where the probabilities are in favour of the transaction, we should conclude against it solely because of the general fallibility of native evidence: such an argument would go to an extent which can never be maintained in this or any other Court, for it would tend to establish a rule that all oral evidence must be discarded; and it is most manifest that, however fallible such evidence may be, however carefully to be watched, justice never can be administered in the most important causes, without recourse to it. We shall, therefore, feel it our duty humbly to advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the Sudder Court, and affirm that of the Zillah Court.

Mr. Wigram, in anticipation of the probability of such advice proceeding from us, has urged that the Respondents ought not to be rendered liable to the costs of many documents, which he alleges have been improperly introduced on the part of the Appellant. Those documents, however, formed part of the proceedings in the Court below, and however [168] unnecessary they may now appear to the just decision of this cause, we cannot undertake to say that they were wantonly or unjustifiably introduced into the Courts below. It is unfortunately too much the habit of those Courts to receive documents, without that just discrimination which would prevail were the rules of evidence known and established: but their Lordships are of opinion that they cannot, in these cases, take upon themselves to determine what ought, or ought not, to have been received in the Courts in India; they may lament the great latitude with which documentary evidence is received, but it would be contrary to justice, in any particular case, to visit upon an individual penal consequences because the administration of justice was not more strictly conducted with reference to the admission of evidence; and grievous, indeed, will be the task, and vain will be the attempt, of endeavouring to discriminate in these cases what was the precise course the Courts of primary jurisdiction ought to have pursued. For these reasons we are of opinion that the ordinary rule must be adhered to, and that we must humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, with costs.

[169] BAMUNDOSS MOOKERJEA and MUSSAMUT RAJ LUKHEE, Appellants.
MUSSAMUT TARINEE, Respondent * [Feb. 22, 23, 1858].

On Appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

Authority was given by deed, by a childless Hindoo in Bengal, to his widow, to adopt a son at his decease. The widow did not exercise that power, and many years after her husband's death brought a suit in her character as widow, claiming his succession in the family estates. Held, that the mere fact of there being authority given her by her husband to adopt a son did not, before an adoption had actually taken place, supersede and destroy her personal right as widow to sue.

This suit was instituted by the Respondent, the widow of Chunder Bosun Mookerjea, in the Zillah Court of Nuddea, to set aside a Will alleged to have been made by her deceased husband, whereby the Appellant was appointed manager of his property, and which Will declared that Chunder Bosun had adopted the Appellant's Bamundoss Mookerjea's, third son, Muthooranauth, and also to recover possession of her husband's property in the Appellant's possession, with wasilat profits and interest. The Respondent claimed in her own right as widow, her husband having died childless. Previous to his death, however, he had by deed authorized her to adopt a son for him, but that power she had not exercised. The Appellant's case was, that the Respondent's husband had by the Will acknowledged the adoption of his son, Muthooranauth.

[170] The circumstances which gave rise to the suit were these:—

In the year 1814, Mohadeb Mookerjea, who was Chunder Bosun's grandfather, and was possessed of very considerable self-acquired property, divided it amongst his family by a deed of partition, whereby he gave a 4 anna share to his brother, Radhanath, an 8 anna share to his elder son, Doorga Pershad, and a 4 anna share to a younger son, Kishen Pershad, and directed that the property should be held jointly, and Doorga Pershad should be the manager. Doorga Pershad and Kishen Pershad died during Mohadeb's lifetime. Doorga Pershad left three sons, of whom the Appellant, Bamundoss Mookerjea, was the eldest, and Gouree Pershad and Unnode Pershad the other two. Kishen Pershad left one son, Chunder Bosun, the alleged Testator.

In 1823, Mohadeb Mookerjea died; and upon his death, Bamundoss Mookerjea, under a deed of guardianship and management, executed by Mohadeb just before his death, entered into the receipt of the rents and managment of the joint property. The genuineness of this deed was contested by Indermoney, the mother of Chunder Bosun, he being then only seven years of age; but the only mode of effectually contesting it being a civil suit, which Indermoney was unable to undertake, the matter dropped, and Bamundoss Mookerjea continued in the management of the joint property and affairs; and received the rents of the real estate; and the profits of a trade carried on with the joint funds, without rendering any account, and merely giving such money, from time to time, to Chunder Bosun as he thought proper. Chunder Bosun complained of this treatment, and disputes arose be-month of August, 1832, only a few weeks before his death, he presented a petition to the magistrate, praying for inquiry and protection, in which he complained of the ill treatment and injury by Bamundoss Mookerjea. Chunder Bosun had proceeded to Calcutta to obtain redress, but he shortly afterwards, in September, 1832, returned to his mother's house at Beernugger dangerously ill, and died there on the 21st of September, 1832, having, on the morning of the day of his death, executed a deed of permission (Onoomuttee Puttur) to his wife to adopt a son, and this deed he sent to her at her father's house at Santipore, where she was staying. At the time of his death he was under eighteen years of age. His sudden death, connected with the known enmity existing between him and Bamundoss Mookerjea, excited the attention of the authorities; but upon an inquiry into the circumstances before the Darogah, his death appeared to have ensued from natural causes. Upon this inquiry, however, Gouree Pershad Mookerjea and Unnode Pershad Mookerjea, the two younger brothers of Bamundoss Mookerjea, and Indermoney, Chunder Bosun's mother, and the guardian and devisee under the alleged Will, were examined, with other relations and friends who were present during Chunder Bosun's last illness. They stated the circumstances attending his illness and death, but none of them deposed to anything regarding the adoption of Bamundoss Mookerjea's son, or concerning any Will being made in his favour, and no mention of the alleged adoption, or Will, until nearly twelve months after Chunder Bosun's death, when an investigation in the Collectorate, under an old petition of inquiry as to the heirs of Mohadeb, [172] was taken advantage of by Bamundoss Mookerjea. Upon this inquiry the Respondent presented a petition, praying for the insertion of her name in the Register as representing her deceased husband; and evidence was given by numerous members of the family before the Nazir that she was Chunder Bosun's heir. The alleged Will was not produced or adverted to before the Nazir who conducted the inquiry, but six days after the examination of the witnesses a copy of the alleged Will was filed in the Collectorate, as if by Indermoney; and a few days afterwards, Bamundoss Mookerjea, in her name, but, as she afterwards declared, without her consent or knowledge, presented a petition, alleging that Chunder Bosun had, on the day before his death, executed a Will in her favour as guardian, in which it was stated that he had adopted Bamundoss Mookerjea's third son, Muthooranauth, and had appointed Bamundoss Mookerjea manager. Upon examining the original depositions of the witnesses it was insisted that they had been tampered with in Bamundoss Mookerjea's interest, and the native word for "writings" had been altered into that for "Will"; and that at the end of the depositions were found additions, written with a different pen and ink, relating to the alleged Will. The Nazir, in his report, referred to the alleged Will, but the matter appeared so full of suspicion to the Collector that he, by an order dated the 7th of August, 1833, directed further inquiries, and the attendance of Gouree Pershad and the other witnesses who had been examined on the previous inquiry; and, as they did not attend, he ultimately directed the institution of a regular suit.

Under these circumstances, the Respondent, who was then under age, on the 14th of September, 1844, [173] instituted the present suit, claiming, as heir of her husband, and also on behalf of any son whom she might adopt, possession of Zemin-dary, houses, indigo-factories, profits of trade, cash belonging to her husband, etc., and also praying to have the alleged Will set aside.

Bamundoss Mookerjea, by his answer, alleged that when he heard of Chunder Bosun's illness he left Calcutta and went home, and that, on the 7th Assim, Chunder Bosun, after adopting Muthooranauth, and appointing his own mother as guardian, and Bamundoss Mookerjea manager, lost his senses, and the next day died; adding, that in obedience to the injunctions of the Will, the rites and ceremonies of adoption, etc., according to the Shasters, had been performed, and denying the genuineness of the deed of Onoomuttee Puttur sent to the Respondent. He also objected that she ought to have instituted a suit to establish the Onoomuttee Puttur before seeking to recover possession in this suit.

Indermoney filed a separate answer, denying all knowledge of the adoption and Will, and praying to be dismissed as not being in any way responsible for the detention of the Respondent's property.

Gouree Pershad and Unnode Pershad also answered separately, but raised the same defence as Bamundoss Mookerjea, and the replication having put the answer in issue, a proceeding took place on the 10th of November, 1845, in which, amongst other things, the Appellant's Vakeels were asked when and by whom the ceremonies of adoption were performed; and the Respondent was required to produce an authority establishing her competency to sue before making an adoption under the deed of permission. On the [174] 19th of December, the Appellant's Vakeels answered that the ceremonies of adoption were performed on the 19th of June, 1834, by the Respondent's substitute, she being present at the place of the ceremonies, with the child in her arms. The Respondent produced a case as an authority in which a final decree was made in a suit under similar circumstances (Bhoobuniswaree Dibbeah v. Kucul Dibbeah); and the Court held, that as, according to the Shasters, the Respondent as the widow had a right to the possession of the property of her deceased husband, it was unnecessary for her to prove the execution of the deed of permission to her to adopt, and that there were, therefore, only two points for determination: First, whether Chunder Bosun adopted Muthooranauth, and made the alleged Will, and whether the rites and ceremonies prescribed had been duly performed; and secondly, what was the amount which Respondent was entitled to recover?

The case came on before the Court on several occasions in 1846 and 1847. The Appellants produced the alleged Will, which had not been registered at the time. The deed of permission, by Chunder Bosun, to adopt, was not produced, nor was any evidence given of its existence or of its ever having been seen by any one, with the exception that one of the witnesses, called and examined on behalf of the Respondent, stated that he had heard that Chunder Bosun had executed a deed of adoption and sent it to Santipore, but the witness stated also that he was not present at the alleged execution of the deed. By far the greater portion of the evidence of the witnesses called on behalf of this Respondent, related to the value of the property in dispute, and to the question whether the [175] property was ancestral or purchased by the first Appellant. Several witnesses were called on her behalf to show that large sums of ready money had been left by Mohadeb, in which she was entitled to share. On behalf of the Appellant, witnesses were examined, and numerous documents relating to the property in dispute and to earlier proceedings in the Courts of Justice were put in evidence to show the manner in which he had acted as guardian of Muthooranauth, and that several of the factories and gardens included in the claim of the Respondent were not ancestral property, but had been purchased by Bamundoss. Other witnesses were also called on behalf of this Appellant, who said they were present at the making of the alleged Will of Chunder Bosun, and also to prove the adoption of Muthooranauth. Two of the four subscribing witnesses to the last-mentioned instrument were called and examined on behalf of this Appellant. Of the other two witnesses, one was dead, and the other, although summoned on behalf of the Appellant, did not appear.

On the 20th of September, 1847, the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Court of Nuddea delivered judgment in the case. This judgment decided, in substance, first, that the evidence did not establish that Chunder Bosun had executed the alleged Will or had adopted Muthooranauth, and, as to the two attesting witnesses to the alleged Will, the Court disbelieved their testimony and described them as "professional witnesses" attending the Nuddea Court. Secondly, the Court held that there was no sufficient proof that the property alleged by Bamundoss Mookerjea to be self-acquired was not so, and that the Respondent was only entitled to her husband's share in the property acknow-[176]-ledged to be ancestral. Thirdly, that the witnesses called on behalf of the Respondent, to prove that she was entitled to share in a sum of Rs. 300,000 of ready money, alleged by her to have been left by Mohadeb were not entitled to credit. Fourthly, that the witnesses called on behalf of the Respondent, to prove that she was entitled to the gold and silver plate claimed by her, were not entitled to credit. Fifthly, that some of the witnesses called on behalf of the Respondent had given false evidence with respect to the annual profits of the lands; that with respect to a large portion of the claim, the annual value of the lands had not been proved; but that with respect to the Talook Shoulmaree, the Respondent was entitled to recover Rs. 35,055 for mesne profits. The Principal Sudder Ameen then went on to declare that the claim in the suit should be amended according to the above finding, and decreed in favour of the Respondent, that the Respondent should obtain from Bambundoss Mookerjea, and from Gourree Pershad, and Unnode Pershad, possession of one-fourth of certain Zemindaries and Talooks mentioned in the decree, and of the dwelling-house of Beernugger, together with mesne profits of the Talook Shoulmarce, to the extent of Rs. 35,035, with interest down to the day of payment, and that the Respondent should, after an inquiry, obtain the mesne profits of the remainder of the decreed property from the day of the institution of the suit to the day of receiving possession.

Bambundoss Mookerjea, and Gourree Pershad and Unnode Pershad, appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, and a cross appeal was also brought by the Respondent.

The decree of the full Bench of the Sudder Dewanny [177] Court was pronounced on the 30th of September, 1850, and was in these terms (a): "On the point of the right of a widow to sue on her personal claims as widow, in a plaint in which she also mentions that her husband had given her authority to adopt a son, which is the second objection which has been raised against the admissibility of the plaint, there have been long and able arguments in this case: it being contended against the Plaintiff, that since there is such a mention distinctly made of authority to adopt in her plaint before the Court, her personal right as a widow must be taken upon her own statement to have lapsed, the right vesting from the date of her husband's death in the boy thereafter to be adopted by her, according to the principles of Hindoo law, and specially according to the precedent in the case Beejayah Dibbeah v. Shama Soondree Dibbeah (Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. of 1848, pp. 762 to 766). The decision in the case of Beejayah Dibbeah had not been passed when the present suit was brought before the Principal Sudder Ameen. He, by a proceeding of December the 19th, 1845, admitted the suit for the personal right of the Plaintiff as widow, notwithstanding the mention of an authority to adopt, on the ground of an unpublished precedent of this Court (Bhabunessuree Dibbeah v. Kubmunnee, 10th of April, 1821). It does not appear that in that case, though the suit of the widow was admitted, any objection had been raised on that point. The admission of the suit is not, therefore, to be considered as having been directed on a judicial decision after argument. We have, after a full and careful examination of the question, and with the advantage of a very pro-[178]-tracted discussion and of a minute examination of all the authorities by the pleaders of the parties in this appeal, come to a conclusion differing from that of the majority, Messrs. Tucker and Hawkins, who ruled the point in the recent decision in the case above cited of Beejayah Dibbeah v. Shama Soondree Dibbeah, and are of opinion, that the fact of an authority to adopt a son being possessed by a widow (the actual existence of authority has not come to proof in this case, but has been assumed upon her own statement for argument as part of her own case) does not supersede and destroy her personal right as widow: and that those rights continuing of force till an adoption is actually made, there is no bar to the admission of the present claim by the Plaintiff as widow. We shall, in explaining the grounds for this opinion, allude first to the reasons on which the decision from which we dissent was passed, and then notice more generally the texts and principles of Hindoo law applicable to the subject. The subjoined extract from the decision in question shows all the grounds on which it rested. These grounds, it will be seen, are the opinion given by the Pundit on the question put to him in that appeal, and the opinions of the Pundits in Ranee Kishenmunnee v. Rajah Oodwunt Singh (3 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. p. 228):—Messrs. Tucker and Hawkins there say: 'The Plaintiff sues for her share of the estate as heir to her deceased son, and in her plaint sets forth that she has power from her husband, in the event of her born-son's death, to adopt a son. The authenticity and validity of the testament conferring this power she asserts in the last paper filed by her upon the record of appeal. The question was put to the Pundit of [179] this Court, whether a widow, with power from her husband to adopt a son, can sue as heir in her own right for a share of the ancestral estate. The Pundit replies distinctly that she cannot; in fact, it was laid down by the Pundits in the case of Ranee Kishenmunnee v. Rajah

(a) This decree is from its importance set out at length. The judgment of their Lordships, post [7 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 206, adopted it simpliciter.

Oodwunt Singh, cited above, that the moment permission to a widow to adopt a son was pronounced, it had the same effect as if a child had been conceived in the womb of the widow, and her intention to adopt under the permission, operated to all intents and purposes as if she were enceinte, and that the boy subsequently adopted by her had all the rights of a posthumous child. It thus appears that the plaint in the present case cannot be sustained. The Plaintiff declares she has a power to adopt, and she asserts the present validity of that power. Her plaint therefore is much the same as if she had sued as heir, alleging that another existed having a right by inheritance prior to her own.' From the substance of the question to and answer of the Pundit, it is manifest that though the Pundit stated that, in his opinion, the suit for a personal right as widow could not lie under such circumstances, he has, in effect, when citing authorities, assumed the entire question as to that, its main point at issue, and has not quoted only texts which are quite valueless as to the doubts proposed to him,—their purport being merely that suits would not lie if they were opposed to the Shasters, ancient custom, or right. The case of Ranee Kishenmunee v. Rajah Oodwunt Singh, which is the other ground on which the judgment of Messrs. Hawkins and Tucker proceeded, is one which turned on a point perfectly distinct from that now before us. The point in that suit was, whether a retrospective right could be [180] claimed by a son after he had been adopted, so as to bar a sale made by his adoptive mother previous to his adoption, to the injury of the rights, at that time contingent and eventual, but which actually accrued to him upon his adoption. In that case, the son, when adopted, became the undoubted heir; and it was of course the correct doctrine that no sale made by a widow, who possesses only a very restricted life interest in the estate, could have been good against any ultimate heir, whether an adopted son or otherwise, unless made under circumstances of strict necessity. There was, too, the peculiarity in the case, that it was held by the Pundits that, by the terms of the Will of her deceased husband, the widow was only an appointed manager of the estate, and that 'the right of property vested in the son subsequently adopted, from the time of the Rajah's death, and the adopting widow had no authority but that of intermediate management under her late husband's Will.' The case then stands by itself, and affords no general precedent, although even if it did it would relate only to the rights claimable by an adopted son after adoption made. Upon the general argument, we do not propose to follow the discussions which have been raised before us into the different points of speculative doubt and nicety that have been referred to, as to the possibility of the existence of rights, present or contingent, in a child from the moment of its conception in the womb,—as to what is the precise time of vital conception or existence, according to Hindoo law and usage,—as to analogies between the condition of a widow who has received permission from her husband to adopt, and of a widow naturally pregnant,—as to the abstract causes or grounds of inheritance,—or [181] as to modes and questions of Hindoo obsequial or other ceremonies. We believe that, were we to enter on these subtleties and niceties we should complicate and obscure the law by novel distinctions, such as have no sanction from past decisions of the Courts, or from the established usages of the Hindoo community, and such also as are not capable of being adopted as practical guides for judgment with any consistency and certainty. We shall rest our opinion on the admitted principles and positive texts of the Hindoo law, as current in Bengal, taking words in their plain and ordinary meaning, and endeavouring to collect all that is important on the subject in former decisions or published authorities, and to ascertain the correct sense, as to the point in question, of the varying notices of it which are to be gathered from those sources. Now, there is no doubt as to the declared right of a widow in Bengal, to succeed to her husband's estate upon his death, in default of lineal male heirs down to the great-grandson in the male line. This is a right certain and incontestable. It is urged, on the other hand, that there is not any direct text enjoining that in the event of the pregnancy of a widow on the death of her husband, her right to succeed shall be held in abeyance until it be seen whether she is delivered of male or of a female child. The argument as to a widow who has permission to adopt, is only that, according to the dicta of the Pundits, she is to be regarded as enceinte. If no text can be shown for the suspension of the rights of a widow actually pregnant, it is still more certain that there is no similar provision for divesture of right in the case of a widow held only to be constructively pregnant of a son through the [182] effect of a permission to adopt. The single passage of the Hindoo law on which the objection to the widow's right, in the case either of a real or of a constructive pregnancy is directly rested, is the following, which is noted in the two cases (Ranee Kishenmune v. Rajah Oodwunt Sangh, above referred to, and Ramkishen Surkhyl v. Mussumaut Sri Mutee Dibia, 3 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 367), which have been much cited in the course of the discussion, and of which the translation is subjoined from Colebrooke's translation of the Daya-Bhaga, ch. i. sec. 45. 'They who are born, and they who are yet unbegotten, and they who are actually in the womb, all require the means of support; and the dissipation of their hereditary maintenance is censured.' Upon this passage it has been contended, on behalf of the widow, that it prescribes a moral duty rather than a legal obligation; as, were it held to be of strict legal force, it would militate against the admitted right of a Hindoo father in Bengal to dispose of his property according to his own choice by Will. But apart from this, it is to be observed that the very terms of the text providing for sons yet unbegotten, refer to a contingent and future, and not to a present right. In perfect consistency with this, we find that the right accruing to an after-born son, in regard to real ancestral property, is thus described in the same treatise (ch. vii. sec. 11). That is declared by Vishnu,— 'Sons with whom the father has made a partition, should give a share to the son born after the distribution.' (Sec. 12.) So Yajnyawalkya,— 'When the sons have been separate, one, afterwards born of a woman equal in class, shares the distribution. His allotment must positively be made out of the visible estate corrected for income [183] and expenditure'; to which is appended the following note by the commentators Sricrishna, etc., as to the words 'must positively':— 'The particle vā is affirmative, and what has been consumed is consequently excepted.' See also the Dayacrama Sangraha, as to the right accruing to sons afterwards born, ch. v. secs. 21 to 24. So that the after-born son's right is to his share of the estate as it stands at the time of his birth, and not retrospectively with reference to its state at any supposed period of his conception. A strong illustration to the same effect is to be drawn from the law of partition according to The Mitacshara, in which it is laid down (ch. i. sec. vi. 11, 12), that if the pregnancy of a brother's widow be manifest at the time of an intended partition, the partition should be postponed till after the delivery. Some commentators, as will be seen by the note, hold the sense of the passage to be, that partition may at once take place, but that a share should be set apart for the widow who is supposed pregnant, and when she is delivered, the share is to be assigned to her son; and this interpretation is rejected by others chiefly because, according to the law of the western schools in regard to an estate still undivided, 'widows are not entitled to participate as heirs.' The clear inference is, that could a widow have been heir, as she can incontestably be in Bengal, she might have been admitted on her own right during pregnancy, the share devolving to her son only on his birth. As to the law of Bengal, it need only be added, that the commentator Sricrishna, when expounding, Daya-Bhaga, ch. i. sec. 43, the peculiar doctrine of the Bengal school, as to a right of inheritance not vesting in the son till after the death of the father, says of a passage [184] of Gautama, cited in The Mitacshara, on birth being the means or cause of the acquisition of property, that the text is unauthorized, or, if it be authorized, it relates to the case of one whose father dies while the child is in the mother's womb. Here is an express and indeed, to our minds, a conclusive reference to actual birth after the death of a father, as the period of commencement of right. Of authorities other than the direct text of the law and commentaries, the following may be quoted:—Sir W. Macnaghten's 'Principles of Hindu Law,' vol. i. p. 2: 'The most approved conclusion appears to be, that the inchoate right arising from birth, and the relinquishment by the occupant (whether effected by death or otherwise) conjointly create this right,—the inchoate right which previously existed becoming perfected by the removal of the obstacle.' H. Colebrooke, in Strange's 'Hindu Law,' vol. ii. p. 127 (2nd Edit.): 'Presuming the property here spoken of as the woman's to have been what devolved upon her by the death of her husband, and not to have been her proper Stridhana, it ceased to be hers at the moment of a valid adoption made by her of a son to her husband and herself; in the same manner as property, coming into the hands of a pregnant widow, by the same means, cannot be used by her as her own, after the birth of a son. An adopted child is in most respects precisely similar to a posthumous son. From the moment of the adoption taking effect, the child became heir of the widow's husband, and the widow could have no other authority but that of mother and guardian. The only means of evading the application of this opinion, so weighty and so directly to the point, has been by arguing that it was given in regard to a Madras case, [185] and had reference to the law of The Mitacshara. But first, no distinction between the two schools, as to the point in question, are in any way alluded to in the opinion; and next, the case itself was one of the succession of a widow to the separate property of her husband, in which case a widow has the same right under The Mitacshara as she has in all cases according to the Bengal law. There is a difference between the two schools as to the period at which, after birth, the rights of sons over the property of a father commence.—The Mitacshara school holding the commencement to be immediate and the rights of the sons to be concurrent with those of a father (as with us in the familiar case of an entail); and the Bengal school holding the rights of the sons to commence only on the death of the father. But there is nothing in that difference which affects the applicability of Mr. Colebrooke's opinion to the case of sons in Bengal, as well as elsewhere, antecedent to birth. See the dictum of the Privy Council in Dhurm Das Pandey v. Shama Soondri Dibiah (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 243). Now, upon the authorities, there can be no doubt that that is the result of an act of adoption, because the property is in the widow from the death of the husband till the power of adoption is exercised. Then that adoption divests it from the widow and vests it in the adopted son. Authorities are not quoted for this opinion, nor does the point appear to have been specially discussed in the case. But the passage shows the sense of the highest judicial authority as to the admitted doctrine on the subject. An anonymous case may also be cited from the manuscript papers of Sir Edward H. East, in Morley's Dig. (vol. ii. p. 18), in which incidentally, the same opinion is very strongly [186] expressed:—"Since the Defendant had come to the age of sixteen, the widow had given up the property entirely to his management and benefit, which was a strong corroboration of the truth of the Defendant's case, because the widow herself had actually, by the adoption, deprived herself of a life-estate." Of the cases decided by this Court at all bearing upon the question, those of Ranee Kishenmunee v. Rajah Oodwunt Singh, and of Ramkishan Surkhyl v. Mussummaut Sri Mutee Dibia, before referred to, and another case of Pran Nath Rai v. Raja Govind Chandra Rai (5 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. p. 37), which has been cited in the argument, relate, as has been noticed, to the distinct point of retrospective rights claimable by a son after adoption; and the text of Hindoo law, in respect to the rights of sons unbegotten or in the womb, in which the entire stress has been laid in connection with the two first cases, has been above fully adverted to and explained. There is a case (Mussummaut Bhuvani Munee v. Mussummaut Solukhna, 1 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 322), which is in support of the general view which we have formed. A decree was there made by Mr. Harrington in favour of six daughters' sons, with reservation of the eventual birth of other sons to one of the daughters, who would be entitled to share with the other daughters' son. A case has been much relied on in opposition to the right of the widow, that of Karuna Mai v. Jai Chandra Ghos (5 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 42). See also Kishen Lochan Bosi v. Tarini Dasi (5 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. p. 55) decided by Mr. Turnbull, the effect of which is thus stated in the marginal note:—"By the Hindu Law in Bengal, a sister's son (even though unborn or unbegotten, at the time of his maternal uncle's death) is an heir preferable to the [187] son of the paternal uncle of deceased; and a sister likely to produce male issue (though having none), as trustee for such issue, enters on the succession of her deceased brother's estate, to exclusion of his paternal uncle's son." The authority of this case has been much shaken by the subsequent decision of Mr. Walpole, in the case of Lakhi Priya v. Bhairab Chandra Chaudhuri (5 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. p. 315), but on a ground distinct from that now under consideration. For the latter decision went on the point (see p. 321) that 'the text of Menu, which deprecates deprivation of subsistence of the unborn, had regard to the estate of the paternal grandfather,' and did not apply to the case then before the Court, of the estate of a maternal uncle. But the fact, which, under any circumstances, entirely distinguishes the case of Karuna Mai v. Jai Chandra Ghos from the present one, is that the question there was of the nature of the possession to be given to a sister who is incompetent to be an heir to her brother; and the question here is of a widow who is an indisputable heir to her husband's estate. Possession given in the first case to a sister could only be as trustee for others. On the merits, however, of the decision itself, it will be seen to have rested on opinions delivered by the same Pandit, so shifting and inconsistent as not to command much respect. There are passages at the same time in his first elaborate Bywasta which point distinctly to the rights of unborn sons as being eventual only; for instance, that Bywasta states, at p. 44, ib., that the first authority adduced 'established, that the father's daughter's son took deceased's estate, if existing at the time of his death; but not that the ownership in the estate should remain in abeyance, and at the end of an indefinite time the succession [188] vest in the posthumous sister's son. And again, 'Inspired legislators had made provision for the custody of the estate of minors, but neither they, nor any writer, had provided for the charge of the estate of the unborn during an indefinite time; therefore the unborn could have no property.' It remains only to notice two cases; in one, Mussumaut Himulta Chowdrayn v. Mussumaut Pudoo Munee Chowdrayn (4 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. p. 19), of which the fact of a widow having received a permission to adopt, was adjudicated on, although no adoption had been made; and in another, Mussumaut Subadra Chowdrayn v. Goluknath Chowdry (7 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. p. 143), of which the majority, Messrs. Tucker and Reid, of the Court, held, that until an adoption was actually made, no action would lie in regard to the validity of an alleged deed of permission. Little of weight can be deduced upon either of these decisions as respects the point now under inquiry: they are in themselves brief and general as regards the point of receiving or rejecting a suit under the circumstances stated, and do not furnish strong authority in support of a judgment on either side in the present controversy. Against the direct authorities and reasonings above detailed, there is nothing to be stated, but some doubtful allusions as to what the term 'birth' positively intends, when employed in Hindoo Law. A passage in Colebrooke's 'Dig.' vol. ii. p. 505, has been referred to, in which birth is spoken of 'as a particular relation of body, not a relation taking place at the first instant of procreation.' The Pandit of this Court, in the first Bywasta in Karuna Mai v. Jai Chandra Ghos (5 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. p. 44), says 'birth was twofold': it might be referred to the period of 'conception or to [189] actual production.' In the marginal note by Mr. J. C. C. Sutherland (a gentleman whose opinion on points of Hindoo Law is deserving of much respect), to the case of Lakhi Priya v. Bhairab Chandra Chaudhuri (5 Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. p. 315), he has introduced the words (not to be found in the decision as set forth in the body of the report) 'Right of succession cannot remain in abeyance in the expectation of the future production of such heir not conceived at the time of succession opened.' It has been argued that Hindoo rules and family customs have established a period, in the sixth month of pregnancy, from which conception, in a legal sense, can be calculated. These, however, are very feeble grounds for introducing a novel and most perplexing standard and origin of right into our practical jurisprudence; and it is obvious that the rather fanciful analogy which has been contended for between a real pregnancy and a constructive pregnancy through a permission to adopt, will here fail; for the argument has been, that the right vests in the child to be adopted from the moment that permission to adopt is pronounced by the husband, and not from the sixth month or any other period after that date. The truth is, that the supposition of a positive and actual right vested in an embryo which may never come into full existence, is one which must almost be rejected on the mere statement of it. It is particularly repugnant to common reason in the case of a possible adoption, which may be made after the lapse of many years, or may never be made at all. If the supposition were to be admitted and acted upon, the effect would be to alter the whole course of natural inheritance, for there would be one course of inheritance as from the son to be adopted, and another (as [190] is usual at present) from the widow's husband upon her own death. The rights, for instance, of any daughters of the husband would in the former case be wholly set aside. It is true that a widow may, from the continuance of her life-interest, have an interest opposed to her duty, which should lead her, if she has a permission from her husband, to adopt a son without any delay which she can avoid. But there appears to be no power under the Hindoo Law to compel a widow to adopt, though a case (in Macnaghten's 'Principles on Hindu Law,' vol. ii. p. 247) has been referred to, where there is a mention of an incompetency in a widow to succeed, if she neglect to make an adoption. The subject, however, is only cursorily noticed in that case, and in connection with a point which appears to have been ruled upon different grounds. The question of any possible check on a widow, who wilfully protracts or evades an adoption specially enjoined upon her by her husband, is not before us; and what we have to decide, viz., the power of a widow, duly authorized to adopt, to claim under any circumstances her personal rights until she does adopt, is not affected by a consideration of what might be the proper course, if she could be proved to have violated any clear and positive legal obligation."

The Court then proceeded to give judgment on the validity of the Will and alleged adoption set up by Defendants in these terms: "The objections, raised upon the nature of the plaint, being disposed of, it remains to decide upon the third and last plea preferred by the Appellants in the case No. 541 of 1847, namely, their claim under the Will of the deceased, Chunder Bosun, alleged to have been executed by him, the day before his death. On the subject of the Will, we find [191] it important to note the following observations. The document has not been registered. Radhanauth, the brother of Mohadeb, the common ancestor of the parties in this cause, is alleged to have been present when the Will was drawn out. It is alleged that the Will was executed and Muthooranauth adopted by his advice; yet the Defendant, Bamundoss Mookerjea, admits that he and Radhanauth had many disputes. Indeed, in his petition of the 9th of August, 1832 (or only six weeks before the alleged execution of the Will) which will presently be referred to, Bamundoss called Radhanauth his mortal enemy. Radhanauth's name is not attached to the deed, nor are the names of any of the relatives of the family; neither is there a particle of evidence to show when and under what circumstances this acknowledged bitter enmity ceased. It is said for the Appellants that respectable natives object to be witnesses to deeds, as it subjects them to be cited to give evidence in Court. This was a most urgent reason for having the Will registered as soon as it was drawn. No such precaution was however taken. It appears from a petition presented by Chundur Bosun, in propria persona, to the Magistrate, on the 4th of August, 1832, that he and Bamundoss Mookerjea were then great enemies. He therein complained that Bamundoss Mookerjea was about to drive him and his mother out, and had subjected him to extreme ill-treatment and indignity; that Bamundoss Mookerjea was making away with the accounts; that the Petitioner had only a few months to attain his majority, when the accounts must be rendered to him; notwithstanding which, the Will, dated but a few weeks afterwards, or on the 22nd of September idem, is altogether in favour of Muthooranauth, Bamun-[192]-doss Mookerjea's son. The existence of extreme enmity is thus shown, and no attempt has been made to prove that subsequent reconciliation took place. In answer to the above petition, Bamundoss Mookerjea, on the 9th of August, 1832, distinctly styled Chunder Bosun as a minor who had absconded, and for whom he was anxiously in search lest he should get into harm. There is no mention of preparation of draft or discussion of terms (such as is always usual with the natives of this country) of any Will before the 21st of September, the day of Chunder Bosun's death. Nevertheless the instrument is one most elaborately prepared, with every possible provision to secure the interest of Bamundoss Mookerjea's son, and to shield Bamundoss Mookerjea from every description of responsibility. If the state of the deceased was such as is shown by Bamundoss Mookerjea himself in the second paragraph of his answer on the record, namely, that having caused the Will to be written, the deceased the same day became perfectly senseless (hotto chytunno), it is hardly possible that he should have been capable of dictating and understanding its contents, drawn as they are with such studied particularity and precaution, and of signing it, as it appears to have been signed, with a perfectly firm and steady hand. The firmness of the signature is particularly remarkable, so as to be quite inconsistent with its being the act of a man reduced to the last stage of illness. Again, the recitals in the Will are opposed to statements made by the Defendants on other occasions. Inconsistencies of the kind must add to the impression arising from the other circumstances which shake the credibility of the Will. The Will enjoins that the conditions and ceremonies of adoption shall be performed by the Plain-[193]-tiff, the widow. The Defendant's pleader, being asked by the Principal Sudder Ameen, on the occasion of the preparation of the proceeding under section 10, Ben. Reg. XXVI., 1814, on what date the Plaintiff performed the ceremonies, answered, that he must refer to his principal for information upon that point; and then on the 19th of December, 1845, said, that she had performed them on the 19th of June, 1834; that she was present in the room, and that she received the child in her arms. Several witnesses were produced to prove this fact, but they said she was in a separate room. Moreover, in the petition presented by two of the Vakeels of this Court (Bungshee Buddun Mittur and Rajnarain Dutt), on the 26th of December, 1844, it was stated by them, on behalf of Bamundoss Mookerjea, that Chunder Bosun, when in full possession of his senses, had himself performed all the ceremonies of adoption of Muthoornauth, according to the Bengal Shasters; or, to make use of the words of the petition, 'had completed all the conditions and forms of adoption;' and that, therefore, the Plaintiff could not object to his adoption in opposition to her deceased husband's acts. These discrepancies, though not conclusive evidence against Muthoornauth, who was a minor when the petition was filed, afford strong presumption that his claim under the Will has no good and just foundation. There is another circumstance connected with the Will, which, though we do not lay conclusive stress on it, must yet not be passed over without comment. It is a very remarkable fact that the alleged Testator throughout the Will, speaks of matters connected with his minority, and in no part of it declares himself a major. It may be said, that the making a Will is in itself a [194] presumptive proof and assertion on his part that he had attained his majority. It appears however to us worthy of notice, that in an instrument containing so much detail, and drawn with so much care, labour, and consideration, including a circumstantial narrative of all the antecedent circumstances of the family and property, the important fact that the Testator was of age was not set forth distinctly. It would be no strained inference from the terms and general purport of the instrument, to conclude that Chunder Bosun had not attained his majority. Indeed Bamundoss Mookerjea's petition of the 9th of August, 1832, already adverted to, which refers to his minority as to last for eight or nine months longer, is strong confirmation that Chunder Bosun at the time of his death was a minor. As to the verification of the Will, it is to be observed that the names of four persons are attached to it, namely, Bishnath Bose, Nusseeram Singh, Chundurnath Chatterjee, and Hurreemohun Chatterjee. Of these Hurreemohun is dead. Bishnath, alleged by the Defendant to be the writer of the instrument, although summoned, is not forthcoming; and the Appellants did not, as required by law, take at a proper time the necessary steps to cause his appearance. They made, indeed, at a subsequent period, a general application for a fresh subpoena to be issued to some sixty witnesses, Bishnath being one of them; but this the Principal Sudder Ameen rejected as being a mere device to protract the proceedings. Nusseeram and Chundurnath were examined by the Principal Sudder Ameen, as were sundry other witnesses as to their knowledge of the Will. He has rejected their evidence, but in so doing has, without any proof adduced, thrown an imputation upon the two witnesses above-[195]-named, of being professional witnesses, undeserving of any credit. As we find nothing on the record which justifies the expression of such an opinion, we deem it necessary to notice that the Principal Sudder Ameen's conduct in offering such remarks, unsupported by any proof, is most censurable. As to the other witnesses who have also been examined with a view to substantiate the Will, we find that they too have deposed to its execution, as well as to its attestation by Nusseeram and others. These witnesses say that they were present on the occasion, but we cannot attach such weight to their testimony as would induce us to declare the Will genuine in opposition to the very strong proofs already referred to, not adduced by the Plaintiff, but arising mainly out of circumstances and events over which she had no control. This circumstantial evidence, we would pointedly remark, is supplied by the principal Defendant himself. The non-registry of the Will, his discrepant petitions and statements, his petition of the 9th of August, 1832, to the Magistrate, added to the terms and conditions of the Will itself (the preparation of which is admitted to have been deferred to the very last moment), are circumstances over which the Defendants had every control; and which in our judgment create a high degree of suspicion as to the genuineness of the instrument which greatly outweigh any testimony or proof that has been brought by the Defendants. It has been argued that the non-registry of the Will cannot be held to be a valid objection, inasmuch as the Court has prohibited the registry of Wills or documents of persons deceased. The answer is, that this rule was laid down in case No. 1218, of the 21st of June, 1839, long after the alleged date of the Will in [196] question. It has also been urged that the instrument has been in the public offices from a period within ten months of its alleged execution; but this can afford no satisfactory proof of its actual execution by the deceased: but further, even if it be admitted to be genuine, the validity of it is question on the ground of its being the act of a minor. The presentation of the petition of the 4th of August, 1832, in propria persona, by the deceased Chunder Bosun, to the Magistrate, which is acknowledged to be a genuine document, is evidence of the nature to which we have above adverted. It is evidence beyond the control of the parties before us. The Petitioner therein stated that eight or nine months of his minority still remained, and he died within forty-eight days of the presentation of that petition. The Defendant, Bamundoss Mookerjee, in his answer to that petition, given to the Magistrate a few days subsequent to it (a document also acknowledged by his pleaders to have been presented by him) repeatedly speaks of Chunder Bosun as a minor, whose well-being and conduct it was his (Bamundoss Mookerjee's) duty to look after. This is evidence drawn from unimpeachable sources, furnished, too, by the principal Defendant himself, many years before the institution of the suit, and forms the strongest possible presumption (we had almost said conclusive proof) of the fact of the deceased Chunder Bosun's minority at the time of the alleged Will. We cannot, then, after duly considering and weighing all that is before us, but declare that in our opinion the Defendants have altogether failed in proving the Will in their favour. There is, besides, the strongest ground on the record to believe it to have been the act of a minor, and, therefore, legally inoperative and inad-[197]-missible. We cannot, therefore, upon the oral evidence which the Defendants have brought to support the Will, and which is disproved by all the circumstances and probabilities of the case, believe that any permission, oral or otherwise, was given by Chunder Bosun for the adoption of Muthoornauth. Under such circumstances, the right of the Plaintiff, the widow of Chunder Bosun, to succeed to his estate under the provisions of the Hindoo law, is indisputable, and we have only to determine how much of the property claimed she is entitled to recover, as being part of that estate.

The Defendant, Bamundoss Mookerjee, has laid claim to the Talook Runghaut, in Zillah Nuddea, and to certain indigo-factories in Zillahs Mymensingh, Rungpore, and Dacca. The Talook he calls his own self-acquired property, and the factories are said by him to have been erected since the death of Chunder Bosun, and a factory in Zillah Nuddea is alleged to have been built by him (the Defendant) at his own cost. These pleas are by no means satisfactorily proved. It is admitted that the Talook was pledged to the common ancestor, Mohadeb. It is nowhere stated, nor is it in any way shown, that the pledge was redeemed. The Defendant states that after Mohadeb's death he paid the sum of Rs. 16 in addition, and got a bill of final sale in his own favour for Rs. 316 on the 17th Assar, 1231. This Kubalah, or bill of sale, is filed, but no witnesses have sworn to it. The Defendant caused his name to be registered in the Collectorate in lieu of Mohadeb, on the 18th Srabun of that year. Being manager for the family, this would be a matter of no difficulty; but neither the Kubalah nor the registry is proof of self-acquisition. The estate originally [198]-nally was held in mortgage by Mohadeb, and the Court have repeatedly ruled that proof of the specialty of self-acquisition is an onus which lies on the claimant when a question of succession to property, alleged on the other part to have belonged to a family which is admitted to have been generally joint and undivided in estate, arises between the heirs of a deceased ancestor. The Kubalah is not proved, and mere registration in the Collectorate is not sufficient to establish self-acquisition by the Defendant. Neither is the evidence adduced by the Defendant, as regards the indigo-factory at Nuddea, such as to prove that property his own. Two or three witnesses have in general terms deposed that it belonged to the Defendant; but their evidence is weak and inconclusive. In regard to the remaining factories, the Defendant has adduced no proof whatever, nor has he brought forward anything to disprove the claim which Plaintiff has laid to certain tanks and gardens at Beernuggur, the family residence. We are, therefore, of opinion that a decree must pass in favour of Plaintiff for her husband's share of the above-mentioned property, as well as for that which, it is admitted, descended from Mohadeb to his heirs, and was held by the Defendant, Bamundross Mookerjea, as he acknowledges, for the benefit of his third son, Muthoornauth, alleged to have been adopted by the Plaintiff's husband, the late Chunder Bosun. In the plaint an allegation is made that the mesne profits of the estate on the Plaintiff's share amount to Rs. 13,000 per annum. The Principal Sudder Ameen records that the Plaintiff refused to take out an Ameen to calculate the actual proceeds, and that the Defendant declined, under various pretences, to furnish, for the period of his management, [199] the papers requisite to ascertain them, and he, therefore, rejected so much of Plaintiff's claim. We are of opinion that mesne profits must be awarded to Plaintiff from the date of her dis-possession, that is, from the date of Mohadeb's death, and that for the ascertainment of their amount an Ameen must be deputed in ordinary course. The Defendant will be called on to give up his accounts of the collections, and the Ameen will further take the usual steps to fix the amount realized by him. The Plaintiff having been debarred from an earlier suit by minority, interest is awarded at 6 per cent. on each year's mesne profits on the Plaintiff's share of all the landed property claimed, from the date of Mohadeb's death up to the date of suit, and at the rate of 12 per cent. from that date to date of decree, and the same interest on the aggregate so calculated up to the date of realization. Mesne profits and interest to be charged to Bamundross Mookerjea exclusively up to the date of Muthoornauth's majority, and to both Bamundross Mookerjea and Muthoornauth from that date to realization. It is to be here noticed that Muthoornauth has been recently allowed, on declaration of his majority, through his pleader in this Court, to appear as a joint party in the course of the appeal proceedings. Plaintiff's claim to certain gold and silver plate is disallowed by the Principal Sudder Ameen, who does not deem the evidence of the four witnesses adduced worthy of credit, for the reasons stated in his judgment. We see no reason to interfere with this part of his decision. He has also rejected so much of the plaint as lays claim to a share of Rs. 3,00,000 cash and Rs. 3,00,000 outstanding balances; on this point, likewise, discrediting the same four witnesses. The Plaintiff has sued speci-[200]-fically for these amounts, and has failed to establish any proof of their being due. The suit was not for production of accounts. We concur with the Principal Sudder Ameen, that no sufficient proof has been given of these claims, and, therefore, as regards them, dismiss the suit before us. Under the specialty of the case, in which we consider great wrong to have been done to the Plaintiff by a party who comes forward as the guardian of the Plaintiff's husband, a minor, and in consideration of the large amount of mesne profits that must undoubtedly have been collected, we charge all the costs of this suit to Bamundross Mookerjea, and to Muthoornauth, for whose benefit he acted, save those of the Defendants, Doorga Pershad and Kishen Pershad, who will, as having supported the defence of Bamundross Mookerjea, pay their own costs." It was, therefore, ordered that a decree pass in favour of Plaintiff, in amendment of the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen, as indicated above; that all the costs of this Court incurred in both the causes, save the costs of Doorga Pershad Mookerjea and Kishen Pershad Mookerjea, Defendants in the Zillah Court, be charged to Bamundross Mookerjea and Muthoornauth, according to the amount prepared by the Accountant of costs of the Court, with interest thereof from the day of the decree to that of the liquidation thereof.

From this decree the present appeal was brought.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., Mr. Leith, and Mr. Maude, for the Appellant.—Two questions arise; first, whether the evidence as to the Will of Chunder Bosun, and of the adoption of the Appellant's son, Muthoornauth, in pursuance there-[201]-of, justified the decree appealed from; and secondly, whether the Respondent, as widow of Chunder Bosun, was capable, in her character as widow, of bringing this suit, when an express power was given to her by her deceased husband to adopt a son. Upon the second ground, it is admitted by the Respondent in her plaint that her deceased husband executed a deed of adoption authorizing her to adopt a son, and of her intention to do so. Therefore, the failure of the Appellant to prove that deed to the satisfaction of the Court was immaterial, and the Respondent was estopped, as far as her rights as widow were concerned, from contesting the point. The Court below having insisted on our producing this deed, which was not in our custody, we submit that it was a miscarriage of justice, and that the cause ought to be remitted to the Court below on that ground. Every probability is in favour of the adoption, which is indispensably required by the Hindoo law. The "Dattaka-Mimamsa," sec. i. cls. 2, 3, 6, 58, translated by Sutherland, pp. 2, 23. The widow being incapable of performing sacrifice, a substitute is admitted for the performance of that ceremony in the adopted son. The Mitaeshara, ch. i. sec. xi., note to sec. 9, p. 308. The wife, in such a case, is but the agent, the mere instrument; the primary author being the husband. The "Dattaka-Mimamsa," sec. i. cls. 19, 21, 22, translated by Sutherland, pp. 7, 8. The Court leans to the presumption in favour of an adoption having been made, the spiritual welfare of the deceased being depended upon it. Huradhuu Mookurjia v. Muthoranath Mookurjia (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 414). Then comes the important question (who is to be [202] adopted: the Hindoo law says from among kinsmen, connected by an oblation of good in the first place. The "Dittaka-Mimamsa," sec. ii. cl. 2, translated by Sutherland, p. 26; and a preference is to be given to a brother's son. Strange's "Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 88 (2nd Edit.). W. Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 68. Everything is in favour then of our contention that the Respondent adopted Muthoornauth under the power of adoption given her by Chunder Bosun. The adoption was proved by the Purshita, or family priest, the medium through which the boy to be adopted is, by Hindoo custom, solicited. Secondly, after the admission that the Respondent was authorized to adopt a son, she was not, we contend, entitled to bring a suit in her own name, claiming as a childless widow, to be the deceased's heiress at law. She ought to have executed the solemn trust and performed the obligations imposed upon her by adopting a son for the benefit of her husband, and the suit should have been brought in such son's name, to whom she is, in fact, but a trustee. Dhurm Das Pandey v. Mussamat Soondri Dibbiah (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 229). An adopted son has all the rights of a posthumous son, and a sale by a widow to his prejudice, even before adoption, is invalid. Ranee Kishenmune v. Rajah Oodwunt Singh (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 228). The present case is distinguishable from Soondur Koomarce Dabbea v. Gudadhar Pershad Tewarree (ante, [7 Moo. Ind. App.] p. 54): there the widow had exercised the power of adoption, but the adopted son died a minor, and she sued in the two-fold character of heiress of her deceased husband and of the adopted son.

[203] At the conclusion of the Appellant's argument, the following observations were made by

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh.—On the first point their Lordships are perfectly satisfied that the decision pronounced by the Court below is right; and so far from being disposed to overturn the judgment of the Court upon that point, even if the judgment had been the other way, they would have felt themselves bound to have established it. An observation, however, is made by the Sudder Dewanny Court, that the Zillah Judge, with respect to two of the attesting witnesses, has spoken of them from his own knowledge, as being what he calls "professional witnesses," persons of no character, and, therefore, entitled to no credit whatever. He does not say that, as we understand him, from his own personal knowledge of the parties, as being in the habit of coming before his Court. Now, the Judges in the Sudder Dewanny Court have passed a severe censure upon the Zillah Judge, for making that observation. Their Lordships think it right to say that in that censure they do not at all concur. It is of great importance that the Judge should know the character of the parties, and it is of great advantage to the decision of the case, that it is heard by a Judge acquainted with the character of the parties produced as witnesses, who is capable, therefore, of forming an opinion upon the credit due to them. With these observations we do not think it necessary to trouble the Counsel for the Respondent at all upon this part of the case.

The other point discussed is a point of law, whether the widow, having a power of adoption, destroys her right to sue in her individual character as widow, and [204] in truth, therefore, has barred herself from maintaining the suit in which she has obtained a decree.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. W. Field, for the Respondent.—The question is now narrowed to the single point, whether the Respondent, as the widow of Chunder Rosun, is entitled to recover her husband's share of the property; and that raises the question, whether the devolution of the estate on her would be prevented by a power of adoption being given, and the possibility of a third person coming into existence prevent her taking her husband's share in the family estates. Our contention is, that her husband's estate passed to her as a childless widow and as his heir. She takes a life estate. Keerut Sing v. Koolahul Sing (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 331), Strange's "Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 121 (2nd Edit.). W. Macnaghten's "Principles of Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 19. With regard to her right to sue, there being power given her to adopt a son, it is exactly the case of a possibility of having issue, the case in such circumstances resting on the analogy of a woman being en ventre; she would undoubtedly take on death of her husband, and receive the rents and profits until the birth of a child. Again, the child in the womb might never be born alive. But, in the meantime, and before the birth, who is to take? Who is to sue during the intermediate time for trespass? Certainly the widow on whom the estate devolves. These instances illustrate the great inconvenience which would ensue if the estate was left in doubt. A great distinction exists when the widow takes the interest under a deed giving her power to adopt, and under her rights [205] by the Hindoo Law as widow of a childless man. In this case her right to sue is as widow. Every case upon this point has been thoroughly investigated in the judgment of the Court below. They referred to, and relied upon, the following cases:—Pran Nath Rai v. Raja Govind Chandra Rai (5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 37), Ranee Kishenmunee v. Rajah Oodwunt Sing (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 228), Ramkishen Surkheyl v. Mussumaut Sri Mutte Dibia (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 367), Chundun Koonwaree v. Sheo Ratna Singh (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 275), Mussumaut Subudra Chowdry v. Goluknath Chowdry (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 143).

Mr. Leith, in reply.—First. By the Hindoo law a sister, likely to produce male issue, but not even begotten, surviving an only brother, is entitled to the succession, and to enter possession until the production by her of male issue. Kishen Lochan Bose v. Tarini Dasi (5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 55). Mussumaut Solukhna v. Ramdolah Pande (1 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 324). Secondly. A widow, with power to adopt a son, cannot sue in her own right. Ranee Kishenmunee v. Rajah Oodwunt Singh (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 228). Mussumat Subudra Chowdry v. Goluknath Chowdry (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 143). It is true that in the former case she claimed as heir of her deceased son, and in the latter her claim was for the intended adopted son; but these cases establish that principle. The theory of the Hindoo law is, that the moment permission is given to adopt, it has the same effect as if a child was in the womb of the mother; and a boy subsequently adopted, as might be done in this case, has all the rights of a post-[206]humous son. Ramkishen Surkheyl v. Mussumaut Sri Mutte Dibia (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 371). The widow, therefore, has no authority but that of intermediate management.

The Right Hon. T. Pemberton Leigh.—Their Lordships do not entertain any doubt upon this case; but as the question is one of extreme general importance, they were anxious to hear whether any serious objections could be made to the judgment appealed from by Counsel so familiar with the Hindoo law as is Mr. Leith. But, on considering this judgment, which is most able and elaborate, they entirely agree in the principles laid down in it, and can add nothing to the clearness and force of its reasoning. They have, therefore, simply to express their entire concurrence in the judgment of the Sudder Court, both upon the question of law and the question of fact, with the single qualification of that incidental observation made upon the language of the Zillah Judge in expressing his opinion with respect to the two attesting witnesses. They will, therefore, recommend Her Majesty to confirm the judgment pronounced by the Court below, with costs.

[207] CHEYT RAM,—Appellant; CHOWDHREE NOWBUT RAM,—Respondent;
Nov. 30, and Dec. 1, 1858).

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, North-Western Provinces, Aggra.

In a question involving the genuineness or forgery of an instrument sued upon, which the Courts in India had opportunity of personally inspecting, and held genuine, it is necessary that the evidence impeaching the document, be clear and strong to justify the appellate Court reversing the decree appealed from. Circumstances in which the Judicial Committee upheld a Bond impeached as a forgery, and reversed the concurrent decrees of the Zillah and Sudder Courts in India.

Costs in India and upon appeal allowed to the Appellant, upon a reversal of the decree of the Court below.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of the North-Western Provinces, affirming the decree of the Zillah Court of Bareilly, which decided against the authenticity of a Bond, the subject of the suit, in which Radhakishen, since deceased, the father of the Appellant, was the Plaintiff, and the Respondent, the party who had executed the Bond, was the Defendant.

[208] The pleadings and evidence are so fully stated in their Lordships' judgment as to render any statement here unnecessary, beyond an outline of the principal facts in issue.

The Courts in India, in their decrees, proceeded entirely upon the suspicious circumstances of the case, and decided against the validity of the bond, chiefly on the ground that the appearance of the impression of the seal of the Respondent affixed thereto was unsatisfactory: and on that ground charged Radhakishen with the forgery of the Bond, against the testimony of the attesting witnesses, who in their evidence deposed that the Bond was executed by the Respondent in their presence. Subsequently to the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, the Magistrate of the District of Bareilly, to whom the investigation of the criminal charge against Radhakishen was formally made over by that Court, held that it was satisfactorily proved by the evidence before him that Radhakishen was innocent of the charge, and that the seal used was, in fact, the genuine seal of the Respondent: and he was further of opinion, that the impression of the seal on the Bond had been distinct and perfect when the Bond was filed by Radhakishen in the suit in the Civil Court, but had been tampered with (at the instance, as the Magistrate suspected, of the Respondent, through his agents) in the Civil Court, after the document had been filed, which the Magistrate thought accounted for the suspicious appearance that it presented when examined at the hearing of the original suit. A review of the judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut was applied for by Radhakishen, the application being grounded upon the Magistrate's judgment. The application was, however, refused, and this appeal [209] was instituted by the present Appellant, Cheyt Ram, the son of Radhakishen, who had died pending the proceedings, to reverse the two decrees of the Zillah and Sudder Dewanny Courts, which, the Appellant submitted, were, independently of the finding and judgment of the Magistrate, contrary to the weight of testimony given in the original suit, which established the authenticity of the Bond in question, and the due execution thereof by the Respondent, and the amount which formed the consideration of the Bond proved to be due to Radhakishen from the Respondent. The Respondent insisted, that, the question at issue being one of fact, and the Courts in India having inspected the document, and having had the opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witnesses while under examination, were most competent to judge of the credibility of the evidence: and he further insisted that the onus probandi was in the Appellant's father to prove the consideration for the Bond and its genuineness.

both of which points, the Respondent contended, he had failed to do, and that more over the Bond had not been registered.

Mr. Leith for the Appellant; and Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and Mr. Joyce, for the Respondent.

The case of Dearka Doss v. Baboo Jankee Doss (6 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 88), was cited by the Appellant, as authority that the items in Radhakishen's banking books were evidence to establish the consideration of the Bond; and Cir. Ord. No. 178, 29th July, 1836, to show the possibility of the Bond having been unfairly treated while in the custody of the Court. On the part of the Respondent, Davidson v. Cooper (11 Mee. and Wels. 778. S.C. in error, 13 Mee. and Wels. 343), Crouch v. Hicken, (6 L.J.N.S. Chan. 153), were relied upon as authority for the dismissal of the suit, the Bond, as it was alleged, having been tampered with while in Radhakishen's custody, which fact prevented the Appellant from recovering.

The appeal stood over for consideration.

Their Lordships' judgment was now delivered by

The Right Hon. Lord Kingsdown (Dec. 18, 1858).—The Appellant, in this case, has undertaken a task of no ordinary difficulty, since he asks for a reversal of the decision of two Courts in India, upon a mere question of fact, that fact being the genuineness or forgery of an instrument which is the foundation of the action in which the appeal is brought.

The Judges in the Court below have formed their opinions mainly on an inspection of the document, which we have had no opportunity of seeing. The case must be very strong, to justify such an unusual exercise of authority, and the question is, whether the Appellant has established such a case.

Radhakishen, the original Appellant, and whom we shall call the Appellant in the observations we are about to make, brought an action against the Respondent on a Bond for Rs. 15,000. The name of the Respondent appeared to the Bond, impressed by the stamp of a seal. The Zillah Court, on examining the signature, and comparing it with other impressions of the seal of the Respondent acknowledged to be genuine, decided that the impression on the Bond was a forgery, and dismissed the suit. The Sudder Court, [211] on appeal, confirmed this decision, and, in effect, ordered the Appellant to be prosecuted for forgery. He was so prosecuted, and was acquitted. He then applied for a review of the judgment against him in the civil suit, which was refused, and he has now appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

The Appellant and Respondent were both residents at Bareilly, the former being apparently a Banker and money-lender, and the latter a landowner. It is admitted on all hands, that pecuniary transactions had taken place between these parties; that moneys were advanced by the Appellant to the Respondent, and securities given by the Respondent to the Appellant. In particular, a mortgage by the Respondent to the Appellant, under which the latter was in possession of a village of the Respondent, and a Bond for Rs. 4000, by the Respondent to the Appellant, are specifically mentioned.

But in addition to these transactions, the Appellant alleges that there were many other advances made by him to the Respondent upon Bonds and notes of hand, in respect of which, in the month of August, 1851, a large sum was due for principal and interest; that in the course of that month the parties came to a settlement of accounts; that the Appellant having consented to make an abatement from the amount due, the balance was settled at Rs. 15,000; and on the 30th of August, 1851, a Bond was executed by the Respondent to the Appellant, to secure the payment of that sum, with interest at one per cent. per month, in the month of May then following.

The amount due upon the instrument being unpaid, the Appellant, on the 30th of September, 1852, filed his plaint in the Zillah Court of Bareilly, claiming [212] the sum of Rs. 16,955 for principal and interest on the alleged Bond.

On the 2nd of October, 1852, the Respondent undertook to file a defence to the suit within two weeks. This, however, he neglected to do; and on the 2nd of December, 1852, an Order was made by the Court that the Appellant should proceed to prove his case ex-parte.

He accordingly, on the 3rd of December, 1852, obtained an order to summon his witnesses, and brought into Court the Bond in question, which was ordered by the Court, on that day, to be kept with the mist or record of the proceedings.

The production of this Bond, and its deposit in Court at this early stage of the proceedings, when it was open to the inspection of the Respondent and his agents, appear to be of great importance in this case.

The Bond purported to have been given after a settlement of accounts, to be stamped with the seal of the Respondent, and to be witnessed by Doorgapershad, the Mootsuddee, or man of business, of the Respondent, who is also described as the writer of it, and it was dated only thirteen months before the suit was instituted. The Respondent was resident on the spot where the Bond was executed, and where the suit was brought, and both he and his agent must have known with absolute certainty whether the one had written and the other had sealed such an instrument, or whether the document was a mere forgery.

The Respondent had notice of this claim on the 2nd of October, 1852. It is difficult to suppose that if he had never executed any such instrument he should not instantly have protested against the forgery; but he took no step whatever to defend the suit on [213] this ground, or any other, till the case was ordered to proceed ex parte. He then, on the 9th of December, 1852, applied to be admitted to defend the suit, not on the ground that the Bond was a forgery, but on the allegation "that he has several objections to the Plaintiff's claim, which involves a considerable sum of money."

He was let in to defend; and on the 6th of January, 1853, he put in his answer. In this answer he states that the Plaintiff's claim is based on a fictitious Bond, and he assigns various reasons to show that the fact of his having given such a Bond is improbable; but he nowhere distinctly says, "I never executed any such Bond. The seal is not my seal; it differs from the genuine impression of my seal: the writing is not the writing of my agent." Amongst other circumstances of improbability on which he insists against the Appellant, he urges that it is very unlikely that the exact balance of accounts should result in a sum of Rs. 15,000, without any fractional sum, and that a Bond for so large a sum should not have been registered, more especially as the Bond for Rs. 4000 was registered.

On the 12th of February, 1853, the Appellant filed his replication. With reference to the two objections referred to, he states that, as to the amount of the Bond, the sum really found due on the settlement of accounts, for principal and interest, was Rs. 17,319. 1. 3.; but that the Appellant, on the importunate entreaties of the Respondent, consented to give up the surplus beyond Rs. 15,000, and to take a Bond for that amount; and he says, that the accounts and documents, showing the exact balance which were cancelled on the execution of the Bond, still exist to [214] remove the Respondent's objection. With respect to the want of registration he states, that he was in the habit of advancing thousands of rupees to the Respondent upon unregistered documents.

The rejoinder of the Respondent was filed on the 23rd of March, 1853, in which, amongst other things, he alleges, that if the former documents had ever any existence and were cancelled, they ought to have been given up to him, the Respondent, on the execution of the Bond, and that "when the former documents are produced, the imposture of the claim will be fully exposed."

In this state of the record the parties went into evidence.

The evidence of the Appellant in the suit may be conveniently considered under three heads:—First, the transactions leading up to the Bond. Second, the execution of the Bond. Third, the subsequent recognition of it by the Respondent.

The clerk of the Appellant, named Laljeemul, gives the following account under the first head:—"The facts are these: there are mutual dealings betwixt Chowdhree Nowbut Ram and Lalla Radhakishen. Radhakishen demanded payment from Chowdhree Nowbut Ram. Chowdhree Nowbut Ram sent to Radhakishen his Mootsuddee (Persian scribe) Doorgapershad, to compile accounts, and find the balance due by him. Doorgapershad, Mootsuddee, then came to Radhakishen and computed accounts, on which a balance of Rs. 17,389. 1. 3. appeared against Nowbut Ram. Doorgapershad returned to Chowdhree Nowbut Ram with the list of accounts, leaving one copy of it with Radhakishen, and telling him to have the accounts examined, and that he would himself do the [215] same. Radhakishen then gave no the list of accounts, and told me to go to the firm of Lalla Muthar Doss, and to have the accounts examined by Lalla Doorgapershad, his agent. I accordingly went to Doorgapershad, agent, with the account, and showed it to him, and told him to see if there was any discrepancy in it. Doorgapershad and Kishen Chund, the principal agent of the firm, looked at the account, and said there was no discrepancy in it. I brought the account back to Lalla Radhakishen, and told him it was correct. On the same day, Doorgapershad, Mootsuddee, accompanied by Sheonarain, the brother-in-law (sister's husband) of Chowdhree Nowbut Ram, came again to Lalla Radhakishen, and said that Chowdhree Nowbut Ram had seen the account and understood it, but he had desired that some reduction should be made in the interest. On this Lalla Radhakishen said, 'Pay me my money, and I shall make any reduction you will propose in the interest.' On this Sheonarain and Doorgapershad, Mootsuddee, said, 'The money is ready, and we promise to pay in the month of Jeyt.' Radhakishen then asked what reduction he should make; and Doorgapershad, Mootsuddee, and Sheonarain, the brother-in-law of Nowbut Ram, said, 'You may have a Bond for Rs. 15,000, and relinquish the balance in our favour.' Radhakishen agreed, and said, 'Very well, pay Rs. 15,000, in Jeyt.' Then they returned to the Chowdhree, and must have told him everything." He then says, on cross-examination, that of the balance, actually due, 10,200 and odd rupees were for principal, and the remainder for interest: that interest was charged at 1 per cent. per month, and that there were six Bonds and notes of hand.

[216] This witness refers to an examination of these accounts by the Gomashita, or head clerk, at Bareilly, of the firm of Muthra Doss, one of the largest banking firms in India. This gentleman appears to be above all suspicion; he is examined on behalf of the Appellant, and he entirely confirms the account of Laljeemul. He says:—"It is something less than two years when Laljeemul, Mootsuddee of Lalla Radhakishen, brought me Chowdhree Nowbut Ram's account in order to have the computation of interest examined by me, and I and Kishen Chund accordingly examined it; subsequently, eight or ten days after, I heard that Lalla Radhakishen had relinquished 2000 and odd rupees, and that he caused Chowdhree Nowbut Ram to execute a Bond for Rs. 15,000."

He then says there were many previous dealings between the Appellant and Respondent; that whenever Chowdhree Nowbut Ram wanted money, no one but the Appellant supplied him with it. That dealings had been carried on from the time of Chowdhree Bussunt Ram, who was the father of the Respondent.

The statement of these witnesses, as to the settlement which took place, and the abatement which was made by the Appellant, is confirmed by the evidence of Ramsookh and of Gholam Hussun, who concur with Laljeemul in representing that Sheonarain, the brother-in-law of the Respondent, was one of the persons at whose instance the abatement was made.

That extensive dealings took place between the Appellant and Respondent, is further proved by the evidence of Seetaram, a Tehsildar, or who had filled that office, which we understood is one of respectability, who says that "dealings existed from the time of the Respondent's father, and that whenever [217] they wanted money they borrowed it from the Appellant, and that very often money was drawn on notes of hand, without the execution of a Bond."

In addition to this evidence the Appellant produced the Bonds and notes upon which the balance was alleged to have been found due, and the account said to have been made out, showing the balance.

The Respondent had alleged that when these documents were produced, the imposture, as he calls it, would appear. They are produced, and no attempt whatever is made to discredit them.

It is difficult to imagine proof more distinct and positive upon the first point: the transactions which led up to the Bond. But the Appellant's evidence distinctly names two persons, connections of the Respondent; one is agent, the other his brother-in-law, by whose intervention this arrangement is alleged to have been made. The Respondent does not examine either of these witnesses, or offer in any other manner whatever to contradict the testimony of the Appellant's witnesses.

That the balance was ascertained; that the abatement was made; that there was an agreement to give a Bond for Rs. 15,000, are facts which must be considered as conclusively established.

Secondly, as to the execution of the Bond. Laljeemul, after the passage which we have read from his evidence, proceeds thus:—"Again the next day, four ghurries after sunrise (two ghurries and a half make one hour), Doorgapershad, Mootsuddee, came to Radhakishen, and said, 'Send your witnesses that the Bond may be recorded.' Lalla Radhakishen then sent myself (Laljeemul), Choteyloll, Ramsookh, Sheikh Ameeroollah, and Gholam [218] Hussun, with Doorgapershad, and told us, 'If the Chowdhree should record a Bond, and acknowledge it before you, you should witness it.' All five of us accordingly went in the dewankhanah (a hall for receiving visitors) of Chowdhree Nowbut Ram, accompanied by Doorgapershad. The Chowdhree was seated there. Doorgapershad told him that Lalla Radhakishen had sent us to witness the Bond. The Chowdhree told Doorgapershad to bring out paper and to record the Bond. On this, Doorgapershad brought out paper, and engrossed a Bond thereon. He gave the Bond to the Chowdhree, who saw it; and having sent for his box, impressed it with his seal, and told us to witness it. Doorgapershad, Mootsuddee (the writer), and Ramsookh, Choteyloll, myself, Sheikh Ameeroollah and Gholam Hussun, accordingly witnessed the Bond. The Bond was recorded in our presence."

His account is confirmed by Choteyloll, a friend of the Respondent, another attesting witness; by Ramsookh, also an attesting witness (though his name is written by Doorgapershad, the agent of the Respondent, as Ram Sing); and by Gholam Hussun, who was present, and saw the transaction, though there appears to be some error as to his being an attesting witness; at least, his name is not found in the instrument as printed in the record of the proceedings of the Court below.

These witnesses are cross-examined, but their evidence is not in the least shaken, and, if it be believed, it proves most distinctly that the instrument in question was written by Doorgapershad, the agent of the Respondent, who also attested it, and that the Respondent deliberately stamped his seal upon it, in order to give it effect.

[219] But what makes this evidence conclusive is this; that the Respondent having the means of disproving the story, if untrue, by producing his own agent to say that he did not write and did not witness the Bond, does not venture to call him, or any other witness, to the point. He examines thirteen witnesses upon matters totally irrelevant to the real issue, and does not examine one who tends even to throw a doubt upon one single material fact of the Appellant's case.

But the matter does not end here. So far from denying this Bond, the Respondent, after its execution, endeavoured to obtain time for payment of it, which brings us to the third head of evidence; the recognition. Doorgapershad, Mootsuddee, is asked: "Did any one, ever coming before you, make any acknowledgement?" He answers: "In the last month of Katuk I went to Chowdhree Nowbut Ram, to write a note on account of Lalla Kalka Doss, resident of Peelhibeet, who had mortgaged the village of Rooppoor. Chowdhree Nowbut Ram told me to give Lalla Radhakishen Rs. 4000, for which the latter had brought an action; further saying, 'There is another suit, for Rs. 15,000. You may give Rs. 4000, and Lalla Radhakishen will take something less in the amount of costs; you should have this matter settled, and the suit for Rs. 15,000 you may have adjusted afterwards.' I said that the matter as it then stood would cause disrepute, and that it should, therefore, be settled. Again Chowdhree Nowbut Ram said, 'You should have the matter settled.' I said, 'Tell me what to say, that I may go to him and settle accordingly.' Chowdhree Nowbut Ram replied, 'that he would be [220] able to pay the money in five years, and that if he were made to pay in a lump it would ruin him.' I said, 'Your and Lalla Radhakishen's affairs are founded on mutual friendship. He is like your patron, and will not ruin you; but he will not agree to the promise of payment in such length of time, because, in six years' time, interest on the sum of Rs. 15,000 will accrue to nearly Rs. 15,000. Such promise of payment, without interest, he will not agree to.' Again the Chowdhree said, 'You may give Rs. 4000 on account of the suit for that sum. I shall send Sheonarain, and, as you also will be there, you may have the matter settled; and, if he will not come to terms, I will defend the suits.' After this I came and told Lalla Radhakishen what the Chowdhree had said; and also that, as the transaction was like a family affair, he should settle it amicably; adding, 'It is difficult for him (the Chowdhree) to pay Rs. 15,000, at once. It is advisable to agree to instalment payment.' Radhakishen said, 'I have no objection; but how can I agree to receive instalments without any one's coming to propose it? Have instalments ever been agreed to without interest?'

This attempt of the Respondent to obtain time for payment of the Bond is further proved by Seetaram, the witness already mentioned, who, speaking of Sheodut Ram, Jamadar, whom he describes as the Dewan of the Respondent and sole manager and agent of his household, says:—'Sheodut Ram, Jamadar, told me that 'Lalla Radhakishen had brought an action for Rs. 15,000, against the Chowdhree; you should persuade the latter to fix an instalment of Rs. 3000, per annum for five years without interest. You visit Lalla Radhakishen frequently, and should, therefore, [221] have this matter settled.' I and the Jamadar accordingly went to Radhakishen and introduced a negotiation relative to the payment by instalments. Lalla Radhakishen said, 'I will not agree to receive instalments for five years without interest.'

There was, therefore, clear, positive, consistent, uncontradicted testimony of the agreement to give the Bond; of its actual execution, and of its subsequent recognition; and, in the teeth of all this testimony, upon what grounds have the Courts below held it to be a forgery?

They compared the impression made by the seal on this instrument, with the impression made upon other instruments by what is admitted to have been a genuine seal of the Respondent, and they say that upon a very minute inspection, and measurement by a pair of compasses, the letters, or some of the letters, of the Respondent's name appear on the Bond to differ something in their size from the signatures admitted to be genuine. Whether this may have arisen from the mode in which the stamp was affixed on the different instruments, or from the greater or less quantity, or the greater or less fluidity, of the ink used on such occasions, it is immaterial to inquire. The question is, is it or not proved, beyond all shadow of doubt, that the Respondent did affix some seal to this instrument for the purpose of giving it effect? The evidence on this point is quite irresistible.

It is not till the case is on hearing that this objection is made. It never occurred to the Respondent, or his agents, to set up such a defence when the Bond was deposited in December, 1852, nor, as far as appears, till July or August, 1853. The Bond had been lying, in the interval, in the office of the Court; [222] and it is to be collected from the Circular Order referred to in the argument, that it is not difficult and not unusual for parties to procure access to, and to tamper with, documents so placed, and we cannot have the least doubt that such discrepancy as exists between this seal and the others produced, if they were the impressions of the same stamp, and if the difference is not to be accounted for by the accidental circumstances to which we have adverted, has been occasioned by the fraudulent acts of the Respondent's agents while the Bond was in the custody of the Court.

When the direct evidence in favour of the instrument is so overwhelming, it is needless to resort to confirmatory proof; it may, however, be observed, that it is shown that the stamp on the instrument had been sold, shortly before the date of the Bond, to an agent of the Respondent for his use; and if the Bond had been a forgery, it is utterly inconceivable that of all persons in the world, the name of the Respondent's own confidential agent should have been selected for forgery, as the writer of it and one of the attesting witnesses.

Every circumstance of suspicion which could be alleged against the Appellant's claim was brought forward, and urged with great force and ability by Mr. Forsyth, but there really is none of any value.

The only observations which at first had some weight with their Lordships were three—first, that the Bond was not registered; secondly, that the cancelled documents were not delivered up; and thirdly, that it was strange that a suit should have been instituted (as it was) upon the later Bond for Rs. 4000, instead of the two being united in one [223] suit, or that which was first executed (the Bond for Rs. 15,000) being first put in suit.

But as to the first point, we are informed by Sir Lawrence Peel, that in India two-thirds of the Bonds, which are payable at short dates, as this was, are not registered: as to the second, that a Plaintiff is required to prove the consideration for his Bond, and that the documents relating to it were, therefore, properly left in the possession of the Appellant: and as to the third, supposing the two Bonds could by the practice be included in one suit, we think that the delay in bringing the second suit is sufficiently accounted for by the negotiations which were carried on for payment of the amount of the Bond by instalments.

Upon the whole, we can entertain no doubt that there has been in this case an entire miscarriage of justice in the Courts below: and we cannot but express our deep regret that the Appellant should not only have had his suit dismissed, but have been subjected to the indignity, vexation, and expense of a criminal prosecution, in a case where the claim is established by testimony, less liable to suspicion than we ever remember to have seen brought forward on an appeal from India, in a question of disputed fact.

We must do to this gentleman, or to his representative, such justice as is in our power, by advising Her Majesty to reverse the decisions complained of, to establish the Plaintiff's demand in the suit, and to order payment of the amount of the Bond with the interest due upon it by the Respondent, together with costs both in the Zillah and in the Sudder Dewanny Courts, and the costs of this appeal.

[224] KATCHY KULLYANA RANGAPPAN KALACKA TOLA OODIAR.—

Appellant; BALOOSAMY CHETTY,—Respondent * [March 18, 1859]

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, Madras.

Suit to recover the amount of principal and interest upon certain pecuniary transactions set forth in an agreement, alleged to have been executed by the Defendant's father in favour of the Plaintiff, for moneys advanced by him, and also upon the Defendant's own promise after his father's death to pay the amount due from his father. Defence, first, that the agreement sued upon was a forgery; and, secondly, a denial of the promise of payment. Upon appeal (reversing the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras), the Judicial Committee, without declaring the agreement to be a forgery, dismissed the suit upon the ground of failure of proof to support the claim.

The Appellant allowed costs of the appeal here, as well as of the Courts in India.

The Appellant in this appeal was the Zemindar of Oodiarpolliem, in the Zillah of Trichinopoly. On the death of his father, the late Zemindar, in July, 1835, the Zemindary devolved on the Appellant's elder brother, Katchy Moottoo Vajaya Rangappah Kalacka Tola Oodiar, and on the death of the latter, which occurred in January, 1837, fell into the hands of his widow, Oppayee, as guardian of her son, Katchy Rangappah Kalacka Tola Oodiar, then a minor. The Zemindary was subsequently taken under the management of the Court of Wards. During the period in which the Zemindary was under such management, the [225] Collector, acting under the instructions of the Board of Revenue, issued a notice for creditors of the late Zemindar to come in and prove their debts. Accordingly, on the 28th of December, 1837, the Respondent presented to the Collector the following petition (afterwards described as Exhibit C.):—"Katchy Rangappah Kalacka Tola Oodiar, the late Zemindar of Oodiarpolliem borrowed from my father Rs. 2000, under a Bond executed on a stamped paper of Rs. 4 value, and on the 22nd Anee of Vyaya (4th July, 1826). Besides this Bond for Rs. 2000 (described as Exhibit B.), there were others executed by the said late Zemindar to my father for loans formerly obtained, and on the 22nd Poorattasee of Vyaya, the said Zemindar granted a sunnud directing pagodas 250 to be paid to my father out of the produce of Avandavady (one of the said Zemindar's istimurary villages), in full of all demands under the said old Bonds. When the said sunnud was presented to the Zemindar's agent, Rayapoorum Ramayar, and the money demanded, the Zemindar himself said that in that year the crops of the istimrary villages were damaged, and that the little money that could be realised was appropriated for his domestic expenses. Consequently the said pagodas 250, or Rs. 875, together with the other item, amounts to Rs. 2875, and my demand against the Zemindary in all, together with interest Rs. 2875, comes to Rs. 5950. I, therefore, pray that you will be pleased to examine my documents and witnesses, and pay my dues out of the surplus funds of the Zemindary."

The Collector having investigated this demand, disallowed the Respondent's claim.

[226] The minor, Katchy Rangappa Kalacka Tola Oodiar, died in July, 1842, when the Zemindary devolved on the Appellant.

On the 5th of February, 1847, the Respondent filed a plaint in the Civil Court of Trichinopoly against the Appellant for the recovery of Rs. 11,500, and in the plaint he alleged that, in addition to the securities mentioned by him in his petition to the Collector, the late Zemindar had executed to him an agreement, dated the 10th of February, 1835, binding himself to pay to him, the Appellant, by the 10th of February, 1839, the principal and interest of the documents, amounting altogether to Rs. 5750, and in the event of his failing to do so, to pay him that sum with interest at 12 per cent per annum. The plaint further stated, that the late Zemindar had died in July, 1835, without making any payment in liquidation of the above debt; and that although the Appellant had represented his claim to the Collector, no notice had been taken of it, and the plaint finally alleged that the Appellant had "all along made promises of payment, but never performed them."

The Appellant, by his answer, contended that the agreement in respect of which Respondent had filed his plaint was a forgery, and denied having made any promise of payment.

Issue having been joined in the suit, the following points were recorded by the Court for proof:—First, The Plaintiff was to prove that the debt of Rs. 2000, incurred on the 4th of July, 1826, was not included in the account alleged to have been adjusted subsequently. Second. The Plaintiff was also to state and prove the date on which the alleged adjustment [227] took place, with full particulars concerning the account itself. Third. He was also to produce the sunnud for payment granted to him, or to prove to the satisfaction of the Court whether any and what sums were paid thereon. Fourth. Whether any claim was advanced during these two years and upwards, and if advanced, what became of it? Fifth. The Plaintiff was to produce and prove the agreement alleged to have been executed on the 10th of February, 1835, with all full particulars. Sixth. The Defendant's elder brother having survived six months after succeeding to the Zemindary, whether the Plaintiff adopted any measures to have his claim recognized, and if so, what were they? and if not, why not? Seventh. The Plaintiff was to prove that he brought his claim to the notice of the Collector, and if not, why not? Eighth. The Plaintiff was to prove when and how he brought his claim to the notice of the present Defendant. Ninth. It appearing further that the last agreement alleged to have been executed in favour of Plaintiff was due in February, 1839, when the estate was under the Court of Wards, did Plaintiff then bring forward his claim? and if not, why not? Tenth. The Plaintiff having alleged that there were previous dealings between Plaintiff's father and Defendant's father, had he any evidence, oral or documentary, in support of this or any written account to produce? If so, he was to produce it.

The Respondent filed the agreement sued upon, which was on plain paper (described as Exhibit A.), and was as follows:—"Agreement executed on the 30th Tie of Taya (10th February, 1835), by Katchy Rangappa Kalacka Tola [228] Oodiar, Zemindar of Oodiarpolliem to Balooamy Chetty, son of Kitchy Chetty, of Combaconum. Whereas Rs. 2000 due under a Bond executed to your father on the 22nd Anee of Vyaya (4th July, 1826), and pagodas 250, due under a sunnud issued on the 22nd Poorattasee of the said year, directing the said sum of pagodas 250 to be paid out of the produce of the village Avandavady, has not been paid up to this date, I do hereby promise to pay you the said sum of Rs. 2875, with interest, amounting to Rs. 2875, making in all Rs. 5950, before 30 Tie of Vilumbee (10th February, 1839); should I fail to pay you the said sum of Rs. 5950 within the time above specified, I further promise to pay you the said sum with interest at 12 per cent per annum from this date. As stamped paper cannot be procured just now, this agreement has been executed on this paper. Thus do I execute this agreement with my free will and consent. The writer hereof is Mahilingien." This instrument was sealed with the seal of the late Zemindar, and had the names of four attesting witnesses.

The Appellant filed seven documents proving the continuous existence of litigation between Respondent and Appellant's father from the year 1833, until the Appellant's father's death. Respondent named nineteen witnesses, of whom sixteen were examined. The purport of these witnesses' evidence is considered in the judgment of the Zillah Court. The Appellant did not examine any witnesses.

The decree of the Zillah Court of Trichinopoly, delivered on the 25th of September, 1852, after mentioning the pleadings, proceeded as follows:—"On a perusal of the evidence the acting Judge has to observe that much irrelevant evidence has been adduced by the [229] Plaintiff to prove the truthfulness of the Exhibit B, and the bona fide nature of the alleged debt of 250 pagodas alluded to in the pleadings. These transactions are embraced in the Exhibit A, upon which the Plaintiff sues, and if that deed is recognized by the Court, those transactions must, as a matter of course, be recognized by it. In support of the agreement A, the Plaintiff has filed two subsidiary documents B, and C, and has named nineteen witnesses. The document B has been already alluded to. The document C, is a copy of the petition presented to the Collector in December, 1837. A copy of this document was also filed by the Defendant. Of the witnesses named by the Plaintiff, the eighth witness, the alleged writer of the agreement A, has testified to its authenticity, and the sixth and eleventh witnesses depose to having attested it. The twelfth and thirteenth witnesses also depose to having been present at the time of its execution. Of the other witnesses, some depose to the money transactions in connection with the document B, and the sumud for the sum of 250 pagodas described above, and the rest to promises of payment on the part of the Defendant's father. This last declaration of evidence should always be received with caution, as it is very easily fabricated. It should also be observed in regard to the testimony of the eleventh witness, that it is open to great suspicion, as he admits never having seen the Defendant's father but on the occasion of his having been called to attest his agreement A. The Defendant has called no witnesses, but has filed seven Exhibits. Of these, the Exhibits 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 only benefit him, inasmuch as they prove that at the time of the execution of the alleged agreement A, the Plaintiff and the Defendant's [230] father were involved in a course of litigation, during which it is highly improbable that the agreement in question would have been executed without a fresh loan, which has not even been hinted at, because these petty Zemindars esteem it a high indignity to be dragged into Court by their creditors. The Defendant's Exhibit, No. 7, is a copy of the Plaintiff's own petition to the Collector, dated the 28th of December, 1837, and this by its entire silence in regard to the Exhibit A, leads the Court to believe the latter to be a forgery fabricated to prevent the operation of the Regulations of limitation in regard to the Plaintiff's primary claims. If the Plaintiff had then possessed the Exhibit A, and it had been bona fide executed by the Zemindar, there can be no doubt but that he would have brought it prominently forward before the Collector; the Plaintiff's own reasoning and excuses on this subject in his reply are futile. For the above reasons the Court is satisfied that the Exhibit A is a forgery, and resolves to dismiss the Plaintiff's suit with all costs."

The Respondent appealed from this decree to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras.

The decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut was delivered on the 4th of March, 1854. The material part of this decree was as follows:—"The acting civil Judge decided that the document sued on was a forgery, fabricated to prevent the operation of the Regulations of limitations, adverting particularly to the omission of all allusion to it in the Plaintiff's petition to the Collector in 1837, and to the improbability of its having been executed without a fresh loan, the more especially as Plaintiff's father and Appellant's father were involved in litigation at the time. He accordingly dismissed the Plaintiff's claim with costs. [231] From this decree the Plaintiff appeals. He contends that the acting civil Judge has improperly discredited the evidence adduced by him, and in explanation of his omission to allude to the agreement A, in his petition to the Collector, states that the time specified in the agreement for the payment of the amount not having fully expired, he was under the apprehension that if he brought forward this document the Collector would direct him to wait until the expiration of the period named in it. He contends that the fact of his father and the Defendant's father having been engaged in litigation at the time of the alleged execution of the agreement was no reason why it should not have been executed. The Defendant repeats the arguments advanced by him in the original suit to prove that the agreement A is a forgery, and prays the Court to confirm the original decree. On consideration of the pleadings and evidence in this case, the Court have come to a different conclusion on it from that arrived at by the acting civil Judge. The Defendant has totally denied the occurrence of the transactions pleaded by the Plaintiff, alleging the documents A and B, produced by him, to be forgeries. The Court is unable to believe that a party seeking to defraud another by means of false deeds would enter upon such a course as that attributable under the Defendant's plea to the Plaintiff. First, that he should concoct the Bond, B, and advance the allegation of the supplementary debt of Rs. 875, the latter not assured upon any produceable document. Then, that he should adduce these claims before the Collector on his asserted debtor's estate becoming zufted; afterwards that he should allow the claims to become unactionable through lapse of time; and [232] finally that he should fabricate the consolidated document A, upon which this suit is brought, ante-dating it before the time of his application to the Collector, notwithstanding that the existence of such a document had not been hinted to the Collector. A party would hardly be guilty of such needless repetition of forgery, nor wilfully incur the blemishes to his case above indicated. On the contrary, the Court see nothing in the Plaintiff's proceedings irreconcilable with the truth of his claim, while the Defendant's plea in denial thereof is unaccompanied by tokens of its credibility. The document A is substantiated by oral evidence, which the Court have no ground for calling in question. The claim on which the document is founded was confessedly made to the Collector in the year 1837, nine years before this suit was brought. That this document was not produced before the Collector is to be accounted for by the extent of time given therein for settlement of the debt, and which was four years, not having then run out by upwards of a year. The document appears to have been designed as a collateral support to the prior Bond, B, else would the latter have been given up, and hence, having the opportunity, the Plaintiff would seem to have been tempted to produce Exhibit B, to the Collector, to have it enforced, seeing that there was an invitation to claimants against the estate to appear. That the litigation existing between the parties at the date of the document A, would be a bar to the Plaintiff's having obtained such a document as conceived by the acting civil Judge, the Court do not think. This litigation consisted in a suit on Bond preferred by the Plaintiff, in which judgment was finally given in his favour. The Bond had been acknowledged by [233] the indebted Zemindar, but it was pleaded by him that full consideration had not been received, and that the debt, with the exception of a trifling balance, had been discharged. Under such circumstances, the Plaintiff would naturally exact such a confirmation of the claim now in question as is afforded by the document A, under the penalty of otherwise proceeding to enforce the claim by suit. On the other hand, had the Plaintiff been guilty of the successive acts of forgery attributed to him, including that of the deceased Zemindar's seal as well as signature, it is obvious that a party in the position of the Defendant would not have been without some evidence to expose his malpractices and to disprove the signature and seal. Under these circumstances, the Court resolve to reverse the original decree, and to adjudge to the Plaintiff the sum sued for with the costs.

The present appeal was brought from this decree.

As the Respondent did not appear, the appeal was heard ex parte.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Coryton, for the Appellant, argued, that the silence of the petition of the Respondent to the Collector on the 28th of December, 1837, as to the alleged agreement of the 10th of April, 1835, and the subsequent omission of the Respondent to bring the same forward until the institution of the suit in February 1847, constituted, in the circumstances of the case, sufficient ground for the decree of the Zillah Court, which discredited the evi-[234]-dence and rejected the Respondent's claim, as being founded in fabrication and fraud.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered, as follows, by

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—This was an appeal from a decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras, reversing a judgment pronounced by the Zillah Judge of Trichinopoly, before whom proceedings by plaint had been instituted for the purpose of recovering against the present Appellant an alleged debt stated to be due from his father. The Judge of the Zillah Court at Trichinopoly not being satisfied with the evidence, pronounced against the demand. The Sudder Dewanny Court having taken a different view of the evidence, came to a different conclusion, and this appeal is the consequence.

The original plaint was filed in the early part of the year 1847, and proceeded upon a Bond of old date, given, or alleged to have been given, by the father of the Defendant, the Appellant here; and inasmuch as the suit would have been barred by length of time, unless something had taken place subsequent to the Bond, the suit also proceeded upon an agreement of a later date, which would bring the demand within time. The agreement is in these words:—[His Lordship read it, ante, p. 227, and proceeded.]

This instrument purports to be signed by Katchy Rangappa Kalaacka Tola Oodiar, the then Zemindar, and there are, or purport to be, four attesting witnesses.

The Zillah Judge was of opinion that this was not shown to be a genuine document; and having come [235] to that conclusion, the inevitable consequence was the dismissal of the suit. On appeal the Sudder Dewanny Court, as has been said, came to a different conclusion.

Now, the attesting witnesses, or alleged attesting witnesses to this document, have been examined, and some other persons who are alleged to have been present; but, in their Lordships' judgment, they are not persons of a station or position, or in circumstances likely to have brought them upon the scene as witnesses on the occasion to which their testimony is applied. That consideration, however, would, in their Lordship's judgment not of itself have been fatal to the demand, but for some other considerations which present themselves.

It appears that this claim was brought forward during the infancy of the predecessor of the present Appellant, who was the son of the original debtor, who was stated to have entered into the Bond, and it was brought before the Collector. The matter was debated, and the claim was rejected by the Collector in the year 1841; and one of the most remarkable circumstances in the case is, that although the demand was then disputed, and successfully disputed, and, as has been said, rejected, the alleged agreement of the 10th of February, 1835, which, if genuine, cleared the matter from all doubt as to the truth and honesty of the debt, was not brought forward, and was not alleged to be in existence.

Of course it became necessary in the present suit for the Respondent, the alleged creditor, when he brought that agreement forward, to state a reason of some kind for not having produced it before; and his reason was singular enough. He had claimed the [236] debt as one immediately due, but this document of 1835 had extended the time for the payment of the debt, and accordingly it would have appeared that he had instituted the suit at a time at which he could not have sustained it; and he says that that was his reason for not bringing it forward at that time: a circumstance at once and obviously bearing against the truth and integrity of a person who could so conduct himself.

There is another consideration bearing importantly upon the probabilities of the case. The date of this document is the 10th of February, 1835, and it appears plainly from the proofs in the case, that the alleged parties to that agreement were at the moment engaged in warm and hostile litigation at the time: which was not determined until some time after. It is, therefore, manifest, that it was in the highest degree improbable that in such a state of things the alleged parties to the agreement would have signed such a document, or entered into such an agreement.

There is yet another circumstance to which their Lordships think it not immaterial to allude, namely, that documents are mentioned by the alleged creditor of various kinds, as evidencing the demand, and in effect establishing it, which were never seen, and which were never brought forward.

Now, their Lordships certainly, if the matter had come before them originally, as it did before the Zillah Judge, would have come to the same conclusion, namely, that the original demand, which could alone sustain the suit, was not proved.

The Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Court appears to have considered that if the document had been fabricated, it would have been made more consistent [237] with probability, and not have borne the date or applied to the time which it did; but it is to be remarked, that it was necessary to give it a date anterior to the death of the alleged debtor, who died in the month of July, 1835, the year in the February of which this document was alleged to have been executed. Their Lordships, therefore, must respectfully dissent from that observation made by the learned Judge upon this part of the case, seeing that if forgery was the intent, the intending forger was in a strait, obliged by the force of circumstances to select a date necessarily carrying with it some degree of credibility.

Their Lordships, therefore, think, that in such a state of the evidence in support of the claim, the conclusion of the Zillah Judge, which was only that the demand had not been proved, is shown to have been right. We take the same view, as has already been stated, as the Zillah Judge did; and considering that their Lordships will humbly recommend to Her Majesty to reverse the judgment immediately appealed from, and that the original plaint should be dismissed, we think that the Appellant should have his costs, not only in the Courts of India, but also here.

[238] RAJAH ENAYET HOSSEIN,—Appellant: SAYUD AHMED REZA and MAHAMMAD REZA,—Respondents * [Dec. 4, 6, 7, 1858].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Calcutta.

A. died in 1813. At A.'s death, one of his heirs, entitled to a share of the succession of his estate, obtained possession, claiming the entirety under a deed of gift. Another heir also claimed the entirety, first under a Will, and in the alternative, as customary heir. Suits were brought by the two claimants, in the course of which questions were raised as to who would be entitled, in case both claimants should fail, but from the frame of the suits it was impracticable to deal with those questions till the adverse claims to the entirety were disposed of. Ultimately, in the year 1842, those claims were disposed of by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in one of the suits, which in substance negatived the claims of both parties to the entirety, and decree that the heirs of A., according to the Sheah law of inheritance were entitled, and directed the mesne profits to be brought into Court and divided among such heirs. A suit was in consequence instituted in the year 1852, by one of the heirs of A., to carry into execution the decree of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council made in 1842. Held—

First, that although the claim which accrued so long ago as the death of A. would have been, in ordinary circumstances, barred by the Bengal Regulations of Limitation, III. of 1793, sec. 14, and II. of 1805, sec. 3, yet that as the pendency of the appeal rendered it impracticable to bring the suit until the question was disposed of by the decree of the Privy Council in 1842, such suit was to be considered as supplemental to that decree, and that, as the suit was brought within twelve years from that date, it was not barred by those Regulations [7 Moo. Ind. App. 258, 259].

Secondly, that although one of the original claimants had obtained possession under an Order of the Court, and retained the same till the final decree in 1842, it was not such a quiet and undisturbed possession, in the circumstances, as to operate by Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, sec. 3, as a bar to the suit ultimately instituted by one of the heirs entitled to the inheritance [7 Moo. Ind. App. 259, 260].

This was a suit brought to recover possession of a 2 annas 16 gundahs undivided part or share of and [239] in a 8 annas part or share, or one undivided moiety, of a Zemindary named Soorjapoor (the whole having been taken to be nominally divided into 16 annas parts or shares), together with the mesne profits. The Appellant claimed the above share as heir-at-law of the late Ranees Soomrun, his paternal grandmother, he at the same time having in his own right by inheritance, as one of the heirs-at-law of his late father, Rajah Deedar Hossein, the remaining 8 annas, or one other moiety of the Zemindary. The principal questions of fact and law raised in the suit had reference to the construction and application of the Bengal Regulations of limitation, III. of 1793, sec. xiv., and II. of 1805, sec. iii., clauses 1, 3, and 4. The point at issue being, whether, under the circumstances of the case, and the litigation in India, while an appeal in England by Deedar Hossein was also pending respecting the title to a moiety of the Zemindary, the suit was barred by those Regulations.

The facts of the case which gave rise to this question, were as follows:—

Fookur-ood-deen Hossein, a Mahomedan, was possessed of the Zemindary of Soorjapoor, situate partly in the Zillah of Purneah and partly in the Zillah of Dinjapoor, both in the province of Behar. He died December, 1793 (an), leaving him surviving two sons, Rajah Akbar Hossein and Rajah Deedar Hossein, the former being the uncle, and the latter the father [240] of the present Appellant, and they jointly succeeded, as his heirs, under the Mahomedan law and family custom, to the Zemindary in equal undivided moieties. Rajah Akbar Hossein died in September, 1813, without male issue, but leaving three wives, Ranees Zuhoor-oon Nissa, Beebee Doornee, and Beebee Gool Chumun; and three daughters: Beebee Fyzoon Nissa, by Ranees Zuhoor-oon Nissa, his first wife, whom she predeceased, a minor and unmarried; Ameer-oon Nissa by his second wife, and Beebee Bhanqa; and also his mother, Ranees Soomrun. According to the general principles of the Mahomedan law, these persons jointly became his heirs-at-law, and as such entitled, in different shares, to his one undivided 8 annas share, or moiety, of the Zemindary of Soorjapoor. At his death, Ranees Zuhoor-oon Nissa, his eldest widow, took possession of his share of the Zemindary and the rents and profits, asserting that she was entitled thereto under a conveyance called a hibbeh bilewas (gift on a consideration), alleged by her to have been executed by Rajah Akbar Hossein in his lifetime, in lieu of her dower, and setting up at the same time, a deed of gift, in favour of the deceased's daughters, also alleged by her to have been executed by him.

Ranees Soomrun, in the month of March, 1814, filed a petition in the civil Court of Purneah, charging Ranees Zuhoor-oon Nissa with having fraudulently taken possession of the whole of the property of the Petitioner's son, the late Rajah Akbar Hossein, in which, as well as in that of her late husband, she asserted and claimed a right of property, and prayed that the moiety of the stipend, which she had previously received, out of the profits of the 8 annas share in the Zemindary, and which had been stopped since her [241] son's death, might be continued to be paid to her, and upon this petition an Order was made accordingly.

Rajah Deedar Hossein commenced a suit on the 31st of January, 1815, in the Provincial Court of Moorshedabad, against Ranees Zuhoor-oon Nissa, denying her title, and seeking to recover possession of the whole of the 8 annas share or moiety of the Zemindary, to which he claimed to be solely entitled as only brother of the deceased, Akbar Rajah Hossein, and as such, entitled by the custom and usage of their family as his sole heir, and he also claimed to be absolutely entitled thereto under a Will and Ikrarnamah stated to have been executed by his deceased brother in his lifetime, alleging, at the same time, that the two instruments set up by Ranees

(a) Very extensive litigation arose out of the succession to his estates. For the proceedings, see Rajah Deedar Hossein v. Ranees Zuhoor-oon Nissa, 3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 46, S.C. 2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 141; Raja Deedar Hossein v. Rani Zahur-oon Nissa, 5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 29; Sayud Hossein Reza v. Ameer-oon Nissa, 7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. pp. 124, 316, and Vol. 10. p. 224.

Zuhoor-oon Nissa were fraudulent (see 2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, p. 444). The answer of Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa put in issue her title under the bill of sale to the whole of the 8 annas share, denying the charge of fraud, and denying the title of the Rajah Deedar Hossein under the family custom and usage, and also under the Will and Ikramnamah, to the moiety of the Zemindary. The decree of the Provincial Court was pronounced in that suit on the 27th of August, 1817, to the effect that it had been proved that Abkar Hossein executed the two instruments while in possession of his reason and intellect, and that Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa was entitled, under the bill of sale, to one moiety of the Zemindary. From this decree Deedar Hossein appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. Ranee Soomrun, the mother of the deceased, and of Deedar Hossein, died while the suit was pending, leaving the latter her sole heir. In May, 1820, Mr. [242] Fendall, Chief Judge, and Mr. Goad, the fourth Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, gave judgment in the appeal (see 2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 454), decreeing that the bill of sale set up by Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa had not been proved and established, nor the other instruments, nor the family usage relied on by Deedar Hossein, and that it was, therefore, necessary to divide the one moiety of the Zemindary according to the Furraiz (law of division), among such as were heirs of the deceased, Rajah Akbar; and he directed an inquiry as to the persons entitled to succeed thereto as such heirs.

The case was then referred to another Judge of the same Court, Mr. Courtney Smith, who pronounced his judgment on the 14th of June, 1820, to the effect that there was a failure of proof as to the bill of sale set up by Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa, and that he considered it fabricated and altogether false; that if it had been executed by the deceased Rajah Akbar it would have been invalid, as being opposed to the family usage, which he considered proved; and further that the instruments set up by Deedar Hossein had not been established, but that the want of proof of these did not affect the family usage, and that Ben. Reg. XI. of 1793, did not bar Deedar Hossein's claim under the family usage. The case was once more carried before another Judge of the same Court, Sir James Edward Colebrooke, who, by his judgment, ordered that the decree of the Provincial Court of the 27th August, 1817, should be reversed and annulled, and that Deedar Hossein should be put into possession of the whole of the Zemindary, and that Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa should account to him for her receipts and dis-[243]bursements during the period she was in possession. Deedar Hossein, accordingly, entered into possession of a moiety of the Zemindary in question.

A review of the judgment of Sir James Colebrooke was allowed on the petition of Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa, who submitted, that there was a difference between the doctrines of the Sheahs and Soonees sects of the Mahomedans as to succession, and that the parties were Sheahs. A decree, on such review, was afterwards pronounced by another Judge of the same Court, Mr. William Leycester, on the 21st of January, 1822, to the effect that the family usage was not sufficiently proved; that if it had been, it was not valid under Ben. Reg. XI. of 1793; and also, that if any such family usage existed up to their father's death, it had been altered after that event by the two sons, who agreed to hold a moiety each of the profits of the Zemindary; and he ordered that the moiety in suit should be divided among Rajah Akbar's heirs when ascertained and declared, according to the book treating of Furraiz, and that the decree be altered and amended. On the 22nd of January, 1822, the former Judge, Mr. Goad, expressed his concurrence with the last-mentioned Judge. A reference was then made to another Judge of the same Court, Mr. Dorin, who gave his judgment on the 7th of May, 1822, to the effect that it was presumable that the family usage prevailed up to the death of the father, but that it was extinguished by the division of the Zemindary by his sons.

The final decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in this suit, was pronounced in the appeal on the 12th of August, 1822, by three Judges of that Court, Mr. Leycester, Mr. Goad, and Mr. Dorin, to the effect that the Appellant was of the Sheah sect of Mahomedans, [244] and by the Imamean code, containing the doctrines of the Sheah sect, a brother could not inherit when daughters, as in the case before them, survived; therefore, the decree of the Provincial Court of the 27th of August, 1817, so far as it dismissed Deedar Hossein's claim, was declared to be affirmed, and the judgment and decree of Sir James Colebrooke of the 4th of August, 1820, reversed, and an Order made that Deedar Hossein should be made answerable to Rancee Zuhoor-oon Nissa for the wasilat during the period which he was in possession of the disputed moiety of the Zemindary, under the decree of the 4th of August, 1820.

Deedar Hossein appealed to the Privy Council from this decree.

Subsequent to the appeal to England, and in 1836, a suit was brought by Mehr-oon Nissa, grand-daughter of Akbar Hossein, to recover her share of the succession, and was pending at the date of the decree of the Privy Council made upon the appeal of Deedar Hossein. This suit was afterwards compromised.

On the 18th of November, 1835, Rancee Zuhoor-oon Nissa died, leaving Sayud Hossein Reza, her brother and heir-at-law, her surviving, who as such heir became a party to the suit, and at the same time got possession of the 8 annas share or moiety of the late Raja Akbar Hossein, the title of Zuhoor-oon Nissa to which share being then still in litigation in the suit. Deedar Hossein died in 1841, leaving the Appellant, his only son, having in his lifetime made a Will, by which he appointed the Appellant, executor and representative in estate, and also a Hibehnamah (deed of gift on a consideration), in favour of the Appellant, who was put into possession of the estate [245] and property of his deceased father, under Act, No. XIX. of 1841.

The decree of Her Majesty in Council in the above appeal was pronounced on the 15th of January, 1842 (2 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 411), and by it the final decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut was varied in certain particulars; by ordering that the Appellant should bring into Court the proceeds of the moiety of the Zemindary, whilst he was in possession thereof, and that such proceeds should be paid to those who were found to be the heirs, according to the Sheah law of succession, and to their representatives; but in all other respects the decree was affirmed.

Sayud Hossein Reza died in November, 1844, leaving the Respondents, his sons and heirs, who became parties in a suit, in which Ameer-oon Nissa, the daughter of Rajah Akbar Hossein, had brought to recover from Sayud Hossein Reza a portion of the 8 annas share or moiety of Rajah Akbar Hossein, deceased.

By an Order of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, dated the 1st of August, 1846, made on the petition of Sayud Enayet Reza, the husband and executor of Ameer-oon Nissa; and Mehr-oon Nissa, it was ordered that the Judge of Purneah, in execution of the decree of Her Majesty in Council, should give possession in the Zemindary of the share of the Ameer-oon Nissa; and of Beebee Donnee, deceased, the second wife of the Akbar Hossein, to the petitioner according to his proportion of the shares mentioned in the decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, of the 18th of May, 1830, and that the Judge should cause the wasilat of the time of his possession to be [246] deposited in Court by him, according to the terms of the decree of Her Majesty in Council, and paid to the petitioner in proportion to his share.

On the further hearing of Ameer-oon Nissa's suit, Messrs. Rattray and Tucker, two of the Judges of that Court, reversed the decree, declaring that the claim of the Plaintiffs was not barred by the Regulations of limitation, and also that they were within the provisions of Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, sec. iii. clause 4, and might have evaded that Regulation, if they had thought proper, but which they had not done. That any suit instituted by the heirs of the late Rajah Akbar Hossein, before the suit which was instituted by the late Deedar Hossein had been determined by the decree of Her Majesty in Council of the 15th of January, 1842, could not have been proceeded with, or if proceeded with, a decree obtained would not have been of any avail against a decision in favour of either Deedar Hossein or Rancee Zuhoor-oon Nissa, both claiming under a specialty adverse to a claim of inheritance; and that this alone brought the case within the discretion allowed to the Court under the concluding words of section xiv. of Ben. Reg. III. of 1793. The Court further decided that it was the decree of Her Majesty in Council alone that authoritatively and finally declared the property to be the estate of Rajah Akbar Hossein, and divisible among his heirs; that up to the date of that decree this question was in abeyance, and that the cause of action might fairly be taken from the arrival in India of that decree.

On the 16th of February, 1852, the Appellant, the heir of Deedar Hossein, brought a suit in the Zillah Court of Purneah against the Respondents and others to recover possession of the share of the late [247] Rancee Soomrun with mesne profits, from the 15th of January, 1842, the date of the decree of Her Majesty in Council, determining the right of the general heirs. The plaint stated the principal facts before mentioned, and the proceedings in the original suit, in which the title of Zuhoor-oon Nissa was contested.

The answer of the Respondents pleaded, first, that the late Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa, and after her Rajah Sayud Hossein Reza, their father, as her rightful heir, and last of all themselves as his heirs, consecutively, for a period of forty years had been in undisturbed possession of the property in dispute, and that nearly forty years had elapsed since the death of the original proprietor, Rajah Akbar Hossein, and that the Plaintiff, with a view to bring his claim within the provisions of Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, set forth the allegation of forcible possession being kept of the property in dispute, by them, the Respondents. The answer then stated by way of defence, that no bar existed to a suit by the late Ranee Soomrun in her lifetime, as having survived the last-mentioned Rajah; it was also alleged that she had herself relinquished and abandoned her claim to her share in her lifetime; and lastly, it was pleaded that the Court was barred by Ben. Regs. II. of 1805, and III. of 1793, sec. xiv., from taking cognizance of the claim, and that the right of suit was not kept in abeyance by the legal proceedings in the original suit instituted and carried on by the late Deedar Hossein. The answer also denied the Respondents' liability to account for the mesne profits.

The Appellant in his replication denied the allegations in the answer, and contended that during the pending of the original suit, contesting the title of the [248] fraudulent possessor to the whole 8 annas shares, Ranee Soomrun and Deedar Hossein were precluded from bringing another suit for the specific share therein of the former, and that from the date of the decree of Her Majesty in Council of the 15th of January, 1842, which was the final decree in the original suit, and up to which time, therefore, that suit was still pending, the period of twelve years had not elapsed. The replication also charged the possession to have been taken and held by unfair means and fraud.

The hearing of the suit took place before Mr. George Loch, acting Judge, on the 20th of May, 1854. That Judge was of opinion, that, under ordinary circumstances, the suit would have been barred by cl. 3, sec. iii., Reg. II. of 1805; but that in the present case the decision of the Privy Council came in: for until the special claim of Deedar Hossein and Zuhoor-oon Nissa were disposed of, the rights of the heirs of Akbar Hossein were in abeyance; and the Court decreed that Ranee Soomrun was entitled, as heir of Akbar Hossein, to a share in his property, equal to 1 anna 8 gundabs of 8 annas Hissa; and that the Plaintiff, Enayet Hossein, as heir and executor of Deedar Hossein, to whom Ranee Soomrun's share was assigned by the Mooftees, were entitled to have possession of that share with mesne profits, but with interest only from the date of suit, owing to the delay in bringing the action.

The Respondents in the suit appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, from this judgment. The grounds of appeal filed by them were as follows:—First. Because the suit was not instituted within twelve years from the date of its origin, the [249] 28th of September, 1813, the date of the death of Rajah Akbar, and that the case had only been brought on the 21st of February, 1852, and ought, therefore, to have been dismissed, according to Reg. III. of 1793. Secondly. That it was in evidence, according to the decision of the Zillah Judge, that first of all Ranee Zuhoor-oon Nissa was in undisputed possession of the property in dispute, and after her, Rajah Sayud Hossein Reza; and that the Appellants, without any opposition, had held the same under right of heirship for nearly forty years previous to the institution of the suit; and in such case according to sec. iii., Reg. II. of 1805, the claim of the Plaintiff ought to have been dismissed. Thirdly. That the relinquishment of her right by Ranee Soomrun, by accepting a monthly allowance, and her omission to sue for her right in her lifetime, barred the suit of the Plaintiff, on the plea of heirship to the late Ranee. Fourthly. That the Zillah Judge had reckoned the cause of action in this case to arise from the decision of the Privy Council, dated the 15th of January, 1842, and that this was erroneous, and not recognized by any law and practice. Fifthly. That the Zillah Judge has decreed on the ground of this case being precisely similar to that of Mehr-oon Nissa and others, decided on the 12th of June, 1847; but that that was erroneous. Sixthly. That the claim of the Plaintiff rested on the Will and inheritance of the late Rajah Deedar; but that what was clearly incorrect, and that as the grounds of action conflicted one with the other, it ought to have been dismissed. Seventhly. That the Plaintiff having admitted the right of the Appellants to 8 annas share of the Zemindary in dispute, his suit in contravention of it was [250] inadmissible and invalid. Eighthly. That when the father of the Plaintiff in the former cases, from the Provincial Court to the Sudder and the Privy Council, preferred the claim on the allegation of the immemorial family custom, which was to the effect that females only get a maintenance, and no share of the Zemindary, in that case the present claim of the Plaintiff was contrary to his allegation, and the former claim of his father untenable. Ninthly. That the suit not having been instituted within twelve years from the date of the deed alleged by the Plaintiff, and there being no mention in it of this claim, it ought to have been dismissed in accordance to the precedents of the Court. Tenthly. That the Plaintiff was only entitled to wasilat from the date of the decree.

The decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in this appeal was pronounced on the 30th November, 1854. The material part of which was as follows:—"We are unable, after a careful consideration of the pleadings and of what has been urged by the parties in the cause, to adopt either the reasoning upon which the Judge has come to his conclusion, or the decision which he has passed upon the point of law at issue in the case. If the suit before the Privy Council had been between the same parties and on the same cause of action as the suit now before this Court, the argument of an estoppel which has guided the decision of the Court below would have been of some force, for no doubt the property now in litigation formed a part of that included in the suit decided by the Superior Court in England. But in our view, such is not the state of things; and the plaint must be dismissed under the law of limitation. In that case, special claims, upon the grounds of family [251] custom and a Will, were preferred by Deedar Hossein; both claims were rejected by the Privy Council. The Defendant, Zuhoor-oon Nissa, widow of Akbar Hossein, asserted her right under a byemokassa. This special claim was also disallowed, and the property was declared divisible amongst Deedar Hossein's heirs. In the present case, Deedar Hossein's son grounds his claim to the property in litigation upon his rights as heir to his father and his grandmother, Rancee Soomrun. He sues, amongst others, the sons of Hossein Reza, the brother of Zuhoor-oon Nissa, who, on her death, succeeded as her heir. It is thus clear that neither are the causes of action in the above suits identical, nor are all the parties to both suits the same. Such being the case, the pendency of the first-mentioned suit in the Privy Council cannot be justly held to create a right of action in the Plaintiff as heir to Akbar Hossein's estate by right of his father and grandmother. It is nowhere shown that either of these persons ever claimed or got possession of the estate. The appeal is decreed, with all costs, against the Plaintiff."

The Appellant brought the present appeal to Her Majesty in Council from this decree.

The appeal was argued by Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant; and Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. W. Field, for the Respondents.

The arguments turned upon the construction of the Bengal Regulations of limitation, III. of 1793, and II. of 1805. The contention of the Appellant was:—

[252] First. That the suit was not barred by effluxion of time by Ben. Reg. III. of 1793, sec. xiv., as the claim in the present suit could not have been effectually prosecuted, as a distinct and independent claim, until the claim of Zuhoor-oon Nissa to the entirety was disposed of, and it was submitted, that the Appellant was entitled to treat the litigation which resulted in the decree of the Privy Council of 1842, as part of the procedure, by which he sought to establish his claim, and his suit being supplemental to the original suits, brought the case within the exception provided in that section. Upon this point, Prannath Chowdree v. Rajah Burrodakant Roy (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Repts. 97), Syud Hossein Reza v. Amur-oon-Nissa (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Repts. 124), Troup and Dyce Sombre v. The East India Company (7 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 104), Neelmunee Pal Chowdree v. Rajah Burdakanant Roy (6 Ben. Sud. Dew. Repts. 238), Ram Koamar Neeare Bachesputte v. Sree Nath Bhattachary (4 Ben. Sud. Dew. Repts. 14), Mussumat Shumsoon Nissa v. Tannoo Beebe (6 Ben. Sud. Dew. Repts. 58), were cited.

Secondly. That the Appellant was entitled to recover the share in the property sued for, under Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, sec. iii. cl. 1 and 3, as the cause of action had not arisen sixty years before the institution of this suit; as Zuhoor-oon Nissa, from whom Sayud Hossein Reza, and the Respondents, derived title, had not held quiet, unmolested, and undisturbed possession for twelve years, the period prescribed by the last mentioned clause, as the right of possession was in litigation in the Courts; and on this ground the cases of Musst-Ommut-o-Zuhra Begum [253] v. Lootfullah Khan (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Reps. 399), Sheikh Imdad Ali v. Mussumat Koothy Begum (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 17), Gopal Chand Pande v. Babu Kunwar Singh (5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 34), Marian Bibi v. Khwaja Awtic Ter Stephanos (5 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 84), were relied upon.

Thirdly. That the practice of the native Courts in India, when a case involved a question of right to succession, and there are more claimants than one, was not to pass a decree except it be adjudged among all the claimants.

Judgment was pronounced by

The Right Hon. Lord Kingsdown.—Their Lordships are of opinion, that in this case, they must advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree complained of.

The Appellant instituted a suit claiming a portion of the inheritance of his ancestor, Fookur-ood-deen Hossein. That suit was instituted in the year 1852, and the defence, the sole defence, to that claim is, that the suit was not brought within the period which is limited by the Bengal Regulations, III. of 1793, sec. xiv., and II. of 1805, sec. iii., clauses 1, 2, 3, as the period within which such suits must be instituted; that period being twelve years. The object of those Regulations appear to be to protect the title of parties who have been in possession under a bona fide title, or what is supposed to be a bona fide title for the period of twelve years. But certain exceptions are introduced into those Regulations, amongst others, that the limitation of twelve years is not to apply where [254] the party has been precluded by good and sufficient cause from bringing his suit within that period. Neither is it to apply if the original possession obtained by the party in possession has been obtained unjustly, and the Regulations are not to apply in cases where the property had so come into the hands of other persons from whom the parties in possession may have derived their title, and shall not have been subsequently held under a just and honest title.

The Appellant, in this case, says, in the first place, the Regulations do not apply to me at all, for in truth this suit, although instituted in 1852, grows out of and is founded upon and supplementary to a suit instituted at the death of Akbar Hossein, whose inheritance was the subject of long litigation. In the second place he says, if it is not supplementary to that suit and is not to be considered as a part of that suit, at all events that suit shows good and sufficient cause why it was impossible for me, till it was disposed of, to bring forward the present claim. It was not disposed of till the year 1842, and I bring my suit in 1852; and, thirdly, he says the parties in possession cannot rely upon quiet, unmolested, and undisturbed possession, held under the idea that they had a good title, and without notice of adverse claims.

The facts appear to be these. Akbar Hossein died in 1813. Upon the death of Akbar Hossein, two claims were set up to the whole property, which was in truth an undivided moiety. In the first place, one of his widows, Zuhoor-oon Nissa, claimed it, insisting that she was entitled under a deed executed in her favour by her husband before his death. In the second place, the brother of Akbar Hossein, named Deedar Hossein, claimed it, insisting that he was entitled under a deed executed by his brother before his death; and he also contended that if he was not entitled under that deed, he was entitled as heir; not as heir according to the general Mahomedan law, but as heir according to the custom of this family (which appears to have been a family of royal descent, with respect to which a particular custom as to inheritance existed), and by that custom he claimed to be heir, as being the next male relation.

Upon these adverse claims, which related to the whole of the property, the parties litigate in the Courts in India till the decree made in 1817, by the Provincial Court, in which the deed set up by Zuhoor-oon Nissa is established. There is an appeal against that decision, and that decree is reversed. In the decision so reversing the decree of the Provincial Court, the Sudder Court was of opinion that Deedar Hossein had not established the deed under which he claimed. But the case coming before four of the Judges of that Court, they were all of opinion that Deedar Hossein was entitled as heir, two of the Judges being of opinion that he was entitled to the whole property as heir according to the custom, and the other two were of opinion that he was entitled only to a share with the other heirs of Akbar Hossein. Before, however, they gave effect to this opinion, it was suggested that the law of inheritance which applied to the family was the Sheah law of inheritance, and not the Soomee law of inheritance. According to the Sheah law of inheritance (as it had been ascertained to exist by the Court in a preceding case, in which the Court had taken the opinion of the Mahomedan law officers attached to the Court upon that point), a brother is not entitled to succeed to any portion of the property. In that [256] state of things, though all the Judges concur in Deedar Hossein's title as heir, they dismiss the suit.

Now, it is said, that the Court had no right in that suit, in which two titles were asserted to the whole of the property, one under a deed, and the other either under a deed or under customary heirship, to enter into the general question as to who were the persons entitled to succeed according to the law of inheritance, and that by recent cases in the Courts in India that principle has been fully established. It may be perfectly true that that principle has been established, but it has been in alteration of the law, and not in execution of the law, as it had previously existed. In the Patna case (see note, 3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Rep. 195), as appears from the note in Morley's Dig., Tit. "Inheritance," 265:—"A Mussulman died, leaving his widow and a nephew, who for some time had lived with him in the apparent capacity of his heir and adopted son; the widow claimed the whole estate of the deceased, under an alleged Will, and the nephew made a similar claim as adopted son." The Court was of opinion against both the claims, as the Court here is of opinion against both the deeds; but what do they proceed to do? "The Principal Courts directed a Kazi and two Muftis to investigate the matter, and on their reporting that neither claim could be considered as established, and that the inheritance should be divided according to the Mussulman laws, the Council confirmed their decree." But in this case it was actually a suit respecting the inheritance, because one alternative of the claim of Deedar Hossein was founded upon his right as heir; and it was, therefore, not only competent, but absolutely necessary [257] according to the Regulations, for the Court to proceed to inquire who were the heirs.

Against this decision, dismissing the suit, there was a petition filed by Deedar Hossein for leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. While that petition was pending, a suit was instituted by other persons claiming to be co-heirs, who filed their plaint in 1836, in which the title of Deedar Hossein, as representing his mother, Ranee Soomrun, as one of those co-heirs, was involved. The appeal was heard by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the Order which was made by Her Majesty upon that occasion was founded entirely upon this, that Zuhoor-oon Nissa had been in possession under a wrong title; that Deedar Hossein had no title as donee, because his deed was bad; that he had no title as customary heir, for that the custom had not been established to the satisfaction of the Court; and that the decree, therefore, was perfectly right in declaring that the property was to be disposed of according to the Sheah law of inheritance. Acting upon that principle, they direct to be brought into Court the amount of rents which the Appellant had been previously ordered to pay to his adversary, Zuhoor-oon Nissa, and that was done for the express purpose of their being paid to the Sheah heirs of Akbar Hossein.

Under these circumstances, was it not necessary, in execution of that decree, to inquire in the first place, who were the real heirs, and to make a distribution according to the rights so ascertained, either by a proceeding in the original suit, or by instituting a new suit for that purpose? It is clear that it was. The inquiry could not be directed in the former suit, because that suit had been dismissed, and the Judicial [258] Committee was of opinion that it had been properly dismissed, but there was a suit actually pending, in which such inquiry might be made, and in which the title of Deedar Hossein would, if he had a title, be established in common with the other co-heirs, unless they were barred upon some other ground.

In this state of things, the Court having for the first time decided that the property was to go according to the Sheah law of inheritance, a suit was rendered necessary for the purpose of ascertaining who answered the description of Sheah heirs; when, however, this Order was pronounced, a suit was actually pending, in which such inquiry could be made and those rights decided. By some arrangement between Zuhoor-oon Nissa, or those representing her, and the heirs, that suit was compromised, and so put an end to. This was in 1847, and then for the first time it really became necessary for the Appellant to institute a suit in his own name, the other suit having been put an end to, because, if the original suit had gone on, though he was nominally not a party to it, yet the execution of the decree in such suit would have necessarily brought him before the Court.

It appears to their Lordships that this case may be considered as a proceeding supplemental to and as carrying out the decree of the Judicial Committee in 1842, the execution of which was delayed for certain reasons till a very long period after it had been pronounced, but still to a period within the time limited by the Regulations. But supposing it were not brought within the proper time, according to the strict letter of the Regulations, was not Deedar Hossein precluded by a sufficient cause from [259] bringing his claim forward, so as to exclude the operation of the Regulations? In the opinion of their Lordships it was quite impossible for him to bring forward that claim till his suit was finally disposed of. He said, I have a good title to the whole as heir, or as donee under the deed, or as customary heir. He could not at the same time institute a suit, and say, the deed which is set up is good for nothing; the customary title of the Defendant is good for nothing, and he is not entitled in that character, but in the character of co-heir with two other persons, whose title in the other suit I am disputing.

In either view of the case, it appears to their Lordships that, on that ground, the Regulations of limitation cannot apply.

Again, there seems no pretence for saying that there has been a bona fide, quiet, unmolested possession of the parties against whom the suit is brought. The root of the possession was the order of the Foujdary Court, the Magistrate of which Court says, "It is utterly impossible for me to decide what you are entitled to. I am of opinion that the widow should be put into possession, and that the other should bring his suit" (as to the effect of possession under an Order of the Foujdary Court, see Ram Rutton Rae v. Furrook-oon-Nissa, 3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 233, and Maharajah Moheshwur Sing v. The Bengal Government, post, [7 Moo. Ind. App.] p. 283). In that way the possession continues during the whole period, with the interruption occasioned by the Appellant's possession for a short interval, till the decree of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1842, or at all events till a short period before that. But from the moment at which the deed which was set up by Zuhoor-oon Nissa was [260] disaffirmed, if the possession remained, it was not possession under the deed, it was a totally new possession. She had no right to possession under that deed, and her possession was held to be unjust and unfounded; and if she remained in possession at all, she remained in possession, not as donee under the deed, but as one of the co-heirs of Akbar Hossein. At the time that she died, and the immediate father of the present Respondents died, two suits were pending; one is the suit which was dismissed in 1842, and the other is the suit which was instituted in 1836. It has, therefore, been a litigated title from beginning to end, and there never has been the possession which it was the object and intention of the Regulations to protect: there is, therefore, no ground upon which, in their Lordships' opinion, the right of the Appellant can be excluded by these Regulations.

That being so, the question arises, what are their Lordships to recommend? The title of the heir has been established in a decree which, though a compromise was come to, has never been set aside. There is no substantial doubt as to what Deedar Hossein, as representing his mother, Ranee Soomrun, is, according to the Sheah law of inheritance, entitled to in that character. That being so, the only question is from what time he should be entitled to the mesne profits. Viewing all the circumstances of the case, and taking into consideration the vast length of time that elapsed while the suits were pending, and the enormous expense occasioned by them, their Lordships think that justice will be done if they recommend that the mesne profits should commence from the time when the suit was instituted, and they will accordingly advise Her Majesty, that the Appellant [261] should be put into possession of the rents and profits from that time, and that he should have the costs both in the Court below and in this Court. The amount of the wasilat, from the time of the institution of the suit, without interest, will be ascertained in the Court below.

MUSSUMAT AMEENA KHATOOR and Others. Appellants: RADHABENOD MISSER.—Respondent * [Feb. 1, 1859].

On petition from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Calcutta.

In estimating the appealable value, restricted by the Order in Council of the 10th of April, 1838, for regulating appeals from the Supreme and Sudder Dewanny Courts in the East Indies to Rs. 10,000, as the amount in dispute, regard should be had to the whole matter involved in the suit, and not to the value of a fractional part of the property sought to be recovered.

A suit was brought to recover a Zemindary in the possession of different persons under deeds of sale in execution of a decree. The value of the property sued for was, by Ben. Reg. X. of 1829, sec. 17, stated in the plaint to be Rs. 14,325. The Sudder Court upheld the sales so far as related to the claim of some of the Defendants. The other Defendants applied for leave to appeal to England, which the Sudder Court refused, on the ground that, as the value of their portion was only Rs. 8215, it was not within the appeal value prescribed by the Order in Council of the 10th of April, 1838. Such construction overruled, and leave to appeal granted by the Judicial Committee.

Whether the stamp upon the plaint required by Ben. Reg. X. of 1829, sec. 17, being for fiscal purposes only, is conclusive of the value of the property sued for—Quære!

The petition stated that the Respondent brought a suit in the Zillah Court of Dinagepore against the Appellants to obtain possession of a Zemindary held by them in different portions, as purchasers under deeds of sale and under a sale in execution of a [262] decree. That the value of the lands sought to be recovered was stated in the plaint as provided by Ben. Reg. X. of 1829, sec. 17, to be Rs. 14,325. 1. 3. 1. That a decree was pronounced by the Zillah Court in favour of the Respondent. That the Appellants appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Calcutta, which Court, on the 21st of July, 1856, reversed the Zillah Court's decree with respect to two only of the Appellants, sustaining their respective right to possession. That the Court refused to allow the other Appellants leave to appeal to England, on the ground that the value of the lands held by those Appellants was only Rs. 8215, and that the Order in Council of the 10th of April, 1838, required the sum to be Rs. 10,000. That the actual value of the lands in question held by the Appellants was more than the sum prescribed by the Order in Council, and that the Sudder Court proceeded upon an erroneous ground, taking the value by the stamp required by Reg. X. of 1829, which they submitted was only for fiscal purposes, and also that the Sudder Court was wrong in not adding the mesne profits; and the Petitioners further submitted that the words "the value of the matter in dispute in any such appeal to Her Majesty in Council," related to the whole matter involved in the suit which was the subject of judicial inquiry in the Court below. That the right of possession of the Respondent in respect of his ancestral Zemindary was one of many questions in the suit and appeal, and that the sum of Rs. 14,325. 1. 3., the estimated value of the Zemindary as stated in the plaint, and not merely a proportionate part thereof, ought to have been adopted by the Court in estimating the appealable value.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, in support of the petition, urged the same grounds as those contained in the petition.

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington.—Leave to appeal will be granted, subject, however, to this reservation, that if the facts contained in the petition are not correct, the petition is to be dismissed. [Mews' Dig. tit. COLONY. III. APPEALS TO PRIVY COUNCIL, 2. Appealable Value.
S.C. 12 Moo. P.C. 470.]

JUGGOMOHUN GHOSE,—Appellant: MANICKCHUND and KAISREE-
CHUND,—Respondents * [June 25 and 28, 1859].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Calcutta.

The Legislative Act, No. XXXII. of 1839 (extending to India the provisions of Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 42, sec. 28), concerning the allowance of interest in certain cases, enacts that "Upon all debts of sums certain, payable at a certain time, the Court before which they may be recovered, may, if it shall think fit, allow interest to the creditor, at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the time when such debts or sums certain were payable, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time."

Held,—That a wager contract (before the passing of Act, No. XXI. of 1848), upon the average price which opium would fetch at the next Government opium sale, was not within the scope of the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, as that Act supposes a party to have been sued for breach of a contract for the payment, by virtue of a written instrument, of a sum certain at a certain time, and did not affect debts contingent in amount and time of coming due [7 Moo. Ind. App. 280, 281].

Whether the discretion vested in the Court by Act No. XXXII. of 1839, in allowing or refusing interest, in cases within the Act, is liable to review.—Quære? [7 Moo. Ind. App. 281, 282].

Where a usage was established, by which it appeared that interest was paid upon such contracts: Held further; that according to such usage, interest ought to have been allowed upon the principal sum recovered in an action, and the judgment of the Supreme Court at Calcutta refusing interest, reversed on that ground.

In respect to evidence of mercantile usage; to support such a ground there needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity, or the notoriety of custom, which in respect of all these grounds, becomes a local law. The usage may be still in course of growth; it may require evidence for its support in each case; but in the result it is enough if it appears to be so well known and acquiesced in, that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient imported by the parties into their contract [7 Moo. Ind. App. 282].

In this case, the Appellant brought an action against the Respondents upon three distinct written con-[264]-tracts made between them in the nature of wagers, as to the average price of opium at the first Lelaum or public sale by the Government for the year 1846. These contracts were known as Tajee Mundee Chittees, and were, with the exception of the dates and sums, in similar terms.

The following was one of the Chittees:—"11th. Taijee or rise on the average of thirteen hundred of the first Lelaum or public sale of the Patna.

"11 Sri Gunnaise Jee.

"No. 19.

"11. To Juggomohun Ghose. This is written by Manickchund and Kaisreechund, with salutations, which he will peruse.

"Further: we have eaten the Taijee or rise on the average of 1 lot of 5 (in letters five) Paitees, or chests of Patna opium, of the 30th day of November, Sumbat 1903, at the price of 1300.

"If the average of the first Lelaum or public sale [265] of the Company's 'Sircar' of the Patna rises above thirteen hundred, according to that we will give you the Bullun or rise. If it falls below thirteen hundred, in that event you have no Dauwah, or claim. We will not give you credit for the 'Nuzzurannah ka Roopea,' or bonus money that we have taken from you, marked in your kattah or account Sumbat 1903, Kartick the 10th day of the light side of the moon." And on the back were written these signatures: Kullean Mull, Sri Juggo Mohun Ghose, Moorleedhur Dutt, Sreekissen.

The public sale of opium referred to in these contracts took place on the 7th of December, 1846.

The action was brought by the Appellant against the Respondents. The pleadings in the action, and also the Chittees on which the action was brought, were similar to those in the cause of Rughonauth Sohail Chotayloll v. Manickchund and Kaisreechund (6 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 251), in which the legality of such Chittees, and the right of the Plaintiff in that action to recover thereon, was established.

The action came on for trial before the Supreme Court on the 9th of April, 1857, when, by consent, the depositions of the witnesses in the cause of Rughonauth Sohail Chotayloll v. Manickchund and Kaisreechund, and also in the cause of Chotayloll v. Uggerchund and Hurruckchund, and the Chittees, were read and received as evidence. The only question in dispute was, whether, in addition to the sum of Rs. 7150. 6 annas and 3 pie (being the amount payable in respect of the sum by which the average price of Patna opium at the public sale, referred to in the three Chittees, respectively exceeded the prices men-[266]-tioned in such respective Chittees), the Appellant was entitled to recover from the Respondents interest on that sum and at what rate. The Appellant gave in addition, evidence as to the course of dealing in Tajee Mundee Chittees, and proved that the practice was to present the Chittees for acceptance to the parties who had issued them on the evening of the Government sale of opium, in order that the sum payable might be ascertained; that the Chittees, when so accepted, were presented again to such parties three days afterwards for payment, the time for payment being generally at the expiration of three days from the acceptance. The Appellant also gave evidence of the refusal by the Respondents after the sale of December, 1846, to accept the Chittees, on which the action was brought. The Appellant further examined witnesses who deposed that, according to the usage and ordinary course of dealing in Tajee Mundee Chittees, interest was payable on such Chittees whenever the loss thereon was not paid within a few days after the amount of such loss had been ascertained. The commencement of these gambling Chittees appeared from the evidence to be of recent date, not going farther back than 1840. The Appellant further proved that the Bazaar or market rate of interest in December, 1846, was not less than 8 per cent.

The Respondents did not enter into evidence, and at the close of the Appellant's case the Supreme Court expressed their opinion that the right to interest was not made out, and, therefore, gave a verdict for the Appellant for the sum of Rs. 7150. 2a. 3p. only, the principal amount due on the Chittees, reserving leave to the Appellant to move to increase the amount [267] of damages, with the amount of interest thereon at 6 per cent. (being the Court rate of interest), if the Appellant could satisfy the Court that it came within the Act, XXXII. of 1839.

The Appellant obtained a rule to show cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, or why the damages should not be increased by adding such interest at 6 per cent. This rule was argued before Sir James W. Colville, Chief Justice, Sir Arthur

W. Buller, and Sir Charles R. M. Jackson, Puisne Judges. Judgment was delivered by the Chief Justice on the 20th of July, 1857, discharging the rule with costs. The material part of this judgment was in these terms:—"The substantial ground of complaint is, that the damages have not been swollen with interest, either at the Bazaar rate or at the Court rate. The rule was obtained, and interest at the Court rate was claimed partly on the ground that the case might be brought within the Act, XXXII. of 1839, because the sums recoverable, and the times of payment, though neither of them certain, were capable of being made certain. But this ground, though not formally abandoned, has been but faintly contested; and it suffices to say, that, in our judgment, the great uncertainty of the evidence given as to the practice of payment, either on the day of the sale, or three days, or some other short period, after it, alone prevents us from saying that we have here 'a sum certain, payable, by virtue of a written instrument, at a certain time.' The question, therefore, resolves itself into one, Whether, on such a contract, interest is payable by law, independently of the Act! The contract is one, which, whether it is considered as, [268] what it purports on the face of it to be, a contract for the sale of opium deliverable at a future time, or as that which it really is, a wager, would not, prima facie, import a debt recoverable with interest. Nor do we think that these cases can be brought within the principle adverted to by Chief Justice Best, in Arnott v. Redfern (11 Moore, 209), upon which juries are held to be warranted in giving interest, which is not due ex contractu, in the shape of damages, on the ground of the improper detention, or unreasonable delay in the payment of the principal. For it is clear, that, for nine years of the period of the detention which has here taken place, the Plaintiffs, who have slept upon their remedy, are, at least, as responsible as the Defendants. If interest, then, is recoverable at all, it must be recoverable on the ground upon which the claim was originally put forward—viz., an obligation implied from the notorious usage of the trade or course of dealing to which the contracts relate; and the existence and notoriety of such an usage were what we had, at each trial, to determine, upon the evidence adduced before us. We stopped the first trial upon the close of the Plaintiff's case; and, therefore, if we were wrong in doing that, there can, at most, be but a new trial, in order to give the Defendants an opportunity of bringing forward evidence on their side. We do not, however, think that we were wrong. The course of dealing, which was in question before us, is something very different from the known mercantile usages in ordinary trades with which Courts of Justice have generally to deal. It is limited to gambling bets upon the average of a future Government sale of opium; and, although the witnesses differ as to the precise time at which the practice of making such [269] wagers began, it cannot be said to have been, in 1846, of very ancient date. It may, therefore, well be, that the usage concerning it fall far short, in point of certainty, of most known mercantile customs. Two classes of witnesses were called to prove the usage; the one consisting of men who generally engaged in these transactions, in the names of up-country Shroffs; the other, of Shroffs, or other persons, who dealt in Tajeer Mundeer Chittees directly. The latter class would, of course, afford the most valuable witnesses, because all the evidence went to show that the non-payment by Shroffs of these Chittees, on or about the day of sale, was exceptionable; and the Shroffs, who acted as agents, would, of course, debit their principals with the sums paid, as in an ordinary mercantile account, carrying interest. But the evidence of both classes, when sifted by cross-examination, we thought, established that the ordinary course of dealing was to pay as soon as the loss was ascertained; and that, in those exceptional cases in which time was given, a new contract, evidenced often by a separate writing for the payment of interest, was made. We did not think it was by any means established, that there existed so invariable an usage for the payment of interest on those Chittees, if unpaid on or about the day on which the average was ascertained, that those who granted Chittees must be taken to have been cognizant of it, and to have contracted with reference to it. In the other action, the evidence was fuller. Some of the Plaintiff's witnesses, no doubt, endeavoured to explain away their former admissions of a practice of giving a fresh and separate security when interest was payable, by asserting that this had originated since the passing of the Act for [270] avoiding wagers (No. XXI. of 1848), and had been adopted for the purpose of evading its provisions; but this is not consistent with what was admitted by Madubehunder Mullick, a witness for the Plaintiff, on cross-examination, or with the testimony of some of the witnesses for the Defendants: and the manner in which the theory was propounded by those who supported it, strongly impressed us with the opinion that it had been concocted by some ingenious person since the date of the former trial. Again, the evidence of Buldeo Doss, whose interests seemed to be concerned in supporting the Plaintiff's claim to interest, and that of Mr. De Souza, were strongly against the existence of any notorious usage or course of dealing in this matter. Brijonauth Dhur, upon whose testimony the Plaintiffs now so much rely, can speak but to few instances within his personal knowledge—two in which he paid, two in which he received, interest. But he says, in cross-examination, that the practice was to write about the interest on the Chittees: that the debtor used to write, 'I will pay interest.' On his transaction with Nursingehunder Bose, there seems to have been a distinct, though verbal agreement, about the payment of interest: and Nursingehunder Bose speaks to another case, in which a promissory note had been given. We cannot, then, take that there was any error in our finding, upon this conflicting evidence, that the known usage relied upon was not made out. We continue to think, that the ordinary practice, up to this sale of 1846, when the liability on the Chittees was disputed, was to treat them as ready money transactions, as almost debts of honour: and that the losses were generally paid on or about the day on which the average of the Govern-[271]-ment sale was ascertained, with the regularity with which bets on the Derby are usually adjusted on the settling day at Tattersalls'. We continue to think that, in the rare cases in which losers failed to pay, either interest was not paid at all, or was the subject of a new and distinct agreement: frequently, though perhaps not invariably, evidenced by a fresh writing. We are strengthened in our conviction against the existence of a general and notorious usage, by the consideration of the lateness of the period at which this claim was brought forward in these actions. We admit that a count for interest is not necessary: that, in fact, as applied to the special contract on which the verdict is recovered, it would be improper. We admit that the Plaintiffs were not bound to set forth particulars of their demand on the special count. But we cannot but think it remarkable, that having done so, they have made no mention of interest in those particulars. It would further seem, that in the other actions of the like kind brought in this Court, no claim for interest had been asserted. We do not think the Plaintiffs would have so acted, had there been that known and general usage on which they now rely. We cannot but think that the claim for interest was first suggested by the decision of the Privy Council on the case from Bombay, reported in 5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 136. If that decision had clearly ruled that interest must be taken to run by force of an established mercantile usage on debts arising out of these contracts, we should of course have felt bound by it. But it simply rules that the Supreme Court of Bombay was warranted in giving interest, since there was evidence that interest was accustomed to be paid on such pecuniary transactions. [272] It seems that the evidence of the custom was in that case very scanty: but such as it was, it was uncontradicted. Here the right to interest has been strongly contested, conflicting evidence has been given respecting the alleged usage, and we have had, as a jury, to pronounce upon it. The arguments addressed to us have failed to satisfy us that we were wrong in the conclusion to which we came upon that evidence, and the rule must be discharged. We certainly feel in these cases the regret which one often feels in cases of fair and ordinary dealing between man and man, that the rules of our Court respecting interest are somewhat narrow: and we do feel that the claim for interest would fall very hardly on the Defendants after the number of years during which the Plaintiffs have lain by, awaiting the decision in other cases of the legal questions involved in these actions. The Plaintiffs were more interested in that delay than the Defendants: since but for it, those cases which are under the appealable amount might have been finally determined in a manner contrary to that which the appellate Court has since ruled to be the law. But our decision is wholly irrespective of these considerations, or of the absence of any thing like moral merits in either party to these transactions."

The appeal was from the Order of the 20th of July 1857, discharging the rule nisi.

Sir Fitz-Roy Kelly, Q.C., and Mr. Patterson, for the Appellant.—The sole question is, whether the Appellant is entitled to recover interest on the Tajeer Mundeer Chittees, the name given to the gambling contracts [273] upon the average price at which opium would sell at the Government opium sale of 1846. No question arises as to the validity of these contracts: as at the time they were entered into they were legal (wager contracts in India are now declared invalid; see Act, No. XXI. of 1848). That point was established by this Court in Ramloll Thackoorseydass v. Soojumull Dhoondull (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 339), Doolubdass Pettamberdass v. Ramloll Thackoorseydass (5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 109), Chotayloll v. Manickchand and Kaisreechand (6 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 251). In the two first cases the Supreme Court at Bombay were of opinion, that the contracts carried interest according to mercantile usage. Perry, Chief Justice, in the second case, says (Perry's Oriental Cases, 220). "It is the universal practice amongst the trading classes of India to charge and allow one another interest on all book debts, and the practice of this Court is to carry out the contracts made by the parties, by awarding interest, unless some special reason intervene to prevent it."—[Lord Kingsdown: In the case of Doolubdass Pettamberdass v. Ramloll Thackoorseydass their Lordships proceeded on evidence of mercantile usage to allow interest.]—Here also is evidence of a mercantile usage to pay interest on the principal amount due on these contracts. The Court below, upon the evidence of usage and custom, ought, therefore, to have given interest on the principal amount recovered. Baron Parke, in delivering judgment in Doolubdass Pettamberdass v. Ramloll Thackoorseydass, was clearly of opinion that interest ought to be given. He expresses himself in these [274] terms: "We think the Court below were warranted in giving it, for it appears that interest was accustomed to be paid on such pecuniary transactions" (5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 136). The verdict, therefore, in not allowing interest is against the weight of evidence, and the express opinion of your Lordships, that interest ought to be allowed. But the sums due from the Respondents to the Appellant on these contracts were certain in respect both of time and amount within the meaning of the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, extending to India the provisions of the Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 42, sec. 28, concerning the allowance of interest in certain cases (see Rajah Bommarauxee Bahadur v. Rangasamy Mudaly, 6 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 232), and that Act ought to have been liberally construed by the Court in carrying out the intentions of the Legislature, who ought to have awarded the Plaintiff interest upon the principal sums recovered. Look at the case in this light. If the Respondents had accepted the Chittees when presented for acceptance, the Appellant would unquestionably have been entitled to interest: therefore, the Appellant is no less entitled to interest, though the Respondents refused to accept the Chittees. By the Common Law, if an instrument fixes a time of payment, from that time interest runs. Here the time of payment was to be on the day of the sale taking place, when the money was due. Harper v. Williams (4 Q. Ben. Rep. 219) is an authority to show that even if the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, does not apply to this case, yet we are entitled to recover interest upon the principal sums found by the verdict to be due to the Appellant.

[275] Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Respondents.—Two questions are raised by the Appellant to establish their proposition that interest ought to have been allowed. First, it is insisted that upon these contracts interest is payable by the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839; and, secondly, it is claimed upon an alleged mercantile usage in respect of Chittees of this nature. Upon neither of these grounds can the Appellant succeed in his appeal, as the amount recovered in the action was not a sum certain, payable under a written instrument, at a time certain. There was no improper detention or unjustifiable delay in payment of the principal sum, and interest is not allowed on such contracts by any mercantile usage proved. Page v. Newman (9 Barn. and Cr. 378, 381). The cases of Harper v. Williams (4 Q. Ben. Rep. 219 and 234), Mowatt v. Lord Londesborough (4 Ell. and Bla. 1044), Attwood v. Taylor (1 Man. and Gr. 278), Braine v. Muttyloll Seal (1 Taylor and Bell's Reps. Sup. Court of Calcutta, 97), The Att.-Gen. v. The Corporation of Ludlow (1 Hall and Twells, 218), conclusively disposes of the first ground. Interest would not have been allowed under the Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 42, upon such contracts, and, therefore, interest cannot be allowed under the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, which limits the right "to debts or sums certain, payable at a certain time," which is essential. "Certum est quod certum reddi potest," Noy, Max. (9 Edit.), 265; and in the next place there is no certain amount stated in the Chittees. In Higgins v. Sargent (2 Barn. and Cr. 348), before the passing of the Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 42, Chief Justice Abbott clearly states the law upon this point; he says, that "It is now [276] established as a general principle that interest is allowed by law only upon mercantile securities, or in those cases where there has been an express promise to pay interest, or where such promise is to be implied from the usage of trade or other circumstances." Interest is not allowed at Common Law, Walker v. Constable (1 Bos. and Pul. 306), although it is allowed where there is a contract to pay for goods sold by a bill of a certain date, which bill bears interest from the day when it would have been due, Slack v. Lowell (3 Taunt. 157). In Cameron v. Smith (2 Barn. and Ald. 305), Mr. Justice Bayley lays it down that there is a distinction between those cases where there is an express undertaking by the party to pay both principal and interest, and those where he undertakes to pay the principal only; and he adds (Ib. 308) "that although by the usage of trade, interest is allowed on a bill, yet it constitutes no part of the debt, but is in the nature of damages, which must go to the jury in order that they may find the amount." The Supreme Court sat as a jury in this case; and no sufficient evidence of mercantile usage was established that interest has been paid upon Chittees such as these in default of payment of the principal moneys; one witness, indeed, says that such a custom began in the year 1840. That, however, will not be sufficient evidence to establish the alleged mercantile usage that interest is allowed upon these gambling contracts. Lastly, we submit, that under the Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, it was in the discretion of the Court, if it should think fit, to allow interest to the creditor, and that the refusal, in exercise of that discretion, to allow interest, is not a subject that can be reviewed or now questioned.

[277] Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

The Right Hon. Sir John Coleridge (July 8, 1859).—The Plaintiff in his declaration stated that in consideration that he had paid to the Defendants the sum of Rs. 500, they had undertaken that if the average price per chest of Patna opium at the next ensuing public sale rose above Rs. 1300, they would pay him such excess or difference within a reasonable time after the said sale; that the sale took place on the 7th of December, 1816; that the average price did exceed Rs. 1300 per chest, but that the Defendants had not paid the difference.

At the trial the liability of the Defendants to pay the principal sum demanded was not in dispute: but the Plaintiff also claimed to be allowed interest on that sum, and offered evidence for the purpose of showing that it was usual to pay interest in default of payment of the principal on similar contracts. The Defendants cross-examined the Plaintiff's witnesses, and were prepared to offer evidence in opposition; but the Court being of opinion that the Plaintiff's witnesses had failed in making out the usage, stopped the case, and gave a verdict for the principal sum only.

The Plaintiff had also relied on the Legislative Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, and the Court were against him on this point also, but gave him leave to move to increase the verdict by the amount of interest at the rate of £6 per cent., if he could satisfy the Court that he was entitled to interest under the provisions of that Act.

The Plaintiff accordingly moved for a new trial on the first point, and to increase the damages at the rate above specified on the second. After argument [278] the rule was discharged on both points, and both have now been argued before us on appeal against that judgment.

The Legislative Act, No. XXXII. of 1839, was framed, as appears on the face of it, expressly in order to extend to India the provisions of the Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 42, sec. 28, and substantially adopts the language of it. It enacts that "upon all debts, or sums certain payable at a certain time, the Court before which they may be recovered, may, if it shall think fit, allow interest to the creditor, at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the time when such debts or sums certain were payable, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time."

Two questions arise upon the construction of this enactment; first, what is meant by a sum certain, and a time certain; the second, assuming the case to have arisen, which gives the Court jurisdiction to allow interest, whether the exercise of that jurisdiction, or the refusal to exercise it, is subject, in any way, to review.

With respect both to amount and time of payment, it was argued that the maxim "ad certum est quod certum reddi potes" must be applied; and, in a reasonable sense, this is true. In the simplest case we may be obliged to have recourse to calculation for the actual amount, or to the calendar for the precise day of payment. A promise to pay on the last Saturday of the year, at the rate of 15s. a-week for twelve months, would certainly be a promise to pay a sum certain at a time certain. It was argued also that in respect of both time and amount it was a question of degree, and in the same reasonable sense [279] that every Statute is to be construed, not captiously, but with a view to the expressed intention of the Legislature: this is true also. But these propositions do not remove the greater difficulty of determining at what period of the transaction between the parties must the amount and time of payment become ascertained. Is it necessary that these should be ascertained at the time the promise is made? or will it suffice if they become so at the time when it ought to have been fulfilled, and is broken? Ascertainment at any later period certainly could not suffice.

The Statute, by the qualifications which it imposes of certainty in time and amount, by requiring that this certainty, and the obligation itself to pay the principal, should be created by a written instrument, by making the interest run from the time at which the principal is payable, and, finally, by giving the jury a discretion as to the allowance of interest, even where all these circumstances concur, seems to have been framed, not simply on the principle of compensation to the creditor, but also on that of penalty to the debtor for not paying punctually at a time when he must have known the debt or sum, specific in amount, was to be paid. But for this consideration there was no reason why all debts, without distinction, should not have been made to bear interest from the time when payable; no previous uncertainty of amount, or of time of payment, would have been material, nor should any distinction have been made between obligations by writing and by word of mouth; nor ought the jury to have had any discretion; for in all cases the need of compensation to the creditor may be assumed to have been the same. But, if the conduct of the debtor be taken into account, then the uncertainty of amount, and the contingency as to the time of payment, and that there is no writing, are all more or less material; obviously the most honest and punctual debtor may be unprepared to pay an uncertain amount, which may not be due for months, or years, or only on the happening of a contingency, the falling in of which he may not know of. On this principle, too, the discretion given to the jury to consider all the circumstances of each particular case becomes perfectly reasonable. It is quite consistent with this view that where the debt is payable "otherwise" than at a certain time, interest is not to be allowed except from and after the time of a written demand of payment. This reasoning leads their Lordships to conclude that the certainty required must exist at the time when the promise is made; and, therefore, that the Act does not in this part affect debts contingent in amount, and time of becoming due: a construction strictly conformable to the natural meaning of the language used.

This reasoning applies very strongly to the case now before us, in which there is no promise absolutely to pay any sum, certain or uncertain, nor any time limited for the payment, but only a promise contingent on events which may never happen, to pay a sum capable of ascertainment only, and if when these shall happen, and the time for the happening of which, if they ever do happen, may be indefinitely postponed. Such are the facts here. If, at the next ensuing public sale, the average price per chest of Patna opium should rise above Rs. 1300, the Defendants promise to pay the difference between Rs. 1300 and such average price. That any such difference would ever exist was quite uncertain; in the expectation of the Defendants, of course, it was considered extremely improbable. If there should be any difference, what it would amount to was equally uncertain; and when the public sale would take place, which was the time for ascertainment, was also unknown. Now, there seems to be an insuperable difficulty in bringing such a state of facts within any but the most forced construction of the words of the Act. The Act supposes a party to have been sued for breach of a contract for the payment, by virtue of a written instrument, of a sum certain at a certain time. But how can it be said that, in the contemplation of either party, any such contract ever was made?

As their Lordships think that the Plaintiff failed in bringing the case within the Legislative Act, and, therefore, agree with the Court below in their decision, it is not necessary for the decision of the case, to express any opinion on the second general question, whether the discretion of the Court in allowing, or refusing to allow interest, in cases within the Act, is liable to review or appeal. Several cases were cited in the argument, in which Courts had refused to interfere with the discretion of the jury, under the Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 42, sec. 28, on the ground that the Legislature had left it entirely to them; but none in which the Court had so declined, at the same time stating that it disagreed with the jury's determination. We do not, therefore, think the authorities conclusive. We should, undoubtedly, be slow to interfere in any case before us in respect of any matter specifically within the power of the jury, as for example, the amount of damages; but dealing as we have to deal, with questions of fact as well as law, we are not prepared to say that, in a case either of allowance or refusal, in which we were clear that [282] the Court below, acting either through prejudice or misunderstanding, had committed injustice, we should not feel bound to recommend to Her Majesty that an opportunity should be afforded of reconsidering the matter in a new trial.

It remains now to consider the other ground on which the Plaintiff relied: the evidence of mercantile usage. To support such a ground, there needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity, or the notoriety of custom, which in respect of all these becomes a local law. The usage may be still in course of growth; it may require evidence for its support in each case; but in the result it is enough if it appear to be so well known and acquiesced in, that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient tacitly imported by the parties into their contract.

We have examined the evidence before us by the light of this principle: it is certainly not conclusive; it is open to criticism: it may require and admit of explanation: but, such as it is, we think it required an answer, and the more so after the language of their Lordships in the judgment delivered here on appeal, in the case from Bombay, to be found in 5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 136, evidence which was, of course, well known to and relied on by the Plaintiff in preparing his case for trial. It would, moreover, be much to be lamented that a difference so important should prevail between the two Presidencies in the administration of justice.

This conclusion will make it proper for their Lordships to recommend to Her Majesty that this appeal be allowed, and the case be remitted to India for a new trial, if the parties should not come to some arrangement, and their Lordships will direct that the Appellant have his costs of this appeal.

[283] MAHARAJAH MOHESHUR SING.—Appellant: THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT,—Respondent * [Feb. 1, 2, 3, 4, 1859].

On Appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

Claim by Government, under Ben. Reg. II. of 1819, to resume lands asserted as La-khiraj, for the purpose of assessment. The lands the subject of the Government claim were owned by a Mahanth (the head of a community of religious devotees), against whom alone the Collector proceeded. These lands were intermixed with other lands belonging to a Zemindar, whose lands had been assessed at a fixed rent under the Decennial Settlement (made permanent by Ben. Reg. I. of 1793) and the Zemindar claimed a large portion of the lands sought to be assessed, as forming part of his Zemindary, for which a fixed rent was paid. Held: that although the Zemindar was to be considered as a stranger to the proceedings, as he had not been summoned by the Collector, yet as his interests were liable to be affected by the decision of the Collector, he had a right to intervene and become a party and to prosecute an appeal from the decree.

Ben. Reg. III. of 1828, sec. 4, cl. 5, extends the rules prescribed by Ben. Reg. XXVI. of 1814, cl. 4, regarding reviews of judgment in the Sudder Dewanny Court, to proceedings by the Special Commissioners in revenue cases.

Held.—First, that under the 2nd and 3rd sections of the latter Regulation, the procedure of the Sudder Dewanny Court in granting review of its judgment, was to be applied to judgments of the Special Commissioners in resumption cases.

Second, That in accordance with those rules a delay of five years and a half by Government in applying for a review of judgment, without satisfactory cause being shown for the delay in presenting a petition of review, was fatal; and an Order granting a review made by two of the Sudder Judges sitting as Special Commissioners of Revenue under Ben. Reg. III. of 1828, and all proceedings subsequently taken under it, reversed on appeal by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, as having been from the long delay improperly granted.

Difference between a review of judgment and an appeal explained.

The primary intention of granting a review is a reconsideration of the same subject by the same Judge, in contradistinction from an appeal, which is a hearing before another Judge.

A review before another Judge is an exception, and is only allowed, ex necessitate, as in the case of the death, or removal.

The jurisdiction of the Foujdary Court is confined to cases of possession only. It is beyond their province to inquire into and ascertain the title to real estate.

Semble. There is no Regulation which requires a party to appeal from interlocutory decrees; and in an appeal to the Judicial Committee from a decree adjudicating upon the whole suit, the propriety of interlocutory decrees made in the course of the suit, though acquiesced in and submitted to at the time, may be called into question.

So held where a party had not appealed from the Order of the Sudder Commissioners granting a review of judgment.

This appeal was brought from the decree of the two of the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, [284] sitting as Special Commissioners of Revenue, upon a review of judgment, granted by them on the application of the Bengal Government, after a delay on the part of the latter of five and a half years, which final decree reversed a decree of two other Special Revenue Commissioners, sitting as a Court of appeal under the powers conferred by Ben. Reg. III. of 1828, upon a decision of the Deputy Collector of Revenue acting as Commissioner in resumption proceedings instituted under Ben. Reg. II. of 1819.

The sole Defendant in the proceedings before the Deputy Collector was Bhugwan Dass, since deceased, a Mahanth, the principal of an establishment of religious devotees, and the object of the proceeding was to investigate his title as Mahanth to certain La-khiraj land, described as Mouza Jankeenuggur and Puttee Mudhoobun, situate within Zillah Beernuggur in Pergunnah Dhurumpoor, for the purpose of assessing the land with Government revenue in the event of his failing to prove that the land was [285] La-khiraj. Maharajah Chutter Sing, the grandfather of the Appellant, claimed a large part of the lands sought to be assessed as forming an integral part of the rent-paying lands of his Zemindary of Dhurumpoor, which had been settled and assessed by Government at the period of the Decennial Settlement in 1789, declared permanent by Ben. Reg. I. of 1793.

The facts of the case were these:—

On the 3rd of October, 1836, Mr. Beresford, the Deputy Collector of Zillah Purneah and Maldah, under the provisions of cl. 2, sec. v. Ben. Reg. II. of 1819, ordered a notice to be served on Kirparam and Busunth Dass, the grantees, or other the holders of certain alleged La-khiraj or rent-free lands, called Mouza Jankeenuggur and Mudhoobun, and situated in Pergunnah Dhurumpoor, within the limits of the Collectorate, requiring them to produce the original Sunnud and other documents establishing their title to the lands.

In obedience to such notice, Bhugwan Dass put in a statement on the 8th of December, 1836, setting forth the decease of Kirparam and Busunth Dass, the original grantees, and of others who had succeeded them as holders of the lands, and that he was himself the succeeding Mahanth, was the holder of such lands, and that the produce of the same, conformably to immemorial usage, had been appropriated to the performance of worship of idols, and the payment of the expenses of the mendicants since before the date of the accession to the Dewanny by the East India Company, and that, therefore, under the provisions of sec. 2, Ben. Reg. XIX. of 1793, the lands were not liable to assessment by Government. Together with this statement, the Mahanth put in documents, purporting [286] to be original Sunnuds and boundary paper of the lands in question.

Upon this statement being filed, the Deputy Collector called upon Bhugwan Dass to bring forward evidence to prove the facts stated, and the validity of the documents filed, and also to prove the boundaries of Mouza Jankeenuggur and Mudhoobun. Upwards of twenty witnesses were produced on behalf of Bhugwan Dass, and from their depositions it appeared, that within the boundaries of Mouza Jankeenuggur were comprised Cote Jankeenuggur, Putty Mudhoobun, Tolah Rajwarah, Tolah Gungapoor, Jhanuggur Tolah, and Badh Sreenuggur, and that such Mouza had been in the possession of the successive Mahanths for a very long period of time; but Bhugwan Dass was unable to produce any satisfactory evidence, either documentary or by the depositions of witnesses, to prove the grant for holding such Mouza exempt from the payment of revenue, made previous to the 12th of August, 1765, the date of the Company's accession to the Dewanny.

By order of the Deputy Collector, a measurement of the lands within the boundaries of Mouza Jankeenuggur was made by Ameens, who reported the total amount of such lands to be 13,915 beegahs and 19 cottahs.

On the 7th of May, 1837, Maharajah Chutter Sing, the Zemindar of Pergunnah Dhurumpoor, presented a petition, stating that the Ameens had measured, as belonging to Mouza Jankeenuggur and the rent-free lands of Bhugwan Dass, about 10,000 beegahs of land which were within the boundaries of the rent-paying lands of the Maharajah Chutter Sing, and for which a Settlement had been concluded with the Government, [287] and that Bhugwan Dass had, by the execution of an Ikrarnamah, dated the 22nd of October, 1836, acknowledged that only 3000 beegahs of land were included in his La-khiraj lands, and he filed that instrument.

Divers other proceedings were held before the Deputy Collector, and further documentary evidence put in and depositions of witnesses taken, in support of the respective claims of Bhugwan Dass and Maharajah Chutter Sing, and on the 28th of January, 1838, the Deputy Collector decided to the effect that the lands in question had been held by Blugwan Dass, as La-khiraj, without a valid title, there being no grant for the same made previous to the date of the Company's accession to the Dewanny, and that no satisfactory evidence had been adduced on the part of Maharajah Chutter Sing, to show that the lands appertained to his rent-paying lands and were included in the Settlement made with him; and with respect to the Ikrar-namah put in, the Collector held that even if the same were otherwise valid, it could not prejudice the right of Government to assess the lands. And he ordered that the case should be decreed in favour of Government, and that the revenue should be assessed on the whole of the lands measured by the Ameens.

In June, 1838, Maharajah Chutter Sing appealed from this decision to the Court of the Special Commissioner of the Zillahs of Calcutta and Moorshedabad. No appeal was brought by the Mahanth.

Further evidence was gone into before that Court.

On the 6th of December, 1841, Mr. Henry Moore, the Special Commissioner for the Zillah of Moorshedabad, pronounced his decision on the appeal as follows:—
 " My opinion in this case is, that previous to the year 1802-3, there existed no ascertained limit [288] or boundary between the La-khirajdar and the Zemindar. It appears from the papers that, in fact, two places, viz., Jankeenuggur and Mudhoobun, had before that time belonged to the La-khirajdar, the four sides of which were dense jungles. The proprietor of Jankeenuggur, from the date from which he established a muth and sthan, commenced cultivation, and it is not a concealed fact that the La-khiraj lands of Jankeenuggur and Mudhoobun are situated within the Pergunnah of Dhurumpoor, and that in the year 1198, Fuslee, whatever quantity of La-khiraj land there was, save and except the same, a Settlement was made with the ancestor of the Appellant, Zemindar, for the whole Pergunnah above-mentioned in a lump. Under these circumstances, at that time, whatever quantity of land appertained to Jankeenuggur was, in truth, the same quantity of La-khiraj land that there is now, and the other lands are mal (rent-paying). It does not appear from the papers produced by the Putwarries what quantity of land there was in Jankeenuggur in the year 1198, Fuslee. The one goshwarrah of the cultivated lands for the Mouza Jankeenuggur, which is here, contains mention of 219 beegahs 2 cottahs of cultivated lands. After this, the hustobodh amounted to Rs. 1138. 1½ anna in the Fuslee year 1210; and it appears that there were for Putty Mudhoobun, in the year 1194, Fuslee, 472 beegahs and 1 biswah of land; but now the Zemindar, Appellant, states that in the north and east corner of Jankeenuggur there is a peepul tree named Dhodurha peepul; and that on the south side is Chucknaha Dhur, which is fixed as the boundary of Jankeenuggur; and that on the east are the lands of Nagurdhar, which is undisputed: and the lands [289] within these boundaries being measured, it appeared, at the rate of 6½ cubics per cottah, to consist of 3300 beegahs; and out of the boundary of the same, besides Mouza Sreenuggur, most of the lands of the other places are a complete jungle from the time of the Decennial Settlement; the Mahanth of Jankeenuggur has cultivated the lands within that jungle; but the cultivation of the same took place after the Decennial Settlement, and it is not proved that the places in the jungle appertained to Jankeenuggur either at the time of the Decennial Settlement or previous to it. By the Charchittee of the La-khirajdar, only Jankeenuggur and its La-khiraj Putty Mudhoobun, have been proved to be the old La-khiraj tenures, and 3300 beegahs of land is not a small quantity for such tenure. Besides, it is evident from the papers that, in the Fuslee year 1194, Mouza Sreenuggur was in the possession of the La-khirajdar; in other words, it was in the possession of the proprietor of Jankeenuggur. And in the papers of the year 1194, besides the tenants' houses, 203 beegahs 14 cottahs of land in the chuckla above mentioned are recorded. When, under these circumstances, Sreenuggur, previous to the Decennial Settlement, was in a state of cultivation and in possession of the La-khirajdar, in that case, that Mouza also is proved to be a La-khiraj tenure. It is moreover evident, that before the Decennial Settlement, besides the tenants' houses, the Mouza above mentioned had 203 beegahs 14 cottahs of cultivated lands, etc. According to the survey map and measurement made by Hurkolly Ghose, the Deputy Collector, there are 794 beegahs and some cottahs of land, including the jungle with the Mouza above mentioned. Considering all these facts, it appears to [290] me that Jankeenuggur and Mudhoobun have, at the rate of $6\frac{1}{2}$ cubits cottah measurement, 3300 beegahs of land; and the original habitations in Sreenuggur and the Mouzas above mentioned consist of 203 beegahs 14 cottahs of land in a cultivated state, which, according to the Regulations, should be entered into a settlement with the La-khirajdar. Let the remaining lands, therefore, be released from the claim of the Government, but let it be known that no orders are passed by this Court in regard to the possession or non-possession of any party. For the above reasons, therefore, the decision passed in the Court of First Instance must be amended." And he then made an Order: — "That the papers of the case be laid before another Special Commissioner for a concurrent voice and final orders to the effect that the decision of the Special Deputy Collector, dated the 28th of January, 1838, be amended; and out of all the lands in dispute, Jankeenuggur and Mudhoobun should have imputed to them 3300 beegahs of land at a measurement of $6\frac{1}{2}$ cubits cottah, and the original bustee of Mouza Sreenuggur, and 203 beegahs 14 cottahs of cultivated lands, which should be settled for with the La-khirajdar, conformably to the Regulations; that the remaining lands should be exempted from the claim of Government, and whatever collections have been made by the Government should be returned to the holder of the lands, with 6 per cent interest per annum, to the date of payment of the same."

Accordingly, the case was laid before Mr. D'Oily, another Special Commissioner of the Zillah of Calcutta; and on the 8th of March, 1842, he stated his opinion as agreeing with that expressed by the Special [291] Commissioner, Mr. Moore, and passed a final Order that the decision of the Deputy Collector, dated the 28th of January, 1838, should be amended in the manner ordered by the Special Commissioner.

About the time this Order was passed, Maharajah Chutter Sing died, and thereupon Maharajah Roodur Sing, as his heir, became the Zemindar of Pergunnah Dhurumpoor; and the Mahanth, Bhugwan Dass, also died, and was succeeded by another Mahanth, Girdharee Dass Goshayn. As no decision or Order was made by the Special Commissioner as to the possession or non-possession by any party of the 10,412 beegahs 5 cottahs of the lands in question, which were released from the claim of Government, the dispute for the possession of the lands so released still continued between Maharajah Roodur Sing and the Mahanth.

In consequence of this dispute, the Magistrate of the District within which such lands were situated, under Act, No. IV. of 1840, called for a statement of the claims of the respective parties, and subsequently referred the case for investigation and decision by the Foujdary Court of Zillah Purneah. On the 18th of April, 1844, the case came on before the Magistrate in the Foujdary Court, on the petition of Maharajah Roodur Sing, against the Mahanth, as the opposite party; and the Magistrate, after stating that it had been established that the lands in dispute had all along been in the possession of the Mahanth and his predecessors, made an Order that the case be decreed in favour of the Mahanth, Girdharee Dass Goshayn, the opposite party. That the lands in dispute should continue in the possession of the Mahanth, and a Perwannah be issued to the Darogah on the spot; [292] that possession of the disputed lands be made over to Mahanth, Girdharee Dass Goshayn, and take a receipt of the possession of the same having been given; and taking the produce of the disputed lands, in whose-ever possession the productions might be, make them over to the rightful Ryots and cultivators of the lands in dispute, and also send up to the Huzzoor receipts of the same. This Order was affirmed upon appeal to the Court of Sessions of Zillah Purneah on the 4th of January, 1845.

In consequence of the decision of the Foujdary Court, and the result of subsequent proceedings before the Deputy Collector, a petition on the part of Government was filed in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, at Calcutta, on the 21st of September, 1847, praying for a review of the judgment pronounced on the 8th of March, 1842, on the ground, that the opinions of both the Special Commissioners were formed contrary to the papers and the investigation made on the spot, and that since their decision of the case, new documents had been found which warranted a review of judgment, and, on the same day, a review of judgment was granted by Mr. Edward Currie, another Special Commissioner.

An answer to the grounds of review was filed on the part of Maharajah Roodur

Sing, to the effect that the 10,412 beegahs 5 cottahs of land were a part of his rent-paying lands, assessed and settled under the Decennial Settlement.

On the 24th of April, 1848, the case came on for hearing before Mr. Edward Currie, Special Commissioner and he recorded his opinion as follows:—"It appears that the application for the review of judgment has been admitted, and the case restored to its [293] former number on the file, on the ground that the papers filed by the pleader of the Government prove that, besides 3500 beegahs 14 cottahs of lands which have been resumed under the decree of this Court, the whole of the lands involved in the decision of the Special Deputy Collector amounted to about 14,000 beegahs, in the possession of the La-khirajdar, and were measured by a small rod, including the rent-free lands. Besides, it does not appear, from the decision of the Special Commissioners, why Sreenuggur was resumed, and the other tolahs were released. From a perusal of the whole of the papers of the suit, it appears that Mr. Henry Moore, the former Special Commissioner, held the Hudbundee papers filed by the La-khirajdar to be of no weight, and made the ground of his decision to rest upon the Ikrarnamah, signed by the La-khirajdar, in which the right of the La-khirajdar is stated to be at 3000 beegahs of lands. Moolvie Atakand Hossein, the Deputy Collector, found 3000 beegahs of lands, extending from the eastern boundary to the western side of Nagur Dhar, besides 300 beegahs of lands, according to the admission of the Zemindar, were found to belong to the La-khirajdar's rightful property. By the decision of Mr. Henry Moore, 203 beegahs 14 cottahs of land, including the bustee of Sreenuggur, were held resumable. By this it is proved that at the time of the Decennial Settlement, the aforesaid lands were in the possession of the La-khirajdar, in a state of cultivation. The particulars of the Ikrarnamah are these:—On the 3rd of October, 1836, the case was instituted, and the Ikrarnamah was executed on the 7th of the month of Kartick, 1244, corresponding with the 22nd of October, 1836. Hence it is clear that the Ikrarnamah above [294] mentioned was prepared after the institution of the suit, and such a document, therefore, cannot in any way operate against the claim of Government. It is clearly proved that, from the beginning to the year 1236 (1828-9), the whole of the disputed lands, without opposition, have been in the possession of the La-khirajdar; in that year the Zemindar made an attempt to resume the La-khiraj tenure. In the year 1240 (1832-3), Bhugwan Dass executed a pottah of the disputed lands, under the denomination of towfeer lands, to Rajah Ram Koowur, deceased. Under these circumstances, it is not surprising that the La-khirajdar feared the claim of Government, and suffered under the tyranny of the Zemindar, when he executed the Ikrarnamah according to the wish of the Zemindar; such an Ikrarnamah is no good and sufficient proof for the La-khiraj portion of the lands. It appears from the roodad (statement of the Deputy Collector), that in all tolahs, some lands have been in a state of cultivation for a considerable period, and that the tolahs above mentioned have no connection with the Mouzas in the possession of the Zemindar. From the map of the surveyor, it appears, that the jungles which were yet standing are in the heart of the cultivated parts. The several pieces of old papers of the Putwarries which have been filed show that, besides Sreenuggur, more or less, there are tolahs which have been cultivated at the time of the Settlement. Some of the papers aforesaid were filed in the presence of Mr. Henry Moore, after final orders had been passed, and the case had been referred for a second voice, when Mr. Moore directed, in concurrence with Mr. H. D'Oyly, that the case be referred to a full bench; but no full bench was held. Considering the whole of [295] the circumstances of the case, it is clear, in my opinion, that the whole of the cultivated and jungle lands which have been resumed by the decision of the Special Deputy Collector, and which have been lately measured and included with the melk (rent-free) land under the Thackbush, were in the possession of the Mahanth, from the time of the Decennial Settlement, as rent-free lands, and now that they are proved to be resumable La-khiraj must be assessed." And after recording such opinion, the Special Commissioner ordered that the papers of the case should be laid before another Judge for a concurrent voice, and final orders to reverse the former decision of the Special Commissioner, dated the 8th of March, 1842, and to affirm the decision of the Deputy Collector, dated the 28th of January, 1838; and that the whole of the lands in dispute should be resumed and assessed according to the Regulations.

The case then came on before Mr. Welsby Jackson, another Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, acting as Special Commissioner, on the 8th of June, 1848, and he agreed in opinion with Mr. Edward Currie, Special Commissioner, and pronounced a final order and decree to the effect, that the decision of the Special Commissioner, dated the 8th of March, 1842, should be reversed: that the decision of the Deputy Collector, dated the 28th of January, 1838, be affirmed, and that the whole of the lands in dispute should be resumed and assessed according to the Regulations.

Against this decision the present appeal was brought. The Mahanth did not appeal.

After the appeal was granted, Maharajah Roodur Sing died, and Maharajah Moheshur Sing, his heir, was made Appellant in his stead.

[296] The appeal was argued by Mr. K. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant; and The Attorney-General (Sir Fitz-Roy Kelly), Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and Mr. W. H. Melvill, for the Bengal Government.

As the questions decided by their Lordships turned upon grounds collateral to the merits in respect of the right of resumption of the lands for assessment by the Government, their judgment being confined, first, to the competency of the Deputy Collector, to allow the Maharajah to be a party to the proceedings; and secondly, to the competency of the admission of the review of the judgment, the arguments are not given upon that head.

The Appellant insisted that the review of judgment granted to the Respondents, after a delay of upwards of five years, was not in the circumstances justified, as no sufficient reasonable cause had been shown for the delay in presenting a petition for review; they cited upon this head, Wise, Petitioner (S.D.A. Sum. Decis., 1842, p. 68, 128), Hur Govind Ghose, Petitioner (S.D.A. Sum. Decis., 1847, p. 76), Doodal Baksh, Petitioner (S.D.A. Sum. Decis., 1851, p. 201), Kaseenath Banerjee, Petitioner (S.D.A. Sum. Decis., 1840, p. 23), Hunter v. Gobindchund Moonshree (2 Sev. Cases, 585); that the procedure of the Special Commissioners in revenue cases was governed by Ben. Reg. XXVI. of 1814, sec. 2, cl. 2, 3, 4, which applied to proceedings of the Special Revenue Commissioners under Ben. Reg. III. of 1828, sec. 4, cl. 5, Maha Raja Dhewraj

[297] Raja Mahatab Chund Bahadoor v. The Bengal Government (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 466), and that, therefore, the admission of the review of judgment being in contravention of the Regulations, the whole proceedings subsequent to the decree of Mr. D'Oyly, were null and void. It was urged also that the proceedings were further irregular, as the review of judgment ought, by the procedure of the Sudder Court, and Ben. Regs. XXVI. of 1814, and II. of 1825, sec. 3, have been heard before the same Judge who passed the judgment.

The Respondents contended, that as no objection had been taken before the Special Commissioners on the question of discretion in granting a review, and that as no appeal was made from the Order admitting the review, the objection insisted on could not now be entertained. They further submitted, that the Appellant was no party at all to the proceedings before the Commissioners, and had no locus standi, as the report of the Deputy Collector as to the extent of the land to be resumed was not binding upon him, as a resumption decree in regard to the right of assessment of lands did not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in respect of the proprietary right, Syud Shah Mohummud Yasin v. Syud Enyet Hussein (7 Ben. Sud. Dew. Adaw. Rep. 256), Sudder Board of Revenue v. Dilawur Ali (ib. 284), Hur, Gobind Ghose, Petitioner (1 S.D.A. Sum. Cases, Pt. ii., 100). That the title of the Mahanth to possession was valid as against the Appellant, subject only to the right of the Government to assess the lands, and that as no suit had been brought in a Civil Court by the Appellant, or his ancestors, to recover possession of the [298] lands from the Mahanth, it was not competent to the Appellant to question the title of the Government to assess the lands in the hands of the Mahanth.

Mr. R. Palmer, in reply, urged that a claimant to lands sought to be assessed had a right to intervene, Hureeram Bukshee v. Ramchunder Banerjee (13 S.D.A. Decis. 1850, p. 407); as the resumption of the lands by Government was not open to question by the Civil Courts.

Judgment was delivered by upon this case, two questions have been raised which, it appears to their Lordships, are ripe for decision.

The first question is, whether the Revenue Commissioners, who originally exercised jurisdiction upon the present occasion, were, with respect to the Appellant, entitled so to do; it being contended on the part of the Respondent, that the present Appellant was never properly a party to the suit. The next question is, whether the review which was granted in this case, was granted in due conformity with the existing Regulations.

In order to render our judgment clear on these two questions it is necessary to make a brief statement of the facts out of which they arise.

The original proceedings in this case commenced in the office of the Deputy Collector of the District. It appears that there is in the Province of Behar, a Pergunnah named Dhurumpoor, containing three Zillahs, but the present suit relates to one only, called Beernuggur. This Pergunnah was held in perpetuity by [299] the Zemindar for the time being, and his successors, on payment of a revenue to the Government, fixed at a permanent assessment under the Decennial and Permanent Settlement. By this Settlement, the Zemindar and his successors were exempted from all payment in the nature of land-tax, save the amount stipulated by the Umuldustick granted to the first grantee.

One of the few exceptions to which such Settlements are subject was insisted on by the Government in this case as applicable to some lands within the limits of the Zemindary, namely, the tenure of them as La-khiraj under an illegal or invalid title. It is an admitted fact that there were certain lands claimed as La-khiraj within their Pergunnah. Those which became the subject of dispute in this case were owned by a Mahanth, as the head and for the benefit of a community of religious devotees. The lands had, in fact, been enjoyed by them for a long time, free from assessment; and between this society, as represented by their head, the Mahanth, and the Government, the dispute arose, as to the assessable quality of the lands. The Mahanth had, of course, an interest to enlarge the boundaries of his lands, and unless the contiguous proprietor admitted the boundaries as claimed by the Mahanth, his presence as a party to the proceedings would seem to be conducive to the correct adjustment of so delicate and important a question, a course to be encouraged with a view to diminish subsequent litigation.

In this state of things, Mr. Henry Beresford, the Deputy Collector, on the 3rd of October, 1836, commenced the present proceedings, by a notice to two persons, Kerperam and Bhugwan Dass; the first being one of the original grantees, and the second the [300] Mahanth in possession. Bhugwan Dass was called upon to show his title, and to prove by what authority he held the lands free from payment of revenue.

It is to be observed that these proceedings do not state, by any description, whatever, the extent of lands to which this notice applied.

At some of the meetings it appears that the Mooktar of the Zemindar had accidentally, or otherwise, been present, and had been questioned by Mr. Beresford, the Deputy Collector. Under these circumstances, the Zemindar, apprehending that his interests might be affected by any decision of the Collector, declaring the La-khiraj lands to be more extensive than they really were, intervened by petition; and it appears to us that, in every view of the case, he had an interest which justified him in so doing: for even assuming it to be true that the Collector's report, as to the extent of the land subject to revenue, was not binding on the Zemindar, and that he had a remedy against such a proceeding in another Court, still he had clearly an interest in averting an erroneous report being made to his prejudice, the creation of prima facie evidence prejudicial to himself, and the necessity of resorting to a civil Court to remedy an evil already inflicted.

And this view of the case seems to have been taken by all parties and by all Judges who were cognizant of the case: throughout the whole of the proceedings no objection was ever raised to his intervention; he was allowed the privileges of a party by the examination of his witnesses, and otherwise: and he was subjected to all the inconveniences of a suitor by the condemnation in costs in virtue of the ultimate decree.

[301] Looking at all that passed, and considering that in every possible point of view the Zemindar had an interest to protect before the Collector, we think it quite rain to contend that he was not both de facto and de jure a party to this case, or that he had not a sufficient interest to justify him in assuming that character, or that the Collector and Commissioners were in error in so receiving him: therefore, we think that the plea to the jurisdiction has entirely failed on that ground.

We will now follow the course of these proceedings so far as it is necessary for our present purposes. Mr. Henry Beresford having made an investigation, which, to him, appeared to be satisfactory, having previously prohibited the Zemindar from collecting the rents from the disputed lands, on the 28th of January, 1838, gave his decision, and, by that decision, 14,816 beegahs of land were subjected to assessment: the Zemindar appealed to the appellate Court, namely, to the Special Commissioner of Revenue, under Ben. Reg. III. of 1828. On the 6th of December, 1841, Mr. Moore pronounced judgment, to the effect that 3513 beegahs alone were assessable, and that the collections made by Government on other lands should be restored to the possessors: on the 8th of March, 1842, this judgment was confirmed by Mr. D'Oyly, another Special Commissioner. On the 21st of September, 1847, a petition for a review on behalf of the Government was presented to Mr. Edward Currie, another Special Commissioner, which petition of review was granted. A hearing took place accordingly. Mr. Currie reversed the judgment of the 8th of March, 1842, by an Order bearing date the 24th of April, 1848, which was confirmed by Mr. Jackson, in June, 1848.

[302] Although the question which we have now to determine is distinct from that of the merits of the case, yet it is one of very grave importance, as it respects the rules to which the Special Commissioners are to be subject in reviewing a decision which has been made in a resumption suit. We proceed to consider whether the review was granted in conformity with the Regulations existing at that time with respect to the granting a review.

Before we enter into the particulars of that question, we deem it right to notice an objection which was taken at the bar on the part of the Respondents, that it was too late now to impugn the regularity of the proceeding to grant the review: that if the Appellant deemed himself aggrieved by it, he ought to have appealed at the time, and that he was too late in doing so after a decision had been pronounced against him.

We are of opinion that this objection cannot be sustained. We are not aware of any law or Regulation prevailing in India which renders it imperative upon the suitor to appeal from every interlocutory Order by which he may conceive himself aggrieved, under the penalty, if he does not do so, of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the appellate Court. No authority or precedent has been cited in support of such a proposition, and we cannot conceive that anything would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon the suitor the necessity of so appealing; whereby on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay, and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities. We believe there have [303] been very many cases before this Tribunal in which their Lordships have deemed it to be their duty to correct erroneous interlocutory Orders, though not brought under their consideration until the whole cause had been decided, and brought hither by appeal for adjudication.

Before considering whether the review was granted in conformity with the Regulations, let us look a little to the principles upon which we think lapse of time is a most important consideration. In the present case, five years and a half had passed away since the original decision. Surely, whatever may be the true import of the Regulations, the parties interested in the decision which had been made, were entitled, after the lapse of a sufficient period, no appeal having been asserted or petition for a review presented, to conclude that the Government acquiesced in what had been done by the Special Commissioners, and, in that rational conviction, to deal with the property upon the footing of the past decision.

Now, what are the evident consequences of delay, unless justified by particular circumstances? Those consequences are, that all the arrangements between man and man, concluded without any reason to suppose they were impeachable, may be set aside and thrown into confusion; producing, at one time, severe hardship to the proprietor, at another equal evil consequences to those who dealt with him: thus all such arrangements and transactions, which are the very life and soul of property, and which it is equally the interest of the Government to support and encourage, may be disturbed to the detriment of all concerned. We think, for these reasons, that it must have been the wish and intention, as well as the interest, of Go[304]-vernment, so to frame the Regulations that these principles should be carried into effect, and that after a decision was past, unquestioned by appeal, its finality should be left in doubt no longer than the requisites of justice imperatively demanded.

Let us now address our attention to the Regulations which have passed relative to the question of granting a review. It must be borne in mind that a review is perfectly distinct from an appeal; it is quite clear from the Regulations, that the primary intention of granting a review was a reconsideration of the same subject by the same Judge, as contradistinguished to an appeal, which is a hearing before another Tribunal. We do not say that there might not be cases in which a review might take place before another and a different Judge; because death or some other unexpected and unavoidable cause might prevent the Judge who made the decision from reviewing it; but we do say that such exceptions are allowable only ex necessitate. We do say that in all practicable cases the same Judge ought to review; and that for the attainment of that object, expedition in presenting a petition for the review is indispensable, and the only practicable course for attaining that end by accelerating the hearing of the review before accident or unexpected events shall have removed the original Judge. Looking at all these circumstances, we should naturally expect to meet in the Regulations upon this subject such provisions as would prevent the evils necessarily incidental to delay and procrastination.

It may be well to observe, that the Regulations respecting the resumption of lands, and the subjecting them to be assessed, are Regulations in themselves almost necessarily severe in their operation; [305] and while we give to them the force and effect which we are bound to do, as the subsisting law upon this subject, we cannot, and ought not, to forget, that though it is manifestly, at first sight, the interest and duty of Government to bring under taxation as large an extent of land as possible, yet that it is equally the interest and the duty of Government to protect the rights of property; for if such rights be not protected, there can be no security for the prosperity of any country. For these reasons we must deem it to be our duty, in interpreting and carrying into effect these Regulations, to give full force and effect to those provisions which were manifestly intended to protect the rights of property, and prevent a vexatious interference with those rights.

By Regulation III. of 1828, sec. 4, cl. 5, it is enacted, that the rules prescribed by the existing Regulations, regarding a review of judgment by the Civil Courts, are to be held applicable to proceedings by the Special Commissioners in revenue cases; those rules are to be found in Regulation XXVI. of 1814, and in the 4th section. There has been much discussion at the Bar, as to whether the provisions contained in the 2nd clause of this section are applicable to the present case, or whether it falls within the operation of the 3rd clause. The 2nd clause directs that the petition for review shall be presented within three calendar months; this provision, however, admits of an exception, by providing that if the parties preferring the same shall be able to show just and reasonable cause for not having preferred such application within the limited period, such review will be allowed. It has been contended that if the Court, that is the Special Commissioner in this case, is satisfied, no further [306] inquiry can take place. But we think it clear that this argument cannot be sustained; for in the same clause the Courts are required to state at large their reasons for admitting such applications after the limited period: if they refuse the review, the decision of the Court below is final; if they admit it, it must be reported to the Sudder Court, and the Sudder Court may grant it if they think fit. It is manifestly clear, therefore, by the provisions of these two clauses, first, that to admit applications is not to grant a review; and, secondly, that all that they may do is examinable by the Sudder Court.

We are, however, of opinion, that the 2nd and 3rd clauses of this section must be read together, and that such of the substantial enactments of both as are in their nature applicable to the Court of the Special Commissioner, regard being had to its independence of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, must be held to have been applied to it by the Regulation III. of 1828, sec. 1, cl. 5. We do not apprehend that a decree passed by Special Commissioners is to be subject in all respects to the rules applicable to a decree by a Zillah, City, or Provincial Court; and we think so, because the proceedings of the Special Commissioners are not subject to the cognizance of the Sudder Court; whereas, by the provisions of this Regulation, any Orders of the Courts specified, granting a review, must receive confirmation from the Sudder Court.

The construction which the Sudder Court has put on these Regulations, by framing its own procedure on reviews, by the provisions of the 2nd and 3rd sections viewed together, is also the construction which their Lordships think applicable to reviews of the judgments of the Special Commissioners.

[307] Whenever, therefore, a petition for a review of any judgment of the Sudder Court is presented after three months, it is indispensable that the party preferring such petition should, in the first instance, account for the delay.

The delay being satisfactorily accounted for, the review is to be granted, if, upon a consideration of the reasons stated, the circumstances of the case shall appear in justice to require it. We think that the true construction of these clauses is a consideration of the reasons stated in the petition presented for a review, and not of other reasons which might be suggested, but are not to be found in the petition.

To manifest the great care which the Government of India provided as a guard against improperly granting a review of a judgment, the Sudder Court is required to record on their proceedings the grounds upon which the review is granted.

We are of opinion that all the Regulations, applicable to the granting of a review by the Sudder Court of its decrees, are applicable to the proceedings of the Special Commissioners, in granting a review of their own decrees.

We have, therefore, in this case to consider two things: first, whether just and reasonable cause has been shown for the delay in presenting the petition for review; and secondly, whether the circumstances of the case, in justice, required it should be granted.

In order to prosecute our inquiry into these questions, we must look to the petition for the review of the decree of Mr. Moore and Mr. D'Oyly, presented on behalf of the Government on the 21st of September, 1847.

[308] We are unable, from a perusal of that document, to discover any satisfactory reason for the delay which has occurred; indeed, there is not to be found in this petition any attempt to state any reason why, looking to all the facts and circumstances as they existed at the time of the judgment of Mr. Moore and Mr. D'Oyly, the petition might not have been presented within the three months.

But true it is that circumstances might have come to the knowledge of the Government afterwards, which may at once justify the delay, and also the granting a review, because, giving a liberal construction to the Regulations of 1814, there might be cases in which fresh evidence would be admissible.

We are, however, of opinion, that for granting a review in the cases we have just supposed to exist, the causes accounting for the delay, and intended to justify the grant of a review, ought to be of grave importance.

Indeed, it is quite manifest that this must be so, or the litigation might be indefinitely suspended, and all the evils incidental to the uncertainty of the rights of property incurred.

Let us look again to the petition for review. The first statement is simply a denial of the correctness of the past decision. The first reason assigned is, that, on the 25th of August, 1842, Mr. Elliott and Mr. D'Oyly came to a contrary conclusion on similar premises. Assuming the fact to be so, and, for the moment, that it was good cause for asking for a review, it is manifest that such cause arose five years before the petition was presented, and there is not the slightest attempt to account for this delay. And, further, we are of opinion that, in a case of this description, the fact of two [309] Commissioners coming to a conclusion not altogether reconcilable with the prior decree of the Special Commissioners, is not a sufficient ground, after the expiration of so many years, for the granting a review.

The only other reasons to be extracted from this petition for a review are an impeachment of the grounds of the judgment of the 8th of March, 1842, with which the parties must have been cognizant at the time, and, therefore, would be no excuse for delay; and a reference to certain proceedings had in the Foujdary Court. We are somewhat surprised that this last circumstance should have been introduced as a reason for a review: for we apprehend that the jurisdiction of that Court is confined to cases of possession, and that it is beyond their province to inquire into and ascertain the titles to landed property.

We derive no light from the decision of the Commissioner allowing this review; no further reason is assigned. Upon a consideration of all these proceedings, we have come to the conclusion that, in granting this review, the reasons assigned are wholly insufficient: that the requisites of the Regulations have not been complied with; that no just and reasonable cause has been shown for the delay in presenting the petition; and that that petition does not state any circumstances which, in justice, require the granting the review. It necessarily follows that if the review was granted without due regard to the Regulations governing such proceedings, it, and all that has been done under it, must fall to the ground. We shall, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the 8th of June, 1848, and to affirm the decree of the 8th of March, 1842: and, further, as imperatively required by justice, to condemn the [310] Government in all the costs incurred both in the Courts below and upon the appeal, in all the proceedings since the 8th of March, 1842.

We believe that a decree of this tenor will be in strict conformity with the Regulations which have the force of law in India, and, at the same time, may contribute to ensure a just confidence that these special jurisdictions, which in some degree displace the ordinary Tribunals of the country, will carefully observe those rules which have been prescribed to regulate their proceedings; rules which have been wisely introduced to guard against the possible abuse of authority, and a departure from which would be likely to produce distrust, and to defeat the principal objects of their institution.

[311] MAHARAJAH HETNARAIN SING,—Appellant; BABOO MODNARAIN SING,—Respondent * [June 17, 18, 1859].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adaulut of Calcutta.

A deed of partition of a Zemindary between two brothers, carrying into effect a solunamah and family arrangement to put an end to litigation previously entered into by their father, and for a division of the family estates, upheld.

Such a deed can only be set aside upon strong evidence, either of mistake, inequality, undue influence, coercion or fraud.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Appellant against the Respondent, in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Zillah Behar. The object of the suit was to set aside and cancel on the ground of fraud and deceit, a deed of partition executed in December, 1810, by the Appellant and Respondent, to give effect to a compromise and adjustment of family disputes, and to set aside an agreement for a division of the family estate, including an apportionment and division of estates at Patna.

The circumstances under which the suit arose were as follows:—

The parties were brothers, the Appellant being the eldest, and the Respondent the youngest, son of Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, the late Zemindar, who was [312] seised of the entire Zemindary. Family dissensions having arisen during the lifetime of Mitterjeet Sing, certain proceedings were instituted, and on an appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in a suit in which Mitterjeet Sing and the Appellant and Respondent were parties, a compromise was entered into, and a Razanamah and Ikrarnamah, dated the 7th of February, 1824, was filed by Mitterjeet Sing, which instrument was to the effect, that the real and personal estates held by him, after his death, was to be divided between the Appellant and the Respondent. The former was to take a nine annas share, and the latter a seven annas share. Partition deeds of the same tenor were also filed, and on the 4th March, 1824, the Sudder Court decreed, that the parties should act up to the terms entered by them in the above-mentioned instruments. Mitterjeet Sing died on the 3rd of October, 1840, when disputes immediately arose between the Appellant and the Respondent as to their respective portions of the estate of the late Mitterjeet Sing. The Revenue Commissioner of the Patna District having heard of the dissensions, recommended both parties to settle their disputes by an amicable arrangement, which was agreed to on the 24th of December, 1840, and accordingly, on the 30th of that month, a deed of partition of the Zemindary, as well also another deed of partition of some house property of the late Mitterjeet Sing, were executed by both parties in accordance with the terms of the original compromise. This latter deed was, however, not in dispute.

The Appellant at first was satisfied with the partition, but soon afterwards impugned the whole transaction, on the ground, that fraud had been practised [313] upon him in the division of the estate: and after proceedings before the Collector of the District in which the estate was situate, and objecting to the transfer of names, he brought the present suit in the Zillah Court of Behar, on the 3rd of August, 1849, against the Respondent, to set aside the partition of the Zemindary, alleging in the plaint that gross fraud had been practised upon him in the division of the property, and in preparing the partition deed, and also upon the grounds of inequality, concealment and fraud, and insisting that the deed of partition was on those grounds fraudulent and void. The answer of the Respondent stated, that the claim of the Appellant was unfounded, and set forth facts showing that the amicable adjustment and settlement, through the friendly intervention of the Commissioner, was consented to by both parties with a full knowledge of all the facts: and further stating that the deeds and instruments were all executed in the presence of the Commissioner and other witnesses, and were to be considered as part of one and the same transaction. The answer also set forth subsequent acts of the Appellant, which it was insisted operated as a confirmation of the partition. Witnesses were examined by the Appellant. The evidence in support of the Appellant's allegations was weak and unsatisfactory. Three of these witnesses were examined as to the alleged excess of the number of the villages, and the amount of produce of the entire Zemindary, but without proving any fraud or deceit on the part of the Respondent, or that the division and apportionment in the deed was different from that agreed to by the parties. Other witnesses were examined as to the Appellant having been ill previously to the execution of the deed of partition, but [314] without proving anything to lead to an inference even that he was not perfectly sound in mind and understanding, or that he was otherwise than fully capable of protecting his own interest when he personally attended before the Commissioner, and took part in the adjustment and settlement of the disputes between him and the Respondent, or when he executed the deed of partition. He did not examine any of the subscribing witnesses to the deed, or his dewans, or servants, who were engaged on his behalf in the examination of the Zemindary books and papers in preparing the list of the villages and the draft of the deed of partition, or any one who was privy to the division and apportionment of the villages or the principle and agreement on which such division was based and intended to be carried out by the parties to the deed. The fact of the due execution of the deed of partition and other contemporaneous deeds, and that the Appellant was of sound mind at the time of execution, as also the participation of the Appellant and his agent in all the proceedings, was established by the evidence of the Respondent's witnesses.

On the 7th of June, 1847, Mr. William St. Quintin, the additional Judge of the Civil Court of Zillah Behar, before whom the case came, considered the deed valid and binding in every respect, and passed a decree in the Respondent's favour, dismissing the Appellant's claim with costs. The material part of his decree was as follows:—"The objections now raised by the Plaintiff to the deed in question, are, first, that he was deceived by the Defendant as to the real income and extent of the property under division; second, that the deed was exacted from him by the threats and undue haste of the Commissioner; and, lastly, that at the [315] time when he signed the deed he was too ill to know what he was about. It is in evidence that the details of this division of the property were drawn up by the agents of both parties, so that the allegation of deception on the part of the Defendant is untenable. Besides, if deception was practised, the Plaintiff ought to have discovered it during the time the affair was under negotiation, and before his seal and signature to a deed so complete in its legality as the one under review. The only threat on the part of the Commissioner which appears in the proceedings in the Perwanah dated the 24th of December, 1840, in which the Commissioner threatens a fine of Rs. 10,000 on the Plaintiff if he did not refrain from disturbing the public peace of the Raj. The Commissioner obtained the consent of the brothers to an amicable adjustment on the 24th of December, and the deed of adjustment was signed on the 30th of that month. The allegations of threats and undue haste on the part of the Commissioner is, therefore, untenable. Besides, on the 3rd of March, 1841, the Plaintiff addresses to the Commissioner his thanks for a Khelut and other titular distinctions about to be conferred on him by the Government, and takes the same opportunity to thank him for his amicable adjustment of the dispute between him and his brother, and to report that he has possession of his property in virtue of the deed of partition, having, between the date of his address to the Commissioner and the date of the deed of partition, brought to the notice of the Collector the frauds that had been practised upon him at the time of the division of the Raj. It is proved beyond doubt that at the time the Plaintiff signed this deed he was of sound mind and body. On the same day a second deed of partition [316] was drawn out in the same legal form, to divide the houses left by the late Maharajah; and to this deed no objection is urged by the Plaintiff."

The Appellant appealed from that decree to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in which Court he again urged and relied upon in support of the appeal the allegation of the undue haste in which the deed of partition had been drawn up, and the imperfect manner in which, in consequence thereof, the division of the property had been affected.

The appeal was finally heard in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut on the 24th of April, 1848, before Robert Haldane Rattray, Esq., one of the Judges of that Court, when that Judge affirmed the decree of the Zillah Court of Behar with costs.

The present appeal was from that decree.

The case of the Appellant was, that the deed of partition of the Zemindary did not carry out the arrangement of the 7th of February, 1824; that even supposing the proof of intentional fraud to fail, he submitted that the errors in the deed were so gross and so manifestly unjust in their operation upon his interest that it could not be upheld in a Court of Equity. The Appellant also urged that he was deceived as to the real value of the estates comprised in the division; that the matter had been concluded with undue precipitation, and that he was coerced by the threats of the Commissioner at a time when he was too ill to know what he was about, and to notice the fraud which was practised by the Respondent.

The Respondent, on the other hand, insisted that the Appellant had failed to prove the existence of any such grounds of objection. That, notwithstanding the [317] burthen of proving such charges lay on the Appellant, the Respondent had proved that the settlement was made bona fide, by and with the full knowledge and active co-operation of the Appellant, and that the deed of partition, as well as the other deed respecting the houses, were prepared by the agents of both parties acting together, and were deliberately executed by the Appellant with a full knowledge of their contents. Moreover, he insisted that the Appellant had shown by his subsequent conduct and acts that he acquiesced in the deed and in the division and partition of the estate, and that he had so dealt with different portions of the property held by him under those deeds as now to prevent him putting the Respondent in the same position with respect to such property as he would have been in if the deeds had not been executed; and lastly, he insisted that the provisions of the deed of partition excluded a new division, Ben. Reg. XIX. of 1814.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. W. Field, argued the case for the Appellant; and Sir Hugh Cairns, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Respondent.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

The Lord Justice Knight Bruce (June 23, 1859). This is an appeal from a decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, confirming a decision of the Zillah Court of Behar, by which the Appellant's suit was dismissed with costs. That suit was instituted to set aside a deed of partition, which had [318] been executed by the Appellant, and his brother the Respondent, and which partition was, as to the shares of the brothers, based on a solunamah, or instrument of compromise of suit, ratified by the decree of the Sudder Court. This compromise was entered into in a suit in which the Appellant was the Plaintiff, and his father, Maharajah Mitterjeet Sing, and the Appellant's younger brother, Modnarain Sing, were the Defendants. That suit involved serious and important questions of difficulty concerning the partibility of and succession to the estates and property of the father, held by him in connection with his Raj, and his power of disposing of any part thereof by alienation in his lifetime. It involved also the validity of a donation by him to his son, Modnarain Sing, and a further question whether the Plaintiff had forfeited his inheritance by disgraceful conduct involving a loss of caste.

The Appellant had succeeded in the inferior Court, and from the decision of that Court the Maharajah had appealed. In the course of the suit, excommunications had been mutually made by the father and the son, and the litigation, had it proceeded, would probably have caused to the family much pecuniary loss and some disgrace. By the compromise, a family arrangement was effected, by which the father agreed to pay certain allowances to his sons respectively during his life, and they confirmed certain gifts of the father; he agreed to dismiss his appeal, and the sons agreed that Hetnarain Sing should, after their father's death, divide the ancestral as well as other property between himself and Modnarain Sing, in the proportion of nine to seven annas, the elder son taking the larger share. The Court acted on this instrument, dismissed the appeal, [319] ordered the costs of the Vakeels to be paid out of a moiety of the deposit, and the other moiety to be returned to the father, together with the stamp-money on the institution of the appeal. The partible nature of this estate, divisible in these proportions, stood, therefore, between these brothers on the footing of this compromise only. The instrument of compromise, though termed by Hetnarain Sing one of partition, contained no express provision for a partition; but that power flowed from the relation of joint-ownership in which they had agreed to stand.

After their father's death, the sons acquiesced in the instrument of compromise. It is immaterial to consider whether either could have disputed it, and whether anything had intermediately been done which entitled either, according to the law as administered in the native Courts, to recede from it. The disputes and litigation which subsequently ensued turned upon matters consistent with such acquiescence; each claimed the share of the estate which the compromise secured them, and these proportions had no other foundation.

The partition which took place, and which the suit of the Appellant seeks wholly to annul and set aside, was, in consequence of fresh disputes between the brothers, arising from their unfriendly feeling to each other, and their mixed enjoyment of the estate under such estrangement, suggested by Mr. Ravenshaw, the Revenue Commissioner for the District where the property was situate. It was a measure substantially in furtherance of the instrument of compromise. From the evidence of the respectable and wholly unimpeached witnesses who took part in the preparation of the partition deed under the direction of the Com-[320]-missioner, and, to some extent, under his own superintendence, it appears to their Lordships that the partition was prepared and settled with care and deliberation, without haste or precipitancy, and was executed by the brothers openly and publicly, without restraint or coercion, and with full opportunity for inquiry; and on the part of both, with presumable competent knowledge, a presumption which is not rebutted.

The Appellant, in excuse of his own apparent negligence, (supposing his case to be as he states it,) alleges that he was sick at the time and incapable of attending to business; but his own temporary incapacity would not have extended to his competent agents and assistants in the work; and his own witnesses do not represent him as wholly incapable of acting in matters of business during this time, but, on the contrary, as occasionally taking part in the transaction of them. The alleged haste and precipitancy of the settlement, another explanatory cause which he alleges as conducive to the success of the deceit which he alleges to have been practised against him, is also disproved, in their Lordships' opinion, by the evidence as to the factum of the deed; and the alleged force upon him, which is said by him to have proceeded from the Commissioner, is altogether without proof. That the wishes and influence of the Commissioner may have operated upon the mind of the Appellant so as to induce him to join in the partition which the Commissioner applied himself to effect, is very probable; and that species of influence a dissatisfied party may readily transmute in his own mind into pressure and coercion. But their Lordships can find no evidence in the case of anything amounting to force or coercion [321] of the Appellant; and the letter of the Commissioner to the Appellant, on which so much stress was laid by Mr. Palmer in his reply, seems to their Lordships to bear really the meaning which the Counsel for the Respondent gave to it. It contains matter of suggestion; and the allusion to the Rs. 10,000, is an allusion to a species of recognizance not unknown in similar transactions, whereby a landed proprietor engages for the peace and good order of his Zemindary. If, then, there really were any gross inequality in the partition, and, as it is said, the 7 anna sharer really got in point of profit that which the 9 anna sharer should have received, so that their positions were in a manner inverted, their Lordships would in this case, under all the circumstances in proof of the participation in the transaction of the Appellant's own competent agents, be unable to ascribe the failure to negligence or mistake.

Corruption of such agents would be the more probable solution. But the case is abandoned on the ground of fraud; and the same weakness, indirectness, and argumentativeness of the evidence, which displaces that ground of charge, applies equally, if not in greater degree, to the ground of mistake, which can have no foundation, if the inequality of value be not established. Now, if this inequality really existed to any such extent as would have vitiated the partition, it is difficult for their Lordships to conceive that stronger and more direct proof of it could not have been given by the Appellant. He must have known, and have had the means of proving, his actual receipts soon after the partition: the actual value was capable of direct proof, yet he offered none of that character.

[322] The Courts in India are very particular in requiring the strictest proof when a deed prepared and executed as this has been, especially where it is one in furtherance of a compromise of suit, is sought to be set aside: a precaution which should never be relaxed, where the spirit of litigation has so little check, and so much wider means of mischief, than it has here. It appears, therefore, to their Lordships that the Courts below rightly dismissed the suit, and that it would be of dangerous consequence to allow a deed of this nature to be impeached on evidence no stronger than that which this case presents.

The view which their Lordships have taken of the evidence as to value, renders it unnecessary for them to express any opinion on the other parts of the case. They have no hesitation in recommending to Her Majesty to dismiss this appeal, with costs.

[323] PRANNATH ROY CHOWDRY,—Appellant: ROOKEA BEGUM, SYED AMAN ALLY, and RAM RUTTON RAE.—Respondents * [July 7 and 8, 1859].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

A Bye-bil-wuffa, or Kut-kubala (mortgage or conditional sale), is redeemable like an ordinary mortgage, and is subject to foreclosure.

When a mortgagee seeks to foreclose, he must effect that object according to the mode prescribed by Ben. Regs. III. of 1793, sec. 14; II. of 1803, sec. 3; and XVII. of 1806, secs. 7 and 8 [7 Moo. Ind. App. 358].

The pendency of litigation as to the ownership of the equity of redemption, between the heirs of the mortgagor and a party claiming as purchaser, is a "good and sufficient cause" within the exception to the operation of the Ben. Reg. of limitation, III. of 1793, sec. 14, why a mortgagee should not have instituted proceedings for foreclosure, within twelve years, the time prescribed by that Regulation [7 Moo. Ind. App. 357].

The service of notice of foreclosure on the occupant of the mortgaged property (a party who claimed as purchaser from the mortgagor, but who had not established his title), does not estop the mortgagee from disputing the occupant's title to redeem the mortgaged premises.

Payment into Court of the mortgage-money by the occupant of the mortgaged property, accompanied with a protest and a threat of legal proceedings to recover the amount paid into Court, is not a good tender, or such a tender as is contemplated by the Ben. Reg. XVII. of 1806, Secs. 7 and 8.

Section 7 of Ben. Reg. XVII. of 1806, provides for the equitable right of redemption "to the mortgagor and the owner of such property, or his legal representative." Whether a tender of the mortgage money and interest by a stranger, though in possession of the mortgaged property, is a good tender. Quære?

When a case is brought by appeal before the Sudder Dewanny Court, the whole cause is before that Court, although the appeal is limited to a single issue.

A cross appeal is not necessary.

This suit was brought to obtain possession of a dwelling-house, land and premises, which had been [324] foreclosed by the Appellant in giving effect to two deeds of conditional sale and mortgage, called deeds of Bye-bil-wuffa, or Kut-kubala. The principal question raised was, whether the suit was barred by the Regulations of limitation III. of 1793, sec. 14, and II. of 1805, sec. 3, cl. 3 and 4. The Sudder Court held, that as there had been twelve years' possession by one of the Respondents, Ram Rutton Rae, the suit of the Appellant was barred.

The suit arose under these circumstances:—

Meer Sydoo and Noor Jehan his nekahee wife, were, in 1825, in the possession and enjoyment of a house and land, part of the premises in question, situate in the village of Cossipore, in the suburbs of Calcutta, under a pottah made out in the sole name of Noor Jehan.

On 23rd of March, 1825, Meer Sydoo and Noor Jehan jointly borrowed of the Appellant the sum of S. Rs. 4001 in cash, and at the last-mentioned date jointly executed and delivered to him a Kut-kubala or Bye-bil-wuffa (deed of conditional sale) in the following form:—"To the high in dignity, Baboo Prannath Chowdry. This mortgage deed, or Kut-kubala, of the land and garden house, held under a Khirajee-pottah (rent lease), is executed in the year 1231, by Meer Sydoo and Bebee Noor Jehan, nekahee wife of the said Meer, inhabitants of Cossipore. In the village of Cossipore within the jurisdiction of Dihee, Punnahannogram, is our dwelling-house, with the garden measuring 14 beegahs and 7 cottahs of land, the annual rent of which is Rs. 38. 10a. 18g. Having mortgaged the said garden house and jumma lands, with the appurtenances, to you, we have received Rs. 4001, as a loan [325] through Ranchunder Bose, of Cossipore, on which we will pay interest at one rupee per mensem; the term of payment of the money is three years, from the date of the deed of mortgage, that is, up to 11 Cheyt, 1234. We shall pay the whole of the money with interest at once within this term. If we do not pay the money with interest at once within the term, the sale of the said land, with the appurtenances, will become absolute on the day after the expiration of the term for the said amount, as consideration money, and you being in possession of the said land after the expiration of the term, and having obtained a pottah in your own name, shall, with your descendants, enjoy the proceeds by paying the Government Revenue. The right of alienating the said lands, either by gift or sale, will rest with you: we shall have no claim or objection. Any deed of payment of money produced by us, other than that of redemption of mortgage, by repayment of the money at once, is null; and if the money should have to be paid by the sale or mortgage of the said land, it will be sold to you at a reasonable rate, or mortgaged, if it will have to be mortgaged. If we sell or mortgage to anybody else, it will be null and void. We or our heirs shall never raise any objections in violation of these terms; and should we do so, they will be false and null. Having received the said amount of Rs. 4001, from hand to hand in ready money, we have of our free will executed this mortgage deed, or Kut-kubala. Dated the 11th Cheyt of the aforesaid year."

Some time afterwards, and on the 4th of May, 1825, Meer Sydoo and Noor Jehan borrowed a further sum of S. Rs. 1000, from the Appellant; and at the same time respectively executed and delivered to him [326] another Kat-kubala, to secure by a like conditional sale of the same dwelling-house, land and premises mentioned in the first Kut-kubala, the repayment to him of the further sum borrowed, together with interest at the same rate, and at the same date (namely, 11 Cheyt, 1234), subject to the like terms and conditions as those respectively specified in the former instrument.

On the 25th of May, 1825, Meer Sydoo died, leaving Noor Jehan surviving, and also two minor sons, Meer Imdad Ally and Meer Looft Ally, who were his heirs, and who were born to him by his regular married wife, Jeena Begum. Meer Imdad Ally died in the year 1826, leaving Furkh-oon Nissa, his wife, and Meer Looft Ally, his brother, joint heirs, him surviving.

On the 3rd of July, 1827, Noor Jehan, not being able to manage her property and payment of her debts, by a deed appointed the Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae, her Mookhter, or attorney, for those purposes. Among other debts mentioned in the mookhternameh was the mortgage debt due to the Appellant, under the above-mentioned deeds, which Ram Rutton Rae was directed to pay off. The Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae, accepted the office of Mookhter, and took upon himself the duties thereof.

On the 28th of November, 1829, Looft Ally died, leaving Rookea Begum, his late father's sister's daughter, and Furkh-oon Nissa, since deceased, and Noor Jehan, his stepmother, his joint heirs, him surviving. Afterwards, on the 6th of February, 1830, Noor Jehan also died, leaving the Respondent, Rookea Begum, her sole heir, without having paid off by herself or through her Mookhter any part of the principal [327] or interest due to the Appellant under the two Kut-kubalas.

Rookea Begum and Furkh-oon Nissa afterwards executed a Kubala in favour of the Appellant, acknowledging the mortgage debt.

Quarrels took place between the respective heirs of Meer Sydoo and Noor Jehan, which led to summary proceedings being had under Ben. Reg. XV. of 1824, before a Magistrate, respecting the right and possession thereof. Ram Rutton Rae in these proceedings set up two unregistered Kubalas, or deeds of sale, alleged by him to have been executed respectively by Noor Jehan in his favour, on the 5th and 9th of January, 1830, and claimed to be put into possession as a purchaser for valuable consideration, of the dwelling-house, land, and premises, together with all other lands and premises of Noor Jehan. On the 19th of May, 1831, the Magistrate made an order, awarding possession of the dwelling-house, land and premises, as well as the other property, to Ram Rutton Rae, at the same time referring the other parties to a regular suit for the determination of their respective rights.

Accordingly, on the 30th of August, 1832, Rookea Begum and Furkh-oon Nissa, brought a suit against Ram Rutton Rae, in the Provincial Court of Calcutta, to recover possession from him of 26 beegahs 15 cottahs of land, dwelling-house, orchard and bazaar, which included the dwelling-house, land and premises so conveyed by the two deeds of conditional sale to the Appellant. The Plaintiffs claimed under a hibbanameh, or deed of gift, alleged by them to have been executed by Noor Jehan in favour of Meer Imdad Ally and Looft Ally.

[328] The answer of Ram Rutton Rae in this suit, denied the validity of the execution of the hibbanameh set up by the Plaintiffs, and stated that the whole property in suit was exclusively acquired by Noor Jehan, and that the late Meer Sydoo had no right or title thereto, having had only the superintendence and management thereof given to him by the former as his nekahee wife: that she in 1829, for the liquidation of the claims of creditors, had sold to him (Ram Rutton Rae) the whole of the property, and having executed two Kubalas, gave them to him, and took the entire amount of the purchase-money from him, putting him in possession of the property.

The Appellant intervened as a party to protect his rights as mortgagee, and in his petition stated that the money secured had not been paid to him; and prayed that he might obtain his rights in that suit.

On the 8th of September, 1836, the original suit came on for hearing in the District Court of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, when the Judge by his decree declared that the property in litigation had been acquired by Noor Jehan, and that Meer Sydoo had no right or title to it, and that the hibbanameh was fabricated; but that even if it were a genuine document, the same (according to the futwa of the Moulvie of the Court) being an undefined gift was invalid by the Mahomedan law. The Court moreover considered that the two deeds called Kubalas set up by Ram Rutton Rae, and his possession under them, was proved, and dismissed the suit, reserving the right of the Appellant to bring a separate suit in respect of his two deeds of conditional sale. The Plaintiffs appealed from that judgment to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. The Appellant again intervened: and, [329] on the 21st of September, 1840, judgment was pronounced in the appeal by Mr. Lee Warner against the hibbanameh, on the ground that it was invalid by the Mahomedan law; and he declared and decreed that the 14 beegahs 7 cottahs of land held under pottah was the exclusive property of Noor Jehan, and which she had a right to alienate; and that the rest of the land and premises in suit belonged to the late Meer Sydoo. The Judge also declared that the fraud and collusion of Ram Rutton Rae was evident in respect of the two Kubalas, alleged by him to have been executed in his favour by Noor Jehan, when he was her Mookhter, as she was of great age, and had lived only a few days after the dates of their alleged execution. As to the Kut-kubalas of the Appellant, the Judge declared them to be, apparently, just, but that no Order could be passed relative to them further than that whatever were the Appellant's rights, they should not be prejudiced by that judgment; and that whatever might be due to him, he had a right to recover whether by compromise or suit.

The proceedings were then carried through various stages, and ultimately appealed to the Privy Council (see 4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 233), and by a final decree it was declared that Ram Rutton Rae having been put by the Court in India in possession of the property in dispute, and the Respondents having been directed to bring a civil suit to assert their claim in such property, and having brought this suit accordingly, it was incumbent on the Respondents to prove some title to the land and premises before Ram Rutton Rae was called upon to make out his title; and their Lordships further declared that it appeared that the deed of possession set up by the [330] Respondents in favour of the sons of Meer Sydoo was a fabricated deed, and that the Respondents had no title, under such deed, to such property as belonged to Noor Jehan; and their Lordships further declared that as to the lands in the name of Meer Ghazee, the then Respondents had shown no title to such lands; and their Lordships further declared, that as to the 5 beegahs and 8 biswas in the name of Meer Sydoo, they appeared to have been purchased on account of Noor Jehan: their Lordships were, therefore, of opinion, that the decree complained of ought to be reversed, and the possession restored to Ram Rutton Rae, but that it ought to be declared that their decree was entirely without prejudice to any question as to the validity of the deeds under which the Appellant claimed, as between him and any persons claiming under Noor Jehan.

The original suit being then finally put an end to, the Appellant took steps to enforce his rights under the two deeds; and being desirous of foreclosing all mortgage rights in respect to the dwelling-house, land and premises, and of rendering the conditional sale to him absolute, under the provisions of Ben. Reg. XVII. of 1806, sec. 8, on the 9th June, 1848, he instituted the necessary foreclosure proceedings, by presenting a petition to the Judge of the District of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs; and, at the same time, filed in the Court of that Judge the two Kut-kubalas.

The Judge on receiving the petition on the 24th of June, 1848, issued his Perwannah, notifying, in terms of the Regulation, that if the property mortgaged to the Appellant was not redeemed in the manner provided by the 7th section of that Regulation, within one year from the date of notification, [331] the mortgage would be finally foreclosed, and the conditional sale would become conclusive. The Perwannah, accompanied by a copy of the petition, was served by the order of the Judge on each of the Respondents.

Before the expiration of the period given for redemption, namely, the 11th of June, 1849, Ram Rutton Rae took upon himself to deposit in Court the principal and interest due to the Appellant, amounting to Rs. 11,426. 14. 2. The deposit was accompanied by a petition from Ram Rutton Rae, in the nature of a protest against the mortgage deeds of the Appellant being considered valid, and also against his own voluntary payment and deposit thereunder, and also against the validity of the foreclosure proceedings; and the petition concluded with a declaration that he would institute a regular suit for the recovery of the sum of money which he then tendered in payment to the Appellant.

On the 7th of July, 1849, the Appellant presented a petition, submitting two grounds for his refusal to accept the money deposited: first, that Ram Rutton Rae had no interest whatever in the property under foreclosure, and, therefore, being a stranger, had no right to make the tender so as to entitle him to the equitable right of redemption which was only given to certain specified parties by the above Regulation; and secondly, even if otherwise, that the deposit being accompanied by the protest and threat, was the same as if he had made no deposit at all, not being a legal tender under the terms and special conditions prescribed by the Regulation.

The mortgage premises became finally foreclosed on the 25th of June, 1849, and the conditional sale [332] to the Appellant made absolute; no other tender of any other party having been made.

On the 17th of September, 1849, notwithstanding the time for making the tender had been expired, Ram Rutton Rae filed another petition, stating that he had made no objection to the money being paid over to the Appellant; but the money thus deposited was returned to Ram Rutton Rae under a proceeding of the Judge.

In consequence of the foreclosure having been effected and the proceeding closed, the Appellant then brought a suit to recover possession under the foreclosure of the dwelling-house, garden, and of the 14 beegahs 7 cottahs of land included in the two Kut-kubalas, together with mesne profits, from Ram Rutton Rae. The plaint was filed in the Zillah Court of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, and the Respondents, Rookea Begum, as heiress-at-law of Noor Jehan, Syed Aman Ally, heir-at-law of Furkh-oon Nissa and Ram Rutton Rae, were made Defendants. The plaint charged fraud against Ram Rutton Rae in setting up the two Kubalas and possessing himself of the mortgage premises, and stated that the Magistrate under his summary proceedings had awarded possession to him of the same, and the other portions of Noor Jehan's landed property, under the false statement of a purchase from her and by means of the fictitious deeds of sale. The plaint also stated the proceeding and decrees in the original suit, and charged with reference thereto, that the Appellant's two Kut-kubalas had been produced and proved; the plaint further stated the subsequent proceedings which ended in the final foreclosure of the mortgage premises as aforesaid, and concluded with a prayer for possession together with the mesne [333] profits from the date of suit to the date of recovery of the premises, besides interest and costs of suit.

The answer of Ram Rutton Rae set up and pleaded his two alleged Kubalas as the foundation of his title to the land and premises in suit, stating that they were respectively executed by Noor Jehan on the 23rd and 27th Poos, 1236, and that he had obtained possession of the land and premises in suit, as well as of her entire property; that his purchase and possession having been proved, the Magistrate had confirmed his possession thereof, which Order had been affirmed by the Commissioner, and that his right had been established by the decree of Her Majesty in Council in the original suit. The answer then pleaded the Regulation of limitation III. of 1793, sec. 14, as a bar to the suit; that being in possession for about twenty years from the date of his purchase, namely, the 23rd and 27th Poos, 1236, no claim could accrue either to the Plaintiff, or his alleged mortgagors, after the lapse of so long a period of time, as the suit was barred by limitation of time under the provisions of section 14, of Ben. Reg. III., of 1793. The answer further charged that the period of limitation also applied to the foreclosure effected by the Plaintiff, and that the same could not be valid because it was not effected within twelve years from the time stipulated for the repayment of the mortgage money; and that also the two Kut-kubalas of the Plaintiff had become null and void by reason of the agreement of purchase and sale entered into by him with Rookea Begum, and Furkh-oon Nissa, and further, that the late Noor Jehan, after the expiry of the term of the Kut-kubalas, went with the money in her hands, and repeatedly prayed the Plaintiff to receive [334] the sum due to him and return the documents; and that on Plaintiff's refusal, she, on the 17th Poos, of the year 1236, filed a petition, on which a notice was issued in the Plaintiff's name; that seventeen or eighteen years having elapsed from that date, the limitation applied. And it was also pleaded in the answer, that the Defendant had deposited the amount of principal and interest in the Judge's Court in the foreclosure suit, with a petition of objections against the validity of the foreclosure proceedings; but that the Plaintiff had refused to accept the money deposited, and the Judge had returned the same to him; and it was lastly stated and charged by the answer, that Rookea Begum was not the daughter of Noor Jehan's brother, and, therefore, not the heir of Noor Jehan.

The other Defendants did not appear, or take any part in the suit.

The replication stated that Ram Rutton Rae was fraudulently and unjustly in possession of the disputed property, and that the plea of limitation could not be entertained, for that there was no rule that the petition of foreclosure would not be valid if not filed within twelve years; that in such a suit, where there has been foreclosure, the rule of limitation did not apply if the suit for possession thereunder has been brought within twelve years from the date of foreclosure; and that as to sec. 14, Ben. Reg. III. of 1793, if it applied at all, the Plaintiff was within the exception contained in it. The replication also re-asserted the fact stated in the plaint, that Rookea Begum was the heiress-at-law of the late Noor Jehan, and that there was a sufficient legal promise to pay the mortgage debt made by her within twelve years of the commence-[335]-ment of the suit, which appeared in the Kubala, executed by her and the late Furkh-oon-Nissa in favour of the Plaintiff, so as to bring this case within the exception in the Regulation of limitation; the Plaintiff denied that any tender of the mortgage debt had been made to him by Noor Jehan, or that she had ever to his knowledge filed any such petition as alleged; and he also denied that the alleged notice had been served on him, pointing out that the probabilities were all against such a supposition; and lastly the Plaintiff stated that as the mortgage money had not been paid, according to rule within the period of foreclosure, the sale had become absolute, and that the heirs of the original mortgagors had not appeared, or made any objections in the foreclosure proceedings in this suit; and he insisted Ram Rutton Rae was to be considered a stranger to the proceedings.

By a proceeding of the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, the following issues were fixed:—Pleas in bar of the hearing of the suit. First. If foreclosure has been affected after the lapse of twelve years from the period fixed for repayment of the amount entered in the Plaintiff's alleged deed of conditional sale, will the law of limitation apply? Secondly. If the Defendant has been in possession of the disputed property in right of purchase more than twelve years, will the law of limitation apply to the Plaintiff's claim for possession of the property or not? Thirdly. If in lieu of the Plaintiff's Bye-bil-wuffa or Kubala, a second deed of sale of the property having been executed, the same (namely, Bye-bil-wuffa) has been set aside, can the Plaintiff again [336] on the strength of the Bye-bil-wuffa bring the present action or not? Fourthly. The deceased, Noor Jehan, having put in a petition in Court depositing the amount due to the Plaintiff under his alleged Bye-bil-wuffa, and notice thereof having been served on the Plaintiff, is the present suit of the Plaintiff, instituted twelve years thereafter, valid or not? Fifthly. Did the Defendant, Ram Rutton Rae, file his petition relative to the deposit of the amount due under Plaintiff's Bye-bil-wuffa with or without protest? If the deposit was made without protest, is the Plaintiff's present action valid when he has refused to receive the money? Issues on the merits. First. Whether or not Plaintiff is entitled to possession of the disputed property in virtue of the foreclosure! and was Rookea Begum the heir of Noor Jehan, and was Furkh-oon Nissa the heir of Meer Sydoo or not? Second. Is it true as pleaded by the Defendant, Ram Rutton Rae, that he purchased the disputed property from the deceased, Noor Jehan! if true, can that circumstance affect the Plaintiff's claim or not?" Subsequently, on the petition of the Appellant, an additional issue was added, namely, whether a deposit made by a person not the mortgagor, or his legal representative, or by an uninterested third party, such as the Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae, could be held to be a deposit so as to affect the foreclosure of the mortgage?

Evidence was gone into, but the two Kubalas were not produced or proved by Ram Rutton Rae. He examined two witnesses, with a view of proving that Rookea Begum was not the heiress of Noor Jehan, and that she had died without leaving any heir; and also to prove that Noor Jehan, only a few [337] months before her death, had gone to the house of the Appellant and offered payment of the mortgage debt.

The hearing of the suit took place on the 12th of May, 1852, and judgment was then pronounced by the Sudder Ameen. This judgment was to the effect—First, that the Regulations of limitation did not apply to the suit, as no rule could be produced which declared that the petition of foreclosure under Reg. XVII. of 1806, should be filed within twelve years from the date fixed for repayment of the mortgage money; while section 8 of that Regulation rather distinctly ruled that it might be filed at any period subsequent thereto if the mortgage money had not been paid. Secondly, that even if the rule of limitation was applicable, that there were with regard to the present suit several good and sufficient grounds for delay in filing the petition of foreclosure, and that the case was brought within the exceptions to that law. Thirdly, that the foreclosure had not been affected because Ram Rutton Rae had deposited in Court the whole amount due under the deeds of conditional sale within the proper period; and that, although the deposit was made under protest, the same or any other objection against the mortgage made by him at the time would not invalidate such deposit, which he prayed might be paid to the Plaintiff, who had refused to accept it, and because he was served with notice of foreclosure, and even if he had not been served, that he was competent to deposit the money, and so prevent the foreclosure in accordance with a precedent of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, of the 1st of September, 1847. Fourthly, that the Plaintiff's two Kut-kubalas became necessarily null and void by the [338] execution of the Kubala of 27 Maugh, 1247, agreeably to a precedent of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, of 28th of February, 1834. And lastly, that the consideration and decision of the remaining issues appeared to the Court to be unnecessary. It was, therefore, ordered that the suit be dismissed, and that the costs of Ram Rutton Rae, with interest from the date of judgment, be paid by the Plaintiff.

The Appellant appealed therefrom, so far as related to the points therein decided against him, to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, at Calcutta.

Ram Rutton Rae did not present any cross appeal from the above judgment, in respect of the issues therein decided against him.

The hearing of the appeal took place before three of the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, on the 9th of January, 1854. It was then proposed by the Court that they should hear and determine in the first instance the two following issues, involving the consideration of the two several Regulations of limitation, III. of 1793, sec. 14, and II. of 1805, sec. 3. First issue—"Whether the enforcement of the foreclosure and claim of the Plaintiff (the Appellant) was not barred by the law of limitation, as more than twelve years had elapsed since the date on which the consideration mentioned in the deed of conditional sale was promised to be paid." Second issue—"Whether law of limitation did not apply to the Plaintiff's suit, in case it was proved that Ram Rutton Rae, Defendant, was in possession of the disputed property from upwards of twelve years."

An objection to this course was taken by the Counsel of the Appellant, who submitted as the grounds of that objection, that the Court below had [339] decided the points and issues raised under the law of limitation against the Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae, and that he had not either appealed against that decision according to the rule and practice of that Court, or even filed the ordinary answer to the Appellant's reasons of appeal, and that the case came, therefore, before the Court purely on the points specifically raised by the Appellant.

Two out of the three Judges, Messieurs Dunbar and Colvin (the third Judge, Mr. Dick, being dissentient), overruled the objection, and directed the issues raised for the Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae, and in bar of the suit to be first argued. This was accordingly done, and with respect to the first of two last mentioned issues, two of the Judges, Messieurs Dick and Dunbar (Mr. Colvin being dissentient) decided that the admission contained in the Kubala executed by Rookea Begum, and the late Furkh-oon Nissa, in favour of the Appellant, was such an admission of the mortgage debt as was contemplated in sec. 14, Reg. III. of 1793, being coupled with a promise of payment of the same on a contingency which could not be fulfilled, and that this gave him a right of suit against the alleged heirs of the original mortgagors, and against any parties in possession of the property mortgaged. On the second issue, the point of limitation based on Ram Rutton Rae's alleged undisturbed possession of upwards of twelve years under Reg. II., 1805, it was held by two of the Judges, namely, Messieurs Dunbar and Colvin, to constitute an effectual bar to the suit, and they recorded the following judgment:—"On the second issue of the Respondent, it has been argued that the Respondent is the representative of the mortgagors, and that, therefore, the suit [340] if good against them is equally so against him; but he holds by another title than that which the Appellant sets up in this suit, and in fact throughout the whole course of previous litigation has set up a title opposed to that of the alleged heirs of the mortgagors. Of this the Appellant was cognizant, and should, if he had any claim against the Respondent, have brought it within twelve years from the date of his possession. Therefore, although it has been above ruled by a majority of the Court that the Appellant is not barred from preferring a claim on the ground of the original deed of mortgage, yet as the Respondent is an entirely distinct party, and has held possession under his own adverse title for more than twelve years, such claim cannot lie either against him, or the land in his possession. We uphold the order of the Principal Sudder Ameen, and dismiss the appeal with costs."

The third Judge, Mr. Dick, dissented from this judgment, and recorded his opinion as follows:—"On the second issue of the Respondent, Reg. II. of 1805, sec. 3, cl. 1, is merely a law declaratory of exceptions to the law of limitation, sec. 14, Reg. III. of 1793, and has reference solely to who may be sued. The original law of limitation, sec. 14, Reg. III. of 1793, on the contrary, refers solely to who may sue, and provides that under certain circumstances a suit may be instituted, and will lie without any exception as to the party to be sued or the property sued for. One of those circumstances is, that the complainant be able to prove that from good and sufficient cause he was precluded from sooner obtaining redress. In this case the Appellant has shown that the Respondent's ostensible possession dates from the Magistrate's Order of 1831, and that from 1832 to 1847 a suit was [341] pending in the Courts of Justice between the heirs of his mortgagor and the Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae, the party in possession of the property pledged to him. In 1849, he instituted this suit against both those litigants: I hold, therefore, that he was justified in not suing while that suit was pending between the very parties whom he would have sued. He did enough by presenting a petition that his claim might not be prejudiced by any decree passed therein. A suit by him in the interim would have been superfluous and litigious, as against the heirs of his mortgagor, who admitted his right; and nugatory as against Ram Rutton Rae, the party in possession, for no decision could have been passed until the final decision in the pending suit between those parties. Thus I think Appellant has shown such good and sufficient cause for his delay, as was contemplated in sec. 14, Reg. III. of 1793, and enough to satisfy the requirements of justice."

The decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, founded on the judgment of the majority of the Court, ordered that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

The present appeal was from this decree.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant.—First. This case is on all fours with Rajah Enayet Hoossein v. Sayud Ahmed Reza (ante [7 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 238), the facts of which are similar. We submit, upon that authority, that the suit was not barred under Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, sec. 3, by the alleged twelve year's undisturbed possession of Ram Rutton Rae, as the possession relied [342] upon by the Sudder Court was not undisturbed, but was all along contested and the title on which it was founded the subject of continued litigation, Ram Rutton Rae v. Furrookunnissa (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 233). This litigation began in a suit in the Zillah Court, and concluded by a decree of Her Majesty in Council; it involved the question of title to the whole of the land and premises claimed by the Appellant under the deeds of conditional sale, and prevented him from proceeding under the deeds for foreclosure and possession, the litigants being, on the one hand, the heirs of the parties who made and executed these deeds, suing as Plaintiffs, and on the other part, the Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae, who was Defendant, being then in possession under a summary Order of the Magistrates, made under Ben. Reg. XV. of 1821, in consequence of the quarrels which had taken place on the death of the survivor of the parties who executed these deeds. Ram Rutton Rae, the Defendant in that suit, claimed title directly from the survivor under deeds of sale made subsequently to the date of the deeds of conditional sale in question. While that suit was pending, the Appellant intervened as a third party to protect his rights as mortgagee. His rights were, however, not adjudicated upon in that suit, but his right to sue was reserved to him by each of the decrees pronounced therein, including the judgment of the Privy Council. This latter decree decided against the deed of gift set up by the Plaintiffs in that suit, but did not determine the validity of the alleged deeds set up by the Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae. It was unnecessary to do so, as the Plaintiffs had failed in proving their title. It [343] was expressly declared by Lord Brougham in giving judgment, that the decision was entirely without prejudice to any question as to the validity of these deeds, and any persons claiming under Noor Jehan, deceased, who was one of the parties who had executed the two deeds in favour of the Appellant (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 263). There is no rule of law which creates an absolute possessory title on a twelve years' undisturbed possession, even if there had been such. But here the possession was not undisturbed, but was the subject of continued litigation. The Appellant has brought himself within the exception provided by sec. 14 of Ben. Reg. III. of 1793, by proving the former suit and continued litigation from 1832 to 1847.

Secondly. The deposit made by Ram Rutton Rae under the foreclosure proceedings, was no tender in law; as in the first place it was not absolute but restricted, and rendered nugatory by the protest which accompanied it, namely, that that Respondent would immediately bring an action against the Appellant to recover the same if accepted and taken out of Court by him. But, further, the terms of the equitable provision containing in Ben. Reg. XVII. of 1806 extending the period of redemption beyond the actual time agreed to between the parties for the conditional sale becoming absolute, expressly confined the benefit thereof to the mortgagor, or owner, and his representatives. Ram Rutton Rae having failed to bring himself within these terms ought, therefore, to have been considered and treated as a mere stranger, and, as such, not entitled to make a deposit to prevent foreclosure. Gopaul Lal v. Maharajah Pitunber Singh (3 Ben. Sud. Dew. Reps. 54). The mortgagor or his heirs only can sue the mortgagee [344] for an account and redemption. White v. Parnter (1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 229), Troughton v. Binkes (6 Ves. 572), Rochfort v. Battersby (2 H.L. Cases, 388). The Zillah Court ought, therefore, to have decreed for the Appellant, and not in favour of Ram Rutton Rae. That Court held that the Regulations of limitation did not bar the suit, as under Ben. Reg. XVII. of 1806, sec. 8, a petition for foreclosure might be filed after twelve years, if the mortgage money had not been paid or duly tendered. The deeds of conditional sale of the Appellant were not affected by the subsequent deed of sale by the Respondents, Rookea Begum and Furkh-oon Nissa, nor could they operate to prevent him from pursuing his remedy to enforce his rights.

Thirdly. The decree appealed from is wrong, as the Sudder Court ought not, by the practice of that Court, to have entertained the question of limitation, decided by the Zillah Court in the Appellant's favour, when the decree upon that issue was not appealed from by Ram Rutton Rae.

Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and Mr. W. Field, for the Respondent, Ram Rutton Rae.—Upon the first point we submit that the Appellant's suit was barred by Ben. Regs. III. of 1793, sec. 14, and II. of 1805, sec. 3, which prevented him from proceeding to foreclose the parties entitled to redeem, the cause of action having arisen twelve years before any suit had been commenced. The expiration of the term of payment of the mortgage debt was cause of action under Ben. Reg. III. of 1793 sec. 14. Macpherson On mortgages, pp. 13, 31, 186. Elberling, sec. 146. The [315] only ground relied upon by the Appellant to take the case out of the operation of that section is that there was a good and sufficient cause, by reason of the pending suit respecting the title of the heirship to the mortgaged property, and that the Appellant was precluded by the fraudulent deeds set up by certain parties. That suit, however, did not afford the means of ascertaining who were Noor Jehan's heirs. Ram Rutton Rae has had undisturbed possession for upwards of twelve years under a hona fide title, subject, it is true, to an equity to pay off the mortgage, and unless fraud be established such possession under Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, is a bar to the suit. Hurroo Shah v. Tootum-ool Ruheem (a). Macpherson On civil procedure, p. 76 (Edit. 1850). The question of fraud is not pleaded or put in issue. Lord Kingsdown: The second issue on the merits, raises the question of purchase. Does not that put the question of fraud in issue?—The deeds of purchase were produced in the original suit.—[Sir Lawrence Peel: You say you purchased subject to the mortgage: is it not a question of fact whether you gave a full consideration?—Ram Rutton Rae was not in possession as trustee; we discarded the trusteeship. There was an equity to pay off the mortgage, and he came in and offered to pay the money. Rajah Enayet Hosssein v. Sayud Ahmed Reza (ante [7 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 238) is no authority and does not apply in this appeal. There the suit was supplementary to a former decree, which distinguishes it from the present case.

[346] The next point is the effect of the foreclosure on the suit, which the Appellant instituted for possession; for this is not a suit for foreclosure, but a suit for possession only. Macpherson On civil procedure, p. 38: it must be assumed that a foreclosure had been obtained. Ben. Reg. I. of 1798, sec. 1, was passed to prevent frauds on the part of mortgagees evading the receipt of the mortgage debt, to get possession of the mortgaged premises. Ben. Reg. XVII. of 1806, secs. 7 and 8, point out the course of proceedings to be pursued by the mortgagee, under a Bye-bil-wuffa like the present, when desirous of foreclosing the mortgage and making the conditional sale absolute. Section 8 enacts that the mortgagee is first to demand payment from the mortgagor, or his representative and to apply to the Judge of the Zillah where the property is situate, who is to cause the mortgagor or his representative to be served with a notice that if he does not redeem within a specified time the mortgage will be finally foreclosed, and the conditional sale become absolute. Under this head two principal objections arise as to the regularity of the proceedings, both of which we submit are fatal. First, the heirs of Noor Jehan have not been served. The Respondents, Rookea Begum, Syud Aman Ally, or Ram Rutton Rae, are not her heirs, neither has it been shown who are her heirs. The heirs not having been served with notice, the whole proceedings under the foreclosure are void by this latter Regulation. Secondly, the tender and payment into Court of the mortgage money in the circumstances was sufficient. The argument of the Appellant that the tender was not good, as it was clogged with restrictions, cannot prevail. Manning v. Lunn (2 Carr. and Kir. 13)

(a) Heard by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, 24th Dec. 1850. This precedent was filed in the Court below. In that case, the Sudder Court held, that as more than twelve years had elapsed from the date of the expiration of the period of the mortgage, to the date of the issue of the notice of foreclosure, the Plaintiff was barred by the Regulations of limitation.

is an authority to show that [347] where a tender of money was made under protest, yet it is a good tender.—[Sir John Coleridge: That case is inapplicable; here is a threat that if the Appellant takes the money he is to be subject to a suit. If he had taken the money the Appellant would have admitted the sale to Ram Rutton Rae to be good.]—Another objection of the Appellant is, that Ram Rutton Rae, being a stranger, he could not make the tender and deposit in Court of the mortgage money. He was no stranger: he was a purchaser of the whole interest of the mortgagor, and clearly was entitled to deposit the money in Court. But on this ground the Appellant is estopped by the service of the notification under the Ben. Reg. XVII. of 1806, secs. 7 and 8, upon Ram Rutton Rae to pay the mortgage money.

Lastly, the Appellant having brought the whole cause before the Sudder Court, Ram Rutton Rae, with the decision of the Zillah Court in his favour, was not bound to bring a cross appeal from the decision of that Court upon the issue of limitation. The practice of the Sudder Court upon appeal is to entertain the whole cause, and not to require a cross appeal.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., in reply.

Judgment was reserved, and now delivered by

The Right Hon. Lord Kingsdown (July 27, 1859).—This is an appeal from a decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, at Calcutta, in favour of the Respondent, a Defendant in a suit wherein Prannath Roy Chowdry was the Plaintiff, and Rookea Begum, heiress of Noor Jehan, Syed Aman Ally, and Ram Rutton Rae were the Defendants.

[348] The suit, originally instituted in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, and thence transferred to the Civil Court there, was brought to recover possession of a house and lands, under a foreclosure of a mortgage of the same to the Plaintiff executed by Noor Jehan and her husband, Meer Sydoo. The property mortgaged belonged to the wife alone. The title of the mortgagor, Noor Jehan, to the property which was the subject of the suit, was undisputed in this cause. The mortgage, which was of the class termed Bye-bil-wuffa, or Kut-kubala, was effected by a deed of conditional sale for S. Rs. 4001, with a further charge, under a second deed of the same nature, for S. Rs. 1000. The first deed bore date 11th Cheyt, 1231, and the second was dated 23rd Bysack, 1232.

The Plaintiff contended that a foreclosure of the title to redeem had duly taken place, and on that foreclosure he sued for possession to perfect in himself the proprietary right to the lands free from redemption. Ram Rutton Rae was the only one of the Defendants who disputed the claim. He contended, amongst other things, that the claim to possession of the lands was barred by limitation of suit, and the right to foreclose defeated by a due deposit of the mortgage money under the Regulations hereinafter referred to. The Plaintiff had, as the Respondent contended, wrongly refused to accept the money, and was, therefore, not entitled to foreclosure. He further contended that, by a deed of sale from the representatives of the mortgagor, the Plaintiff's two Kut-kubala, or deeds of mortgage, had been rendered void.

[349] The first, second, and third points to be determined were stated by the Judge as follows: as on the remaining points, three in number, he passed on decision, it is unnecessary to state them.

"First point, whether or not limitation can apply, if the foreclosure has been effected after the lapse of twelve years from the period fixed for repayment of the amount of Plaintiff's alleged deed of conditional sale.

"Second, whether the foreclosure in question has taken place in due course or not; whether in the foreclosure case, the amount due under the conditional deed of sale, was paid by the Defendant, under protest or not; and whether the Defendant had any right to deposit the said amount or not.

"Third, when another deed of sale, referring to the two deeds of conditional sale, and in lieu of the amounts specified therein has been executed, which deed of sale has been set aside as invalid by the Court, then has Plaintiff or has he not again a right to sue under those two conditional deeds of sale?"

The Judge of the Civil Court of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs decided the first issue in favour of the Plaintiff, the Appellant; the second and third issues he decided in favour of the Respondent; and the remaining issues he judged it unnecessary to decide, in consequence of his decision on the second and third issues in the Respondent's favour. He dismissed the Plaintiff's suit, with costs.

On appeal by the Plaintiff from that decision to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, that Court, not unanimously, however, reversed the finding on the first issue, and in effect decided that the Plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation.

[350] The Defendant, Ram Rutton Rae, had not appealed from the decision of the lower Court on the issue as to the limitation of the suit; and it was contended before their Lordships that the appeal Court had not authority to reverse the decision of the Court below on that issue; but their Lordships think that the appeal of the Plaintiff brought the whole cause before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and that Ram Rutton Rae, who had the decision in his favour, was not bound to appeal from a finding unfavourable to him on a single issue.

The instrument of conditional sale in this case was described as one of mortgage on the face of the instrument itself. It was in the ordinary form of a Byebil wuffa or Kut-kubala. It contained a stipulation against a sale or mortgage to any body else by the mortgagor, and fixed, for payment of the money, a time certain, on the day after which, if the property were not redeemed, the sale of the lands was to become absolute. As this time had elapsed more than twelve years before the institution of the foreclosure proceeding, it was contended, on behalf of the Respondent, that the claim was barred under the rules of limitation contained in Ben. Reg. III. of 1793, sec. 14, and Ben. Reg. II. of 1805, sec. 3, and the Court of appeal, reversing on this point the ruling of the Court below, so decided.

After the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagor, Noor Jehan, under an instrument in writing, appointed the Defendant, Ram Rutton Rae, her attorney, to manage her affairs, and put him, as such, into possession of the property in question for herself. She thereby agreed to pay him a considerable sum for his remuneration for such service; he was to pay [351] certain debts which the instrument recites, including the Appellant's mortgage, which is expressly referred to and acknowledged therein, and an option was given to the Defendant to purchase the property, if he should be so minded.

The Defendant alleges that he purchased the property accordingly. In the former litigation hereinafter referred to he went into proof on this point, but he has not proved that purchase in this suit.

The sixth issue related to that transaction.

After the death of the mortgagor, disputes arose as to the property, and the Defendant, Ram Rutton Rae, was continued in possession under an order of the Magistrate, in a Foujdary proceeding for quieting the possession, who left the parties to proceed by regular suit for the decision of their rights.

A long litigation ensued between certain parties claiming the lands under an alleged gift from the husband of the mortgagor, Beebee Jehan, and claiming also by heirship; and Ram Rutton Rae, who claimed under the alleged sale to him by Beebee Noor Jehan. In that suit the Appellant intervened, according to the practice of the Mofussil Courts, for the protection of his interests. He went into evidence to prove his mortgage title; and the decrees which were made, from time to time, in the Courts in India in the progress of this litigation were expressed to be without prejudice to his claims as mortgagee.

The effect of this intervention on the question as to the limitation of his title to foreclose, and to acquire possession of the property pledged to him, will be subsequently considered.

Finally, by a decision in the Privy Council, the suit [352] of those Plaintiff's against Ram Rutton Rae (see 4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 233), was dismissed. The decision in the Privy Council was made without prejudice to the right of any person claiming under Noor Jehan, and on the meaning of that reservation, and as to its effect on the alleged title of the Defendant, Ram Rutton Rae, under the sale which he had set up, some discussion took place in the progress of the arguments in this case. Their Lordships deem it unnecessary to express any opinion on that point, which is not necessary to the decision of this appeal.

The questions to be considered are, whether the Appellant, the mortgagee, was barred by limitation of time from proceedings to foreclose the parties entitled to redeem him; and if he were not so barred, whether he proceeded so as to foreclose such parties; and lastly, the effect of such foreclosure on the suit which he instituted for possession. By Regulation III. of 1793, a suit is barred where "the cause of action shall have arisen twelve years before any suit shall have been commenced on account of it: unless the Complainant can show, by clear and positive proof, that he had demanded the money or matter in question, and that the Defendant had admitted the truth of the demand, or promise to pay the money; or that he directly preferred his claim within that period for the matters in dispute, to a Court of competent jurisdiction to try the demand, and shall assign satisfactory reasons to the Court why he did not proceed in the suit, or shall prove that either from minority or other good and sufficient cause, he had been precluded from obtaining redress."

In considering the effect of a legislative bar on the [353] suit of a Plaintiff, created as it is here by general words, it is often important to regard the nature and object of the suit; the nature of the title to which the bar is set up; who the parties are who raise the objection, and against whom it is raised. The bar from twelve years' possession under that Regulation does not depend simply on the length of possession, it may exist in favour of one occupant and not of another; it may be powerful against one demand, or one sort of claim, and be, at the same time, inoperative as against others. The time may run from a date prior or subsequent to the Plaintiff's title to possession. A "cause of action" is not prolonged by mere transfer of the title. It cannot be laid down, therefore, as a rule universally true, that under the Regulation III. of 1793, section 14, a mortgagee's proceeding for a foreclosure under a mortgage, of the class of Bye-bil-wuffa simply, cannot be preferred after twelve years from the expiration of the time which the instrument fixes as the period of redemption by payment, and on the expiration of which the conditional sale will become absolute, for this indiscriminating ground of decision would include alike adverse occupations, and those which had not the semblance even of such a character, and would establish a bar arising from simple occupation, and not from the laches of the demandant or of others before him. The contention, on the part of the Respondent, indeed, was not pushed to that extent, and it was conceded that a possession continuing under and in privity with and with acknowledgment of the claimant's title, would not operate as a bar; as, for instance, in the case of a trust, and the ordinary possession of a cestui que trust, or trustee under it. These instruments of conditional sale have now an operation different from that which they originally had. They are mortgages now, redeemable like ordinary mortgages, and subject to foreclosure. There is some danger of falling into error in decisions as to the limitation of suits founded on them, if their old, rather than their present, character be regarded. As long as the transaction was one of sale, conditional at first, and absolute at a certain period afterwards by lapse of time, unless, on the prior performance of a certain condition, the title to the land was on that condition terminating in favour of the conditional purchaser, the same as that of any ordinary owner, and a possession prima facie irreconcilable with it, might well be deemed adverse from the date of the completion of the perfect title in the buyer.

But if the transaction be viewed as it should now be regarded under the Regulations, as one of mortgage, redeemable at any time by the mortgagor, or those claiming under him in privity with his title as mortgagor; then, as no difference between the law prevalent in India and the law prevalent here as to the relation between mortgagor and mortgagee on this point has been suggested to their Lordships, the possession of those who claim under the mortgagor, so long as they assert a title to redeem, and advance no other title inconsistent with it, must, prima facie at least, be treated as perfectly reconcilable with, and not adverse to, the title of the mortgagee, and the continuation of his lien on the thing pledged. It is by no means the essence of such a title, there, any more than it is here, that it should be accompanied by an actual continuing possession of the lands. The pledgee may, from various causes, be reluctant to [355] assume possession of the pledge, or to shorten the period of its redeemable quality.

In addition to this, it is to be observed that, as under the Regulations an adverse title must also be a bona fide title, under the shorter period of limitation; and as neither mortgagor nor mortgagee can, in ordinary cases, be unconscious of the conditional nature of their own titles, there is no ground for presuming generally between the immediate parties an adverse title from mere length of possession.

Where a mortgage is subject by law to be foreclosed, the title to foreclose is in the nature of a limit to the title to redeem. It by no means follows, as a consequence, that the mortgagee foreclosing will be able, in a suit for possession, to make good against all occupants a title to possession. Foreclosure is a step towards that object, under the law relating to these securities, where the object is to obtain a proprietary right; but in the mortgagee's suit for possession, consequent on the foreclosure notice, the Plaintiff may, according to the character of the Defendant, be met and defeated by proof of a prior, or of a superior, title; or by proof of want of title in himself, or that he has not perfected his title to possession. But such defences are not open alike to all Defendants, and between mortgagee and mortgagor some of them would be inadmissible.

Their Lordships can find in this case no evidence, and nothing to support an inference, that the once undoubted right of the mortgagee to force possession was at an end, or barred, or incomplete. His intervention in the litigation before alluded to, his proofs and proceedings in that litigation, the decrees in relation to his title, the objection to it by Ram [356] Rutton Rae, on the untenable ground that his mortgage title was merged, as it were, in a conditional purchase which never took effect, afford the strongest proof that no payment or other act had extinguished his lien on the lands hypothecated to him. The Defendant, Ram Rutton Rae, if he became a purchaser, as he has alleged, took with notice of the mortgagee's title which in terms forbade any subsequent sale.

A mitigation of this restrictive condition appears to have been established by a series of decisions in the Company's Courts, which limit it to sales or mortgages, not made subject to the prior mortgage: so that, in the view most favourable to the Defendant, the case stands thus: if his could be considered a bona fide possession at all, it must be taken to have been a possession originally not adverse to, but consistent with, the mortgage title. If such were its character, there is nothing whatever to show that it became adverse at any time before twelve years preceding the institution of the Appellant's foreclosure suit. The litigation before referred to was consistent with the recognition by both parties of the title of the mortgagee, who intervened in that suit. It is stated by one of the Judges that both parties admitted the mortgage title. Whether this was so or not their Lordships have not in this suit the means before them of judging; but they find, certainly, no proof of a repudiation by Ram Rutton Rae of the mortgage title at any period twelve years before the institution of the foreclosure proceeding and the notification under it. Had such a repudiation appeared, such repudiation, whilst it would have established from its date the commencement of adverse possession, would, at the same time, under the circumstances of [357] this particular case, have established, in the opinion of their Lordships, from the same date, an absence of bona fides in Ram Rutton Rae as to the mortgagee's title; consequently their Lordships, in any way of viewing the question, are unable to concur in opinion with the majority of the Judges in the Sudder Court that the claim was barred by limitation as to time.

The intervention of the Appellant in the suit, his proceedings in it, the recognition of his title in the decrees, all serve to show that the Appellant was not sleeping upon his claims, and that he was deterred from enforcing them in a distinct suit of his own only by the circumstances of that litigation. He was certainly not precluded by any physical or legal impediment from the institution of a suit; but, as one of the litigant parties admitted his title: as the right of the Respondent was still sub judice; as the title to redeem could be but in one of these parties; as he had been allowed to intervene and was a continuing party in that suit, their Lordships think that it would be an inconsistent course in the Courts to hold that he had been guilty of laches, and that the pendency of such a litigation, with the proceedings in it, furnished no "good and sufficient cause" for his not proceeding with his own claim in a distinct suit, a step which would have increased the cost of litigation to the parties who were only contesting inter se for the title, which gave the right to redeem. The case, in this point of view, falls in with the principle of that lately decided in the Privy Council, Rajah Enayet Hossein v. Sayud Ahmed Reza (ante, [7 Moo. Ind. App.] p. 238).

The question remaining to be considered is, whether the foreclosure proceedings were regular. The mortgagee, under this form of mortgage, unless he be put [358] into possession of his pledge by the act of the mortgagor, must, according to the law prevalent in the Courts of the East India Company, under the Regulations, seek the assistance of a Court to give him possession of his pledge. When his object is also to foreclose the mortgage, he must effect that object in the mode prescribed by Regulation III. of 1793, sec. 14; Regulation II. of 1805, sec. 3; and Regulation XVII. of 1806, secs. 7 and 8.

If this mode be not followed, the foreclosure will not be regular, and the mortgagee's title to possession will not be complete.

The objections which were raised at the Bar to this proceeding were, that the heir of the mortgagor was not duly served, and that the mortgagee had refused a valid tender of the money due to him under his mortgage.

With respect to the first objection, it appears to their Lordships, upon the evidence, to be sufficiently established for the purposes of this cause that Rookea Begum, upon whom the notice was served, was the heir of Noor Jehan.

The remaining objection relates to the payment into Court, in the nature of a tender, which was made by the Defendant, Ram Rutton Rae. Ram Rutton Rae directed the money to be paid out to the Appellant; but, at the same time in his petition to the Court, he disputed the validity of the Appellant's title to foreclose, and expressed an intention, amounting to a notice, to sue the Appellant to recover back the very money which he was tendering.

The meaning of the direction that the money may be paid into Court clearly is, that the mortgagor may have adequate and lasting evidence of that which is [359] put in place of a tender, and the mortgagee the security and advantage of a deposit in acknowledgement of the title.

The mortgagee would have little inducement to take the money, waiving his lien by its acceptance, if litigation on the very same subject were to recommence upon his acceptance of the money; and though mere words in the form of a protest, which may accompany a tender, will not defeat it, where they can reasonably be regarded as idle words, their Lordships think that the proceedings of Ram Rutton Rae with respect to the mortgagee's title to foreclose forbid such an interpretation of his language and his act. But independently of this objection to the payment, another and a graver reason exists for holding it to be not such a payment as the Regulations contemplate.

The title of Ram Rutton Rae to redeem was neither proved nor admitted. A grave suspicion rested on his alleged purchase, which the litigation, so far from dispelling, had increased. Had the mortgagee accepted his money, he would have admitted a title to redeem in which he was not bound to acquiesce; and as that title has not been proved in this case, the refusal must be viewed now in the same light as if the money had been tendered by one who had no title to redeem the mortgage, and who did not offer it with due consent, in the name of the heir of the mortgagor. Their Lordships think that the service of the notice on Ram Rutton Rae raised no case of estoppel. The mortgagee cannot tell the exact nature of an occupant's title in all cases, nor how far he may be entitled, with the mortgagor's consent, to tender in his name. It is best to have a general rule, and ser-[360]-vice on the occupant is calculated to prevent errors. Consequently, their Lordships think that the objections to the foreclosure fail.

Had the course of proceeding in the Courts below admitted of a judgment for the mortgage-money, with interest and costs, on a suit for possession of the property pledged to secure it, their Lordships would have so limited their decision on this appeal. As the decision in this proceeding is not final, it will not affect any right to redeem to which the heirs of Noor Jehan may be entitled, upon which their Lordships forbear from offering any opinion.

Their Lordships will recommend to Her Majesty to reverse the decision which has been given, and to direct judgment to be given for the Plaintiff, with his costs below, and the costs of this appeal.

[361] THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.—Appellants: ANDREW ROBERTSON, JOHN GOLDINGHAM and Others.—Respondents * [March 15, 16, 17, 1859].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Madras.

The Madras Civil service annuity fund was created for the purpose of providing annuities to the civil servants of the East India Company in the Madras Presidency, upon retiring from service. The annuities were to be provided for by subscriptions of the civil servants to that fund, to the amount of one half, and by contributions by the East India Company to the extent of the other half. These contributions were to be received by trustees and applied by them to make good the deficiency which was to be supplied by the Company. It appeared that in some instances the trustees of the fund, where an excess of subscriptions had been paid by a subscriber entitled to an annuity beyond the half value of the annuity, had returned the excess. R., a subscriber, from the institution of the fund in 1825, had contributed beyond the half value of his annuity. Held that, although the regulations of the Madras civil service annuity fund did not justify a refund to a subscriber of the amount of his subscriptions in excess of the prescribed amount, yet that the practice which had prevailed of the trustees refunding the contributions in excess, and the acquiescence of the East India Company in such practice, precluded the Company from disputing the right of the subscriber to repayment of the surplus of his subscriptions in excess of the half value of the annuity payable out of the fund.

Two sets of Defendants severd in defence (their interests involving an alternative as to which was responsible to the Plaintiff), and the Court below fixed one set of the Defendants with the liability. Upon an appeal in which the Plaintiff was made sole Respondent, the other Defendants were held entitled to appear, and to lodge a separate case.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, which declared [362] the Respondent, Robertson, entitled to the repayment by the Appellants of the accumulated amount of his subscriptions to the Madras civil service annuity fund, and of interest thereon in excess of half the value of the annuity payable to the Respondent, Robertson, out of the fund.

The suit was instituted by the Respondent, Robertson, against the Appellants and the other Respondents, John Goldingham, Guy Lushington Prendergast, Thomas Pycroft, Franklyn Lushington, George Ellis, Alexander John Arbutnot, and James Duncan Sim, the managers and trustees of the Madras civil service fund. The object of the bill was to compel a refund or repayment by the Appellants, and the trustees of the fund, of the accumulated amount of the Respondent, Robertson's, subscriptions to the Madras civil service annuity fund, and interest in excess of half the value of the annuity payable to him out of the fund. The question turned upon the constitution and construction of certain deeds creating the Madras civil service annuity fund, and the rules and regulations for the administration of that fund. The facts, with the history of the institution of the fund, are so fully set forth in the judgment, that any further statement here is unnecessary.

By the decree of the Supreme Court at Madras, it was declared that the Plaintiff was entitled to a refund or repayment of the surplus or excess paid by the Plaintiff to the Madras civil service annuity fund, as a subscriber to the fund, with interest thereon from the 28th of April, 1855, to the day of payment, at the rate of five per cent per annum. And the Court further decreed that the Defendants, the East India Company, should pay to the Plaintiff the sum of [363] Rs. 39,014, being the amount of such surplus or excess, and also the sum of Rs. 5055, being the amount of interest, making together the sum of Rs. 44,069. And the Court further declared that the Defendants, the East India Company, were liable to pay to the Plaintiff an annuity of £1000 per annum up to the time of his death.

The Appellants brought the present appeal from that decree. They made Robertson, the Plaintiff in the Court below, the sole Respondent to the appeal.

In consequence of which, Mr. W. W. Makeson moved (Dec. 2, 1858 *), on behalf of the Defendants, the trustees and managers of the civil service annuity fund, for leave to appear separately, as they had an interest distinct from the East India Company, who sought to make the trustees of the fund responsible to the Respondent.

Mr. W. H. Melvill, for the Appellants, opposed, on the ground that it would entail unnecessary expense upon the fund, if the trustees were made parties.

Their Lordships were of opinion, that as the trustees had put in a separate answer in the Court below, and the Appellants sought to fix them with the liability, they were entitled to appear and lodge a separate case.

The appeal was argued by Sir R. Bethell, Q.C., Mr. E. J. Lloyd, Q.C., and Mr. W. H. Melvill, for the Appellants; and Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Freeling, for the Respondent, Robertson.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., and Mr. W. W. Makeson, appeared for the trustees of the fund, but were not called upon, as the Appellants undertook the responsibility of the trustees.

The points submitted to their Lordships in argument sufficiently appear in the judgment. The authorities cited were, upon the question whether Robertson was entitled to have the excess of his subscriptions refunded, Boldero v. The East India Company (26 Beav. 316; affirmed on appeal by the Lord Chancellor, Jan. 11, 1860), Davis v. The trustees of the Madras civil service fund (a). And, as to the effect of the mistake in the construction of the rules and regulations of the Madras civil service annuity fund, by the trustees in granting a [365] refund to annuitants, entitling a subscriber to relief in equity, The Directors of the Midland Western Railway of Ireland v. Johnson (6 H.L. Cases, 798), Kerr v. The Middlesex Hospital (2 De G. Mac. and Gor. 576), Stokes v. Heron (12 Clk. and Fin. 161), Rawlings v. Jennings (13 Ves. 38) Stretch v. Watkins (1 Madd. 253), and Clough v. Wynne (2 Madd. 188), were referred to.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

The Lord Justice Turner (June 20, 1859).—This is an appeal by the East India Company from a decree of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, by which that Court declared the Respondent, Robertson, to be entitled to a refund or repayment of the surplus, or excess, paid by him to the Madras civil service annuity fund, as a subscriber to the fund, with interest from the 28th of April, 1855 (the date to which the Respondent's account was made up by the trustees of the fund), to the day of payment, at the rate of £5 per centum per annum; and the Court decreed the East India Company to pay to the Respondent the sum of Rs. 44,069, the amount of such surplus, or excess, and interest; and the Court also declared that the East India Company was liable to pay to the Respondent an annuity of £1000, up to the time of his death, and decreed the Company to pay the same accordingly; and, further decreed the Company to pay the Respondent's costs of the suit. There were some further directions in the decree as to [366] acts to be done by the trustees of the fund, for the purpose of effectuating the payments decreed to be made by the

(a) This case is not reported. The facts were these:—In the year 1852, Davis, a member of the civil service, and a subscriber to the Madras fund of 1825, filed a bill in the Supreme Court of Madras against the then trustees of the fund, for the refund of the excess of his subscriptions over the half value of his annuity; the suit was defended by the trustees on behalf of the East India Company. On the 7th of August, 1856, a decree was passed, whereby it was declared that Davis was entitled to a refund of such surplus; and the trustees were directed to pay the same to him with costs. The trustees accordingly paid the surplus.

Company, but it is unnecessary to refer particularly to those directions, the Company having very properly, upon the hearing of the appeal, taken upon themselves the case of the trustees.

The Madras civil service annuity fund had its origin in the year 1800, when it was determined that the objects of an institution, which had been founded in the year 1787, to provide for the widows and children of the civil servants of the Madras Presidency, should be extended for the purpose of securing to a certain number of the civil servants of the Presidency annuities on which they might retire from the service.

The extension was carried into effect by a deed poll, dated the 1st of September, 1800. In the year 1814, the funds of the institution, to which the East India Company were large contributors, had greatly accumulated, and it was determined to separate the charity and annuity branches of the fund, and to increase the number of the annuitants.

A deed poll, dated the 1st of July, 1814, was accordingly executed by a large number of the civil servants of the Presidency. The provisions of this deed were to this effect: the accumulated funds of the institution were assigned to trustees, as to five-eighths, in trust for the charity branch: and as to the remaining three-eighths, in trust for the annuity branch. There were to be seven trustees of the funds, of whom the Chief Secretary and the Accountant-General of the Madras Government were to hold the office ex officio, and the others were to be annually elected. The Sub-treasurer of the Madras Govern[367]-ment was to be the treasurer of the institution, and the moneys belonging to the fund were either to be kept in the public treasury, or invested on public Government securities; and as to the annuity branch, in order to secure the payment of twenty-three annuities of £400 each, a capital of two and a half lacs of star pagodas was to be raised by the three-eighths of the capital belonging to the fund and the accumulations upon it, and by the contributions of the East India Company, and the payments of the parties to the deed. Each party was to pay to the annuity branch two per cent per annum on all his salaries, allowances, emoluments, and fees of office, until the two and a half lacs of star pagodas should have been accumulated; but no party was to be required to subscribe towards forming the accumulated capital more than 2500 pagodas. When the two and a half lacs of star pagodas should have been accumulated, the rate of subscription was to be reduced to such an amount as would provide the annual sum of 8000 pagodas, being the sum required, with the interest, on the accumulated capital, to answer the twenty-three annuities of £400. Each of the annuities was to be payable for the life of the person accepting it. The annuities were to be offered to the civil servants, parties to the deed, according to their seniority, but no party was to be allowed to accept an annuity from the fund until he should have paid to the annuity branch the sum of 2000 pagodas. The number of the annuities was not to exceed twenty-three, unless the Court of Directors should previously sanction an increased number. Any party accepting an annuity was to resign the service before the 1st of January next following his acceptance.

[368] Another deed poll, dated the 1st of May 1818, was afterwards executed by many of the civil servants of the Presidency. By this deed, after reciting the deed poll of 1814, it was agreed that sixty annuities of £600 sterling should thereafter be granted and paid to the persons who were parties to the recited deed, and to that deed, under the same provisions, however, as were contained in the recited deed as to the annuities of £400; it was further agreed that none of the parties to the deed should be allowed to accept an annuity of £600, until he should have paid to the annuity branch of the fund the sum of 5949 pagodas, except that a remission or abatement was to be made in favour of certain parties. It was also agreed that the increased monthly contribution to the annuity branch of the fund should be paid by each of the parties to the deed so long as he continued to receive salary, allowance, emoluments, or fees of office, notwithstanding he might have subscribed the whole of the 5940 pagodas; and the contribution thereafter to be made by the parties to the annuity branch was fixed at the rate of three and three-quarters per cent per annum, on all salaries, allowances, emoluments, and fees of office.

In the year 1824, the East India Company concurred with their civil servants in Bengal in the establishment of a fund for granting them annuities on their retiring from the service. The principles on which that fund was to be established, and the rules by which the application of it was to be governed, were contained in a despatch from the Court of Directors to the Government of India, dated the 8th of December, 1824, and in paper appended to that despatch, containing the regulations of the fund as [369] proposed by a committee of the Bengal civil servants, with the alterations in those regulations which the Court of Directors considered to be necessary.

The despatch is to this effect: it notices, in the early part of it, the annuity funds at Madras, and that at Madras the condition of the grant of the annuities was that the grantee should have paid, either in subscriptions to the fund, a certain aggregate sum, or that he should pay the difference between such sum and the amount of his subscriptions. It then points out, in paragraph 40, that an annuity fund to be successful must derive material assistance from the Company; and then in paragraphs 41, 42, 43, it proceeds thus:—"41. A contribution to an annuity fund from the Company is evidently a boon to the service, and operates precisely in the same way as if the Company itself were to grant annuities to civil servants upon retirement, so that the real pecuniary advantage to the service of a fund so constituted is, that a civil servant, when he retires, has in addition to his own savings, whether they have accumulated in the shape of subscriptions to the fund, or in any other mode, a life annuity proportionate to his share of the Company's contribution to the fund; and if, in aid of their direct contribution, the Company protect the fund from loss by establishing fixed rates of interest and exchange, then the servants derive the further advantage of individual protection from these contingent losses to the extent of their individual property in the fund.

"42. With a view to establish a fund on such liberal principles as to insure its success as a measure highly beneficial to the whole service, we conceive that the Company's contribution should be propor-[370]-tionate to the contribution of the service, and the amount of both must necessarily be fixed in relation to the extent of the advantages which the fund may be destined to afford.

"43. These advantages should certainly be considerable, because, in order that the fund may be beneficial to the service, it is important that all the annuities from it, as they accrue, should be accepted by old servants, so as that the fund may not be instrumental to the retirement of young and active servants; and it cannot be expected that old servants in the possession, as they generally are, of lucrative offices, would be tempted to retire if the annuity did not afford a material addition to such income as the party may possess."

Then in paragraph 44, it states that the attention of the Court of Directors has been directed to four particulars: first, the amount of each annuity; second, the number of the annuitants; third, the proportion of the value of the annuity which should be paid by the annuitant; and fourthly, the security that the annuities will be regularly paid.

As to the amount of the annuity, it states, in paragraph 46, that the Directors have come to the determination that the annuities should not fall short of Rs. 10,000 each, payable in England at the rate of 2s. the rupee, being £1000 sterling.

Then, as to the number of the annuities, it proceeds in paragraph 47 thus:—"The next point which has called for consideration is the number of annuities which should be granted in each year; upon which we have found it necessary, in the first place, to determine what should be the qualification of an annuitant in respect of length of service; and we have resolved [371] that a civil servant should not be eligible to accept an annuity, unless he had been actually in the civil service the full period of twenty-five years, or upwards, and resident in India in the service not less than twenty-two years"; and then in paragraph 48, "We are also of opinion, that the fund should be so constituted as to afford a reasonable expectation that at the end of twenty-five years from the date of appointment to the service, a civil servant, having completed the term of actual residence already specified, would obtain the offer of an annuity."

And then, in paragraph 51, it states that the Directors have determined that nine should be the number of the annuities in each year. It then enters upon the question as to the proportion of the value of the annuities which should be paid by the annuitants; as to which it proceeds in paragraph 52 thus: "The third point requiring attention, is the proportion of the value of the annuity which should be paid by the annuitants, or, in other words, what should be the sum paid by a servant, including his accumulated subscriptions, to entitle him to an annuity if otherwise eligible: upon which point, we must observe, that we consider it of essential importance that, so far as may be practicable, the advantages afforded by the fund should be available by those eligible to receive them upon terms of strict equality." "53. If the annuitants were all of the same age when they became such, this point could, in a great degree, be accomplished by fixing an aggregate sum as the purchase-money for the annuity: but as the ages of the annuitants must naturally vary, it follows that, to maintain strict equality, the amount of the purchase-money should depend upon the value of the annuity, [372] which, of course, is regulated by the age of the annuitant." "54. The Committee of the servants upon your establishment propose that 'any subscriber who may accept the tender of an annuity should be required, to entitle him to such an annuity, to pay to the institution the difference between two-thirds of the actual value of the annuity on his life and the accumulated value of his previous contributions, in case the latter quantity shall be less than the former.'" "55. But as, for the reasons already assigned, we have determined that the annuity be Rs. 10,000, we are of opinion that, in order to render that arrangement of important value to the service, the proportion of purchase-money should be reduced, and we have accordingly resolved to fix it at one-half the value of the annuity, according to the following table, which is calculated upon the principle of our allowing an interest of 6 per cent per annum upon all the balances of the fund, as hereafter explained, viz.:—

		Rupees.

[373] "56. Upon this principle, a servant getting an annuity at the expiration of twenty-five years' service, and at the age of forty-five, will pay altogether, including interest upon his subscriptions, Rs. 50,550, for an annuity of Rs. 10,000, instead of Rs. 47,180, the sum proposed by the Bengal civil servants, for an annuity of Rs. 7000."

"57. But although in the mode here proposed all servants, upon becoming annuitants, will pay half the value of their respective annuities, and no more, and will so far be placed upon an equal footing, yet it has not escaped our observation that there will be a material difference in the value of the risks incurred by the several subscribers of losing, by death or early retirement, the amount of their contributions."

And, after pointing out in this 57th paragraph the differences of risk arising from the different amounts which would be payable by the different subscribers and the different periods for which they would pay, it brings this part of the subject to a conclusion in the same 57th paragraph, in these words:—"Thus it is clear that subscribers becoming annuitants during the first twenty-five years, will not have incurred a risk of equal amount, either relatively one with another or with those who become annuitants after the expiration of that period. Of this advantage, however, existing servants could not be deprived without sacrificing one important object of the fund, viz., the inducement which it will afford to old servants to retire: and it may also be observed that the benefit which the younger servants will derive from such retirements, together with the advantage which they will severally possess of accumulating a fund for the purchase of the annuity by gradual deposits, in [374] proved at a fixed and favourable rate of interest, will, in a great degree, countervail the difference of risk as compared with their seniors, who will not have enjoyed to the same extent the benefit either of accelerated promotion or accumulation by gradual deposits at interest."

Proceeding then to the fourth head, that of security, it points out, in paragraph 58, that when an annuity was granted, the value of it should be set apart; and it then enters upon the means by which the advantages to be derived from the annuity fund are proposed to be secured, and states those means to be, first, by subscriptions from civil servants proportioned to their official income, the rate of which is fixed at four per cent upon the salaries and allowed emoluments of subscribers; secondly, by contributions from the Company, as to which there are the following provisions in paragraph 61:—"With a view essentially to promote the welfare of this important class of the Company's servants, to whom is intrusted the discharge of very arduous and responsible duties, and from a conviction that pecuniary advantages of equal extent could not so beneficially be communicated in any other mode, we have resolved that, provided an annuity fund be formed in Bengal upon the principles explained in this despatch, and under such a modification as we shall prescribe, of the regulations framed by a Committee of the civil servants, on the 28th of January, 1822, the Company shall contribute whatever sum may be required in addition to the contributions of subscribers, to enable the fund to grant such number of annuities as may be accepted under the prescribed regulations, not exceeding nine per annum." Then paragraph 62 says,—"[375] With this view, we desire that the fund be annually credited with a sum equal to the amount yielded within the year by the subscription of four per cent on the official incomes of the subscribers, and that you receive into deposit, and allow interest at six per cent per annum, to be computed annually upon the balance belonging to the fund; we also desire, that if, at the expiration of five years from the date of the institution of the fund, the balance shall be less than the amount apparent in the prospective calculation contained in a subsequent part of this despatch, the fund be credited by you with the amount of the deficiency; that if, on the other hand, the balance shall exceed the balance so calculated, then an annual deduction equal to the income derived from the excess of balance shall be made either from the Company's contribution, or from the rate of interest allowed on the accumulations of the fund, at the option of the Court of Directors; that a similar adjustment be effected at the expiration of each succeeding five years; and that, when the fund shall have arrived at the twenty-fifth year of its operation, the table of the valuation of annuities be corrected according to the experience of the intervening period, and the Company's contribution be then finally limited to the sum which, when added to the contributions of subscribers, and to the income derived from the accumulated balance, will make a total income equal to the grant of nine annuities annually, according to the valuation which shall then be fixed.

"63. Upon the principle which we have thus explained, the number of nine annuities annually is virtually guaranteed by the Company, and the Company's contribution is limited to the amount necessary for the accomplishment of that important object.

[376] "64. We have further resolved that an interest of six per cent per annum be allowed on the funds set apart for the payment of annuities."

And, thirdly, by fines from subscribers on becoming annuitants, which are referred to in paragraph 66, in these terms:—"There is another large source of income; viz., the difference between the accumulated value of a subscriber's contributions, and one-half of the value of his annuity. This, in the earlier periods of the operation of the fund, will be considerable, but its amount will, of course, decrease annually until the end of twenty-five years, when we calculate that the accumulated value of a subscriber's contributions for the whole of that period will average Rs. 38,876; that the age of the subscriber will be about forty-five, and half the value of the annuity Rs. 50,550; so that the fine to be paid up on becoming an annuitant, after having subscribed to the fund for twenty-five years, will be about Rs. 11,674. In this view, therefore, when the fund shall have been in operation twenty-five years, its income from fines will probably average Rs. 1,05,000 per annum."

The despatch then, after expressing the wish of the Directors to bring the fund into operation with the least practicable delay, sets out a prospective calculation of the receipts and disbursements of the fund, proceeding upon this footing: first, the ages of the subscribers at the times when they would become annuitants are estimated, the age in the eighth and subsequent years being taken to be forty-five, and then the average of the salaries of the Bengal civilians at the several periods of their service are taken, and from these data the income to be derived from fines is calculated; then the entire income in each year [377] from contributions and fines is computed, and the expenses and the value of the nine annuities at the expiration of the year are deducted, and thus the state of the fund at the end of each of the first twenty-four years is ascertained; the result of the calculation, as summed up in paragraphs 72 and 73, being that, at the end of the twenty-fourth year, there will be an income exceeding the value of nine annuities, upon lives of forty-five.

Paragraphs 74 and 75 then point out possible disturbances in these calculations, in these terms:—"74. It is probable that in the course of the years included in the foregoing statement some of the subscribers, by obtaining accelerated promotion through the retirements occasioned by the fund, will have contributed a larger amount in the shape of subscriptions than has been assumed, but this effect will in a great degree be counterbalanced by the cases in which the contributions of subscribers will be suspended for the period of their absence to Europe under the regulations announced in this despatch.

"75. Any variation of importance that may occur in the actual result, as compared with our calculation, will be satisfactorily adjusted by the arrangement which we have prescribed in the 62nd paragraph."

And, lastly, the despatch states that the Directors have determined that every annuity, as it should become due, should be paid over by the managers of the fund to the Government of Bengal, and issued to the annuitant by the Company in England at an exchange of 2s. the sicca rupee.

The regulations of the fund, as altered by the Court of Directors, which were appended to the despatch, so far as material to the question before us, were as [378] follows:—The subscribers were to contribute one twenty-fifth part of their salaries and other emoluments. The annuities were fixed at Rs. 10,000 each, payable in England at 2s. the rupee, being £1000 sterling. They were to be tendered to the subscribers having served in the civil service twenty-five years, and actually resided twenty-two years of that period in India, according to their seniority on the gradation list of the service as fixed by the Court of Directors: and the right of preference was not to be barred by refusal in a preceding year.

The number of annuities was not to be more than would complete nine per annum. The actual value of annuities tendered and accepted was to be passed to a separate account on the books of the institution, under the head of appropriated funds, and to the debit of this account were to be entered all payments in satisfaction of annuities. Any subscriber having resided in India in the civil service not less than twenty-two years, and been a member of the institution the full period of twenty-five years, retiring from the service before the option of an annuity should devolve on him, was to be entitled to the same in his proper turn, without any payment to the fund, save what might be claimable under the following rule: and any subscriber so retiring previous to having paid the subscription for the aforesaid period of twenty-two years, was to be similarly entitled, provided he continued to contribute for the deficient years, according to the average of the contributions of those of his own standing, or made such payment in hand as the manager should regard as equivalent. Any subscriber who might accept the tender of an annuity was, in order to entitle him to [379] such annuity, to pay to the institution previous to the date at which the annuity was to commence, the difference between one half of the actual value of the annuity on his life, and the accumulated value of his previous contributions, in case the latter quantity should be less than the former. Any member so choosing might decline paying the difference defined in the foregoing rule, and was, in such case, to be entitled to an annuity diminished in proportion to the sum by which the accumulated value of his contributions was less than one-half of the actual value of an annuity on his life.

Rules 14 and 16 were as follows:—"14. Any subscriber who may be dismissed from the Honourable Company's service shall forfeit all right to benefit by the institution, and be entitled to no refund of payment which he may have made."
"16. The resignation of the Honourable Company's service is an essential condition to entitle an individual to an annuity from the institution."

The affairs of the institution were to be managed by a Committee of nine, of whom four were to be ex officio: the Chief Secretary to Government, the Accountant-General, the Sub-Treasurer, and the Civil Auditor; the others were to be elected at a general meeting. Rule 21 was as follows:—"The Sub-Treasurer of Government shall, with the permission of his Excellency the most noble the Governor-General in Council, be requested to act as treasurer to the fund, and all money, and securities for money, belonging to the fund in India, shall be kept in the public treasury, subject to the direction and control of the trustees and managers of the fund."

The funds of the institution, as well as those set [380] apart for the payment of annuities as those arising from the accumulation of capital, were to be deposited in the public treasury. All questions proposed at a general meeting, whether annual or special, were to be determined by a majority of three-fourths of the members who might either be present at such general meetings or vote thereat by proxy, and upon all general questions involving any increase or diminution of the rate of contributions, or any essential addition to or alteration in the original rules and principles of the institution, all subscribers in India who might not be able to attend the meeting in person were to be allowed to deliver their sentiments and votes by a written communication to be signed by them and addressed to the chairman of the meeting: provided always that no decision upon such question should be valid or have any effect until sanctioned and approved by the Court of Directors of the Company, to whom all parties considering themselves aggrieved by such decision should have a right of appeal, and the decision of the Court of Directors was, in all cases, to be final. The actual value of an annuity on the life of any subscriber was to be determined by a table annexed.

Paragraphs 34 and 35 were as follows:—"34. To determine the accumulated value of the contributions of any subscriber, the accountant shall keep separate accounts of the receipts from each member, and these accounts shall be annually made up with the rate of interest at which it shall appear the funds of the institution may have approved."
"35. At the close of every third year the managers shall, according to the annexed table, calculate the actual value of the pending annuities, and shall then compare the total of their values with the assets belonging to the [381] appropriated funds of the institution. Should those assets exceed in value the said total, the difference shall be carried to the credit of the unappropriated funds of the society, and be available for the purposes of the institution. On the other hand, should the value of the said assets be less than the total aforesaid, the deficiency shall be supplied by a transfer from the latter fund to the former."

The plan of the Bengal fund having been thus arranged, the East India Company were desirous of providing for their civil servants at Madras the same advantages as had been conceded to those in Bengal; and accordingly they caused a copy of their despatch, as to the Bengal annuity fund, and of the regulations under which they have given their sanction to that fund, to be laid before the managers of the civil fund at Madras, with an intimation that if the subscribers to that institution would effect such alterations and modifications of the annuity branch as would make it correspond with the regulations prescribed for the Bengal fund, and would fix their subscriptions to that branch at a rate equal to that which had been fixed for the Bengal servants, they (the Company) would be prepared to make the necessary addition to their contribution to the fund.

In consequence of this communication the trustees of the Madras civil service fund made a report to their subscribers, dated the 22nd of July, 1825, by which, after noticing that the Court of Directors required a contribution of four per cent upon the salaries and other emoluments of their civil servants, and also required the payment, as a fine, of half the estimated value of every annuity granted, after allowing the annuitant credit for his subscriptions and for [382] interest thereupon, and after referring to the other parts of the Company's plan, and to the difficulties arising from that plan, differing in several material points from that by which the subscribers to their fund stood pledged to one another, they proceeded to point out the rules by the introduction of which they might be enabled to carry the Company's plan into effect, and which were as follows:—

"Rule 1. That the present capital of the annuity branch of the civil fund shall be set apart as appropriated funds for the payment of outstanding annuities, and of the annuities of £400 which have still to be granted as lapses occur.

"Rule 2. That those annuities shall be paid—First, from the Honourable Court's annual donation of Rs. 35,000, to the annuity branch of the civil fund; secondly, from the interest, at the rate of eight per cent allowed by the Honourable Company on the capital to be set apart; and, thirdly, as far as necessary, from the capital itself.

"Rule 3. That the subscriptions of those civil servants who may assent to the plan sanctioned by the Court of Directors, shall commence at the rate of four per cent on their salaries and other official emoluments from the 1st of May, 1825.

"Rule 4. That credit shall be given as heretofore to each subscriber for the amount of his past contributions to the annuity branch of the civil fund, but without interest, none having heretofore been allowed.

"Rule 5. That those subscribers to the civil fund of 1818 whom circumstances may not permit to take advantage of the Honourable Court's plan shall continue their subscriptions at the rate of three and [383] three-quarters per cent, and in their turn, as heretofore, shall succeed to annuities of £600, on the terms prescribed by the annuity fund of 1818.

"Rule 6. That subscribers to the annuity fund of 1818 who may assent to the Honourable Court's plan, but may afterwards be precluded by circumstances from qualifying themselves to succeed to annuities according to that plan, shall be permitted to revert to the present annuity fund, under the 5th rule.

"Rule 7. That each member of the civil service in India shall be required to declare his choice whether he will assent to the Honourable Court's plan within from the present date, and each member of the civil service absent from India, within from the date of his return to India."

The subscribers to the Madras fund, at a meeting held on the 24th of August, 1825, approved of the adoption of the Company's plan in the mode proposed by the trustees' report; and the report having been forwarded to the Madras Government, the Governor in Council approved of the mode suggested by it, as affecting as near a conformity between the annuity branch of the Madras civil fund and the plan for granting annuities sanctioned by the Court of Directors, as the nature of the case would allow; and, subject to the confirmation of the Court of Directors, sanctioned, from the 1st of May, 1825, the operation of the new annuity fund in the manner suggested by the report. Ultimately the Court of Directors, in a despatch to the Government of Madras, dated the 10th of November, 1826, approved of the modifications suggested by the trustees' report, as the means of introducing the new plan, except that, in the first [384] instance, they declined to sanction the reversion to the old fund by those who might join the new scheme, and be unable to complete the requisite period of service; but we collect from the trustees' report of the 9th of October, 1851, that they afterwards conceded this right.

There are some passages in this despatch of the 10th of November, 1826, which seem to be worthy of attention. They are as follows:—

"20. We acquiesce in the proposition that subscribers to the new fund shall have credit for the amount of their past contributions to the annuity branch of the old fund, but without interest, none having heretofore been allowed: interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, to be computed annually, will be allowed by us upon the subscription to the new fund agreeably to the regulations contained in our despatch to the Government of Bengal, dated the 8th of December, 1824.

"21. Referring to the principle explained in paragraphs 49 to 51 of that despatch, we have determined that the number of annuities to be granted annually to civil servants upon your establishment shall be four; which number, however, is to include any of £600 and of £400 to persons not yet retired from the service, either by resignation or by an absence of more than five years from India, as well as those of £1000 under the new plan.

" 22. In order to accomplish these objects, a larger proportionate contribution than is allowed to the Bengal fund will probably be required from the Company, because the Bengal allowances being upon a larger scale than those of Madras, the annual contributions of the service in the shape of per-centage [385] upon salaries will be larger in Bengal than at Madras; but, on the other hand, the eventual payments in the shape of fines or difference between the aggregate of annual contributions and half the value of the annuity to be received from annuitants who have not subscribed, or who have not long subscribed, to the old fund at Madras, may be larger than the sum to be received from annuitants in Bengal.

" 23. Another circumstance, therefore, which may occasion the necessity of a larger proportionate contribution from the Company to the new fund upon your establishment is, that as most of the subscribers have already contributed to the old fund, the amount of those contributions will go in reduction of the sum payable upon their becoming annuitants.

" 24. We have not the means of making a prospective calculation of the progress of the new fund at your Presidency, because we are not in possession of the amounts already contributed to the old fund by subscribers to the new fund, which will materially affect the receipts of the latter during the first years of its operation.

" 25. Neither are we informed how frequently existing annuities upon the old fund may be calculated to fall vacant. This consideration will affect the number of annuities expected to become chargeable upon the new fund.

" 26. We desire that you, who have the means of obtaining this and all other requisite information, will cause such a calculation to be made, embracing the period comprised in the prospective calculation included in our despatch to the Government of Bengal, dated the 8th of December, 1824.

" 27. This computation will enable you to judge [386] how far an annual contribution on our part, equal in amount to the contributions of our civil servants, is likely to render the fund adequate to the probable demands upon it. We estimate four per cent. upon their salaries to produce Rs. 1,18,000 per annum. If a contribution of this sum shall be shown to be inadequate, we authorize you to increase it, provided it shall not exceed, for the present, the sum of Rs. 1,50,000.

" 28. You will be enabled to adjust the actual results to the necessities of the fund every five years, as directed in the 62nd paragraph of our despatch to the Bengal Government; so that the Company's contribution from year to year may not materially vary in amount, and may ultimately be fixed and determined at the sum necessary to enable the fund to grant four annuities annually.

" 29. We also authorize you to credit the new fund with interest upon the balances at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

" 30. We shall not object to the new fund being brought into operation from the 1st of May, 1825; that is to say, that the contribution of the service and of the Company shall commence from that date, and that the first set of annuities shall commence from the 1st of May, 1826."

In the year 1838, the rules of the Madras fund, as established in the year 1825, were published in Madras. They provided, in the first place, for the appropriation of the capital of the annuity branch of the civil fund to the payment of the outstanding annuities, and of the annuities remaining to be granted out of that fund.

Rules 4 and 5 were as follows:—

" 4. That those subscribers to the civil fund [387] of 1818 whom circumstances may not permit to take advantage of this plan shall continue their subscriptions at the rate of three and three-quarters per cent., and in their turn, as heretofore, shall succeed to annuities of pounds sterling, six hundred, on the terms prescribed by the annuity fund of 1818.

" 5. That subscribers to the annuity fund of 1818, who may assent to this plan, but may afterwards be precluded by sickness (certified to be of such a nature as to render it improbable that they can return to the service), from qualifying themselves to succeed to annuities according to it, shall be permitted to revert to the annuity fund of 1818, under the terms of the deed, but the refund of any sum in which the accumulated amount of their subscriptions to this plan may exceed the sum payable for the annuity fund of 1818, shall not be allowed."

The subscribers were to contribute four per cent. of their salaries and public emoluments. The annuities were fixed at £1000 sterling, and were to be tendered to subscribers who had served in the civil service twenty-five years, and actually resided twenty-two years of that period in India, according to their seniority on the gradation list of the service as fixed by the Court of Directors, and the right of preference was not to be barred by refusal in a preceding year.

Rules 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 22, 23, 30, 31, and 35 were as follows:

"13. The number of annuities offered shall not be more than may complete four (4) per annum from the 1st of May, 1826; these shall be tendered to all the qualified subscribers, according to the gradation list, [388] with the understanding that persons parties to this plan will obtain annuities of pounds sterling, one thousand, on the condition herein specified; and persons who may have adhered to the fund of 1818, will obtain annuities of pounds sterling, six hundred, on the terms of that deed. Civil servants succeeding to an annuity on this plan shall not become chargeable on the annuity branches of the civil funds of 1800, 1814, or 1818.

"14. The actual value of annuities of pounds sterling, one thousand, or pounds sterling, six hundred, as the case may be, tendered and accepted as above, shall be passed to a separate account on the books of the institution, under the head of appropriated funds, and to the debit of this account shall be entered all payments in satisfaction of annuities.

"15. Should any subscriber having resided in India in the civil service not less than twenty-two years, and been a member of the institution the full period of twenty-five years, retire from the service before the option of an annuity may devolve on him, he shall be entitled to the same in his proper turn without any payment to the fund, save what may be claimable under the following rule.

"16. Any subscriber who may accept the tender of an annuity of pounds sterling, one thousand, shall be required, to entitle him to such annuity, to pay to the institution previous to the date at which the annuity is to commence, the difference between one-half of the actual value of the annuity on his life, and the accumulated value of his previous contributions, in case the latter quantity shall be less than the former; but should the contributions be in excess, such excess shall be refunded. These values shall be [389] determined as below provided. Such annuity, if required, may be made payable either to the date of decease only, or quarterly and to the date of decease: the first benefit may be secured previous to the date at which the annuity is to commence by payment as fine of the value of half-a-year's annuity of the Company's rupees five thousand, as computed in the subjoined table; the latter by paying, in addition to that fine, the value of an addition of Company's rupees two hundred and twenty-five, as computed in the same table. Subscribers retiring on annuity cannot be allowed to purchase only the benefit of a quarterly payment, but there will be no objection to the other benefit being taken singly.

"17. Any member so choosing may decline paying the difference defined in the foregoing rule, and shall in such case be entitled to an annuity, diminished in proportion to the sum by which the accumulated value of his contributions is less than one-half of the actual value of an annuity on his life.

"22. The affairs of the institution shall be managed by a committee of seven, of whom two shall be ex officio: the chief secretary to Government and the accountant-general. The other five shall be subscribers, and elected at a general meeting: the members of the committee shall be also the trustees for the funds of the institution.

"23. The sub-treasurer of the Government of Fort St. George shall, with the permission of the Right Honourable the Governor in Council, be requested to act as treasurer to the institution, and the funds, as well as those set apart for the payment of annuities as those arising from the accumulation of capital, shall be deposited in the public Treasury, [390] subject to the direction and control of the trustees and managers of the fund.

"30. All questions proposed at a general meeting, whether quarterly or special, shall be determined by a majority of the three-fourths of the members who may either be present at such general meetings or vote thereat by proxy, but the concurrent voices of nine members, at least, shall be requisite to determine upon any question whatever: and upon all general questions involving any increase or diminution of the rate of contributions now fixed or any essential addition to, or alteration in, the original rules and principles of the institution which are now established, all subscribers in India who may not be able to attend the meeting in person, shall be allowed to deliver their sentiments and votes by a written communication, to be signed by them, and addressed to the managers of the fund, accompanied, if they are at Madras, on the day of such meeting, by the certificate of a medical gentleman, stating the inability of the party to attend the meeting in person: providing always, that no decision upon such question shall be valid, or have any effect, until sanctioned and approved by the Court of Directors of the East India Company, to whom all parties considering themselves aggrieved by such decisions shall have a right of appeal, and the decision of the Court of Directors shall, in all cases, be final.

" 34. To determine the accumulated value of the contributions of any subscriber, the accountant shall keep separate accounts of the receipts from each member, and these accounts shall be annually made up with the rate of interest allowed by the Company.

" 35. At the close of each third year, the mana-[391]-gers shall, according to the annexed tables, calculate the actual values of the pending annuities, and shall then compare the total of their values with the assets belonging to the appropriated funds of the institution. Should those assets exceed in value the said total, the difference shall be carried to the credit of the unappropriated funds of the society, and be available for the purposes of the institution: on the other hand, should the value of the said assets be less than the total aforesaid, the deficiency shall be supplied by a transfer from the latter fund to the former."

At the foot of these rules there was a table, showing the value of an annuity of Rs. 10,000, on lives from 30 to 76, and there was a column in this table in which the half value of the annuity was set out.

In the same year 1838, the trustees of the Madras fund forwarded to the Government of Madras calculations which had been made by them in conformity with the requisition contained in the 26th paragraph of the despatch of the 10th of November, 1826; and in a letter from the trustees which accompanied these calculations there were the following passages:—

" 2. These calculations are two-fold: the first exhibiting the prospective assets of the fund established by the Honourable Court, and the income with which it would commence its twenty-fifth year: the second the actual results for the period of ten years, from 1825-26 to 1834-35 inclusive, during which the fund has been in operation.

" 3. As stated in our predecessors' letter to your address under date the 4th of July, 1827, we have experienced some difficulty in framing the required calculations, as we are not aware of the exact data on which they should be made. We have, however, carefully followed the instructions furnished to the [392] Bengal Government; and though we still entertain * doubts regarding the correctness of the data we have adopted, we think it better to submit the calculations, in order that they may be strictly scrutinised by the home authorities, and that the error, if any, may be the sooner pointed out and corrected.

" 7. In the actual operation of the scheme, we have made the adjustment required by the 35th rule, regarding the actual values of pending annuities at the close of every third year. The difference which should be credited to the fund, as directed in paragraph 62 of the despatch, we have not yet applied for, because we are desirous that the calculations should be previously verified and approved by the Honourable Court; but, if verified, we shall make due application for it.

" 8. The Honourable Court will have now an opportunity of viewing the results of two successive quinquennial periods; and, in order to render the information complete, we have caused a separate statement to be prepared, showing the amount of fine paid by each annuitant in the years under consideration, and the age of such annuitants respectively."

" * NOTE.—The balance at the end of thirteenth year in the prospective calculation then begins to diminish, instead of increasing as previously."

These calculations were also accompanied by the accounts on which they proceeded, and in these accounts there were the following items: In the statement of the names of gentlemen who have taken annuities from 1825 to 1836, together with their ages and the fines paid by them, this item: "Mr. C. Harris, £1000 (the amount of the annuity), sixty-five (the age), and £3492 6s. 11d. refunded;" and in [393] another account this item: "Amount repaid Mr. C. Harris, being the overpayment of the fine due by him."

There was also in these accounts an item of £213 6s. 3d. refunded to Mr. William Oliver, on which some reliance was placed on the part of the Appellants, as having been calculated to induce them to believe that these refunds were not in respect of excess of subscriptions, it being admitted that the refund to Mr. William Oliver was not on that account; but it is to be observed that a sum of Rs. 1205. is mentioned in the accounts as having been paid for fine in respect of Mr. William Oliver's annuity, and that there is no mention in the accounts of any sum paid for fine in respect of Harris's annuity.

It appears also that in the year 1838, the Court of Directors detected what they considered to be an error in some of the accounts of the trustees of the fund, arising from their having considered the Madras rupee as equivalent to the sicca rupee, and gave directions by a despatch, dated the 5th of September, 1838, that immediate measures should be taken to correct the error.

In the year 1840, the trustees of the fund claimed to be entitled against the Government to credit for an unappropriated balance of Rs. 434,491, and the letter by which the requisition was made not being signed by the Accountant-General, one of the ex officio trustees, he was called upon by the Government to state whether he considered the civil service to be entitled to this credit. His letter in answer, dated the 27th of May, 1840, contains the following passage:—"2nd. In the fifth paragraph of their despatch to the Government of India in the financial [394] department, No. 7, of 1835, dated 27th of May, 1835, the honourable Court of Directors declare that they will be willing to acquiesce in a regulation to the following effect, if adopted by the subscribers, viz., 'that at the close of every year the number of unaccepted annuities be publicly declared, and that two-thirds of them be appropriated to subscribers duly qualified in the order of seniority as respects the applicants within the period of three months from the time of the surplus being declared, and as respects other applicants in the order in which they may apply for annuities, upon payment of one-fourth instead of one-half of the value of the annuity, and that in the event of the accumulated subscriptions, with interest, exceeding the said one-fourth, the balance, with interest, be returned to the subscriber; that the remaining one-third of annuities, together with such of the two-thirds as shall not be claimed within the period of three years from the time of declaring the surplus, shall lapse to the fund.'"

The Government of Madras also in the year 1840, called upon the trustees for a report on all the branches of their fund, and the trustees accordingly furnished these accounts. In the accounts thus furnished the repayment to Mr. Harris again appears, and there appears also this entry: "Amount repaid Mr. N. Webb, being the over-payment of fine due by him, Rs. 9221. 9s. 11d.;" and in the letter of the trustees accompanying these accounts, dated the 15th of April, 1841, there are the following passages:—

"2nd. The enclosed accounts, marked A and B respectively, contain detailed statements of the annuity fund of 1825, since its commencement up to the 30th of April, 1840, or for fifteen complete years [395] since its establishment, divided into its two branches of 'unappropriated' and 'appropriated' respectively, and the statement No. 1, is an abstract of the account A.

"3rd. From that statement it will be perceived, that since the year 1825-26, when the Company's annuity plan commenced, up to last year, 1839-40, during the fifteen years it has been here in operation, there has been contributed to it—

	Rs.	a.	p.
"By the subscriptions of the service	20,85,752	0	2
"By the company	20,85,752	0	2

	Rs.	a.	p.

" * By the annuitant's balance of fines and penalties, etc., not included in the first item	14,36,966	3	5
" By interest	1,92,448	6	2
" Making a total fund of rupees	58,00,918	9	11
" From which there has been expended, for charges and re-funds	1,04,351	15	3

	53,93,974	7	8
" Leaving a balance unappropriated, as stated at the close of account A, of rupees	4,06,944	2	3

" This constitutes what is called the 'Unappropriated fund.' "

" 49th. In conclusion, we have to state that when the subscriptions to the annuity fund of 1818 and 1825, conjointly exceed the fine payable by any individual claiming an annuity from the latter, the excess has been repaid to him in the rare instances noted in the margin.† We notice this merely that the Honourable Court of Directors may render uniform the practice in this respect at all the Presidencies."

In the year 1844, a further correspondence took place between the trustees of the fund and the Madras Government. The trustees applied to the Government for assistance, pointing out that the Company's contributions to the fund fell short of the Rs. 1,50,000 authorized by the Company's despatch of the 10th of November, 1826. The Government required explanations as to the state of the fund, and the trustees, again furnished detailed statements of the accounts, in which the re-funds already mentioned, and a further like re-fund to Mr. Lushington, in the year [397] 1843, appeared. These accounts were forwarded to the Court of Directors, and on the 30th of July, 1845, they sent a despatch to the Madras Government, which contained these passages:—

" 1. We approve your having sanctioned the usual number of four annuities for the Madras civil service for the present year.

" 2. The documents which you have forwarded to us, however, clearly show that the Madras civil service annuity fund is incapable of providing for the continual grant of this number of annuities annually, without further support. Indeed, the capital on the 1st of May, 1845, will amount only to Rs. 2,61,143. 10a. 6p., which sum, after adding to it the fines payable on the four annuities which you have sanctioned, will probably be insufficient to provide for their value to be transferred, in accordance with the regulations, to the unappropriated capital of the fund.

" 3. We were not wholly unprepared for this result. The privileges conceded to the Madras service upon the establishment of the annuity fund of 1825, that previous subscriptions to the old fund should be reckoned in diminution of the fines for annuities from the new fund, and the grant of £600 annuities upon the terms of the old fund, have necessarily had a considerable effect in keeping down the means of the new fund. This possible result we had in view when, in our despatch, dated the 10th of November, 1826 (Public Department), we stated, that if the contribution from the Company of an amount equivalent to that from the service should be shown

" * The statements 2 and 3 show that part of their payments are also included in the first item to the extent of—

Rs.	a.	p.
63,328	9	0 for the reduced annuitants, 14
6,66,796	6	11 full ditto, 46.
7,30,124	15	11

" But these two sums include also interest, or part of the fourth item here."

" † In 1834-35 to Mr. C. Harris 3492 6 11

In 1837-38 to Mr. N. Webb 9211 9 11 " to be inadequate for the object mentioned, it might be increased 'provided that it shall not exceed, for the present, the sum of Rs. 1,50,000.'"

[398] In the conclusion of this despatch, the Court of Directors authorized the Madras Government to credit the unappropriated branch of the fund with the difference between the full amount of the Rs. 1,50,000, per annum, with interest at six per cent., and the amount which had been actually paid by them; and this credit was given accordingly.

In the year 1847, the fund having become deficient for payment of the annuities, the Court of Directors, by a despatch, dated the 23rd of June 1847, authorized the Madras Government to pay the deficiency to meet the current payments. The 6th paragraph of this despatch was as follows:—"6. We consider it unnecessary to enter into a calculation with a view of estimating the probable amount of a fixed annual contribution that may be required from the Company to enable the fund to grant four annuities annually. It will be sufficient, if the necessary means be provided, as the exigency arises. We, therefore, authorize you to pay to the fund any actual deficiency to meet the current payments that may have existed in 1846-47, after the acceptance of the prescribed number of annuities, and to adopt the same course, when necessary, in future years."

In another despatch of the same date, after a statement of the amount of the charge against them to meet the annuities, there is this passage in paragraph 6: "This forms a serious demand against the Company; but, we nevertheless feel that, under the arrangements which have had our sanction for the benefit of the civil service, we cannot refuse to meet it."

On the 6th of February, 1850, the Court of Directors addressed the following despatch to the Governor-General of India:—

[399] "1. We consider it desirable to direct your attention to an important point of difference in the practice of granting annuities from the civil service annuity funds at Madras and Bombay, as compared with the practice in Bengal, in view to your devising measures to remedy the inconvenient results which we shall now point out.

"2. The point to which we allude, is the system of refunding at Madras and Bombay, to parties on becoming annuitants, the sums which they may have subscribed to the funds in excess of half of the value of their annuities, whilst in Bengal no such refund is allowed.

"3. In the year 1841, the question of a refund came under our consideration from Bengal, to which we replied in paragraph 2 of our despatch, dated the 1st of September in that year, No. 29, as follows:—"With respect to refund of subscriptions we are disposed to meet the views of the majority of the subscribers to the extent of confining refund to the excess which may have been paid beyond the half-value of the annuity, such an arrangement being in accordance with the regulations of the fund."

"4. The Bengal civil service refused to adopt the principle of refunding, by passing a rule to the contrary, whereupon a few members of the service, who had contributed to the fund an amount beyond the half-value of an annuity, appealed to us to obtain a return of the excess." In reply, we stated in our despatch to the Government of Bengal, dated the 20th of September, 1843, No. 29, 'that we cannot interfere in any way to relieve them from the operation of the rules of the civil service annuity fund, and [400] that every annuity taken must be subject to those rules as they may exist at the time.'

"5. The question of refunding to the servants on the Bengal establishment having thus been disposed of, the point for consideration is, whether the same principle should not be adopted at the other Presidencies. We admit, that we have hitherto not objected to the rules which were passed at those Presidencies, allowing the system of a refund; but, we are now of opinion, that the operation of such rules is alike disadvantageous to the service and to Government, by retarding promotion, from the continuance of men in office after their capability for efficient employment has ceased; besides which, the Company have to contribute more largely, particularly to the Madras fund, to supply the regulated number of annuities, than was contemplated at the formation of the general scheme in the year 1825.

"6. The refunding of subscriptions, with accumulations of interest, can scarcely be justified: nor can we consider that the funds at Madras and Bombay have any claim on the Company for additional contributions to supply the fixed numbers of annuities annually, whilst any refund of subscriptions is allowed.

"7. We, therefore, desire that you will give the subject of this despatch your best consideration, with a view of procuring an alteration in the rules of the civil service annuity funds at Madras and Bombay, in order that the principle of refunding may be abolished, and that the operation of the funds at the several Presidencies may be uniform on the point herein specified.

[401] "8. We shall transmit a copy of this despatch to the Governments of Madras and Bombay, with instructions to them, respectively, to co-operate with you in view to proposing to the subscribers the alterations in the rules which we have indicated."

The Court of Directors, at the same time, sent a copy of this despatch to the Government of Madras, accompanied by the following letter:—

"1. We forward in the packet, copy of a despatch which we have addressed to the Government of India, relative to a discrepancy of some importance between a rule of the civil service annuity fund at your Presidency, which allows of contributions to the fund in excess of half the value of the annuities to be refunded to parties on becoming annuitants, and the rule in Bengal, which precludes a refund.

"2. We have expressed our opinion to the Government of India of the disadvantages attending the refunding system, and we desire that you will adopt such measures, in co-operation with that Government, as may appear best calculated to induce the civil service at your Presidency to abrogate it."

The Governor-General of India, afterwards, on the 30th of March, 1850, in pursuance of the despatch of the 6th of February, 1850, wrote to the Government of Madras, requesting that the views of the Court of Directors should be submitted to the managers of the fund at Madras, with the desire that they would circulate for the consideration and votes of the service, how far they might be willing to accede to the Court's wishes, that the practice of refund hitherto allowed by the rules of the Madras fund, should be abrogated. The despatch of the Court of Directors was accordingly forwarded to the trustees of the fund, and a [402] special meeting of the subscribers to the fund was summoned by them for the purpose of considering the question, whether the practice of refund, hitherto allowed, should be abrogated. This meeting was held on the 26th of September, 1850, when the votes of the subscribers, having been taken upon the proposition, a majority of more than three-fourths were against the abrogation of the practice. This result having been communicated to the Madras Government, and by them to the Court of Directors, the Court, on the 20th of May, 1851, sent the following despatch to the Madras Government:—

"1. The proposition for abrogating the rule of the Madras civil service annuity fund, which provides for refunding to its members, on becoming annuitants, the amount which they may have contributed in excess of half the value of their annuities, having been circulated for the votes of the service, and rejected, we consider it necessary to lay down a principle for regulating the interest to be allowed on such excess when it occurs.

"2. We, therefore, direct that four per cent. annual interest only be allowed on the subscriptions of members in excess of half the value of their annuities, and that their accounts with the fund be adjusted accordingly."

In the year 1851, the period having arrived when, according to the calculations made upon the institution of the fund, there ought to have been an accumulation sufficient to answer the four annuities, the trustees furnished to the Government of Madras, to be laid before the East India Company, accounts containing a review of the fund from its commencement down to that date, from which it appeared that the [403] fund was wholly deficient. In these accounts, the refunds already mentioned, and several others (there were in all nine refunds), appeared. The Court of Directors had before this time, in a despatch dated the 20th of August, 1851, communicated to the Madras Government, and through that Government to the trustees, their determination that refunds of excess of subscriptions were in no case to be made at the expense of the Government; and, after the receipt of the last-mentioned accounts in the month of October, 1852, they addressed another despatch to the Madras Government, dated the 20th of October, 1852, which contained this passage:—

" 19. We must here remark upon the practice which has been allowed at Madras, of refunding to retiring subscribers any balance of subscriptions standing at their credit in excess of the half-value of their annuities. The original rules, as sanctioned by us, made no provision for that purpose. It would appear, however, that in 1838, the trustees inserted, in a new edition of the rules, a clause to the effect that, if the contributions of any subscriber be in excess of the half value, 'such excess shall be refunded.' But this clause, so far as we can ascertain, was never submitted to the subscribers, as required by the rules. It certainly never received our sanction: it was not even reported to us; and yet it has been acted upon as if it had been duly authorized. We observe that, since the institution of the fund of 1825, there have been nine cases in which this refund has been granted, to the aggregate amount of Rs. 1,89,529. 7a., and that in the last year, 1850-51 (which, being the twenty-sixth year of the fund's existence, is not embraced in the present calculations), there was a [404] further repayment allowed to the amount of Rs. 9623. 6a. 10p. The sums refunded have, of course, contributed to swell the deficit of the fund. This deficit has been made up from the Government treasury, upon which, consequently, has fallen exclusively the charge of the refunds. Of the whole number, no less than three, aggregating Rs. 86,749. 7a. 8p., were granted in the year 1849-50, when there was a deficiency (irrespective of the amount refunded) to the extent of Rs. 1,02,654. 1a. 2p. In that year, therefore, when the contribution from the State was augmented to the sum of Rs. 2,52,654, a further burden, which raised that sum to the large total of Rs. 3,39,403,* was thrown on the public, for the improper object of making refunds: an object which, even in the most prosperous condition of the fund, could not be pursued without weakening and ultimately destroying it. In every case in which a refund has been granted, there was a balance of subscriptions to the old fund at the credit of the party before the year 1825. The result is, therefore, that the fund has absolutely paid away as refunds, sums which it never received, and which, moreover, in accordance with the provisions of the deed of the fund of 1818, ought not to have been refunded to any of the subscribers to that fund. We regard with strong feelings of disapprobation the whole of this most irregular [405] proceeding; and we repeat the desire we have recently expressed, that no refunds be upon any account allowed in future."

With this despatch, the Court of Directors also forwarded to the Madras Government proposed new rules for the regulation of the fund, in which the provision for refund, contained in the rules published in 1838, was omitted; the 8th of these rules being as follows:—

" 8. Every subscriber to whom an annuity shall be assigned shall be required, in order to entitle him to the full annuity fixed by Article II., to pay, on or before the date from which the annuity is to commence, the difference between one-half of the value of the annuity and the accumulated amount of his contributions, whenever the latter shall be less than the former."

These rules were taken into consideration at a special general meeting of the subscribers to the fund, which was held on the 17th of June, 1853, and were then adopted by the subscribers, and the differences between the Company and the trustees appear then to have ceased.

The Respondent, Robertson, however, was a subscriber to the fund of 1818, and upon the institution of the fund of 1825 became a subscriber to that fund. In the years 1842, 1843, 1844, 1850, and 1851, he was informed by letters from the Secretary of the fund that annuities were open for acceptance, and was invited to state whether he would accept an annuity of £1000. Each of these letters contained a passage in these words:—

" 4. In order to entitle you to the full annuity of £1000, it is necessary that before the time of the [406] commencement of your annuity, you shall pay the difference between one-half of the value of an annuity of £1000 for your life, and the accumulated value of your previous contributions, these values being determined in the manner provided by the rules of the institution. In the event of your not paying that difference, you will only be entitled to an annuity diminished in proportion to the sum by which the accumulated value of your contribution is less than one-half of the actual value of an annuity on your life."

The Respondent does not appear to have taken any notice of these letters, but, on the offer being again made to him in the year 1852, by a letter from the Secretary of the fund, dated the 15th of October, 1852, in the same terms, he wrote to inquire whether, in the event of his accepting the annuity, the trustees would refund to him the excess of his subscriptions beyond the amount payable for the annuity, the amount of his subscriptions having, it appears, equalled the half-value of the annuity in or about the year 1848. In answer to this inquiry, the Respondent was referred by the Secretary to the despatch of 1851, prohibiting the refund of subscriptions unless the existing state of the fund would permit it, which he was informed it would not then do. The Respondent then returned the Secretary's letter of the 15th of October, 1852, with the following memorandum, signed by him, at the foot of it:—

"I agree, on the terms above specified, to accept the annuity conditionally tendered to me, provided that on retirement the excess which may be paid by me, with interest, beyond the half-value of an annuity of £1000, payable to the date of decease, and by [407] quarterly payments, be refunded to me; not otherwise. Vide separate letter transmitted with this.

"It is my wish to have the said annuity made payable by quarterly instalments, and to the date of decease. Waltair, November 17, 1852. A. ROBERTSON."

And he at the same time wrote to the Secretary as follows:—

To S. D. Birch, Esquire, Secretary to the Civil Fund, Madras.

"Waltair, November 17, 1852.

"Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 9th instant, informing me that the despatch of the Honourable the Court of Directors, No. 16 of 1851, prohibits the refund of excess subscriptions, unless the existing state of the annuity fund permit of it, which it does not at present; and transmitting a memorandum exhibiting the probable amount which will have been paid by me on the 1st of May, 1853, beyond the half-value of an annuity of £1000, payable to the date of decease, and by quarterly payments.

"Together with this communication, I transmit my acceptance of one of the four annuities open to the service, on condition of my being allowed the refund of the excess of my subscriptions beyond one-half of the value of an annuity, etc.; and I beg leave to prefer a claim to this on the fundamental principles of the constitution of the fund, as laid down by the Honourable Court.

"I would here observe, with all respect, that when I became a subscriber to the annuity fund, I did not become a party to a joint assurance association, the benefits to be derived from which were contingent on [408] the future prosperity of the fund, but I subscribed to certain terms, the principle of which, as laid down by the Honourable Court, was, that 'all servants, upon becoming annuitants, would have to pay half the value of their respective annuities, and no more.' That the civil annuity fund is exclusively the fund of the Honourable Court, and not of the civil service, was shown in the proceedings on the admission of Mr. Hutt and others to annuities not provided for by the original terms on which the fund was established.

"It is unnecessary to revert to all that has been advanced, and might be advanced again, to show that those who agreed to become parties to the Honourable Court's annuity fund did so on the plain and simple understanding that, under no contingency whatever, were they to pay more than half the value of an annuity, according to age, when entitled to it, after a certain period. It is necessary for me only to observe, that I have fulfilled the agreement, on my part, which entitles me to one of the four annuities now open as guaranteed by the Court. It is upwards of thirty-five years since I arrived in the country (26th June, 1817); my actual residence in the country much exceeds the period required; and my subscriptions to the fund are greatly in excess of half the value of an annuity of £1000.

"Having fulfilled the conditions of the agreement on my side, I respectfully solicit the fulfilment of them on behalf of the Honourable Court. I now prefer a claim to an annuity of £1000, at half its value, and I ask that I may have it at half its value, and no more, the surplus of interest and subscriptions, appearing at my credit with the fund, being repaid to [409] me on my retirement from the service, between the 1st of May and 1st of July, 1853.

"I seek for this from the known justice of the Honourable Court, and the consideration they evince for their servants in every department. I may assuredly trust that subscribers to the civil service annuity fund will not be regarded in a light less deserving consideration than were subscribers to the Native pension fund, who, when that fund could no longer meet its engagements, received back from the justice of the Court their subscriptions, with interest, the annuities already granted being, at the same time, continued at the expense of Government.

"I would, in conclusion, request that the trustees will do me the favour to submit this letter for the consideration of the Right Honourable the Governor in Council, when reporting the names of those gentlemen to whom annuities may fall this year.—I have the honour to be, Sir, Your most obedient Servant,

"A. ROBERTSON."

The trustees, it appears, sent a copy of this letter to the Government, but nothing appears to have been done upon it: and in September, 1853, the annuity was again offered to the Respondent, with reference to the revised rules of the fund. To this offer the Respondent replied as follows:—

"To the Secretary of the Civil Fund, Madras.

"Waltair, October 11, 1853.

"Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, tendering for acceptance one of the annuities declared to be available from the 1st of May next.

[410] "Until the receipt of that communication I was under the impression that no change had taken place in the rules already in force, the changes which had been proposed to the service not having been ratified by the Honourable the Court of Directors, as required by rule 30 of the regulations of the fund.

"As introduction of the proposed new rules before the allotment of the annuities at present under offer might be hereafter advanced as a technical objection to my claims, I beg leave to enter my protest against the enforcement of them before they receive the formal sanction of the Honourable Court.

"Under this protest, I request that you will inform the trustees that I am ready to accept one of the annuities now tendered, provided they are prepared to pay to me, on my retiring from the service, the amount which may be at my credit in the accounts of the fund in excess of the half-value of an annuity payable by a civil servant at the age which I shall then have attained. I have, etc.,

"A. ROBERTSON."

The trustees, however, declined to receive a conditional acceptance of the annuity, and upon their refusal to do so, he again wrote to the Secretary in these terms:—

"To the Secretary of the Civil Fund, Madras.

"Waltair, September 25, 1854.

"Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 19th instant, tendering for my acceptance one of the annuities which will be available on the 1st of May, 1855, and to request that you will inform the trustees of the civil fund that I am quite ready to avail myself of this offer, on the condition of their allowing me the refund [411] of the amount overpaid by me to the fund, together with interest, as formerly allowed to those members of the civil service who obtained a refund of over subscriptions. I do not conceive that any votes of the majority of the civil service for the introduction of new regulations can affect a right acquired and asserted before the recent changes in the civil fund rules were even proposed. I have, etc.,

A. ROBERTSON."

The trustees, however, still declining to accept the conditional offer, he ultimately, on the 17th October, 1854, wrote to them as follows:—

“To the Secretary of the Civil Fund, Madras.

“Waltair, October 17, 1854.

SIR, — I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 7th instant, and, in consequence of the trustees again declining to entertain a conditional application for an annuity, to apply for one of the annuities available on the 1st of May, 1855, under protest, and with the full reservation of all my rights.

“It is my desire to secure the full amount of annuity.

“I was born on the 28th of November, 1799. Should this form of application be objected to, which I do not expect, I request that you will send an answer to my address by the 30th instant, under cover to Mr. Will. Arbuthnot, at Madras. I am,
A. ROBERTSON.”

In reply to this letter the Secretary wrote to him thus:—

“To A. Robertson, Esquire.

“SIR, — With reference to your application dated [412] 17th of October, 1854, I am desired by the trustees of the civil fund to acquaint you that an annuity of £1000 has devolved on you by rotation. The statement showing the amount of subscription paid by you, together with the document which will enable you to draw your annuity by quarterly instalments, and to the date of decease from the Honourable the Court of Directors, will be forwarded in due time.

S. D. BIRCH.

“November 8, 1854.”

The Respondent having thus accepted the annuity under protest, and with full reservation of his rights, on the 28th of March, 1857, filed his bill in the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, against the Company and the trustees, to recover the excess of his subscriptions beyond the half-value of the annuity, and it is upon this bill, the decree under appeal was made.

Three points arise, and were argued upon the appeal:

First. Whether, according to the original constitution of the Madras civil service annuity fund, as established in 1825, the Respondent was entitled to have refunded to him the excess of his subscriptions to the fund beyond one-half of the value of his annuity?

Secondly. Whether, if the Respondent was not so entitled, according to the original constitution of the fund, he afterwards became so entitled by virtue of any contract, or by reason of any course of dealing or conduct on the part of the East India Company, or of the trustees? And Thirdly. Whether, if the Respondent was so entitled, either according to the original constitution of [413] the fund, or by virtue of any subsequent contract, course of dealing, or conduct, the right which he thus acquired has been in any manner lost or destroyed?

The first of these questions appears to their Lordships to be open to very serious doubts, and in the view which they have finally taken of the case, it might not be necessary for them to pronounce any opinion upon it; but the point was so fully and ably argued at the Bar, and it is so difficult fairly to estimate the weight which is due to the subsequent transactions, without first considering the position in which the parties originally stood, that their Lordships think it right to state the conclusion at which they have arrived at this part of the case.

The rules and regulations of the Madras civil service annuity fund, as established in the year 1825, were derived from the rules and regulations of the Bengal fund then lately established, modified only so far as was necessary to meet the difficulties arising from the existence at Madras, of the funds created by the deeds of 1800, 1814, and 1818, and from the obligations consequent upon those deeds. The modifications which were introduced to meet these difficulties and obligations, do not appear to their Lordships to affect the question as to the refunding of the excess of subscriptions, otherwise than as they would affect the fund out of which the refund, if any, would be to be made; and the East India Company must, of course, be taken to have foreseen to what extent the fund would be thus affected. It is, indeed, plain, from the evidence, that they did foresee the effect which the modifications would have upon the fund. In considering this first question, therefore, it appears to their Lordships that these modifications [414] may be laid out of the case, and that the question must depend upon the interpretation to be put upon the despatch of the 8th of December, 1824, and the regulations for the Bengal fund as altered by the Court of Directors: for their Lordships do not agree to the Appellant's argument, that a part only of this despatch is to be looked at. Both the despatch and the regulations were forwarded to the Madras Government, and delivered to the trustees of the then existing Madras funds. Both of them formed the basis of the contract with the Madras subscribers, and each of them must, in their Lordships' opinion, be looked at in its entirety in determining what that contract was.

This despatch, in paragraph 4, notices the fact that, according to the constitution of the then existing funds at Madras, the grantees of annuities either paid in subscription to the fund a certain aggregate sum, or paid the difference between that sum and the amount of their subscriptions.

In paragraph 41, in pointing out the advantages derived from the Company's contributions, the despatch speaks of the civil servant when he retires having, in addition to his own savings, whether accumulated in the shape of contributions to the fund, or in any other mode, an annuity proportional to his share of the Company's contributions to the fund.

In paragraphs 53, 54, 55, in treating of the purchase-money of the annuities, it fixes the amount at the difference of half the value of the annuity and the accumulated value of the subscriber's previous contributions: and in paragraph 57, it states broadly, that according to the mode proposed, all servants upon becoming annuitants would pay half the value [415] of their respective annuities, and no more; and in the same paragraph 57, it refers to the advantages which the subscribers would possess of accumulating a fund for the purchase of the annuity, by gradual deposits, improved at a fixed and favourable rate of interest: and rule 11 of the regulations as altered, provides for subscribers who may accept annuities, paying to the institution the difference between half the value of the annuity, and the accumulated value of their previous contributions, in case the latter quantity shall be less than the former. These provisions certainly point at half the value of the annuity as the sum which each subscriber, on becoming an annuitant, was to pay for the purchase of his annuity, paying it either by contributions, or by making good the deficiency of his subscriptions. But, on the other hand, the expression "no more," in paragraph 57, so much relied on upon the part of the Respondent, may, as was suggested on the part of the Appellants, have meant only that the subscribers were to pay one-half, and not two-thirds, of the value of the annuity, the proportion which in paragraph 54 is mentioned to have been proposed by the Bengal civil servants, although the context does not appear to their Lordships to favour this conclusion; and whatever the meaning of these words "no more" may have been, there is certainly no limit to the payment by subscribers of their annual contributions, and no provision for refunding any excess of those contributions beyond the half of the value of the annuity; and by paragraphs 61 and 63, what the Company are to contribute, is expressed to whatever sum may be required in addition to the contributions of subscribers, to enable the fund to grant such number of [416] annuities as may be accepted under the prescribed regulations, not exceeding nine per annum, and the obligation of the Company is expressed to be a virtual guarantee of the nine annuities, and a contribution limited to the amount necessary for the accomplishment of that object: and all these latter provisions indicate that all the subscribers' contributions whatever the amount of them might be, were to go into and remain in the fund.

It is very difficult to collect from a despatch and from rules thus loosely worded on so important a point, and plainly imperfect in other respects, what the real meaning of the parties was; but it is to be observed that the object which they had in view was, as appears by sections 35, 36, and 42, to provide a fund for the payment of annuities to the civil servants who should retire from the service, and that the payments of each subscriber were not merely for the purpose of purchasing his own annuity, but of providing annuities for the other subscribers. The payments made by each subscriber were to go into the funds, to be applied for the benefit of all the subscribers; and they were to do so equally, whether the subscriber who made the payment, had or had not paid the half-value of his annuity, or had or had not had the option of an annuity. There cannot, as it seems to their Lordships, be any reasonable doubt, that each subscriber was intended to go on paying his subscription until he had the option of an annuity; and if the option did not reach him before the amount of his subscriptions exceeded the half-value of his annuity, their Lordships find it difficult to suppose that it could have been intended that a refund should be made to him when the amount which he had paid [417] would or might have been applied to the payment of other annuities; and if it was not so intended in the case suggested, their Lordships think it scarcely less difficult to suppose that it could have been so intended when the subscriber had had the option of the annuity, and had refused it, in which case it is to be observed that his refusal would bring upon the fund the charge to which his payment was applicable. If the half-value of the annuity was in all cases to be the limit of the subscriptions, there seems to be no reason why the payment of the subscriptions was to continue after the half-value of the annuity had been paid; for the annuity would, of course, decrease in value as the subscriber advanced in age, and the benefit of accumulation held out to the subscribers in the despatch is confined to accumulation for the purchase of the annuity. It is to be observed, too, that the calculations on which the despatch proceeds, are founded upon the assumption that each subscriber would, after the expiration of the first few years, become entitled to an annuity at the age of forty-five, in which event, according to the calculations, he would in no case have paid half the value of his annuity; and it seems probable, therefore, that it was not thought necessary to provide for the excess of the subscriptions.

In that view the case which has occurred in this instance and in others would be left unprovided for by the contract; and it being clear that the subscription was properly payable into the fund, there would seem to be no ground for taking it out again.

The case does not appear to their Lordships to be one to which the doctrine of resulting trust could be applied.

[418] After weighing all these considerations on the one side and the other, the better opinion appears to their Lordships to be, that if this case was to be decided upon the first point only, the decision ought to be in favour of the Appellants, the East India Company; but their Lordships have not come to this conclusion without great doubt and hesitation, and they very much incline to the opinion that this contract does not provide for the event which has occurred, and that in order to determine the rights of the parties, what has subsequently occurred must be looked at, not, indeed, for the purpose of varying the contract, but for the purpose of supplying what has been left unprovided for by it. They proceed, therefore, to the consideration of the second point: Whether the Respondent became entitled to the refund of his excess of subscriptions by virtue of any subsequent contract, or by reason of any conduct or course of dealing on the part of the East India Company or of the trustees?

It is material in considering this point, in the first place, to observe the position in which the East India Company stood under the contract. By the contract (whatever its effects may have been in other respects), the annuities were to be provided for by the contributions of the subscribers and the contributions of the Company. These contributions were to be received by the trustees, and applied by them to make good the annuities, and the deficiency was to be supplied by the Company. The Company, therefore, had a direct and immediate interest in the application of the funds by the trustees. The trustees were responsible, not merely to the subscribers, but to the Company, for the due application of the funds. [419] The Company, then, being in this position; having the right to call for the accounts of the trustees, and to check and control those accounts, we find, that the practice of refunding to subscribers the excess of subscriptions beyond the half-value of the annuity, commenced as early as the year 1835, for in that year there was a refund to Mr. Harris on this account. We then find, that, in the year 1838, accounts of the trustees in which this refund appeared, were laid before the Government of Madras, and that, in the same year, 1838, the rules of the fund were published at Madras, and that, by the 16th of those rules, as published, it was expressly stated that the contributions of the subscribers in excess beyond the half-value of their annuities, were to be refunded. We further find that this course of refunding to subscribers the excess of their subscriptions was continued by the trustees in the years 1837, 1843, 1845, and 1848; that accounts of the trustees, showing these refunds, were laid before the Court of Directors, and that no objection was made to them, although on other minor points objections were raised and the accounts were required to be rectified; and although in the year 1841, the attention of the Government was directly called to the point, and in the years 1844 and 1847 they were required to make and did make, additional payments to the fund. We also find, that it was not until the year 1850, that any question was raised as to this practice of refunding, and that the question then raised was not as to the right of the subscribers to the refund, but as to the expediency of continuing the practice; that the Company then, so far from asserting that the subscribers were not entitled to the refund, desired the Madras [420] Government to adopt such measures as might induce the subscribers to abrogate the practice; that, with this view, they submitted the question to the consideration of the subscribers; and that, upon the subscribers adhering to the practice, they did not, in the first instance, persist in objecting to it otherwise than by threatening to reduce the interest upon the excess of the subscriptions: a threat which it appears they did not carry into effect. Ultimately, we find that later in the year 1851, they objected to the refunds being made at their expense, and that in the year 1853, the system of refunding was put an end to by the new rules proposed by them, and adopted by the votes of the subscribers.

Upon these facts, this part of the case appears to their Lordships to present two questions for their consideration: First, whether, assuming the practice of refunding to the subscribers the excess of their subscriptions beyond the half-value of the annuity not to have been warranted by the original rules, there was not such an alteration of those rules as was sufficient to warrant it; and, secondly, whether, even if there was no such alteration of the rules, the Company have not, by their conduct, precluded themselves from disputing the right of the subscribers to the refund.

With respect to the first question, by rule 30 of the Bengal regulations, all questions proposed at a general meeting, whether annual or special, were to be determined by a majority of three-fourths of the members; and upon all general questions, involving, amongst other things, any essential addition to or alteration in the original rules and principles of the institution, all subscribers in India were to be allowed [421] to vote, but no decision upon such question was to be valid, or to have any effect, until sanctioned and approved by the Court of Directors of the East India Company, whose decision was in all cases to be final. This rule became part of the original rules of the Madras fund. The rules of that fund, published in 1838, having contained the provision that the excess beyond the half-value of the annuity should be refunded, the question whether that practice should be abrogated was put to the vote at a special general meeting of the subscribers held on the 26th of September, 1850, and it was determined by a majority of more than three-fourths that the practice should not be abrogated. There was here, therefore, upon the assumption that the original rules did not warrant the practice, a clear alteration of those rules, made in conformity with the 30th of the original rules, and this alteration, if sanctioned and approved by the East India Company, was valid and effectual.

Now, how did the Court of Directors deal with this alteration of the rules? They did not repudiate it, but they directed the interest upon the excess of the subscriptions to be reduced; a direction, however, which was not carried into effect. If the case had rested here they might, in the opinion of their Lordships, well be taken to have sanctioned and approved this alteration of the rules; but, it appears that they afterwards in the same year, 1851, protested against any further refunds being made at their expense, and although they did not rest upon this protest, but subsequently, in the year 1853, in some measure treated the alteration as valid by again, in effect, submitting the question to the votes of the subscribers upon the new rules which they at that time proposed, [422] and which were then adopted, they do not appear ever to have withdrawn their protest, and the course which they adopted in proposing the new rules may well be regarded as having been resorted to for the more conclusive settlement of the question. If the subscribers had not adopted those rules, the Company could not, as their Lordships think, be held, in the face of their protest, to have sanctioned and approved this alteration; and, upon the whole, therefore, their Lordships consider that, whatever effect may be due in other respects to what passed as to the alteration of the rules, it would be going too far to hold that the resolution of the subscribers in 1851 effected such an alteration as rendered it obligatory upon the Company to refund the excess of the subscriptions.

There remains, then, on this second head of the case, the question as to the effect of the course of dealing and conduct on the part of the Company and of the trustees.

Now, it appears to their Lordships, to be put beyond all doubt, by the evidence in this case, that the Company sanctioned the refunds which were made, and sanctioned them, not merely with reference to the individual subscribers to whom they were made, but, generally, as having been made in the due course of practice. The Company's despatch of the 6th of February, 1850, admits this to have been the case. Their course of proceeding, in submitting the question to the votes of the subscribers in that year, involves the same admission; and there is, indeed, hardly a step in all their proceedings, from the time of the institution of the fund in the year 1825, which does not lead to that conclusion. In determining the consequences which are to follow from this conduct on [423] their part, we must again revert to their position, and to that of the trustees. The Company stand in the position of the ultimate beneficiaries of the fund with which we have, in this case, to deal, subject to prior trusts for the benefit of the subscribers.

The fund, as established in 1825, was instituted on their suggestion, and for the purpose of carrying out their views of promoting a more rapid succession among the civil servants of their establishment. The trustees were bound, not to them only, but to the subscribers also, for the due management of the fund, according to the rules. If those rules did not authorize the refunds being made, it was a breach of trust on the part of the trustees to make them, and in that breach of trust the Company were concurring. It was admitted on their part that with respect to the refunds actually made, they had no right to complain; but it was argued that the consequences of their conduct went no further, and that they cannot be held to have sanctioned the right of the subscribers to the refund in other cases. Their Lordships, however, find themselves unable to give their assent to this argument. By the rules of the fund, published in the year 1838, the trustees held out to the subscribers generally that they were to be entitled to the refund of the excess of their subscriptions beyond the half value of the annuity. The Company, as appears from their answer, knew of the publication of these rules very soon after they were published. By allowing the refunds which were made, more especially after their attention had been called to the subject in the year 1840, they must, as their Lordships think, be considered to have authorized the trustees to continue this rule as to refund, as part of their [424] rules. It is to be considered, then, how the subscribers were affected by the publication and continuance of this rule, and it appears to their Lordships that their position was much altered by it.

To take, for instance, the case of this Respondent: He was a subscriber to the fund of 1818, and, according to the rules of that fund, would have been entitled to an annuity of £600 a year after payment of a specified sum. Is he not justly entitled to say that he paid the larger subscription to the fund of 1825, and continued that subscription, upon the faith that he would be entitled to the larger annuity of £1000, and also to the repayment of the excess of his subscriptions beyond the half value of his annuity? And further, is he not also justly entitled to say that had he been aware that the trustees of the Company would resist the repayment of the excess of his subscriptions, he would have accepted his annuity on the first opportunity which offered after he had paid the half of its value, or even before that time, when his interests or his views rendered it advisable or convenient for him to do so; and is not his having been deprived of these opportunities the result of the Company's conduct?

The true result of this case, with reference to the point now under consideration, appears to their Lordships to be, that the ultimate beneficiaries under the trust have authorized the trustees to hold out to the prior beneficiaries advantages which were not warranted by the trust, and have thereby altered the position of the prior beneficiaries; and their Lordships think that, under such circumstances, both the trustees and the ultimate beneficiaries must be liable to make good to the prior beneficiaries the advantages which have been so held out to them.

[425] The case was to some extent argued on the part of the Company as if the question had been simply this: whether the trustees could recover at law against the Company any deficiency of the fund for payment of the annuities occasioned by this practice of refunding: but their Lordships do not take that view of the case; they consider that, whatever might be the case at law, there is, under the circumstances of this case, an equity by which the Company is affected. It was also argued, on the part of the Company, that their conduct, and the conduct of the trustees throughout, proceeded upon a mistaken supposition that the original rules of the fund, resting upon the Bengal rules, required this excess to be refunded, and that they ought not to be bound by conduct resulting from such a mistake.

It would, perhaps, be a sufficient answer to this argument to say that there is no Bill to certify any such supposed mistake; but their Lordships do not desire to rest their judgment upon so narrow a point.

Supposing the case to be entirely open upon this point, could the Company, and could the trustees, under the circumstances of this case, be relieved from the consequences of this alleged mistake? Their Lordships are of opinion that they could not. They think that it would be an answer to such a case of alleged mistake, that when the trustees made the representation as to the refund of the excess which is contained in the rules of 1838, and when the Company sanctioned that representation being made, they had possession of all the documents, and the full means of judging whether the Bengal regulations did or did not give the right of refund; and further that, whether the Bengal regulations did or did not give [426] that right, the Company had the power of determining whether it should or should not be given at Madras; and yet further that the conduct of the Company, and of the trustees, has altered the position of the subscribers. They think also that if this case was at all to be dealt with upon the footing of mistake, it would follow that the contract must be wholly undone, and the parties be restored to their original rights, and that the conduct of the Company has placed the subscribers in a position in which they cannot be restored to those rights. The subscriptions which have been paid beyond what ought to have been paid might, indeed, be refunded, but the parties could not be set right as to the period when they would have taken the annuity. It is hardly necessary to add that the case appears to their Lordships to be more strong against the Company from their having been parties to the contract, and having bound their civil servants by covenant to the observance of it.

Upon this second head of the case, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion, that the Company, though not bound by any positive alteration of the rules, are precluded by their conduct from disputing the right of the Respondent to have the excess of his subscriptions beyond the half value of his annuity refunded to him.

We come then to the third question, whether the right to the refund of the excess of his subscriptions which the Respondent acquired has been in any manner lost or destroyed. It was contended on the part of the Appellants that it had been lost or destroyed, because the revised rules of 1853 did not contain the provision for refund which was contained in the rules of 1838, and the Respondent being a sub-[427]-scriber to the fund was bound by those revised rules; but it does not appear to their Lordships that the revised rules could operate retrospectively to destroy rights which had been acquired before they were passed.

Upon this point, therefore, the question, as their Lordships view it, is, whether the Respondent had or had not, before the revised rules were passed, acquired a title to the refund of the excess of his subscriptions: and their Lordships are of opinion that he had; for in the year 1852, he had accepted the annuity on condition that the excess of his payments should be refunded to him. The trustees, it is true, refused to receive this conditional acceptance; but in their Lordships' judgment, for the reasons already given, it was an error on their part not to have done so, and the Respondent cannot, as their Lordships think, be affected by this erroneous judgment of the trustees. They think, therefore, that the Respondent's title to the refund was complete in 1852, and was consequently unaffected by the revised rules of 1853. Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly recommend Her Majesty to dismiss this appeal, and, their judgment agreeing with that of the Court in India, to dismiss it with costs.

[428] MOHUN LALL SOOKUL,— Appellant; BEBEE DOSS and Others,— Respondents * [Feb. 16, 1860].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, Calcutta.

The amount of the stamp upon the plaint is not conclusive of the value of the subject-matter of the suit.

By the procedure of the Native Courts, the value of the suit for the purpose of the stamp duty is assessed at three times the annual rent payable to Government in respect of the property sued for. Held on an ex parte petition for leave to appeal, in a case in which the value was laid in the plaint as being under Rs. 10,000, that as the calculation was estimated with reference to the stamp duty only, leave to appeal would be granted conditionally, upon the production of satisfactory evidence in India by the Petitioner, and transmitted with the transcript, that the real or marked value of the property exceeded Rs. 10,000, otherwise the leave granted to be null and of no effect.

The application in this petition was for special leave to appeal. The petition set forth, that the Petitioner had brought a suit in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Zillah of Chittagong against one Ram Doss (since deceased) as mortgagor, under a Bye-bil-wuffa, or deed of conditional mortgage, to recover possession of the mortgaged premises, the value of which was laid in the plaint at Rs. 3522; that the decrees of the Sudder Ameen and Zillah Court on appeal were in his favour, but that the Sudder Dewanny Court at Calcutta had reversed these decisions, and had refused a review of judgment. The petition alleged that, although the real or market [429] value of the land sought to be recovered in the suit exceeded the value of Rs. 10,000, yet the amount laid in the plaint as the value of the subject of the suit was Rs. 3572, only, that amount being assessed for fiscal purposes, namely, three times the amount of one year's jumma or rent; that as the alleged value was under Rs. 10,000, the Petitioner was prevented by the rules of practice of the Sudder Court from obtaining from that Court leave to appeal.

The petition was heard ex parte, supported by an affidavit of the Petitioner's agent in England as to the facts.

Mr. Leith, for the Petitioner.—Although the value of the property is stated in the plaint at a sum under Rs. 10,000, the appealable value under the Order in Council of the 10th of April, 1838, yet the real or marked value of the property in question exceeds that amount: the same being worth ten years' purchase. The calculation was made for the purpose of the stamp duty only, Macpherson On civil procedure, pp. 124, 127, and is much below the value.—[Lord Chelmsford: The allegations as to value are very general in the petition and affidavit; you are bound to show that the value is as you represent.]—If leave to appeal is granted, the actual value of the property can be established. The stamp cannot be considered as conclusive of the value of the property sought to be recovered, Mussumat Ameena Khatoor v. Radhabenod Misser (ante [7 Moo. Ind. App., p. 261]).

The Right Hon. Lord Chelmsford.—Their Lordships will grant leave to appeal; but such leave will not be absolute, being subject to the [430] production of proper evidence in India of the actual value of the property sued for. The Order will be drawn up with that view, and the leave now granted will not be of any effect, unless a satisfactory affidavit of the value of the property be furnished by the Petitioner and transmitted with the transcript. Security will have to be lodged with the Registrar for £300.

The following Order in Council was made:—"Leave to appeal granted upon depositing the sum of £300 sterling as security for the costs of the Respondents, in case the appeal should be dismissed, and that Registrar of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut transmit, together with the record, satisfactory evidence, to be supplied by the Petitioner, that the real or market value of the land in dispute exceeds the sum of Rs. 10,000, otherwise that such leave to appeal be null and of no effect."

[431] THOMAS ALEXANDER WISE,—Appellant; JUGBUNDOO BOSE and JOSIAH PATRICK WISE,—*Respondents [July 9, 1859].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, sec. 2, cl. 1, enacts, that every person being an inhabitant of a foreign territory, shall be required to furnish security for costs; such security to be furnished by a Plaintiff, or Appellant, within six weeks of the date on which his plaint or appeal is filed: and that unless such security be so furnished, the suit of such person, if Plaintiff, should not be proceeded in, or appeal admitted unless he had furnished the necessary security to cover costs in the appeal.

Appeal to the Sudder Court from a decree of the Zillah Court by a party then temporarily absent in England, but having real estates and factories within the jurisdiction of the Court. No security was furnished by the Appellant's Vakeel within six weeks after lodging the appeal. The Respondent in the first instance, put in an answer to the reasons of appeal filed by the Appellant, but afterwards filed a petition for dismissal, for non-compliance with the requirement of Ben. Reg. XIV. 1829, sec. 2, cl. 1, contending that the Appellant was a resident in a foreign territory, and had not furnished security within six weeks as required by that Regulation. The Sudder Court held, that such security ought to have been furnished by the Appellant, who, residing in England, pendente lite, was to be considered as resident in a foreign territory within the meaning of the Regulation, and dismissed the appeal.

Such judgment reversed on appeal by the Judicial Committee, and the suit remitted to India for trial, on the ground, that the Sudder Court had not, by Regulation XIV. of 1829, any power ex mero motu, to dismiss the appeal. (1) as the Appellant was guilty of no default under that regulation, not having been called upon by the Respondent or the Court to furnish security for costs; (2) or of laches, in not voluntarily offering security. The Regulation providing only, that a suit, or appeal, should not be proceeded with, until security was furnished.

Semble:—The putting-in an answer to the appeal, before objecting to the want of security for costs, operated as a waiver by the Respondent of the want of security for costs, required of Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, sec. 2, cl. 1.

Whether Act, No. III. of 1845 repeals Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, sec. 2, cl. 1. Quære?

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, which dismissed an appeal brought by the Appellant in that Court from a [432] decree of the Zillah Court of Dacca, on the sole ground that under Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, sec. 2, cl. 1 (a), the Appellant (who was at the time of bring-[433]-ing the appeal temporarily residing in England, but had a permanent residence and indigo factories at Dacca, within the Company's territories) was to be deemed an inhabitant of a foreign country, and had omitted to furnish security for costs within six weeks of the date of filing his appeal; though no demand requiring him to do so had been made by the Court, or by the Respondents, and although he had offered by his Vakeel to furnish security, if required by the Court.

The Appellant's petition of appeal to the Sudder Court at Calcutta stated the grounds of the suit, which had been dismissed by the Judge of the Zillah Court of Dacca: it further stated that the Appellant was then resident in England, and prayed that the Respondents might be called upon to appear in the appeal, and that the Appellant would afterwards file his grounds of appeal.

By a proceeding of the Sudder Court, dated the 24th of November, 1851, it was declared that the petition had been received, and that notice had been served on the Respondents; and it was therein also declared that the appeal was admissible, and that notice would be issued to the Appellant, requiring him to file his reasons or grounds of appeal, within six weeks. The grounds of appeal were filed on the 11th of December, 1854. The Respondent, Jugbundoo Bose, alone appeared, and put in a separate answer to these grounds on the 13th of March, 1855. This answer did not refer to the subject of security for the costs of the appeal.

On the 26th of June, 1855, a petition was presented by that Respondent, which was the first notice the Appellant, or his Vakeel, had respecting the [434] objection from want of security for costs. This petition set forth that cl. 1, of sec. 2, Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, declared that the Appellant, an inhabitant of a foreign territory, ought to furnish security of costs of Court within six weeks from date of filing appeal, otherwise that his case would be struck off the file of pending cases; that the Appellant had admitted in his petition of appeal, that he was resident in England, but had not furnished the necessary security bond; and prayed that the appeal might be struck off the file. This petition did not contain any demand for such security.

By a proceeding of the Sudder Court of the 20th of July, 1855, that Court held that they must decide, first, whether it was necessary, as urged by the Respondent, in his petition, for the Appellant to furnish security for costs; and, secondly, whether in default of such security the appeal was liable to be struck off the file. And it was also declared by the Court that as the case was ready for hearing, it was proper to make an Order that the papers should be laid before the Judges of the full Bench for trial and decision, and that the petition of the Respondent should be sent along with these papers before the Judges of the full Bench.

On the 21st of August, 1855, the case was accordingly brought up before the full Bench for hearing. The merits were not gone into. On the part of the Appel-

(a) This clause enacts that:—"From and after the promulgation of this Regulation, every person, being an inhabitant of a foreign territory, who may desire to institute or defend an original suit, or to prosecute or defend an appeal in any Zillah, City, or Provincial Court, or in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, shall be required to furnish security for all eventual costs of suit which may be adjudged payable by such person, and shall furnish such security by a surety or sureties residing and possessing property within the limits of the Company's territory, and within the jurisdiction of the Company's Court. Such security shall be furnished by a Plaintiff or Appellant within six weeks of the date on which his plaint, or appeal, is filed; and a Defendant or Respondent shall furnish it within six weeks of the date on which the usual summons is served on him: unless such security be so furnished, the suit of such person, if Plaintiff, shall not be proceeded in, if Defendant or Respondent, he shall not be allowed to defend his suit or appeal, but the cause shall be decided ex parte on the statements and proofs of his opponent. And no appeal shall be admitted from the party who may have failed to give the required security, until he shall first have made good the whole of the costs demandable from him in the lower Court, and given the necessary security to cover the costs in appeal."

lant, it was contended that he had large factories at Dacca, and that he was subject to the Company's Courts, although then residing in England; and that Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, sec. 2, cl. 1, did not provide for dismissing the appeal, even when a default could be clearly ascribed to the Appellant, [435] where he had been required to give security; but that such Regulation only directed that the suit of a Plaintiff, if security had been required, should not be proceeded with until such security was furnished. There were other subordinate questions raised, which involved the consideration of the Acts, No. III. of 1845 (a), and XVII. of 1847 (b). Under the first of these Acts, it was questioned whether the requiring security for costs upon an appeal was not entirely in the discretion of the Sudder Court; to be decided [436] demandable from the Appellant or not, as that Court should see fit, before calling on the Respondent to answer. Another question also raised before the Sudder Court was, whether, under the Act, No. XVII. of 1847, if the omission to give security in the appeal by the Appellant was to be considered a default, it ought not to have been held by that Court to have been cured by Respondent, Jugbundhoo Bose, having taken steps in the appeal by filing his answer. The necessary security was then offered to be given by the Appellant, if the Court desired it.

The judgment of the Court dismissing the appeal was pronounced by Sir Robert Barlow, on the 21st of August, 1855, and was as follows:—"It has already been ruled, by a majority of the Court (see p. 279 of 'Summary Decisions of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut,' in the case of Campbell, Petitioner, decided on the 29th July, 1852) (S.C. Cal. Sud. Dew. Sum. Decis. 169, Edit. 1855), that Regulation XIV. of 1829, must be held to include all territories beyond the jurisdiction of the Company's Courts within the territories subject to the Presidency of Fort William, and, consequently, security is demandable from a party to a suit in the Company's Court becoming an inhabitant of England, pendente lite. Upon this ruling, by which we are bound, we are of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed. The Appellant, on filing his petition of appeal in the Zillah Court, described himself as a resident in England. No security for costs has, to this day, been given. Cl. 1, sec. 2, Reg. XIV. of 1829, sets forth, that security must be furnished by Plaintiff, or Appellant, within six weeks of the date on which his plaint, or appeal, is filed; in default, his suit shall not be proceeded in; and no [437] appeal shall be admitted on failure to furnish the required security, until the whole of the costs demandable from him in the lower Court, and the necessary security to cover costs in appeal, be given. It is urged, that Reg. XIV. of 1829, is, in fact, a penal law, and must be construed strictly, and that the words, 'shall not be proceeded in,' do not, therefore, warrant dismissal of (a) Act, No. III. of 1845 enacts that:—"Whereas it is not now by law necessary within the territories subject to the Presidency of Fort William, in Bengal, to take any security for costs in appeals before the Sudder Courts, and whereas no security for costs is now required by law in appeals from the decisions of Moonsiffs; and whereas it is expedient that appeals from all Courts should be put in this respect upon a uniform footing;

"It is therefore hereby enacted, that within the said territories it shall not be necessary in any Court of appeal of the East India Company to take any security for costs; but it shall be in the discretion of every such Court of appeal to demand security for costs from the Appellant or not, as it shall see fit, before the Respondent is called upon to answer, any law or Regulation to the contrary notwithstanding."

(b) Act, No. XVII. of 1847 recites that:—"Whereas inconvenience has resulted from the rule that the discovery of defaults in the prosecution of suits and appeals brought in any Court of the East India Company, within the territories subject to the Presidencies of Bengal and Madras, invalidates all proceedings in such suits and appeals, which may have been had since the occurrence of such default: It is hereby enacted, that in the said Courts every default of a Plaintiff or Appellant, in all suits or appeals now pending or hereafter to be brought, and in all suits which have been decided but are still open to appeal, shall be held to be cured whenever the opposite party, passing over the default, shall have taken any step in the suit or appeal, and whenever the Court shall have passed judgment in the suit or appeal, whether such opposite party shall or shall not have taken any such steps."

appeal. We observe, with reference to Act, No. XXIX. of 1841, that a Plaintiff's suit, or appeal, is to be dismissed on neglect to proceed within six weeks, as of course, without any notice to him, or any proceeding of the Court, and it never could have been intended to place a defaulting party under Act, No. XXIX. of 1841, in a worse position than a defaulter under Regulation XIV. of 1829. A penalty of an ex parte decision is the result against a defaulting Defendant or Respondent, by Reg. XIV. of 1829. Would the mere staying of proceedings in the case of the Plaintiff, or Appellant, be a penalty upon the Appellant? Would it not rather be a boon to him? For postponement contemplates prosecution of further proceedings subsequently. We hold that the Regulation can only be read consistently by subjecting both parties to penalty for laches: the Plaintiff to dismissal, and the Defendant to an ex parte judgment: such must be the intention and spirit of Reg. XIV. of 1829, when read by the light of more recent enactment. The argument based on the provisions of the Act, No. III. of 1845, and its application to the case before us, is not, we think, good. A discretion is certainly vested in Courts of appeal to demand security for costs from the Appellant, but that the Legislature did not intend to repeal Reg. XIV. of 1829, is clear. It is a special [438] law, not coming within the scope of the Act quoted, and mention of it is altogether omitted in it, and the provisions are not inconsistent with the Act in question. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs."

Messrs. Raikes and Colvin, two other Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, also recorded their opinion in these terms:—"We concur in this judgment, except as to there being any analogy between Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, and Act, No. XXIX. of 1841. The former is, in our opinion, in no respect affected by the penalty of default prescribed by the latter enactment. Let the Respondent in Court get from Appellant the costs of this Court, as per account made out by the accountant, of costs, together with interest from this day forward to the date of liquidation thereof. Let him apply to the Zillah Court for the Zillah costs. Proper orders will be passed there, in accordance with the Circular Order of the 4th of March, 1836."

A petition for review was presented, which was rejected; and another petition, praying for a further review, was also rejected, with costs.

The present appeal was brought from the judgment of the 21st of August, 1855, dismissing the appeal.

As the Respondents did not appear, the case was heard ex parte.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Leith, for the Appellant.—There has been a denial of justice in this case, and the Sudder Court ought to be ordered to reinstate the appeal and try the case upon the merits, as if the appeal had not been dismissed. It is apparent [439] that the Sudder Court proceeded upon an erroneous construction of Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, sec. 2, cl. 1. The Appellant was never called upon by the Respondents, or the Court, in the terms of that Regulation, to furnish security for the costs of the appeal; therefore, he was not guilty of any default, or even laches, in not voluntarily offering security. According to the true construction of that section of the Regulation, the Sudder Court had not the power, even if any default had been committed, which was not the case, to dismiss the appeal upon that ground. All the Regulation really authorizes the Court to do, is to declare that the appeal should not be proceeded with, until security for costs of appeal have been furnished by the Appellant. Again, it is not proved that the Appellant is "an inhabitant of a foreign territory," within the meaning of sec. 2, cl. 1, of that Regulation, nor was it proved as fact that he had ceased to be an inhabitant of The East India Company's territories, or that he was not subject to the jurisdiction of the Sudder Court. On the contrary, it appears by the pleadings, that he still held large indigo factories, though temporarily resident, pendente lite, in England, and in such circumstances security was not required, Roe, Petitioner (2 Sevestre's Cases, 521). The provision contained in that Regulation in respect to security for costs, is solely for the protection of the Respondents: therefore, supposing the Respondent, Jugbundoo Bose, had been entitled under Regulation XIV. of 1829 to require from the Appellant such security, he was bound to have made his application at the earliest possible time after filing the petition of appeal, for it must be borne in [440] mind that the petition stated the fact of the Appellant's absence in England. The filing of the Respondent's answer to the appeal subsequently ought, therefore, to have been treated, on general principles of law, as a waiver of his right to the security for costs of appeal. If, therefore, the Appellant had been bound voluntarily to furnish the security, and by omitting to do so, had made a default, still, under the Act, No. XVII. of 1847, such default ought to have been held cured by the Respondent passing over it, and filing his answer. It would be so in England. Daniel's Chan. Prac., Vol. II., p. 365 (Edit. 1840), which shows that a disability is removed by acceptance of the answer. Moreover, the Act, No. III. of 1845, repeals Ben. Reg. XIV. of 1829, sec. 2, cl. 1, as that Act gives a discretion to a Court of appeal to demand from the Appellant, or not, as it should think fit, and before the Respondent is called upon to answer, security for costs, "any law or Regulation to the contrary notwithstanding."

The Right Hon. Lord Kingsdown.—We are all of opinion that this judgment cannot stand, and that the suit must be remitted to India, to be tried on the merits.

By the Order in Council, made on the appeal, it was ordered and directed that the judgment of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of the 21st of August, 1855, be reversed, and the suit remitted back to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut for trial.

[441] The ZEMINDAR OF RAMNAD.—Appellant: The ZEMINDAR OF YETTIAPPOORAM,—Respondent * [July 11, 12, and 13, 1859].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Madras.

An award made upon an agreement to submit to the arbitration of the Collector of the District, a dispute respecting the boundaries of certain lands lying between two Zemindaries, upheld. The agreement to submit to arbitration having been deliberately entered into, acted upon, and acquiesced in by both parties,

The Onus Probandi that the consent of one of the parties to the award was obtained by threats and the undue influence of the Collector, lies upon the party setting up that charge.

The Judicial Committee, in appeals from the native Courts in India, will look to the broad principles of justice, and discourage mere technical objections, which do not affect the merits of the case, and more especially will discountenance the introduction of objections that may have occurred in the course of litigation, but were not raised at the commencement of the suit [7 Moo. Ind. App. 474, 475].

This appeal was brought from two decrees of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras, dated the 3rd of May, 1841, and the 28th of April, 1853, whereby an award made in favour of the Appellant's late husband, the Zemindar of Ramnad, was held invalid, and certain lands, the subject in dispute between the Zemindar of Ramnad and the Zemindar of Yettiappooram were decreed to be the property of the latter.

The facts were these:

The Appellant, Ranee Purvatha Nauchear, Zemindar of Ramnad, was the widow of Ramasawmy Setoopaty, the late Zemindar. The Respondent, Jagaveera [442] Rama Coomara Yettappa Naiker, was the Zemindar of Yettiappooram. The Zemindaries of Ramnad and Yettiappooram were adjoining properties, and the lands in question lay between the two Zemindaries, and were claimed by the Appellant as being part of the village of Peroonauli, in the Talook of Paupaneoolam, in the Zemindary of Ramnad, and by the Respondent as being part of the villages of Mauvelivoday, Poodalappooram, and Chinoor attached to the Zemindary of Yettiappooram.

A dispute having in 1813, arisen between the ancestors of the Appellant's late harshad and one Sivagami Nauchiar regarding the Ramnad Zemindary, the latter was placed under Government management, and remained so from that time up to the year 1828. During this interval the inhabitants of the Peroonauli village permitted a vast extent of land of that village (which the Appellant contended, included the lands in dispute) to run to waste; and it was alleged that the then Zemindar of Yettiapooram, the Respondent's father, taking advantage of this circumstance, encroached upon the lands in dispute, and included them within the boundaries of Mauvelivoday, Poodalappooram, and Chinnoor, causing part of them to be brought under cultivation by the inhabitants of those villages, and that he continued encroaching and claimed other portions of them.

In January, 1823, a Punchayet, or native arbitration, was convened by the head men of the above villages of Peroonauli on the one side, and Mauvelivoday, Poodalappooram, and Chinnoor, on the other side, and on the 25th of that month a decision was passed by the members of the Punchayet, directing that four individuals who were the inhabitants of the two vil-[443]-lages of Chinnoor and Mauvelivoday, and who were the principal owners of the boundary lands, should bathe and dress themselves in cloths of yellow colour, sprinkle milk over their heads, and put a blood mark on their forehead; that one of them should bear a new pot of milk in his right hand, and the head of a black sheep in his left hand, and run, pointing out the boundaries of the two villages; and that two of them should follow him, marking the line of the boundary he would so point out. The principal owner of the boundary lands of the village of Poodalappooram was also to run as above mentioned, followed in a like manner by witnesses, to mark the line of the boundary which would be pointed out to them. That soon after the marking of the boundary, the pot of milk and sheep's head should be buried under ground. A dispute, however, arose upon the terms of the Punchayet, whether the pot was to be an unbaked or a new burnt pot, and the ordeal was not carried into effect. A petition to enforce the award of the Punchayet was presented, in 1833, by the Respondent's father to the Board of Revenue, who endorsed on the back thereof that the Punchayet's award could not be carried into effect.

The disputes between the neighbouring villagers still continuing, on the 12th of July, 1833, Government in a letter to the Board of Revenue directed that the Collector of Madura or Tinnevely, as arbitrator, should settle the dispute of boundaries in question, and that a deed of consent should be obtained from both parties. Accordingly, in pursuance of an order of Mr. Eden, the Collector of Tinnevelley, of the 20th of June, 1834, the guardian of the then minor Zemindars of Ramnad, on the 7th [444] of July, 1834, signed an agreement or submission of the dispute to the Collector either of Madura or Tinnevelley.

The following letter, dated the 30th of June, 1834, was also sent by the Collector, Mr. Eden, to the Zemindar of Yettiapooram. "As I have to ask you certain questions regarding the dispute of the boundaries of the village Mauvelivoday, belonging to your Zemindary, and of the village Peroonauli, attached to the Zemindary of Ramnad, you are hereby required to constitute a Vakeel, in whom you have confidence, and employ him to appear on your behalf before me, with your Mooktarnamah." Accordingly, the following Mooktarnamah, dated the 9th of July, 1834, was given by the Zemindar of Yettiapooram, to his Vakeel, Comareto Pillay:—"I hereby authorise you, Comareto Pillay, to answer in my behalf to all the questions that may be asked by the Collector of Tinnevelley, regarding the dispute of the boundaries of the village Mauvelivoday, attached to my Zemindary, and of the village Peroonauli, belonging to Ramnad, and to agree to the settlement that may be made in the matter. I do further bind myself to confirm all you may say before the Collector in the said matter, in the same manner as if I had been personally present and consenting." And, on the 10th of July, 1834, the Vakeel of the Zemindar of Yettiapooram, under the power of attorney from the latter, signed the following submission of the matters in dispute to the Collector of Madura:—"To Mr. Eden, the Collector of Tinnevelley. The agreement given on behalf of the Zemindar of Yettiapooram, in the Zillah of Tinnevelley, by his Vakeel, Comareto Pillay. I shall abide by the decision that may be passed by the Collector of Madura [445] regarding the dispute of the boundaries of the village of Peroonauli, attached to the Zemindary of Ramnad, in the Zillah of Madura; and of the village of Mauvelivoday, belonging to the Zemindary of the above Yettiapooram, on his coming to the spot, and on his perusing the documents of both the parties. In this wise, I give this agreement with my free will."

The Zemindar of Yettiapooram was apprized by letters from the Collector of Tinnevelley, dated the 16th and 17th of July, 1834, of his Vakeel's consent having been given, and also by a notice from the Collector of Madura, dated the 14th of July, 1834, fixing the time and place of the intended arbitration. He acknowledged the receipt of the above letters and notices, and in a petition to the Collector of Tinnevelley, dated the 19th of July, 1834, stated that he had authorized his Vakeel to appear and plead the cause on his behalf, before the Collector of Madura; and asked particularly for directions whether he should appear personally, or send his Vakeel; to which the Collector answered, that he might adopt whichever course he thought proper.

In accordance with the above deeds of consent, a plaint on the part of the minor Zemindars of Ramnad was filed and presented to Mr. Blackburne, the Collector of Madura, on the 25th of July, 1834, claiming the lands in dispute, which were set out on a plan filed the same day. By the answer of the then Zemindar of Yettiapooram to the plaint, he claimed the lands as part of his Zemindary. On the part of the Zemindars of Ramnad, eighteen documents were given in evidence, and twenty-two witnesses examined. On the part of the Zemindar of Yettiapooram, thirty-five documents were produced, and twenty-two wit-[446]-nesses examined; and on the part of the Government twenty-four witnesses. No objections were offered by the Zemindar of the Yettiapooram, or his Vakeel, either in the pleadings, or viva voce, to the regularity of the proceedings or the competency of the arbitrator. On the 23rd of August, 1834, Mr. Blackburne made his award, decreeing the lands, consisting by the then measurement of 4016 coorkuns, to the Zemindars of Ramnad. The boundary stones were fixed and the lands in question delivered over to the Zemindars of Ramnad.

The Zemindar of Yettiapooram being dissatisfied with the award of Mr. Blackburne, petitioned the Board of Revenue for a stay of execution of the award, with a view of appealing from it, but the Board of Revenue declined to admit an appeal, considering that both parties had consented to the arbitration, and had themselves to abide by the decision of the arbitrator, and referred the Zemindar of Yettiapooram to the Civil Courts.

Accordingly, the Zemindar of Yettiapooram filed his plaint in the Zillah Court of Madura on the 19th of August, 1836, against Rancee Mungalaswary Nauchiar and Dura Raja Nauchiar, the minor Zemindars of Ramnad, by their then guardian, Mootooveroy Nauchiar, and against the manager of that Zemindary, for the recovery of 379⁵/₄ ropes of Malgoozary Punja lands, valued at Rs. 3708, and therein stated to be situated in the villages of Mauvelivoday, Poodalapooram, and Chinnoor, and for the recovery of Rs. 792. 1a. 2p., the amount of teerva due for two years from Fuslee 1244 (1834), and also for the removal of two boundary stones newly planted on the northern limit of Poodalapooram, and on the southern limit of [447] Chinnoor. The plaint, after mentioning the proceedings of the Panchayet in 1823 and the circumstances connected with the award of Mr. Blackburne, of the 23rd of August, 1834, complained that the arbitrator had passed an unjust decision without perusing the papers, and upon insufficient grounds, and prayed that the award of the Collector of Madura might be set aside, and that the stones placed at the western boundary of Poodalapooram, and the southern boundary of Chinnoor respectively, which had been placed in accordance with the award of Mr. Blackburne, might be removed. To this plaint the Defendants took a preliminary objection, by petition, that both parties were concluded by the award of Mr. Blackburne, of the 23rd of August, 1834. A counter petition was filed by the Zemindar of Yettiapooram, in which he urged that the Collector was not authorized by any Regulation to make an award.

Upon these petitions, Mr. Thompson, the acting Judge of the Zillah Court of Madura, made an Order, dated the 9th of January 1837, expressing his opinion, that after the deeds of consent to abide by the decision of the Collector, it was not just for the party cast to assert that the award passed by the Collector upon such reference was not right, and that it was not proper for him to solicit a re-investigation of the case by a Civil Court, and held that the cause having been once decided by a competent authority, was not admissible under sec. 10 of Mad. Reg. II. of 1802. On appeal, the Provincial Court by an Order, dated the 26th June, 1837, concurred with the Zillah Court, and upheld the award; but on a further appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, that Court, by an Order dated the 20th November, 1837, observed, that [448] as far as they could understand the Petitioner's statement, the Collector of Madura had not acted under any Regulation, but as an arbitrator to whom differences were referred by mutual consent of the parties concerned; that the Collector's award of the 23rd of August, 1834, was so far valid, that if the suit of 1836 were ordered to be revived, the Court would be bound to pass a decree conformable to that decision, unless the Petitioner could prove that part of his petition which asserted that the reference made to the Collector had not his assent.

A further petition to the Sudder Court was presented by the Zemindar of Yettiappooram, who stated that he was prepared to establish that the reference to Mr. Blackburne was made without his consent, whereupon that Court made an order, dated the 15th of January, 1838, directing the suit of 1836 to be revived, but intimating that the inquiry should in the first instance be confined to the question of the validity of the award, and that unless it was proved by evidence that the Petitioner had not previously consented to refer the matter at issue to the decision of the arbitrator, or that the award involved a matter not expressly referred by mutual consent of the parties to the decision of the arbitrator, the Zillah Court was not to enter upon the merits to try the cause.

The suit was accordingly remitted to the Zillah Court of Madura, and on the 22nd of August, 1838, Mr. Anstruther, the Zillah Judge, recorded the following points for the Plaintiff:—"To prove that as soon as the circumstance of the Kararnamah (or deed of consent) taken by Mr. Eden on the 10th of July, 1834, was made known to the Yettiappooram Zemindar, he at once protested to the proper authorities, or to [449] any authority; and that when directed by order of the Collector of Tinnevelley, or of the principal Collector of Madura, to produce his accounts, documents, etc., to enable the inquiry concerning the disputed land at Peroonauli to proceed, he protested against the inquiry as one never agreed to by him, and of which the Kararnamah had been executed without his or his Vakeel's consent.

In order to establish that he had so objected, the Zemindar of Yettiappooram filed a petition, containing this statement:—"Notwithstanding the Plaintiff was informed by the Enayetnamah (written notice) that the deed of consent was obtained from his Vakeel, who also informed him that it was obtained by compulsion, thereupon the Plaintiff, who is a Zemindar dependent upon the Circar (Government), thought that he could not at once sternly refuse to abide by the deed of consent extorted by the Collector of the District, and addressed an Urzee (memorial) to the Collector, on the 14th July, 1834, requesting that should the Collector of Madura repair to the disputed land he would also come there and pass a just award, and that, if he would not do so, he would send a respectable employé in his Cutcherry to the spot at that time to examine the accounts, documents, etc." No further evidence or explanation being offered on the part of the Zemindar of Yettiappooram, Mr. Anstruther made an Order, dated the 11th of September, 1838, as follows:—"The Vakeel of the Zemindar of Yettiappooram has attempted to prove by reference to Urzees and orders, dated on or about the 14th of July, 1834, that he never agreed to the reference to a Punchayet as it was constituted, and that he did all that was proper towards objecting [450] to the forced agreement of his Vakeel. In the face of this, the Court is in possession of the Zemindar's Mooktarnamah to the Vakeel, dated the 9th of July; his Urzee to the Collector of the same date, authenticating the Mooktarnamah; the agreement of the Vakeel, dated the 10th of July, to abide by the decision of the Principal Collector of Madura: from the nearness of dates of which, it is clear that the Zemindar and his Vakeel were close at hand to the Collector's Cutcherry, and consequently able to prevent, or at all events to protest against, any intimidation. On the 19th of July, the Zemindar, acknowledging the propriety of the arrangements, wishes to know whether he in person should attend, or whether he should send a Vakeel to attend the inquiry. It appears, therefore, that the Zemindar empowered a Vakeel, that the Vakeel acted, and that the Zemindar acquiesced in and confirmed his acts, and any attempt now to prove he did not do so would be a waste of time. As it is highly desirable that the rights of the question should not be considered undetermined longer than is absolutely necessary, and as the Sudder Court have ordered that the suit might be entertained only if the Yettiappooram Zemindar could prove the Vakeel was forced against his will to execute the agreement which is now shown to be impossible, the dispute is ¹⁸ he considered finally at rest." This decision was on appeal affirmed by an Order of the Provincial Court, dated the 11th of February, 1839. The Sudder Court, however, on appeal, passed an Order, dated the 6th of July, 1839, wherein they observed that their Order of the 15th of January, 1838, appeared to have been misunderstood, and, at all events, had not been conformed to, and that the object of that Order was, [451] that in the event of the validity of the award being satisfactorily established, a decree should be passed declaring the award to be valid, without any reference to the merits of the cause, but that it appeared in fact that the suit had not been revived, and that no decree of Court had been passed; the Sudder Court, therefore, directed that the suit of 1836 should be revived, with the view of determining the validity or otherwise of the award of the arbitrator, and should that award be pronounced invalid, and be set aside, the Zillah Judge was to proceed in that case to try and determine the claim of the Zemindar of Yettiappooram on the merits.

The suit of 1836 was again remitted to the Zillah Court of Madura, and the Defendants, the former guardian and the manager, filed a petition for inquiry by evidence into the facts relative to the deed of consent alleged by the Plaintiff to have been obtained by force. But Mr. Elliott, the Zillah Judge, without ascertaining the alleged force by the examination of witnesses, as directed by the Sudder Court, passed an Order on the 11th of November, 1839, to the effect that the Zemindar of Yettiappooram did not consent to have his dispute settled by the decision of Collector of Madura, and in consequence that he was not bound to abide by his award, and that a decree should be passed on the merits of the cause.

The Defendants, by petition, complained to Mr. Elliott, that he had committed the same error which it was said Mr. Austruther, the former Zillah Judge, had fallen into; namely, had decided the question of the validity of the award upon a mere perusal of the proceedings, without calling upon the Plaintiff to examine witnesses to prove the alleged compulsion, and prayed [452] that final orders on this point might be passed only after an examination of the witnesses of both parties.

No attention was paid to this petition, and Mr. Elliott's Order was, on appeal, affirmed by the Provincial Court, and that Order of affirmance was appealed from to the Sudder Court.

Application was made by the Defendants for further time to put in their answer, in consequence of the appeal to the Sudder Court then pending, but extension of time was refused, and the answers not having been filed through the dissensions of the Defendants, the then guardian and the manager of the Zemindary of Ramnad, the Zillah Judge ordered that the suit should be tried ex parte as regards the Defendants, and, on the 27th of March, 1840, recorded points for proof of the cause on its merits.

Evidence was entered into by the Plaintiff, but no evidence was entered into by the Defendants.

On the 8th of May, 1840, Mr. Elliott pronounced his judgment on the merits, ex parte, in favour of the Zemindar of Yettiappooram, decreeing the lands in question to be restored to him. This decision was given, notwithstanding a petition to Mr. Elliott from the Appellant, on behalf of the minor Zemindar, Dura Raja Nauchiar, stating the dissensions between the guardian and the manager, and praying for a stay of proceedings until a final Order should be passed by the Sudder Court.

A petition of appeal to the Sudder Court was preferred by the Appellant against this decree, also a petition was presented to the Zillah Court of Madura, praying for a re-investigation of the suit, on the ground that the ex parte decree of Mr. Elliott had [453] been made in favour of the Plaintiff at a time when the minors were destitute of a guardian, and whilst that office was in dispute. Mr. Babington, the then Judge of the Zillah Court, refused to interfere in the revival of Mr. Elliott's decree, on the ground that a petition of appeal had been presented to the Sudder Court.

On the hearing of the Appellant's petition of appeal, the Sudder Court, by an Order dated the 3rd of May, 1841, agreed with Mr. Elliott, who had set aside the award of Mr. Blackburne on the ground that the Zemindar of Yettiappooram had not himself signed a board. As to the merits of the case the Court remarked:—"The decree of the acting Zillah Judge subsequently passed on the merits of the case has been founded on the evidence offered before the Principal Collector of Madura during the arbitration, and no evidence whatever was taken by the acting Zillah Judge during the trial of the suit. In this the Court observe that the acting Zillah Judge has erred. He should have received anew all the evidence to be offered by the parties, and should have decided on it, the arbitration of the Collector being a private transaction, not recognized by any Regulation, and the proceedings and examinations held and taken by the Principal Collector not being admissible by the acting Zillah Judge as evidence, as they would have been, supposing them to have been taken before a regularly constituted Court. It also appears that the former and present guardian of the minor Zemindar of Ramnad have taken very different views of this suit, and that neither has yet been fully heard in it on behalf of the minor. It is desirable that the latter, who alone has the legal right to represent her, should [454] now be heard in this suit. On these grounds the Court resolve to set aside the decree, and direct that the suit be re-admitted on the file, and decided de novo on the merits, after a full examination of documents and witnesses before the Zillah Court."

The Appellant, as the guardian of the minor Zemindar, felt aggrieved at the last-mentioned decree of the Sudder Court, in regard to the award of Mr. Blackburne, inasmuch as the validity of the award had never been investigated by evidence; and after the examination of witnesses in the cause in a regular manner: but the decree not being a final one, the Appellant was advised that the practice of the Court would admit an appeal to Her Majesty in Council from an interlocutory Order, under the provisions of Mad. Reg. VII. of 1818, but that she might set up the award in the Zillah Court, and reserve the appeal to Her Majesty in Council in respect thereof, until the Sudder Court had pronounced a final judgment in the cause (see upon this point Maharajah Mokesur Sing v. The Bengal Government, ante, [7 Moo. Ind. App.] p. 284).

The Zillah Court having been abolished, and its duties devolved upon a subordinate Judge, the suit was placed on the file of the Court of the subordinate Judge of Madura, and a supplemental plaint was filed by the Respondent, on the 9th of July, 1841, against the Appellant as guardian of the minor Zemindar.

A great many interlocutory proceedings took place. On the part of the Plaintiff no fresh documents were filed, but there remained on the file of the Zillah Court the documentary evidence which had been [455] filed. These were copies of some of the documents, the originals of which had been given in evidence before the arbitrator, Mr. Blackburne, and were the same copies which the Sudder Court had, by its Order, dated the 3rd of May, 1841, declared to have been improperly received in evidence by Mr. Elliott. No other evidence was tendered on the part of the Plaintiff. On the part of the Defendants no evidence was tendered, as the documents of the Zemindary of Ramnad were in the possession of the Collector of Madura, as agent for the Court of Wards, who had not been made a Defendant.

Notwithstanding the imperfect state of the suit, and before the title of the Appellant as Zemindar was confirmed, the subordinate Judge, Mr. Limond, proceeded with the cause, and on the 8th of November, 1845, took the opinion of the Pundit of the Zillah Court of Madura, who advised him that in case of there being no neighbours and others who had known the boundary, nor marks to ascertain the same, the contested land should be divided in equal shares between the two disputing villagers. In accordance with this opinion, the subordinate Judge decreed on the 12th of November, 1845, that the disputed land should be equally divided between the litigating parties, and that each party should pay his own costs.

The Appellant appealed from this Order, and a decree, dated the 14th of March, 1849, was passed by the Civil Judge, Mr. Baines, affirming the decree of the subordinate Judge, of the 12th of November, 1845, but intimating an opinion that if the Zemindar of Yettiapooram had appealed, he would have decreed the whole of the disputed lands to him, on the ground that, under the circumstances, the Zemindar of Ram-[456]-nad must be treated in the light of a Plaintiff, and so bound to make out her case, and that as she had tendered no evidence her claim ought to be dismissed.

In consequence of this intimation the Zemindar of Yettiapooram filed a petition for a review of the decree of the Civil Court of the 14th of March, 1849, and on the 4th July, 1849, the Civil Judge applied to the Sudder Court for leave to review his judgment.

In virtue of an authority from the Sudder Court, Mr. Baines pronounced a revised decree, dated the 2nd of August, 1849, adjudging that the Zemindar of Ramnad should restore the whole of the disputed lands to the Respondent.

On the 1st of October, 1849, the Appellant presented an appeal to the Sudder Court against the revised decree of the Civil Judge of the 2nd of August, 1849, on the ground, among others, that the Court had no power to review its decree under the cl. 2, sec. 6, of Mad. Reg. XV. of 1816.

By an Order, dated the 29th of September, 1852, the Sudder Court gave leave to the Appellant to appeal from the revised decree of the Civil Judge for the following reasons:—"Firstly, because the propriety of laying the onus probandi on the Defendant is doubtful. Secondly, because, if the onus probandi is to rest with the Defendant, it appears necessary for the ends of justice that this should have been previously declared, and points laid down for the Defendant to prove accordingly. Thirdly, because the decrees of the lower Courts are defective, inasmuch as no points were recorded for proof, as required by cl. 3, sec. 10, Mad. Reg. XV. of 1816."

The final decree of the Sudder Court was pronounced on the 28th of April, 1853, whereby the [457] Order of the Zillah Judge, dated the 11th of November, 1839, was upheld, and the appeal of the Appellant was dismissed with costs. The reasons given by the Court, so far as they are material, were these:—First, that the Respondent's father having been long in possession of the disputed land before the award of 1834, the onus probandi was on the Appellant, and as she had adduced no proof of her title or possession, except the award of 1834, the decree in favour of the Respondent was right. Secondly, that although the omission on the part of the subordinate Judge to record points was unquestionably a defect in the proceedings, yet the Appellant had not been prejudiced thereby, but had been afforded full opportunity of adducing proof of her title.

As the amount in dispute was under Rs. 10,000, the Appellant did not apply to the Sudder Court for leave to appeal from this decree within six months, the time limited by the Order in Council of the 10th of April, 1836. A petition was afterwards presented to Her Majesty in Council, explaining the grounds of delay, and praying for leave to appeal from the decrees of the 3rd of May, 1841, and the 28th of April, 1853. Special leave to appeal was granted by their Lordships, and the appeal from those decrees now came on for hearing.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. W. W. Mackeson, for the Appellant.—The Sudder Court was wrong in affirming the Order of the 11th of November, 1839, made by the Zillah Judge, by which the award of the Collector of Madura, of the [458] 23rd of August, 1834, was set aside. That Court, on the contrary, ought to have reversed such Order, on the ground that there was no evidence before the Zillah Judge to impeach the validity of the award. Moreover we submit the suit was defective, and the whole proceedings taken were vitiated; first, no points were recorded by the subordinate Judge as required by Mad. Reg. XV. of 1816, sec. 10, cl. 3, Srimut Moottoo Vijaya Raghanaidha Gowery Vallabha Perria Woodia Taver v. Rang Anga Moottoo Nachiar (3 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 278), and secondly, in the suit of 1836, the Appellant never had any opportunity of proving her title on the merits. [Dr. Lushington: We think that you must, in the first instance, confine your argument to the validity of the award.] The case of the Appellant upon that head is confined to this: either the award must be upheld, and the lands restored to the Appellant, or there must be a new trial. We contend that the Appellant is entitled to have the award of Mr. Blackburne, of the 23rd of August, 1834, specifically executed. Both parties mutually consented to this arbitration, and to be bound by the award. They produced their deeds and witnesses in support of their respective titles. The merits were fully entered into and discussed before the award was completed, and we submit that such an award so deliberately considered must be held conclusive and binding on the parties. But even if the award be deemed invalid, then, in the alternative, we contend that there has been no trial on the merits. The decree of Mr. Limond, the subordinate Judge, dated the 12th of November, 1845, as well as that of Mr. [459] Baines, the Civil Judge, of the 2nd of August, 1849, was founded on mere ex parte evidence, without any opportunity having been offered to the Appellant to adduce evidence. In consequence of the Appellant having no opportunity of producing evidence, there never were materials before those Judges from which a judgment on the merits of the Appellant's title could be pronounced.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., Mr. Badeley, and Mr. Jackson, for the Respondent.—The question being narrowed to the validity of the award, we submit that the award of the Principal Collector of Madura, of the 23rd of August, 1834, was not only illegal in itself, as being de ultra vires, Mad. Reg. II. of 1803, which Regulation defines and prescribes his powers, but was contrary to the evidence adduced before him as arbitrator, and is, therefore, to be treated as wholly inoperative and invalid as against the Respondent. Neither the award itself nor the reference or proceedings upon which it was founded were ever authorized by the Respondent, or can be deemed legally binding on him, or on any ancestor or predecessor of his, or upon any other person competent to bind him, or prejudice his rights or title, Watson on Awards, p. 2 (2nd edit.). Even if such a consent was given by the Respondent, as is insisted on by the other side, it was under pressure and threats of the Government authorities. Neither could he be aware of the finality of the award. Mad. Reg. VII., sec. 11, of 1816, provides for an appeal from an award of a Panchayet, and the Respondent considered it would also lie in his case. Such award, moreover, having been pronounced illegal and invalid by the [460] Zillah and Sudder Courts, cannot now be considered as of any force or value. Those Courts not only set aside the award, but established the right and title of the Respondent, after a full and careful consideration of the merits of the case, and such title must now be upheld. With regard to the objection that the Appellant was precluded from producing evidence of title, we submit that as the Appellant was invited and required to produce evidence of her title, and by her laches omitted to do so, any further application ought to be finally and conclusively rejected, without allowing any protraction, by a remittal to India, of a suit which has been already litigated for upwards of twenty years.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

The Right Hon. Dr. Lushington (July 20, 1859).—The parties to the present litigation are the Zemindar of Ramnad, the Appellant, and the Zemindar of Yettia-pooram, the Respondent. They are the owners of two Zemindariaries in the vicinity of each other, and the primary question was one of boundary; whether certain disputed lands belonged to the one Zemindary or the other.

A very long litigation ensued, in the course of which several decrees were pronounced by the Courts below; but the important decrees with which we have to deal, are a decree dated the 3rd of May, 1841, and a decree bearing date the 28th of April, 1853. Both these decrees have been appealed from.

On the 23rd of August, 1834, Mr. Blackburne, the Collector of Madura, within whose collectorship the Zemindary of Ramnad was situate, made an award [461] whereby he decreed that all the lands in dispute, amounting to 4016 coorkums, belonged to the Zemindary of Ramnad.

By the decree of the 3rd of May, 1841, the Sudder Court affirmed the Order of Mr. Elliott, dated the 11th of November, 1839, setting aside this award.

As this award and decree embraced the whole property in dispute, it was perfectly obvious that the first consideration was whether the decree of the 3rd of May, 1841, was well founded or not: or, in other words, whether the award was to be deemed valid or not. If the award was valid, all subsequent proceedings necessarily fall to the ground. Their Lordships, therefore, determined, in the first instance, to confine the argument to that question, and to dispose of it.

For the purpose of duly considering the decree of the 3rd of May, 1841, and the validity of the award, it will be necessary to take a short view of the circumstances which gave rise to the dispute between the parties, and which led to the making of that award. It may be that, if any doubt arises as to the meaning of any of the written instruments, their meaning may be more satisfactorily ascertained by reference to the preceding facts and the surrounding circumstances.

It can hardly be necessary for the purpose we have now in view to take into consideration anything which occurred after the decree of the 3rd of May, 1841, for such circumstances can scarcely have even a remote reference to the award itself, or to that decree.

It appears that an early period, whether in 1813, or not, matters little, disputes had arisen respecting [462] the boundaries of the Zemindaries and the lands in question. In January, 1823, a native Panchayet was convened, with a view of settling the question in dispute. The Panchayet failed to make any arrangement, and the ordeal prescribed by Indian custom was not carried into effect.

Thus things remained until 1833. It is useless to attempt to ascertain the reason why the question remained so stationary. At the time last mentioned, the Zemindar of Yettiapooram petitioned the Board of Revenue to give effect to this native Panchayet, and we think, looking at the nature of the ordeal, it is not surprising that the Board refused its consent.

The dissensions respecting these lands, however, not only continued, but led to broils and bloodshed, so that it became the duty of the Government to interfere. The Government did interfere accordingly, by letter addressed to the Board of Revenue, dated the 12th of July, 1833. That document, as far, at least, as we are able to ascertain, is contained in an extract from the proceedings of the Sudder Adawlut, under date the 3rd of May, 1841; and is there stated thus:—"It is, moreover, shown by the above proceedings, that on the 12th of July, 1833, Government, in a letter addressed to the Board of Revenue, particularly ordered that in the event of the matter being referred to the arbitration of either of the Collectors of Madura or Tinnevelly, the principals should be required to enter into a bond, binding themselves to abide by the decision." And further declared, "the Collector himself not competent to decide the case except on the mutual consent in writing of the litigating parties." That is all, we believe, that can be [463] found of the precise contents of this very important instrument. It is, however, also set forth, to a certain extent, in a petition filed in this suit. It is rather in different terms, but to the same effect.

Now all these facts and circumstances must have been known to both parties. The subject in dispute, the vain attempt to settle it by the native Panchayet, the interference of Government by attachment, and, unless the Collector was wholly regardless of the positive orders of the Government, the parties must have been apprized that no settlement by arbitration could take place without their consent.

We must now inquire into what took place between the Collector of Tinnevelly and the parties to this award, or rather between the Collector and the Zemindar of Yettiapooram; for, no doubt, the guardian of the Zemindar of Rammad gave his consent to the arbitration in adequate terms, and was bound by such consent.

So far as appears, it is probable there were some previous communications; but the first written communication now appearing from Mr. Eden, the Collector of Tinnevelly, was written on the 30th of June, 1834. The letter is to this effect [see same set forth, ante [7 Moo. Ind. App.], p. 444.] Perhaps there was some ambiguity in this letter, but, to ascertain exactly what passed, we must look at the whole of the facts of the case. The ambiguity arises from there being no mention of arbitration in express terms. The requirement of a Vakeel was according to usage, and the power of attorney, if not required by the orders of Government, was a proper precaution.

What occurred immediately after the receipt of this letter, we do not accurately know; but it [464] appears that an order was issued by the Collector, or a letter written by him, dated the 4th of July, 1834. Unfortunately, again, we only know the contents of that letter from the petition of the Zemindar, dated the 9th of July, 1834. Now, making due allowances for translation and eastern modes of expression, this petition, or letter, gives the clearest evidence of the course of the transaction. It shows what the Zemindar understood, and what he purported to do. It recites the substance, as we conceive, of the order of July the 4th, namely, that he was to send a Vakeel with power of attorney, not merely to answer questions as to the boundary, but to admit proposals for the settlement of the dispute, and he states that he sends the Vakeel accordingly. That is the substance of that letter, and it is thus recited in the petition:—"In obedience to your order, dated the 4th of July, directing me to send my authorized Vakeel with a Mooktarnamah, to answer in person certain questions put to him regarding the boundary dispute between the village of Mauvelivoday, attached to my Zemindary, and that of the village of Paroonauli, attached to the Zemindary of Rammad, and to admit any proposal which might be made for the settlement of the said dispute."

Looking at all the circumstances, it does not appear to us that any real doubt can arise as to the meaning of this letter. There is no real ambiguity in the expression, "any proposal which might be made for the settlement." To consent to a mode of arrangement is to consent to an arrangement of the matter in dispute in a particular mode. It would really be absurd to say, I consent to any mode of arrangement you please to point out, but I will not be [465] bound by what is done under it. If there were a shadow of doubt, which we do not think there is, the conclusion to this letter would remove it. The conclusion is in these words:—"Therefore, I request your Honour will be pleased to inquire into my case, and pass a just decision."

The next step in this case is the Mooktarnamah, or power of attorney, which, though apparently dated on the 9th of June, in this part of the proceedings, is manifestly of the date of July the 9th, 1834, the date of the petition, part of which has just been read. This document is to be read, if it be obscure at all, in conjunction with the petition, stating that the Vakeel was appointed for the settlement of the case. The Mooktarnamah states—[see ante, p. 444]. We are all of opinion that this power of attorney, though not framed with the precision which ought to be found in every legal instrument, still adequately expresses the intention of the Zemindar; making due allowance for the vagueness which is inherent in most Indian documents. It authorizes the Vakeel, by it appointed, to act on behalf of the Zemindar for the settlement of these very disputes. Provided the Vakeel was duly authorized by his principal, no doubt has been raised, nor could, we think, have been raised, that the deed of consent executed by him on the 10th of July was, to all intents and purposes, sufficient, unless the signature of the principal was indispensable.

The document next to be referred to is the deed of consent, dated the 10th of July, 1834—[see ante, p. 444]. This deed of consent mentions a reference to the Collector of Madura. True it is that the correspondence had been carried on between the Zemindar and the Collector, not of [466] Madura but of Tinnevelley, within whose District Yettiapoora was situate; and it is possible that the Zemindar might have expected that Mr. Eden, the Collector of that District, would personally have made the investigation. This might have been so; but this expectation is not of the essence of the transaction. The consent asked was not to an investigation carried on by Mr. Eden personally, but to a settlement in a mode arranged by him; and this was done.

On the 11th of the same month of July, 1834, Mr. Eden writes to the Zemindar this letter:—"Your authorized Vakeel, Comareto Pillay, arrived here, and delivered me your urzee, dated the 9th instant, purporting that you have executed to him a Mooktarnamah, empowering him to admit any proposal which might be made for the settlement of the boundary dispute between the village of Mauvelivooday attached to your Zemindary, and that of Paroonauli attached to the Zemindary of Ramnad, without raising any objections that he must again consult with you on the subject. When I consulted with your Vakeel on the subject of this boundary dispute being one of long standing, of the loss in consequence entailed on the Ryots and others, or those which must be incurred hereafter, if the dispute be not settled, and also of the measures which should be adopted in arranging the matter, so that the people might enjoy peace, I perceived that it would be better for the parties to have the dispute decided by the Zillah authorities, on consideration of the proofs adduced by both parties; moreover, it is also better for them to have their dispute settled by a single authority than to have to do with two; and it is further better for them to have it [467] settled by the Principal Collector of Madura, who is well acquainted with the particulars of your case, because he was last year the Collector of this Zillah; and as he is also able to understand all the particulars of the opponents' (the inhabitants of Ramnad) case, he is, in consequence, well acquainted with the whole particulars of the dispute. I have, therefore, determined that it will be better for you to have the dispute decided by the Principal Collector of Madura than by myself, and have obtained the consent of your Vakeel, Comareto Pillay, to the above-said proposal. I have communicated these particulars to the Principal Collector, who will go to the disputed limits on a day fixed, in order to settle the boundary in dispute, and will instruct you to be present there on that date. You should go personally to the said spot on that date without failure, whatever business you may have, and produce before him the accounts, documents, and witnesses to establish your case, and await his decision. If you fail to do so, you can expect no redress."

This letter is a translation, which may account for some of the expressions, for it could hardly have been so written in the original. It is a document of very considerable importance, as affecting the present question. It states the arrival of the Vakeel; Mr. Eden's consultation with him; the determination on consideration of all the circumstances, to refer the settlement to the Collector of Madura, as best acquainted with the facts; the consent of the Vakeel thereto; and calls upon the Zemindar to attend the investigation.

Here was ample notice to the Zemindar of what had been arranged; and this was the time to have [468] remonstrated against the proposed settlement, if it appeared to the Zemindar to be unjust, or if his Vakeel had exceeded the powers with which he had been entrusted.

It does not appear that any remonstrance was made, or any dissatisfaction expressed; and surely, when such opportunity offered, this is strong proof that the arrangement was consonant with the original intention of the Zemindar, and was not deemed by him prejudicial to his interests. But if any doubt could possibly be said to have existed upon this point, the subsequent history of the transaction will assist us in coming to a just conclusion.

Proceeding in order of time, the next document in date is from the Collector of Madura to this Zemindar, dated July the 14th, 1834:—"The Collector of Tinnevelly having informed me, through a letter giving cover to the deed of consent executed by you, agreeing to have the boundary dispute between the village of Mauvelivooday attached to your Zemindary, and that of Paroonauli, attached to the Zemindary of Rannad, decided by me, as also the other documents, I will come, on the 25th instant, to the disputed limits, to settle the dispute; consequently you should come on the morning of the abovesaid date to the spot in question, with the accounts and other documents connected with the case."

By this letter, Mr. Blackburne, the Collector of the Madura District, gives to the Zemindar notice of an intended meeting for the investigation and settlement, reciting the consent given by the Vakeel to have the dispute settled by him, the Collector.

This document was forwarded to the Zemindar in [469] a despatch from Mr. Eden, dated July the 17th:—"Mr. Blackburne, the Principal Collector of Madura, has transmitted through me an Enayetnamah to your address, which is herein enclosed, stating that he will on Friday, the 25th instant, proceed to the village of Paroonauli, to settle the boundary dispute between the village of Mauvelivooday, attached to your Zemindary, and that of Paupanucolum, attached to the Zemindary of Rannad. As the Collector will go to the disputed lands and settle the dispute, and as I have ordered Veerabudderupullay, the acting Naib Sheristadar of this Collectorate, to go to the spot on the same date, that he may explain to the Collector all the circumstances regarding your case, I think the whole matter will be justly decided, and you may consult with the said Veerabudderupullay regarding the said dispute as you may think proper. I think it is also better for you to send your authorized Vakeel, who is well acquainted with the matter of this dispute since the time of its commencement, with a Mooktarnamah to the effect that he may speak everything on your behalf, and cause documents and witnesses to be produced before the Collector. Therefore, you should act accordingly." This appears also to be an extract, and the substance of it is to give the Zemindar notice to attend the Collector of Madura by his Vakeel.

Here again, upon the receipt of this despatch of the 17th July, from Mr. Eden, was an opportunity for the Zemindar to pause, and make any representation that he deemed proper. Let us see what he actually did say on the receipt of those documents. It will be found in a letter to Mr. Eden, dated July the 19th. He recites in substance what had occurred, and says, "the case will doubtless be decided justly."

We believe that we have now reviewed all the important evidence bearing upon the question of the consent of the Zemindar of Yettiappooram to the investigation of the case by the Collector of Madura, and the settlement by him.

The next step towards ascertaining the validity of the award, would be to consider how the Collector of Madura fulfilled the duties he had undertaken; but, before saying a word as to that part of the case, which has scarcely, if at all, been the subject of discussion, we will dispose altogether of the question of consent, to which the main argument on behalf of the Respondent has been addressed.

It has been said that if the Zemindar did give his consent to the arbitration, it was not a willing consent, but was obtained by threats, and through undue influence exerted by persons in authority. Now the onus probandi of an averment of this description must necessarily fall on those who make it. Where is the evidence?

True it is that the proposal originates with the Government, who are anxious to put an end to dissensions occasioning riot and bloodshed; but what are the instructions issued by the Government to which I have already referred? They are, that the consent of the parties is indispensable to such a proceeding by arbitration. Consent means a willing consent, not a forced consent, which would be a mere mockery; and so the Collectors must have understood the order. If they used either fraud or force, they disobeyed the Government, and were guilty of a breach of duty. Then, we say, where is [471] the evidence? We cannot presume such gross misconduct.

Now, in searching for evidence on this head, there was but one expression in the letter dated the 11th of July, 1834, which was prominently brought to our notice, and that is to the following effect:—"If you fail to do so (that is, to attend the Collector of Madura for the purpose of settlement), you can expect no redress."

Upon this we observe, first, that this letter was written after the consent had been given, and, therefore, could not affect it. Secondly, that it related not to the consent itself, but to the production of evidence before the arbitrator. Thirdly, that the Zemindar had previously made application to the Government on this subject, and had prayed for the execution of the award of the Panchayet of 1823, and this expression evidently meant, If you will not avail yourself of this opportunity, you can expect no assistance from the Government.

That the Collectors were anxious to fulfil the wishes of the Government, and obtain a settlement of these disputes by arbitration, cannot be doubted; and it may be assumed (though there is no evidence on that point) that they used the influence of their position for that purpose; but their doing so amounted neither to fraud nor coercion. A representation of the mischiefs which resulted from the existing disputes, and the difficulty of a settlement in the ordinary mode, in order to induce the consent of the Zemindar to a termination of the disputes by reference to a Government officer, well acquainted with the local circumstances, is perfectly consistent with justice and equity, and manifestly most beneficial [472] to the parties concerned. Indeed, the mass of documents and evidence, when litigation did commence, present a melancholy contrast to the proceedings which were taken by Mr. Blackburne.

Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no evidence to substantiate the charge of the consent of the Zemindar having been obtained by fraud, undue influence, or coercion. Wherever a strong expression is to be found, it is for the purpose of inducing the Zemindar to follow up his own consent, which had already been given, and to produce the evidence necessary to establish his claim, and protect his own interests. If there had been any evidence that the consent had been obtained under coercion, or by undue influence, we must observe that in the subsequent proceedings the Zemindar had most ample opportunity, over and over again, to have produced before the Court evidence to establish such a charge; but he never attempted to do so. He never made such a charge in his original plaint, filed in 1836.

One other objection remains to be considered. It was insisted that the Zemindar was not aware of the finality of the proceedings. It is somewhat difficult to discover how to consider this objection, for we do not find that it is supported by anything that the Zemindar said or did at the time. What is there in the nature of an arbitration which gives rise to an apprehension that it should not be final? True it is, that, if compared with the proceedings in the Courts of the Company, an arbitration cannot pretend to vie with them in the abundance of intermediate proceedings, the number of decrees, appeals, and reviews; but the very object of acceding to an arbitration was [743] to adopt an alternative by which the question in dispute might be settled, and recourse to the Civil Courts avoided. The Zemindar could hardly expect that an arbitration would be attended with similar dilatory processes, even if he were enamoured of them, which we can hardly presume.

But then the ingenuity of Counsel has suggested, that by analogy to a Panchayet under Mad. Reg. VII. of 1816, the award might be subject to appeal.

Now, looking at that Regulation, we apprehend that an appeal under that Regulation from an award made by a Panchayet could take place only where there was a flagrant violation of the first principles of justice; and if a similar disregard of those principles had existed in the present case, we cannot doubt that a Court of Justice might set aside the award. We cannot, however, discover any disposition on the part of any of the Judges through whose cognizance this case has since passed, to set aside an award, even upon the slightest pretence. There is nothing, therefore, in these proceedings to sustain that objection.

The next stage would be the execution of the duties of the arbitrator, which will occupy us but a very few moments, for it has not been contended that Mr. Blackburne was guilty either of partiality or negligence. He appears to have taken every means in his power, by the examination of the land in dispute, and by a consideration of all the evidence, oral and documentary, which was brought before him, to arrive at a just conclusion.

It is meet, however, to apply our attention, before we proceed further, to the reasons assigned by the Sudder Dewanny Court for their decision on the 3rd [474] of May, 1841. They state that they agree with the Zillah Judge of Madura in setting aside the award, because the Collector did not obtain an agreement in writing from the Zemindar himself, binding himself to abide by the award. So that they were of opinion that a consent in writing signed by the Vakeel, who had been duly authorized by a power of attorney executed by the Zemindar himself, was not a sufficient authority. They cite no law, no custom, and no principle for this conclusion. It is, we believe, notorious that persons in the position of this Zemindar were in the habit of transacting business through their Vakeels, so that there does not appear anything unusual in the consent being given by a Vakeel. And, in the absence of all positive law to the contrary, we are of opinion that the Zemindar was just as competent to bind himself by a duly authorized agent, as he was to sign the consent with his own hand; and that he did give the authority to the Vakeel is not disputed. We think, therefore, that this objection to the award cannot be maintained.

Some notice is taken of the absence of a bond to abide by the decision. Now, assuming that the Government (for we have merely an extract of the despatch) did direct this to be done, and that they did not mean a written agreement only, how does the absence of a bond affect this case? Why simply that, by means of a bond, there might be an easier mode of enforcing the award.

In the examination of questions like these, their Lordships are of opinion that it is their duty to look to the broad principles of justice and equity; and, whilst they are always willing to pay due de-[475]ference to the Regulations which in part constitute the law of India, to discourage in proceedings of this description mere technical objections which affect not the merits of the case, and more especially to discountenance the invention of new grounds of dispute which have occurred in the course of the litigation, and which were not even mentioned at the commencement of it, as the cause for promoting the suit.

We think that it is satisfactorily proved that the Zemindar gave, in adequate terms, and in a sufficiently formal manner, his assent to the decision by arbitration; that during the whole proceedings he never retracted nor expressed dissatisfaction with the proposed arbitration (indeed, it is stated that he was sometimes personally present); and we deem it contrary to all justice, that if he entertained the objections now urged, he did not declare them at the proper time, but allowed the investigation to proceed, prepared to take advantage if the result was in his favour, and to dispute the arbitration if the decision was against him.

We shall humbly advise Her Majesty that the award of the 23rd of August, 1834, is valid, and ought to be sustained, and that the decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawult, of the 3rd of May, 1841, ought to be reversed, together with all other decrees that may be inconsistent with the maintenance of the award. And we shall further advise Her Majesty that the Respondent should be condemned in all the costs incurred in this litigation.

[476] THE SECRETARY OF STATE IN COUNCIL OF INDIA,—Appellant;
KAMACHEE BOYE SAHABA,—Respondent * [July 1, 4, 9, 1859].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Madras.

Transactions of Independent Sovereign States between each other, are governed by other laws than those which Municipal Courts administer. Such Courts have neither the means of decreeing what is right, or the power of enforcing any decision which they may make.

The Rajah of Tanjore, a native independent Sovereign, but in virtue of Treaties under the protection of the East India Company, died without leaving issue male, when the East India Company, in the exercise of their Sovereign power, and in trust for the British Government, seized the Raj of Tanjore, and the whole of the property of the deceased Rajah, as an escheat, on the ground that the dignity of the Raj was extinct for want of a male heir, and that the property of the late Rajah lapsed to the British Government. Held, that as the seizure was made by the British Government, acting as a Sovereign power, through its delegate, the East India Company, it was an act of State, to inquire into the propriety of which a Municipal Court had no jurisdiction.

Seemle.—There is a distinction between the public and private property of a Hindoo Sovereign, as upon his death his private property goes to one set of heirs, and the Raj and the public property to the succeeding Rajah.

The general rule of the Hindoo law of inheritance is partibility. The succession of a single heir, as in the case of a Raj, is the exception.

An act done by an agent of the Government, though in excess of his authority, being ratified and adopted by the Government, held to be equivalent to previous authority.

Ameer Sing, a former Rajah of Tanjore, was in the year 1787, the absolute Sovereign of the fort and country of Tanjore, in the Presidency of Madras. In that and subsequent years three Trea-[477]-ties were entered into between the Rajahs of Tanjore and the East India Company. The first of these Treaties was dated the 10th of April, 1787, and made between Sir Archibald Campbell, then Governor of Madras, and Ameer Sing; but as this Treaty was annulled by the Treaty next mentioned, it is unnecessary to state its provisions. The second Treaty, dated the 11th of June, 1793, was made between Sir Charles Oakley, Bart., then Governor of Madras, and Ameer Sing, which annulled the former Treaty, and the stipulations of which, so far as material here to be stated, were as follows:—"Art. 1. The friends and enemies of either of the contracting parties shall be considered the friends and enemies of both. Art. 2. In order to execute the foregoing Article in its full extent, the East India Company agrees to maintain a military force; and the Rajah of Tanjore agrees to contribute annually a certain sum of money hereinafter mentioned as his share of the expense of the said military force; the said Rajah further agreeing that the disposal of the said sum, together with the arrangement and employment of the troops supported by it, shall be left entirely to the said Company. Art. 3. It is hereby also agreed, that for the further security and defence of the countries belonging and subject to the contracting parties in the Carnatic, etc., that all forts shall be garrisoned by the troops of the said Company. Art. 8. In case the said Rajah shall at any time have occasion for any number of troops for the collection of his revenues, the support of his authority, or the good order and government of his country, the said Company agree to furnish a sufficient number of troops for that purpose, on public representation being made by the said Rajah to the President in [478] Council of Fort St. George, of the necessity for employing such troops, and of the objects to be obtained thereby. Art. 9. The said Rajah shall receive regular information of all negotiations which shall relate to declaring war or making peace, wherein the said Company may engage, and the interests of the Carnatic and its dependencies may be concerned; and the said Rajah shall be considered as an ally of the said Company in all Treaties which shall in any respect affect the Carnatic and countries depending thereon, or belonging to either of the contracting parties contiguous thereto: and the said Rajah agrees that he will not enter into any negotiations or political correspondence with any European or native power without the consent of the said Company."

The third Treaty was dated the 25th October, 1799, and was made between Sevajee, the then Rajah of Tanjore, and Benjamin Tovin, Esq., Resident at Tanjore, acting under powers from the Governor-General, the material provisions of which were as follows:—Art. 2. After reciting that it had become indispensably necessary to establish a regular and permanent system for the better administration of the revenue of the country of Tanjore, stipulates "that all former provisions for securing a partial or temporary interference on the part of the Honourable Company in the government or in the administration of the revenues of the country of Tanjore shall be entirely annulled; and that, in lieu thereof, a permanent system for the collection of the revenue, and for the administration of justice, shall be established in the manner hereafter described." Art. 3. The Honourable Company shall be at liberty, as soon as possible, to ascertain, determine, and establish rights of property, and [479] to fix a reasonable assessment upon the several Soubahs, Pergunnahs, and villages of the country of Tanjore, and to secure a fixed and permanent revenue. Art. 4. A Court, or Courts, shall be established for the due administration of civil and criminal justice, under the sole authority of the English East India Company. The said Courts shall be composed of officers to be appointed by the Governor in Council of Fort St. George for the time being, and shall in no instance whatever be subjected to the control, authority, or interference of the said Rajah: but shall be conducted according to such Ordinances and Regulations (framed with due regard to the existing laws and usages of the country) as shall, from time to time, be enacted and published by the said Governor in Council. Art. 9. It is stipulated and agreed that the Rajah shall be treated on all occasions in his own territories, as well as in those of the Company, with all the attention, respect, and honour which is due to a friend and ally of the British nation. Art. 10. Whereas his Excellency, the Rajah, has had occasion to complain of inconvenience to his Excellency and his servants, from the present mode of garrisoning his Excellency's hereditary fort of Tanjore by a part of the Honourable Company's troops, it is stipulated and agreed, with a view to the accommodation and satisfaction of his Excellency, that the said fort of Tanjore shall be evacuated by the Company's troops entirely, and that his Excellency shall be at full liberty to garrison the said fort in such manner as to him shall seem fit. Art. 12. In complaints brought before any of the Courts of justice in which it shall appear, either by the application of the Rajah or the representation of the Defendant, at or before the time of giving in his [480] or her answer, or by the petition of the Complainant, that both parties are relations, or servants, or dependants of his Excellency, or inhabitants usually resident within the fort of Tanjore, it is stipulated and agreed that such parties shall, in the first instance, be referred for justice to the Rajah, or to any person he may appoint to dispense it. Any complaint against the Rajah's relations, immediate servants, or others, residing in the fort of Tanjore, by persons of a different description, shall, in the first instance, be made to the Company's representative at Tanjore, who shall prefer it to his Excellency. By other articles of this Treaty, provision was made for the collection of the revenue by the Governor in Council, and for the payment of one-fifth part of the same to the Rajah.

Subject to the obligations to the British Government imposed by these Treaties, the reigning Rajah of Tanjore remained Sovereign of the country, and within the fort of Tanjore his power continued absolute, extending to the power of life and death.

On the 29th of October, 1855, Sevajee died at the fort of Tanjore, without leaving male issue, or son by adoption, or any brother him surviving. Upon the fact of his death being communicated to the Court of Directors of the East India Company, they by a despatch to the Government of India, dated the 16th of April, 1856, in concurrence with the opinion of such Government, and of the Government of Madras, declared the dignity of Rajah of Tanjore to be extinct; and declared the Rajah of Tanjore lapsed to the British Government.

In consequence of the lapse of the Raj, questions with respect to the maintenance of the late Rajah's [481] family, and other matters, came before the Government of Madras for their decision; and on the 10th of July, 1856, the Chief Secretary to that Government addressed a letter from their political department to the Government of India, of which the following is an extract:—"Par. 5. On the demise of the Rajah the Government directed the Resident to continue, until further orders, the payment of all customary pensions, allowances, or wages, to the family, dependants, or servants of the late prince; but that the recipients were clearly to understand that these disbursements had been authorized only temporarily and until the decision of the Honourable Court upon the whole question was received. Par. 6. The investigation of the numerous claims to provision of some kind that will be advanced by the parties referred to in the preceding paragraphs, will of itself be no light task. There are, however, several other important subjects for inquiry, in connection with the late Rajah, besides these claims. Par. 7. First, there are some very valuable Chuttrums, or Choultries, endowed with lands yielding an annual revenue of about a lac and Rs. 20,000. There are large balances outstanding against the holders of these lands, who, aware of the Rajah's objections to seek the aid of the Company's Courts to enforce his just rights, have wilfully withheld their rents. In some cases the lands have been misappropriated or fraudulently alienated, and there are numerous idlers and hangers-on of the palace, servants who hold useless offices in these institutions. These Choultry establishments should be remodelled and freed from all abuses, and the property belonging to them devoted for the purposes for which it was originally granted. Par. 8. [482] Secondly, claims on the part of Pagodas to payments of allowances have to be investigated, and some scheme laid down in respect to the continuance of these endowments, in some cases, either by money grants, or by assignment of lands. Par. 9. Thirdly, there are some valuable villages belonging to the Raj in different parts of the Province, some retained by Sevajee when the country was assumed by the British Government, and some subsequently acquired by purchase. These should be examined, and any claims to or liens upon them considered. Par. 10. Fourthly, some debts due by the late Rajah to private parties, or claims on behalf of members of the family, still remain to be settled. Par. 11. Fifthly, arrangements must be made for the abolition of the Rajah's Courts, and for the disposal of suits already on the file, as well as for the establishment of a Company's Court (probably that of a District Moonsiff) in the fort of Tanjore, which will henceforth be under the jurisdiction of the civil and criminal Courts of the Zillah. Par. 12. Sixthly, there are in the palace state jewels of great value, a valuable library of Oriental works, and an armoury, which have fallen in to Government with the Raj. Par. 13. It appears to this Government, that the several matters above recited cannot be duly inquired into except by an Officer specially deputed for the purpose. The present acting Collector has been but lately appointed: he is new to the District, has had no experience in the intrigues of a Mahratta Court, and even were his acquaintance with them greater, the onerous duties devolving on him as Collector and Magistrate of one of the heaviest Districts under this Presidency, would leave him no leisure for such a task. Par. 14. Under these considerations, I am directed to suggest, that [483] some officer should be specially sent as Commissioner to Tanjore, should be placed in charge of the Residency, and be directed to investigate and report upon the various important questions above enumerated, and any others that may hereafter occur to this Government as demanding inquiry in connection with the general subject. Par. 15. If this be approved, the Government propose to select for the duty, as the officer best qualified for it, Mr. H. Forbes, at present acting as third member of the Board of Revenue, who has for several years been Resident at Tanjore, as well as Collector and Magistrate of the district, and who possesses an intimate acquaintance with the affairs of the Durbar."

In reply to this letter, the Secretary to the Government of India addressed to a letter to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Madras, dated the 8th of September, 1856, of which the following is an extract:—"Par. 3. In your previous letter, dated the 10th of July last, the Government of Madras have sufficiently shown that the subjects which call for investigation and settlement are so numerous and important, as to require to be dealt with by an officer appointed for that special purpose. The selection of Mr. H. Forbes, late Resident at Tanjore, for this duty, is a very proper one, and is accordingly sanctioned by his Lordships in Council. Par. 4. Of the various questions requiring consideration, those connected with the Choultries, and lands on which balances of revenue are due, the claims for Pagodas, the rights over villages retained by the Rajah when the administration of the country was assumed by the British Government, and the abolition of the Rajah's Courts, the Governor-General in Council leaves for disposal [484] by the Government of Madras. Par. 5. But the mode in which it may be proposed to deal with the Rajah's debts, and with the state jewels, library, and armoury, should be reported to the Government of India before any measures are taken; as also the apportionment of pensions or gratuities to the family and dependants of the Rajah."

Upon the receipt of the above letter from the Government of India, the Madras Government, on the 25th of September, 1856, appointed Mr. Forbes to be Commissioner for the purpose of the matters in question, and furnished him with instructions in regard to the conduct of his duties as such Commissioner. The material portions of those instructions were as follows:—"Par. 2. Under the authority now conveyed from the Supreme Government, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council proceeds to appoint Mr. Forbes to be Commissioner for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting upon the various questions demanding settlement in connection with the extinction of the Raj of Tanjore. Par. 3. These subjects may be divided into two classes: namely, those which have been left for the disposal of this Government, and those which are to be reported to the Government of India before any measures are taken. Par. 4. Under the first head fall—First. The Chuttrums endowed by the Rajah of Tanjore; the arrangements to be made for their future administration, and for placing them upon an improved footing, as well as for the recovery of the rents due to them, and of lands gradually alienated from them. Second. Allowances to Pagodas by assignment of the late Rajah, or his ancestors, their nature, whether terminable with the Raj, or proper to be continued as perpetual endowments, [485] and in the latter case, whether by grants of money or of land. Third. The state of the landed property, villages, or detached lands retained by Sevajee on the cession of the Tanjore country in 1799, or subsequently acquired by him or by the late Rajah, the claims to or liens upon them. Fourth. The abolition of the Rajah's Courts, and provision to be made for the dispensation of civil and criminal justice by Courts of the Honourable Company of some of the classes obtaining in their territory. Par. 5. On all these questions it will be for the Commissioner to report to Government after due inquiry, and the Government will then pass on each such final orders as may appear to be called for. Par. 6. The subjects reserved for the ultimate decision of the Supreme Government are—First. The debts of the late Rajah. Second. The State property, viz.:—jewels, library, armoury, etc. Third. Stipends, pensions, or gratuities to the family, servants, and dependants of the late Rajah. Par. 7. On these matters it will be for Mr. Forbes to report in detail, and to supply all the information that may be necessary to assist the Government of India in their settlement. Par. 8. Lists will of course be taken of all the jewels belonging to the Raj, and passing with it to the Honourable Company, as also of the State armour and weapons, and catalogue of the library. Due means will be adopted for the safe and careful custody of these valuables, until the pleasure of the Government of India be known regarding them."

Acting under this authority Mr. Forbes directed the chief officer of the palace to prepare statements of the lands and other State property of the Raj, and on his arrival at Tanjore, as the statement had not been made out, he addressed a letter, dated the 17th of October, [486] 1856, to that officer, in which were these para graphs:—" Par. 4. When, on the 15th instant, I communicated to you, to the Durbar generally, and the nephews of the late Rajah, the decision at which the Government had arrived with reference to the Tanjore Raj, and the general principles on which I was instructed to act in resuming the Raj and making provisions for the family and retainers, I informed you that, while all private property would be scrupulously respected, the public property of the State would pass to the British Government: that property the Government have ordered me to place in safe and careful keeping. Par. 5. To enable me to do this, and also to place it in my power to obtain all the information I require about the State property, whether in land, jewels, or otherwise, it is my intention to assume possession, in the name of the British Government, of all the late Rajah's villages and gardens, including endowments to Choultries and Pagodas, of the public property now in the fort of Tanjore, and of all the records connected with the Raj; but while it is necessary that I should do this, I have to assure you, and to beg that you will assure others, that a careful investigation will be made into all claims that may be advanced by institutions or individuals to any part of the property, and that all to which a claim may be substantiated will be restored to its proper owner."

On the 18th of October, 1865, Mr. Forbes took possession of the property within the fort of Tanjore, and of the lands held by the late Rajah, or held by those who held them under Sunnuds of the Rajah.

After taking possession of the property in the manner above mentioned, and while Mr. Forbes was [487] engaged in making lists and catalogues of the articles constituting the different descriptions of the property, and selling part of the property, a Bill was filed by the Respondent on the 18th of November, 1856, on the equity side of the Supreme Court at Madras, against the East India Company. The Bill stated, that Sevajee at the time of his death, was possessed of and entitled to, as of his own right and private property, and distinct from the property belonging to the Raj of Tanjore, large estates, both real and personal, of the value of many lacs of rupees; that on the death of Sevajee, the Respondent, as his eldest widow, according to Hindoo law, became entitled to inherit and possess his private and particular estate, real and personal, and to administer the same; and that, with a full knowledge of the Respondent's rights, the East India Company, by their officers, servants, and agents acting by their orders, and in particular by the Collector and subordinate officers of the Collectorate of Tanjore, and by Mr. Forbes, began to interfere and intermeddle with the private estate and effects of Sevajee, and thereby, and from their power and control over the country, prevented the Respondent from receiving and possessing the same, and had refused to deliver the same to the Respondent, and that the officers and servants and agents of the East India Company had possessed themselves of the whole of the private and particular estate and effects, real and personal, of Sevajee, and had made, or were making, full and particular lists and inventories thereof, and had sold and disposed of and destroyed a considerable part thereof, and had received the proceeds of the sale and disposal thereof, and retained the same in [488] their hands, and threatened and intended, unless restrained by the injunction of the Court, to sell and dispose of the remainder thereof, and to appropriate the proceeds to their own use; and the Bill prayed that the Respondent, as the eldest widow of Sevajee deceased, and the first married among his surviving widows, might be declared by the decree of the Court entitled to inherit and possess, as his heir and legal representative, his private and particular estate and effects, real and personal, left by him at the time of his death, subject to the payment and satisfaction thereof of the private debts, if any, of Sevajee, and to any legal claims and demands that might exist against such private and particular estate and effects. That the East India Company might be declared to be trustees for the Respondent for and in respect of the private and particular estate and effects, real and personal, left by Sevajee at the time of his death, and possessed by them, their officers, servants, and agents, as in the Bill mentioned, or which without their wilful neglect or default might have been so possessed. That an account might be taken of the private and particular estate and effects, real and personal, of Sevajee, possessed by the East India Company, their officers, servants, and agents, or which without their wilful neglect or default might have been so possessed, and of the value thereof, distinguishing what shall remain in specie from what shall have been sold or otherwise disposed of. That the East India Company might be directed forthwith to deliver up to the Respondent the private and particular estate and effects of Sevajee which may so remain in specie, and to pay to the Respondent the value of such part thereof, which by their wilful neglect or default [489] might not have been possessed by them, their officers, servants, or agents, as aforesaid, or which may have been sold or otherwise disposed of by them, their officers, servants, or agents, as aforesaid. That the East India Company, their officers, servants, and agents, might be restrained by the injunction of the Court from further interfering, intermeddling with, selling, or disposing of the private and particular estate and effects, real or personal, left by Sevajee at the time of his death, and for a receiver.

The Supreme Court at Madras granted an injunction restraining Mr. Forbes from proceeding with the sale.

The answer of the East India Company stated that Rajah Sevajee was up to and at the time of his death, Rajah and reigning monarch of Tanjore, and was a Sovereign prince entitled to and in the exercise and enjoyment of the rights, privileges, powers, and dignity of an absolute Sovereign within the limits of the hereditary fort of Tanjore, and of certain other Districts and lands adjacent thereto, but subject as to the residue of the country appertaining to the Raj, or kingdom of Tanjore, to certain engagements and relations between himself and the British Government. And the answer further stated, that in entering into the Treaties before mentioned, and in treating the sovereignty and territories of Tanjore as lapsed to the East India Company for the purposes of the Government of India in trust for the British Crown; in appointing, through the Government of India, Mr. Forbes as Special Commissioner, and in taking possession of the property of the late Rajah, they acted in their public political capacity, and in exercise of the general powers, privileges, and au-[490]-thorities vested in them by the various Charters and Acts of Parliament, by which the possession and government of the British territories in India, and the powers of making peace and war, and entering into Treaties, had been committed to them in trust for the Crown of Great Britain; and that all the acts and matters set forth in the answer, were acts and matters of State. And by their answer the East India Company insisted, that the question as to their right to take possession of the estate and property which Rajah Sevajee died possessed of and entitled to as Rajah of Tanjore, or of any and what parts of the estate and property, was a question of State arising from the character of the Rajah as a Sovereign, and the political relations between the East India Company, acting in trust for Her Majesty, and the State of Tanjore; and they, therefore, submitted that the matters set forth in the answer, and on which they rested their right to take possession of the property which was of the late Rajah of Tanjore, involved the construction of Treaties and of other acts of State, and were matters which could not be inquired into by the Court, or in any Municipal Court of justice within Her Majesty's dominions. And the answer further stated that, without in any way waiving the right of the East India Company to retain the whole of the property possessed by them and mentioned in the schedules thereto annexed, and without in any way admitting the jurisdiction of the Court to inquire into the grounds on which such right was vested; it had been determined, as an act of State and government, by the East India Company, through their Governor-General of India in Council and their Governor of Fort St. George in Council, that the [491] property and effects specified in certain schedules marked G. H. O. P. and Q. should be dealt with and disposed of as if the same had been the property of Rajah Sevajee as a private individual, regard being had in the first instance to the just debts of and claims upon Rajah Sevajee, which debts the East India Company were desirous should be paid from the estate, they being willing to allow the whole of such estate and property to be delivered over, subject to the debts of and claims upon the late Rajah, to the person or persons who would have been the legal representative or representatives of the Rajah, had he been a private individual, upon such person or persons giving adequate security, to the satisfaction of the East India Company, for the proper administration of the property in payment of the debts and otherwise. And the answer further stated, that the Government had resolved to appropriate the whole of the property mentioned in certain other schedules thereto marked M. and N., and all property similarly circumstanced which belonged to Rajah Sevajee, and not to third persons who might claim the same, for the payment of any of the debts due by the deceased Rajah which might appear to them to be fair and just, and after such payment to appropriate the residue of such property towards making a provision for the family of the Rajah. And the answer submitted, that, in any point of view, the question whether any and what portions of the property left by Rajah Sevajee were his private property, or were property of the State of Tanjore, was a question involving the construction of a Treaty and relations between the States and the general political powers of the Government of India; and was, therefore, a question not [492] cognizable by any Municipal Court of justice. And the answer further submitted, that the Court had no jurisdiction in respect of the matters aforesaid, being matters concerning the revenues under the management of the Governor and Council. The answer admitted the state of Sevajee's family, at the time of his death, as stated in the Bill, but without admitting that his property was liable to be administered as that of a private individual; and the Defendants submitted whether, on the death of Sevajee, all his surviving widows did not become his joint heiresses and representatives, and would not have inherited his private and particular estate, if any, to the extent of the interest of a Hindoo widow according to Hindoo law. The Defendants set forth in schedules annexed to their answer an account of the property, estate and effects of Sevajee, including the property claimed by third parties, possessed by them, or by their officers or agents on their behalf, and of the value thereof, so far as they were able to form any opinion respecting such value; but without admitting that the Rajah left any property that could be called his private or particular property; and without admitting that the Respondent had any legal claim or right in respect of any property taken possession of by the East India Company or their officers or agents, the answer stated that they did not intend to treat the property of Sevajee in the schedules, marked G. H. O. P. and Q. respectively, as belonging to them for their own use, or in trust as aforesaid, or otherwise, or as forming part of their revenues, or as being applicable to the purposes aforesaid.

Schedule G. of the answer, contained a list of certain property, described as real property acquired since [493] 1799, which from its nature was not essentially public or State property. Schedule H. contained a list of similar property not taken possession of by the East India Company. Schedule O. contained a list of personal property described as acquired since 1799, and which from its nature was not essentially public or State property. Schedules P. and Q. contained a list of personal property of the same nature, not taken possession of by the East India Company. Schedule R. contained a list of the horses, elephants, cattle, carriages, etc., of the late Rajah which had been sold.

The hearing of the cause took place on the 29th and 30th of September, and the 1st of October, 1857, when evidence not material to state was gone into on both sides. The cause stood over until the 11th of December, 1857, for judgment, on which day the Court decreed and declared that the Respondent, as the eldest widow of Sevajee, and the first married among his surviving widows, was entitled to inherit and possess, as his heir and legal representative, his private and particular estate and effects, real and personal, left by him at the time of his death, subject to the payment and satisfaction thereof of the private debts, if any, of Sevajee, and to any legal claims and demands that might exist against such private and particular estate and effects, and that the Defendants were trustees for the Respondent for and in respect of the private and particular estate and effects, real and personal, left by Sevajee at the time of his death and possessed by them, their officers, servants, and agents; and the Court ordered that it should be referred to the Master to take an account of the private and particular estate and effects, [494] real and personal, of Sevajee, possessed by the Defendants.

The following reasons for this decree were transmitted by the Chief Justice, Sir Christopher Rawlinson:—"The Plaintiff by her Bill prays that she may be declared, as senior or first married widow of Sevajee, the late Rajah of Tanjore, who died without male issue, to be entitled to the private and particular estate and effects of her deceased husband, subject to the payment of his debts, etc. She also prays that the Defendants may be declared to be trustees for her of such of the property as may have been taken possession of by them or their servants; also for an account and a Receiver. The Defendants in their answer set up two lines of defence; first, that the Plaintiff has no case on the merits: and, secondly, that the Court has not any jurisdiction to try the suit. As regards the first, they submit that the late Rajah Sevajee was an independent and absolute Sovereign, and as such was not possessed of any private estate as distinguished from the public or State property: and they further allege, that, according to Hindoo law, all the widows, and not the senior widow alone, are entitled to succeed to the estate of a Mahratta man dying without male issue either natural or adopted. In support of their second line of defence, namely, that the Court has no jurisdiction, they submit that they took and detained the property of the late Rajah in their public and political capacity: that their taking of the property was an act of State, and that the question of what portion is private and what public property involves the construction of a Treaty, and that consequently neither this nor any other Municipal Court in Her Majesty's dominions has any [495] jurisdiction to entertain the question. It was also urged that the Court had no jurisdiction, because the suit has reference 'to a matter concerning the revenue under the management of the Governor and Council.' I will now state what I consider to have been established on the one side and on the other, and how much of the several defences relied on by the Defendants have been made out. I think that all the material facts set out in the Plaintiff's Bill have been clearly proved. I am of opinion also that the Plaintiff, according to Hindoo law, is, as the senior and first married widow of the late Rajah Sevajee, entitled to her late husband's private and particular estate and effects; and that the Defendants have wholly failed to prove or point out to us any law or custom, such as is alleged in their answer, under which all the widows succeed to their deceased husband's estate under circumstances such as have been established in this suit. This ground of defence, it may be observed, goes only to the quantum and not to the root of the Plaintiff's claim. I am also satisfied on the evidence that the late Rajah Sevajee, a Hindoo of the Soodra caste, was not a member of an undivided family, and that he was possessed of private and self-acquired property, both real and personal, and that a distinction was observed during his life between his State or Crown jewels and those which he either purchased himself or caused to be made for the use of his numerous wives and their families. An inspection of the schedules attached to the answer, as well as the answer itself, confirms me in my opinion that much of the property detained by the Defendants is of such a nature as cannot allow of its being considered State property. Take, for instance, schedule R., the contents [496] of which have been sold by the Defendants. Can it be believed that all the carriages, including numerous pony carriages and children's carriages, and palanquins, or the cows and horses, ponies, etc., were State or public property, or ever treated as such, or that all the contents of schedule M., including numerous female jewels and trinkets, or, that all the female apparel, clothes, shawls, silks, laces, etc., in schedule O., are State property? It is true that, as regards some of these schedules, G., H., O., P., and Q., the Defendants, in their very cautiously drawn answer (and which, were it not that of a Corporation whose personal knowledge in most instances is necessarily small, might be considered unsatisfactory), admit that the property in the last-named schedule 'is not essentially public,' a somewhat ambiguous phrase; and that as regarded it and some other property, both real and personal, they do not intend treating it in the same way, or on trust, as the property in the other schedules, but are willing to give it up as if it had been private property. I will only observe on this, that I do not exactly see, unless the property referred to is private, how the Defendants can justify treating in any other way than as public property, really public, and which as such has come to their hands in trust. But the learned Counsel for the Defendants contend that the contents of the schedules and the nature of the property are immaterial, as no distinction, they say, can be allowed between the public and private property of an absolute Sovereign, as he can dispose of the whole of it as he may think fit: citing as an authority for this principle the case of The Advocate-General of Bombay v. Amerchund (1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 329 n.), and The Lord-Advocate v. Lord [497] Dunglas (9 Cl. and Fin. 211). This last case was referred to for the following dictum of Lord Brougham's, namely, 'It is only within the last half-century that any private property has been acknowledged to exist in the Crown at all; prior to that, all lands descending on the Crown, even from ancestors or collateral relatives, were held jure coronæ. All the property of the Crown is held for public purposes, and is Crown property, except that which the individual Sovereign has retained a right to deal with in his private and personal capacity.' This dictum appears to be confined to landed property, and, whether strictly correct as regards all landed property, is, I think, with every respect to the noble and learned Lord, fairly open to doubt; for, though it is true that according to the Common Law of England the King, being a Corporation, purchases of real property made by him after the assumption of the Crown vest in him in his Sovereign capacity, and descends to his successors, 'still purchases made before the accession to the Crown, or descent from collateral ancestors after the accession of the Crown, vests in a natural capacity' (see Co. Litt. 15 b, note 4), showing that even in England the Monarch could take real as well as personal property in his own right. As was, however, observed by the Bench during the argument, the Statutes of 1 Anne, c. 7, and 39th and 40th Geo. III., c. 88, regulate questions regarding the private property of the British Sovereign; and it is not by the English Statute, or Common law, that the questions in this suit are to be decided, but by the Hindoo law. And even the statement in the case referred to, 1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 329, namely, that there was no distinction between the public and private property of [498] an absolute Sovereign, must, I think, be taken in connection with the facts of that case, and the point then under the consideration of the Court. In that case, as well as in Elphinstone v. Bedreechund (1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 316), the question arose out of the seizure of an enemy's property; and it was held that on the seizure of the property of a hostile Sovereign, si non flagrante sed non dum cessante bello, no distinction could be allowed between his public and private property. Here there is no question as to the seizure of an enemy's property, or as to peace or war, but whether the late Rajah Sevajee possessed any private property, and if so, whether the detention of such property, now belonging to an inhabitant of a territory peaceably become part of the British territories in India, can be justified, and on the grounds set up by the Defendants. But admitting that in the case of an absolute Sovereign, such as was contemplated in the above case, no distinction can be made between his public and private property (and few such, I think, can be found in the present age), can I assume, on the facts before us, that the late Rajah was such an absolute Sovereign as that he could have disposed of his fort or other public buildings or State jewels as he did of his other property, both real and personal? There was no proof before us of his ever having disposed of any of the State property; and as to his being an absolute Sovereign, what evidence had the Court before it of that fact? The evidence, as far as it went, tends, I think, to show that his Sovereignty was little more than nominal; that he exercised no Sovereign powers over the Kingdom of Tanjore; that he resided within the circumscribed limits of the fort of Tanjore (where a resident and officer of the East [499] India Company was always present), enjoying little more than, to use the expression of the Directors of the East India Company, 'a titular Sovereignty,' and certainly not more than, to adopt the words of the Defendants' answer, 'the outward state and dignity of the reigning monarch.' To what even that amounted was not very clearly shown. We had evidence, however, that the late Rajah never did any of the acts that mark Sovereign power; for instance, he did not send or receive Ambassadors, or keep up political relations with any foreign States; he did not coin money; he did not collect or in any way manage the revenues of the Kingdom of Tanjore; but it was shown that he received an annual stipend from the East India Company, some of his receipts for which were put in, for what purpose I hardly know, unless, perhaps, for the last few words, by which the receipt of a certain sum on account of the East India Company was acknowledged 'as part of my lac of star pagodas and one fifth part of the net revenue of my country for the year'; not of any kingdom, be it observed. Upon the whole of the evidence before us I am satisfied that the late Rajah Sevajee was not the absolute Sovereign suggested by the Defendants, and that he had private property, both real and personal, as I have above stated. I am further strengthened in this last conclusion by the fact that, according to Hindoo law and custom, a Hindoo Sovereign may have private property. See Strange's "Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 209, where, after stating that a kingdom is not divisible, it is added, that 'the effects and private estate of a Sovereign, like those of an ordinary individual (Hindoo), are in common, and distributable amongst his sons.' And 2nd vol., App. [500] 329, is to the same effect. See also 2 Colebrooke's Hindu Law, c. 1, s. 1, et seq. My judgment on the above part of the case has been formed without any reference to the Treaty of 1799, put in evidence by the Defendants, possibly for the purpose of supporting one of the points raised by them, namely, that the Court could not take cognizance of the suit, because it involved the construction of a Treaty. Upon this point I would here remark, as well as upon some others equally beyond dispute, but which were much dwelt on by the learned Counsel for the Defendants, that the Court has never entertained any doubt respecting them, though not able to see their applicability to the facts of the present case. I refer to such points as that the construction of Treaties, or the public acts of State between Sovereign powers, or acts relating to peace or war, could not be tried by any Municipal Courts. As little matter of doubt is it that the East India Company, though subjects, have certain Sovereign powers delegated to them, such as those of making peace and war, and of making Treaties with certain of the native powers in Asia, and that concerning such acts as can be included under the above heads neither this nor any other municipal Court has any jurisdiction to inquire. But in the way in which the Plaintiff shapes her case before the Court, I think, that these points do not fairly arise. The Plaintiff sues as a private individual, and as the subject of a country forming part of the British territories in India. Of the annexion of the Raj, of the Defendants taking possession of its revenues, or of the State property of the kingdom, whether consisting of lands, forts, jewels, or munitions of war, she makes no complaint. She sues only for what [501] she alleges to be her property according to the Hindoo law, namely, the private estate and effects of her deceased husband, Rajah Sevajee, the whole of which, she alleges, the Defendants detain from her without any justification. Let us proceed now to the Defendants' second line of defence, namely, that to the jurisdiction of the Court. They say, assuming that there was private property, its seizure and detention cannot be inquired into by this Court: first, because its seizure was an act of State; and, secondly, because the property seized, or a portion of it at least, is revenue. First, then, as to the seizure being 'an act of State' (though many of my arguments will bear on both lines of defence). What is an act of State? It is not every act by a Government, or by those representing the Sovereign in a foreign country, which will be exempted from the jurisdiction of the Municipal Courts. (See Cameron v. Kyte, 3 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 332.) But assuming an act of State to be an act of the Sovereign power, in relation to peace or war, or an act done by it as being absolutely necessary for the public safety, or ne quid detrimenti res publica capiat (and under this head a benefit or increase to the revenue can hardly be included), or acts of a similar description, have the Defendants brought the acts of seizure and detention of the Plaintiff's property within the principle of the protection they set up? And further, was, in fact, the seizure of the private property an act ordered by any Government at all? Now what are the facts proved which bear on this portion of the case? After the death of the late Rajah Sevajee, which took place in October, 1855, it was determined by the East India Directors that the Raj of Tanjore had lapsed to the East India Company for want of [502] male heirs to Rajah Sevajee. Though this lapse was not immediately publicly announced, the East India Company must, I think, be considered to have become the Sovereign power throughout the kingdom of Tanjore from the death of Rajah Sevajee. No very perceptible change in the government of the country at large would be made, as the territories of Tanjore had long been under the management and control of the East India Company. Such then being the state of things, it is only after a correspondence between the East India Directors and the Government of India and of Madras, that in September, 1856, Mr. Forbes is appointed, under the direction of the Government of India, for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting upon the various questions demanding settlement in connection with the extinction of the Raj of Tanjore. In the letter of the Government of India, of the 8th of September, 1856, authorizing the appointment of an officer on this special duty, I find the following passage:—'But the mode in which it may be proposed to deal with the Rajah's debts, and with the State jewels, library, and armoury, should be reported to the Government of India before any measures are taken.' It might be contended from the concluding words of the above extracts that no authority was given or intended to be given for the taking possession of even the State jewels, etc., till some further report had been made to the Government of India. Such, however, does not appear to have been the construction put upon it by the Government of Madras, who, on the receipt of the above letter, instructed Mr. Forbes, in a letter of the 25th of September, 1856, 'to take lists of the jewels belonging to the Raj, and passing with it to the Honourable Company, as also [503] of the State armoury and weapons.' Neither of the above letters appear to contemplate, much less to authorize, the seizure or detention of other than State property, or, in other words, of the property of the Raj, passing with it to the East India Company. It was proved, however, I may here remark, that previous to this authority being given, the rents and profits of the villages and lands bought by Sevajee had been received by Mr. Forbes since the Rajah's death. The evidence of Ramachundra Row, uncontradicted, is, that Mr. Forbes had been receiving the rents and profits of those villages since Sevajee's death. The sale also of the contents of schedule R. had taken place early in 1856. On the 18th of October, 1856, it is that Mr. Forbes, having received his new authority, which is relied on for making this seizure an act of State, took possession of the property in the fort of Tanjore. It appears to have been an indiscriminate seizure, both of public and private property: the orders of the two Governments, as I have above pointed out, having been expressly confined to the State property. Assuming then that the taking possession of the public and State property can be considered an act of State, as ordered by the Government of India, and as being a necessary consequence, perhaps, of the assumption of the Raj, how can the seizure and detention of private property (and especially of such portion as consists of rents and the produce of sales made previous to October, 1856) come under the same protection? The seizure of the private property can, I think, be held to be brought within the protection of the act of State plea only on proof either that the property was bona fide believed at the time to be all public, or that its seizure was rendered [504] unavoidable from the impossibility of distinguishing the one from the other, or because the public could not possibly have been taken possession of without also seizing the private. This last ground, it should be observed, affords no excuse for the detention. But we had not any evidence of such a state of circumstances existing as I have above suggested; no State property was shown to have been in danger, nor was there any evidence that there existed any difficulty in separating the one from the other, which ordinary care and patience, even after the seizure, might not have overcome. I say even after the seizure, for it should be borne in mind that the gravamen of the Plaintiff's complaint before the Court is the detention of her private property; not the seizure, which of course would have been the subject-matter of an action of trespass on the plea side of the Court; nor had we any proof that there was any bona fide belief that all was public property. On the contrary, Mr. Forbes, in his letter of the 17th of October, 1856, written the day before the seizure, shows that he knew there was private property amongst that about to be seized, for he expressly states that all property to which a claim shall be established shall be restored to its owner. It appears then from the above, that an order having been issued to take possession of public property, private property was taken, and is now detained under the circumstances above set out. I am of opinion that such detention cannot be considered an act of State, nor can I consider that the subsequent adoption by the Defendants can make that an act of State which originally was not so. The remaining ground relied on by the Defendants to bar the jurisdiction of the Court is, that the seizure [505] related to a matter of revenue, from inquiry into which the Court is expressly precluded by the 23rd clause of the Charter establishing the Court. In support of this point the learned Counsel cited the Statute, 16th and 17th Vict., c. 95, sec. 27, by which it is enacted 'that all real and personal estate within the said territories, escheating or lapsing for want of an heir or successor, and all property within the said territories devolving as bona vacantia for want of a rightful owner, shall (as part of the revenues of India) belong to the East India Company, in trust for Her Majesty for the service of the Government of India.' Looking to the words used in the Charter, and the inconvenience intended to be guarded against, I am inclined to think that a very fair doubt may be entertained as to whether an escheat, or lapso under the above Statute, comes within the words of the Charter as 'revenue under the management of the Governor (of Fort St. George) and Council, or as revenue collected under Regulations made by him." I think also that the same reasons do not exist for preventing the subjects of the Queen from resorting to Her Courts in the case of such escheats as in cases relating to the collection of the ordinary revenue, made as it is to a great extent in small sums, and under regulations and usages which it might be exceedingly inconvenient to submit to the consideration of the Queen's Court. I think, however, that this line of defence, namely, that the property seized was revenue, may be disposed of on the same grounds as I have considered a sufficient answer to the defence that the seizure was an act of State: for supposing that the seizure of the public property, which had lapsed to the East India Company under the Statute, [506] to have been an act done in the collection of the revenue within the meaning of the Charter, can we extend the same protection over the wilful seizure and detention of private property; an act not ordered either by Government, or justified by any Regulation, or necessitated by any difficulty or unavoidable necessity, as I have above already shown? I think we should not be justified in doing so, being of opinion that the property was seized and has since been detained with the knowledge that some of it was private property. This fact, I think, distinguishes this case from Spooner v. Juddan (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 353), which was relied on in support of the revenue defence as well as that of the act of State. In that case a slip had been made; and there can be little doubt, after reading the facts of that case, but that the Defendant bona fide believed that he might make the distress for the whole arrears of quit-rent due from the premises, without regard to the question of whose name was mentioned in the warrant. I fully subscribe to the authority of that case, as well as to the large class of cases establishing the rule, that parties bona fide believing they are acting in pursuance of a Statute and according to law, are entitled to the special protection which the Legislature may have afforded them, though they have been guilty of an illegal act. But I do not think the principles there laid down applicable to the present case, which is distinguishable not only on account of the want of bona fides, but also on the ground that it is not an action of trespass for the seizure, but a suit for the detention of the property of the Plaintiff. I must here observe that though I am now delivering the judgment of the Court, Mr. Justice Davidson, who, owing to his absence, has not [507] had any opportunity of reading this judgment, and consequently is not answerable for the reasons or observations contained in it, fully concurs with me in the facts of the case and in the conclusion at which I have arrived, namely, that the Plaintiff is entitled to a decree, on the ground that, as to part at least of what they have done, the defence set up by the Defendants cannot avail them, because they are unnecessarily and wilfully detaining private property of the late Rajah Sevajee, with full knowledge that it is such private property, and that they have not any title to it whatever. The Defendants having then failed to establish any of their grounds of defence, it remains for me only to declare the Plaintiff entitled to the decree of the Court as prayed:—First, that as senior, or first married widow, she is entitled to the private and particular estate and effects of her deceased husband, the late Rajah Sevajee. Second, that the Defendants may be declared trustees for her for so much of such property as they have possessed themselves of. Third, for an account of all property. The other points (including costs) reserved until after the Master's report, and for further directions."

The present appeal was from the above decree, and was prosecuted by the Secretary of State in Council of India, who came in the place of the East India Company (see Statute, 21st and 22nd Vict., c. 106, for the better Government of India; section 3 declares that the Secretary of State is to have the powers formerly exercised by the East India Company).

Sir Hugh Cairns, Q.C., Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and Mr. W. H. Melvill, for the Secretary of State in Council for the affairs in India.

The substantial question is, whether the taking pos-[508]-session of the deceased Rajah's property by the East India Company, in virtue of Treaties authorizing the annexation of the Raj of Tanjore, was not such an act of State and Sovereign authority as cannot be questioned or inquired into by a Municipal Court within the territories of the East India Company. Three questions are involved in this consideration: First, whether by the Charters and Statutes creating and defining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Madras, the East India Company, as the governing power in India, is amenable to that jurisdiction for acts done by them in their governing and Sovereign character; secondly, whether the acts complained of are not acts of State and Government and of such a nature, that the Government who have done the acts, cannot be made amenable to any Municipal Court whatever; and thirdly, whether, having regard to the fact that the seizure involved the question of a Sovereignty, namely, the Raj of Tanjore, there was any foundation for the distinction taken by the Court below between the public and private property of the late Sovereign the Rajah.

Upon the first point. The Supreme Court of Madras was created by the Charter of 1800. The 21st section of that Charter defines the jurisdiction of the Court, the powers of which are extended by Statute, 4th Geo. IV., c. 71, s. 17. The 23rd section expressly provides that it shall not be competent for the Court to entertain or exercise jurisdiction in any suit or action against the Governor-General or the Governor of Madras for or on account of any order, or other act, matter, or thing done in their public capacity, or acting as Governor-General or [509] Governor and Council. The 30th section directs and points out the mode of suing the East India Company when it is capable of being sued in the Supreme Court. The Calcutta Charter of 1774, and the Statutes, 13th Geo. III., c. 63, sec. 13 and 14, and 21st Geo. III., c. 70, sec. 2, are in pari materia with the Madras Charter. The quarrel between Sir Elijah Impey and Warren Hastings respecting the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Calcutta, led to the passing of the latter Statute (vol. 4 Mills' Hist. of Brit. India, by Wilson, Book V. ch. 6), which excludes that Court from taking cognizance of the acts of the Governor in Council. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the position of the East India Company at the time the Supreme Court at Madras was created by the Charter of 1800. Under the Statute, 9th and 10th Will. III., c. 44, and the Charter of incorporation of Will. III. of 1693, and Statute, 33rd Geo. III., ch. 52, sec. 1 and 74, the East India Company had a twofold character: first, they were a trading Company; and secondly, they had Sovereign authority, with the power of making peace and war. The Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 85, took away the trading monopoly, but the Sovereign rights were left to the East India Company in trust for the British Government.—[Lord Kingsdown: Does your argument go to this extent, that the East India Company could not be sued at all in the Indian Courts?—No, they were liable to be sued in the Courts in India, as here, for acts done in their trading capacity. They could be sued upon a contract. The Bank of Bengal v. The United Company (Bignell's Reps. 127; S.C. 2 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 245). In Gibson v. The East India Com- [510] pany (5 Bingh. N.C. 273), the Chief Justice Tindal defines the character of the East India Company and their liability to be sued for acts done in their trading capacity. He says, "It is manifest that the East India Company have been invested with powers and privileges of a twofold nature, perfectly distinct from each other; namely, powers to carry on trade as merchants, and (subject only to the prerogative of the Crown, to be exercised by the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India), power to acquire, and retain, and govern territory, to raise and maintain armed forces by sea and land, and to make peace or war with the native powers of India."—[Sir John Coleridge: Doe d. Seebkrista v. The East India Company (6 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 267), was a case of ejectment brought in the Supreme Court of Calcutta to recover a piece of freehold land which the East India Company claimed to be entitled to.]—The transactions upon which the question in this suit depended were not matters subject to the jurisdiction of the Madras Court, or indeed of any Municipal jurisdiction in India. They were matters of State arising out of a political transaction. The maintenance of such a suit, as is here contended for, would be inconsistent with principles of public policy.—[Dr. Lushington: That very question was decided here in 1827, in the case of The East India Company v. Syed Ally (see this case, post [7 Moo. Ind. App. 555]), when the Privy Council held that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. That was a case of resumption of a Jaghire held as an Altumghah enam under a grant from former Nawabs of the Carnatic, which the East India Company under the Treaties resumed by virtue of their Sovereign power. It was determined that the propriety of the [511] exercise of such Sovereign power could not be questioned by the Supreme Court at Madras;

the very Court from whence the present appeal comes.]—That case has not been reported. It is no doubt most applicable, and is all important to our argument. There is, however, another case, Dhackerjee Dadajee v. The East India Company, which is similar in principle, which came before the Supreme Court at Bombay in 1843, a report of which is to be found in Sir Erskine Perry's notes of decided cases (2 Morley's Dig. 307). That was an action of trespass brought against the East India Company, for breaking and entering the Plaintiff's dwelling house by order of the Bombay Government, and it was held by both the Judges of that Court that no action would lie against the East India Company, as it was an act done by the authority of the Governor and Council, and, therefore, an act of State, and for which the East India Company were not answerable. Being an act of State, it was clear that the Supreme Court could not take cognizance of the action. On the first head we submit then, that upon the authorities as well as the principles of international law, the seizure and taking possession of the property of the Rajah of Tanjore, was an act of Government and State, done by the East India Company in their Sovereign character, and by virtue of their Sovereign power; and as such, incapable of being questioned or inquired into by any Municipal Court, more especially the Supreme Court of Madras, created by the Madras Charter of 1800. The East India Company v. Syed Ally [7 Moo. Ind. App. 555].

This brings us to the second question involved in the inquiry, namely, whether the acts done were [512] not only acts of State, but done as acts of State; for if so, as already shown, they could not be inquired into by the Supreme Court at Madras. Now, the authority for the seizure emanated from the Government. The despatch of the 16th of April, 1856, declared the dignity of the Raj extinct, and that the Raj had lapsed to the British Government; and the subsequent correspondence from the Government to the Collector, and the appointment of Mr. Forbes as Commissioner, were all acts of the Government exercising the Sovereign authority, and the ultimate seizure and possession of the Raj of Tanjore, and property of the deceased Rajah, by Mr. Forbes, was the seizure of the Government, and an act of State. The judgment of the learned Judge of the Court below admits that the seizure of the public property, as it is there described, was an act of the State, and incapable of being inquired into by the Supreme Court, and limits the remedy to the private property of the Rajah; thereby affirming the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to adjudicate on the validity of the seizure, by determining what was public and what was private property. Now, that would be to assume authority over the entire transaction. For if the Court has power to sever the acts of Mr. Forbes by adjudicating upon what they thought was an excess of his authority, they must have power to ascertain and declare whether his authority in general has been rightly exercised; and we insist that in this respect it has not. Suppose an action of trespass had been brought against Mr. Forbes for the seizure. Could the supreme Court entertain such action? Certainly not. No person has a locus standi to bring such an action, nor could the Court take cognizance [513] of it. The acts of Mr. Forbes were the acts of the Government, and if the Government is not liable to the jurisdiction of the Court, neither is he. But admitting that the authority given to Mr. Forbes was limited, and that he did exceed it, still his acts have been recognized and ratified by the Government, which would cure such defect, Baron v. Denman (2 Exch. Rep. 167). The Caroline (3 Phillimore on International law, 51). The authority of a Prize Court in time of war, is an illustration of the argument upon this part of the case, that the Supreme Court of Madras had no jurisdiction in a matter entirely of State policy. In the time of war the maxim "inter arma silent leges," would apply in a Prize Court. That Court is established by Royal Commission; its authority is special, but as affecting the objects of it, universal: therefore, if a seizure be made of an enemy's ship, though wrongfully, no action can be maintained against the Government, or any of the parties concerned in such seizure, in a Municipal Court; resort must be had to the Prize Court, which is the only Court having authority delegated from the Sovereign power to try such a question. This is distinctly laid down by Lord Mansfield in the cases of Le Caur v. Eden (Doug. 594), and Lindo v. Rodney (Ib. 313, n.), and has been recognized and admitted by this Court in Elphinstone v. Bedreechund (1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 316). As regards the question that no suit will lie against the East India Company for acts done by them as a Sovereign power in India, the cases of Moodalay v. The East India Company (1 Bro. C.C. 169), The Nabob of Arcot v. The East India [514] Company (4 Bro. C.C. 180), decided in the Court of Chancery in England, are conclusive. So in Tandy v. The Earl of Westmoreland (27 State Trials, 1246), the official acts of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland were considered acts of State, and not within the cognizance of the Municipal jurisdiction. The Duke of Brunswick v. The King of Hanover (6 Beav. 1 S.C. 2 H.L. Cases, 1), is an authority to show that a Sovereign Prince, resident in his kingdom, although a peer of the realm, is exempt from the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery for acts of State done by him in Hanover. The same policy has been applied to Governors of Colonies. In Mostyn v. Fabrigas (Cowp. 161), Lord Mansfield laid it down that no Governor of a Colony could be sued while he is exercising the functions of a Governor. This case, it is true, has been in some degree shaken by the decision in Hill v. Bigge (3 Moore's P.C. Cases, 465). That was an action of debt brought upon a contract entered into by the Defendant before he became Governor, and it was held that upon such a contract being utterly unconnected with his political character of Governor he was liable to be sued in the Colony of which he was Governor. Cameron v. Kyte (3 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 332), relied upon by the Court below, has nothing to do with the case. There the Governor exceeded the authority conferred upon him by his commission.

Thirdly. The late Rajah was, as regards this suit, an absolute Sovereign, and the decree of the Court below erroneously proceeds on the supposition of there being, in point of law, a distinction between the public and private property of an absolute Sovereign. No such distinction exists. In The Advocate-General [515] of Bombay v. Amerchund (1 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 329 n.), Lord Tenterden puts the very question now in dispute. He asks, "What is the distinction between the public and private property of an absolute Sovereign?" and says, "When you are speaking of the property of an absolute Sovereign, there is no pretence for drawing such a distinction: the whole of it belongs to him as Sovereign, and he may dispose of it for his public or private purposes in whatever way he may think proper." Lord Brougham in The Lord Advocate v. Lord Dunghlas (9 Cl. and Fin., 211), says, "I must beg to enter my protest against the distinction which has been taken in arguing this case, as to the prerogatives of the Crown being different, where the Crown is supposed to be dealing with what is called its private and individual property and public property. The prerogative of the Crown is precisely the same as regards what is called the property of the Sovereign, and the property of the public. It is only within the last half century that any private property has been acknowledged to exist in the Crown at all. All property of the Crown is held for public purposes, and is Crown property; it is public property which the Crown administers for the maintenance of the State." Comyn's Dig., tit. "Praerogative," D. 64, supports this view. The Rajah of Tanjore was by the Treaties of 1793 and 1799, an absolute Sovereign in the fort of Tanjore; he had there the power of life and death: as absolute Sovereign, he could, therefore, have no private property, distinct from State property. By the Hindoo law in the case of regalties like this Raj, the succession is exempted from the ordinary law of distribution, as the Raj goes to a single heir, Strange's "Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 209; ib. vol. ii., [516] App. p. 328-9 (Edit. 1830). Colebrooke's "Dig. of Hindu Law," vol. i. p. 126; ib. ii. 122. It is asked, then, whether there is any difference between an English Sovereign before the Statute, 39th and 40th Geo. III., c. 88, and a Hindoo Sovereign, as to the right of private property? No evidence is adduced upon this point, and the onus undoubtedly lies upon the Respondent to establish that there exists such difference.

Lastly, the decree proceeds on the footing of the Plaintiff, as senior widow, being entitled to administer the private estate of the late Rajah. Now, there is nothing in the relations between the Respondent and the East India Company to sustain a suit in equity. There is no privy of interest between them such as could sustain a suit. The remedy, if any wrong had been committed, would have been at law by an action of trespass, in trover, or detainue. The East India Company v. Nuthumbadoo Veeraswamy Moodelly (5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 217), Spooner v. Juddoo (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 353). Again, the Respondent asks for an account when no complexity of accounts exists. Foley v. Hill (2 H.L. Cases, 28), Fluker v. Taylor (3 Drewry, 183), establish the proposition that, if the accounts are not complicated they are the subject of an action, not of a Bill in Chancery. If there was no remedy in law or equity, a petition of right would be the proper course. But if a suit like the present could be sustained, the only proper decree would have been the usual decree for the administration of the estate. There should have been first a reference to the Master to inquire whether the deceased Rajah had any pri[517]-vate property; and secondly, that the East India Company should render an account of the property so found to be private. Such a course has not been pursued in this case. Upon all these grounds, therefore, we submit, this decree cannot be sustained.

The Attorney-General (Sir Richard Bethell) (a) and Mr. Ayrton for the Respondent.—It will be necessary in the first place to ascertain the true status of the East India Company, in order to see whether they are not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Madras, and accountable before that Court for the wrongful acts complained of. Our contention is, that the East India Company did not stand in the position of a Sovereign power; they were only a corporation endowed, it is true, with considerable franchises and prerogatives, but by legislative enactments made accountable for their acts. Sovereignty implies the exercise of absolute uncontrollable power, without any qualification. How then could the East India Company be said to possess the Sovereign power if they are compellable to justify their acts, and to show that what they did it was within their power? The acts we complain of were arbitrary acts, and can be brought in question before the ordinary legal Tribunals. They were not done in virtue of Treaties or jure belli. The account given by the Defendants in their answer is, that the [518] annexation of the Raj of Tanjore and the taking possession of the property was not an act of State, but that the Raj and property lapsed to the Government; and that, therefore, the East India Company as the ultimus haeres, took possession as bona vacantia. Now, it can only be upon the hypothesis that the Company has the same right towards the State of Tanjore that the Queen of England has with regard to hereditas jacens that they could so claim the private property. Such a pretension however is preposterous. For it is apparent from the letter of Mr. Forbes of the 17th of October, 1856, that the seizure was not intended to include, or was in exercise of any right the East India Company might have over the private property of the Rajah, whatever they might claim to have over the Rajah's State property, for the instruction is that "all private property would be scrupulously respected." Indeed, no authority for such a seizure was ever delegated to Mr. Forbes by the Government. This fact is an admission that the East India Company would not interfere with the rights of the members of the Rajah's family to his private property. The Respondent as the senior widow was the proper party to sue, as well for an account of property of her own, which was unjustly seized and then was in the East India Company's possession, as of her husband's private property. As the East India Company got possession of the property by the unauthorized act of Mr. Forbes, no protection can be claimed by them on the ground of State policy, nor are they exempt from the jurisdiction of the Municipal Courts for the commission of such a wrongful act. Baron v. Denman (2 Exch. Rep. 167) does not apply. That was an action for [519] damages by reason of the Defendant, an officer in the English navy, destroying slave baracoons. The English Government, it appeared, adopted his acts as having been done by their authority, which the Court held equivalent to prior instructions; being an act of State, the Crown was alone responsible, and, therefore, no action would lie against the Defendant. So in the case of the Caroline. But here there is, in truth, no act of State, but a wrongful seizure by the East India Company, who are bound to submit to an inquiry and to account for their acts. The Nawab of Surat's case (see 5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 499) was under a Treaty almost in ipsissimis verbis with the Treaties in question. The Government in that case distributed the Nawab's property among his heirs in a certain manner, provided by a special Act of the Legislature of India. No. XVIII. of 1848. It would be an act of injustice to say the Respondent has no remedy. In this country, if the Crown took possession of property, although a Bill could not be filed in the Court of Chancery, yet a petition of right would issue at the instance of the subject aggrieved. The Defendants do not frame their answer as if the seizure had been made in exercise of a Sovereign power, but they justify the taking under an asserted legal title, alleging that the property lapsed to them. Now, we contend, that the East India Company is only a corporation created by Charters and Acts of Parliament, but that they have not the Sovereign power in India. The Sovereign power as exercised in India is alone vested in the Governor-General and Council. The Governor-General we admit is exempted from the jurisdiction of the Queen's Courts in India, for acts done relating to State or [520] public policy, but the East India Company we submit, like any other British subjects, are liable to the jurisdiction of the Court.

(a) The Attorney-General (Sir Richard Bethell) had been consulted on behalf of the Respondent before his appointment to the office of Attorney-General, and it was arranged that Sir Hugh Cairns, the late Solicitor-General, should at the hearing, conduct the case of the Appellant.

It will be necessary to establish this proposition to review the Charters and Acts of Parliament affecting the East India Company. The Charter of King Charles the First, of 1661, authorizes the East India Company to export warlike stores, and make peace and war with native Princes within limits of their trade. The Charter of 1683, confers similar powers; but there the Crown reserves the Sovereign rights over the forts in India, and the power of making peace and war when it shall think fit to interpose the Royal authority. Now, we submit, that the Charter of 1661 was absolutely null and void, as the power of making war and peace are admitted by all Jurists to be an incommunicable prerogative. By the Charter of Will. III., of 1698, the powers of the East India Company are restricted to raising forces to defend the forts; but all Sovereign rights are again reserved, and amongst them the power of establishing Courts of Judicature. The Statute, 13th Geo. III., c. 63, puts the question of the undoubted Sovereignty of the Crown in India beyond all doubt. This is the first legislative enactment that introduced a particular provision for the Sovereign administration of the dominions in the East Indies that had been acquired by the Company. By section 7, such Sovereign rights are vested in the Governor-General in whom all the civil and military power is vested, who is really the only representative of the Crown, in India, and not the East India Company as claimed by the Appellant. His powers are defined in section 9; and section 13, reserves the right of the [521] Crown to erect a Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William, to whom the Governor-General and Council are made amenable by the 15th section, in cases of treason or felony; and also, by the 39th section for any crime, misdemeanour, or offence, to the Court of King's Bench in England. The Statute, 19th Geo. III., c. 61, sec. 5, renewed the appointment of the Governor-General for five years: this office was continued by the 20th Geo. III., c. 61, sec. 5. Statute, 21st Geo. III., c. 65, sec. 8, for the first time gave the proprietors in the stock a title to share in the Company's territorial acquisitions. If, then, the East India Company had done the act complained of shortly after the passing of this Statute, and, therefore, for the benefit of their proprietors, how could it be said that they did it in virtue of a Sovereign power created by that Act? By the Statute, 33rd Geo. III., c. 52, sec. 9, the Board of Control have power given them to superintend all concerns relating to the civil or military Government or the revenue in the East Indies. Now, we insist that the Board of Control has no greater power than the East India Company, and, therefore, the creation of that Board cannot be said to invest the Company with any new or increased prerogatives. Sections 40 and 41 empowered the Governor-General at Fort-William to superintend the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay, if not repugnant to orders from England; and the 42nd section prohibits the Governor-General in Council from declaring war, except in a case of emergency, without the consent of the Court of Directors and the Board of Control. Statute, 37th Geo. III., c. 142, empowers the Crown to erect Courts of Judicature [522] at Madras and Bombay; and section 10, exempts the Governor or Council of Madras and Bombay from the jurisdiction of the Courts, except for treason or felony. Now, this proviso would be unnecessary if, as claimed by the Appellant, the East India Company had the actual Sovereignty. So again under Statute, 53rd Geo. III., c. 155, sec. 123, provision is made that the general issue may be pleaded in actions or suits brought against the East India Company or their agents for acts committed by them in arresting persons not authorized to reside or traffic in the East Indies. By Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 85, a further arrangement is made with the East India Company for the government of India for a limited period. Section 10 expressly enacts, that the same remedy by proceedings, legal or equitable, is to be had against the East India Company, and their property is to be subject to execution. By section 39 the whole power for the government of India is vested in "The Governor-General of India in Council." The authorities cited by the Appellant, Doe d. Seebkristo v. The East India Company (6 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 267), The Bank of Bengal v. The East India Company (Biggell's Reps. 118), The East India Company v. Nuthumbadoo Veeraswamy Moodally (5 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 217), to sustain their proposition that a Bill in Equity was not the proper remedy, shows that the East India Company are generally liable to the jurisdiction of the Courts in India; and the question, then, is reduced to this simple point, whether what they have done is an act of State? which we contend it was not.

Secondly. In any circumstances, the East India Company, as successors to the deceased Rajah, suc-[523]-ceeded only to the State property attached to the Raj, and not to the private property of the late Rajah. He was at the time of his death entitled, as of his own right by the Hindoo law, to private property, consisting of real estate, cash, jewels, horses, etc., distinct from the rights appertaining to the Raj. He was of the Soodra caste, and had power by the Hindoo law to dispose of his private property, distinct from the Raj. Strange's "Hindu Law," vol. i., p. 209 (Edit. 1830), clearly so treats this point. He lays it down that "the effects and private estate of a Sovereign, like those of any ordinary individual, are in common, and distributable among all the sons." That is an authority that a Hindoo Sovereign can have private property distinct from State property. Allen, "On the Royal Prerogative," p. 143, says that "the ancient Anglo-Saxon Kings had private estates which did not merge in the Crown, but were divisible by Will, gift, or sale." So by international law, as appears from Puffendorf, who, referring to Grotius, points out the distinction, and lays it down that the income may belong to the Sovereign, and be dealt with by him differently from the corpus of the property which goes to the State (B. viii. c. 6, sections 22 and 23. Gro. B. iii. c. 9 and 16. See also The Att. Gen. v. Weeden (Parker's Rep. 267), where it was determined that choses in action belonging to an enemy are forfeited to the Crown). In modern times the same right has been recognized. Ryres v. The Duke of Wellington (9 Beav. 579) was a case in which a legatee filed a Bill against the executor of George the Fourth, claiming under the Will of George the Third, with respect to a bequest made by that Monarch of his private property, and the Court of Chancery repu-[524]-diated the jurisdiction of the Court on the sole ground, that the Will had not been proved in the Prerogative Court. The cases relating to the exemption of a Governor of a Colony, relied upon by the Appellant, do not apply. Cameron v. Kyte (3 Knapp's P.C. Cases, 332) was confined to the single point of the power of the Governor of a Colony, and it was held to be fettered by the terms of the Governor's commission from the Crown. Hall v. Bigge (3 Moore's P.C. Cases, 465) is in our favour, as it determined that the Civil Court in the Colony had jurisdiction to entertain an action of debt brought against the Governor while in office in the Colony. Campbell v. Hall (Cowp. 204) was an action brought against an officer of the Government in Grenada, for the purpose of trying the question whether the King, having promised the inhabitants of Grenada a local Legislature, and having by his commission to the Governor authorized the convocation of an Assembly, could afterwards of his own accord impose taxes. Lastly, The case of The East India Company v. Syed Ally [7 Moo. Ind. App. 555] is distinguishable from the present. The resumption of the Jaghire by the Company, as the representative of the Crown, was under the authority of a Treaty made by them in that character with a native Prince. They had, under the Treaty, the same power as the former Nawabs. The resumption related to the revenue, and, being a matter of State policy, the Supreme Court was properly held to have had no jurisdiction.

Sir Hugh Cairns, Q.C., in reply.—The Respondent endeavours to support the decree appealed from, upon grounds which are antagonistic [525] to those relied upon in the judgment of the Court below. It is now urged that the East India Company are mere traders, who have arrogated to themselves the rights of Sovereignty, and that their assumption was a mockery of the rights of the Crown. The argument on the other side goes to this extent, that the East India Company, as a corporation, have certain powers emanating from the Sovereign delegated to them, but that the act complained of is ultra vires the East India Company; as the Sovereign power is only vested in the Governor-General of India. Now, the Court below treats the proceedings as being within the authority of the East India Company, but denies what has been done by Mr. Forbes with respect to the alleged private property to be an act of State. This argument proves too much, as everything which the East India Company did would be wrong: the annexation of the Raj, the seizure of the public property, which are not complained of, would also be wrongful. Nothing, however, can be more fallacious than this argument, as at the time when the acts in question took place, nothing could be done in India in the shape of Government, but through the East India Company, and the Court of Directors under the supervision of the Board of Control. Supposing, for the sake of the argument, it was conceded, that it is in the Governor-General in Council that the Sovereign delegated power exists, we still have then his authoritative sanction, and confirmation of all the proceedings taken by Mr. Forbes. But the true position of the Government of India is this: The East India Company have power given them by Charters and Acts of Parliament for the Government of India, and they delegate those powers to the Governor-General as [526] executive in India. The Statute, 21st Geo. III., c. 63, was passed in consequence of the exorbitant exercise of power claimed by the Chief Justice, Sir Elijah Impey, and that Statute not only exempts the Governor-General from responsibility for anything he may do, but any one acting under his instructions who shall plead such instructions in a suit or action. Here the Governor-General has sanctioned what Mr. Forbes has done, and it must, therefore, be treated as his act. The principle of legislation as to the Governor-General in India is this: Anterior to the creation of that office, or any officer in India as the executive Governor of India, the East India Company, as the executive Government upon the spot, had Sovereign powers conferred on them from the Crown, by Charters and by Acts of Parliament: and, as they could not delegate those powers upon ordinary principles of law to any one else, it became necessary to give large powers to an executive upon the spot, and that was done by parliamentary authority. The first Act creating the Governor-General was the 13th Geo. III., c. 63, and the preamble shows the evil it intended to remedy in the constitution of the governing body of the East India Company at home, and the imperfection of the executive Government in India: the 7th and 8th sections appoint a Governor-General, and define his powers. The Statute relied upon by the Respondent, the 53rd Geo. III., c. 155, sec. 123, obviously contemplates an act which cannot be considered an act of State, done as a Sovereign power, but as traders, and one which the East India Company might be sued for, Gibson v. The East India Company (5 Birlgh. N.C. 262). The Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 85, puts this matter still [527] clearer; that Statute took away the exclusive trading rights of the Company, and left them their Sovereign rights only for a limited period. Sovereign powers have, undoubtedly, been conferred upon the East India Company of levying war or making peace, and making Treaties. These powers are shown in the case of The Nabob of Arcot v. The East India Company (1 Bro. C.C. 180), where it was decided that the particular acts the Nawab complained of were acts of public policy and State, and that the Court of Chancery had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of those acts. The East India Company v. Syed Ally [7 Moo. Ind. App. 555] further illustrates this, and shows that the Sovereign power in the Carnatic has become vested in the East India Company. If a Treaty was made between this country and France, a complaint as to the mode in which it was carried into effect could not be entertained in a Municipal Court. The Respondent argues, that it has not been pleaded that what was done by Mr. Forbes was an act of State, and that the defence set up by the answer is, that the East India Company took the Raj and property by succession. Such is not the fact: the answer clearly treats it as an Act of State, and negatives such assumption that the seizure was a succession at law.

No distinction exists between public and private property of an absolute Sovereign. The Advocate-General of Bombay v. Amerchund (Knapp's P.C. Cases, 329, n.) is conclusive upon that point. The argument by analogy to Sovereigns in this country who have made Wills and disposed of their private property does not apply, as it is not the case of an absolute Sovereign, like the Rajah of Tanjore, but of Sovereigns whose powers by the constitution are limited. In this country the [528] hereditary revenues of the Crown have been made over by Act of Parliament to the country, in consideration of a civil list during the life of the Sovereign; and the 39th and 40th Geo. III., c. 88, gave His Majesty, his heirs and successors, full power of disposition by deed, or Will, of certain real and personal property, at the same time subjecting the private property to the payment of private debts contracted during the Sovereign's lifetime. There is no allegation or evidence that there is a custom in this Raj, or by the Hindoo Law, that upon the death of an absolute Sovereign, no disposition being made by him during his lifetime, there could be a division made among his family of a certain kind of property. Another error in the decree is, that it assumes, without proof, that there was private property of the deceased Rajah.

The case stood over for consideration.

Judgment was now delivered by

The Right Hon. Lord Kingsdown (July 27, 1859). This is an appeal from a decree of the equity side of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, by which it was declared that the Respondent, the Plaintiff in the suit below, as the eldest widow of Sevajee, late Rajah of Tanjore, who had died intestate, was entitled to inherit and possess, as his heir and legal representative, his private and particular estate and effects, real and personal, left by him at the time of his death, subject to the payment and satisfaction thereof of the present debts, if any, of Sevajee, and to any legal claims and demands that might exist against such private and particular estate and effects; and the Court declared that the Defendants, the East [529] India Company, were trustees for the Plaintiff for and in respect of the private and particular estate and effects, real and personal, left by Sevajee at the time of his death, and possessed by them, their officers, servants, and agents, as in the Bill mentioned. The decree also proceeded to direct various accounts and inquiries founded upon these declarations.

In the very able argument addressed to us at the Bar, many objections were made by the Appellant's Counsel to this decree; but the main point taken, and that on which their Lordships think that the case must be decided, was this, that the East India Company, as trustees for the Crown, and under certain restrictions, are empowered to act as a Sovereign State in transactions with other Sovereign States in India; that the Rajah of Tanjore was an independent Sovereign in India; that on his death, in the year 1855, the East India Company, in the exercise of their Sovereign power, thought fit, from motives of State, to seize the Raj of Tanjore and the whole of the property the subject of this suit, and did seize it accordingly; and that over an act so done, whether rightfully or wrongfully, no Municipal Court has any jurisdiction.

The general principle of law was not, as indeed it could not, with any colour of reason be disputed. The transactions of independent States between each other are governed by other laws than those which Municipal Courts administer: such Courts have neither the means of deciding what is right, nor the power of enforcing any decision which they may make.

But it was contended on the part of the Respondent, that this case did not fall within the principle, for the following reasons:—

[530] First. Because, as it was said, the East India Company did not stand in the position of an independent Sovereign; that such powers of Sovereignty as were exercised on behalf of the Company were vested, not in the Company, but in the Governor-General and Council, who are protected by legislative enactments for what they may do in that character. Secondly, that the seizure in this case did not take place by the exercise of a Sovereign power against another independent power; but was a mere succession, by an asserted legal title, to property alleged to have lapsed to the Company. And, thirdly, that there is a distinction between the public and private property of the Rajah, and that the Company never intended to exercise their Sovereign powers as to the latter, whatever they might do with respect to the former: that the Company, therefore, are in possession of property by the unauthorized act of their officers, for which no protection can be claimed on the grounds which would protect the public property from the jurisdiction of the Court.

On the first point their Lordships are unable to discover any room for doubt. The careful and able review of the several Charters and Acts of Parliament bearing upon the subject which they had the advantage of hearing at the Bar, has satisfied them that the law, as it stood in the year 1839, is accurately stated in the following passage in the judgment of Chief Justice Tindal in case of Gibson v. The East India Company (5 Bingham, N.C. 273), in which, after referring to various legislative enactments, he observes that from these—"It is manifest that the East India Company have been invested with powers and privileges of a twofold nature, perfectly distinct from each other: [531] namely, powers to carry on trade as merchants, and (subject only to the prerogative of the Crown, to be exercised by the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India), power to acquire and retain and govern territory, to raise and maintain armed forces by sea and land, and to make peace or war with the Native powers of India."

That acts done in the execution of these Sovereign powers were not subject to the control of the Municipal Courts, either of India or Great Britain, was sufficiently established by the cases of The Nabob of Arcot v. The East India Company, in the Court of Chancery, in the year 1793; and The East India Company v. Syed Ally [7 Moo. Ind. App. 555], before the Privy Council in 1827.

The subsequent Statute, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 85, in no degree diminishes the authority of the East India Company to exercise, on behalf of the Crown of Great Britain, and subject to the control thereby provided, these delegated powers of Sovereignty.

The next question is, what is the real character of the act done in this case? Was it a seizure by arbitrary power on behalf of the Crown of Great Britain, of the dominions and property of a neighbouring State, an act not affecting to justify itself on grounds of Municipal law? or was it, in whole or in part, a possession taken by the Crown under colour of legal title of the property of the late Rajah of Tanjore, in trust for those who, by law, might be entitled to it on the death of the last possessor? If it were the latter, the defence set up, of course, has no foundation.

It is extremely difficult to discover in these papers any ground of legal right, on the part of the East India Company, or of the Crown of Great Britain, to the possession of this Raj, or of any part of the pro-[532]-perty of the Rajah on his death; and, indeed, the seizure was denounced by the Attorney-General (who, from circumstances explained to us at the hearing, appeared as Counsel for the Respondent, and not in his official character for the Appellant), as a most violent and unjustifiable measure. The Rajah was an independent Sovereign of territories undoubtedly small, and bound by Treaties to a powerful neighbour, which left him, practically, little power of free action; but he did not hold his territory, such as it was, as a fief of the British Crown, or of the East India Company; nor does there appear to have been any pretence for claiming it, on the death of the Rajah without a son, by any legal title either as an escheat, or as bona vacantia. It should seem, therefore, that the possession could hardly have been taken upon any such grounds.

Accordingly, the Defendants in their answer, allege that on the death of the late Rajah, "it was determined, as an act of State, by the Defendants and the British Government" that the Raj and dignity of Rajah of Tanjore was extinct, and that the State of Tanjore had thereupon lapsed to the Defendants in trust for Her Majesty; and it was thereupon also determined by the Defendants, as an act of State and Government, that the whole dominions and Sovereignty of the State of Tanjore, together with the property belonging thereto, should be assumed by the Defendants in trust for Her Majesty the Queen, and should become part of the British territories and dominions in India, in trust for Her Majesty. They then allege that the whole of the property which they have seized has been seized by virtue of their Sovereign rights on behalf of Her Majesty, and insist that [533] the Court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the circumstances of the seizure, or its justice with respect to the whole or any part of the seizure.

The facts, as they appear in the evidence, are these:—In November, 1855, the Rajah died. The Government of Madras, within which Presidency Tanjore is situated, communicated the fact of his death to the Governor-General of India, and this fact, with the views of the Government of Madras, and of the Governor-General in Council as to the steps which ought to be taken upon his death in regard to his dominion and property, was communicated to the Court of Directors in England.

The letters in which these views were communicated are not found amongst the papers before us; but it appears from the letter of the Court of Directors, dated the 16th of April, 1856, that these Governments were of opinion, that the dignity of Rajah of Tanjore was extinct, and that they had taken possession, or were about to take possession, of the dominions and property of the Rajah, and intended to deal with them in such manner as appeared to them to be just.

The answer of the East India Company is to the following effect:— After advertising to a suggestion which had been made, to recognize one of the daughters of the deceased Rajah as his successor, they say: “ 3. By no law or usage, however, has the daughter of a Hindoo Rajah any right of succession to the Raj, and it is entirely out of the question that we should create such a right for the sole purpose of perpetuating a titular Principality at a great cost to the public revenue. 4. We agree in the unanimous opinion of your Government, and the Government of Madras, that the dignity of Rajah of Tanjore is extinct. 5. [534] It only remains to express our cordial approbation of the intentions you express of treating the widow, daughters, and dependants of the late Rajah with kindness and liberality. We shall, doubtless, receive, at an early period, from you or from the Madras Government, a report of the arrangements made for carrying these intentions into effect. 6. The Resident was very properly directed to continue all existing allowances until he could report fully on them to Government; but to inform the recipients that Government were not to be considered as pledged to their continuance.”

It seems obvious from this letter that the East India Company intended to take possession of the dominions and property of the Rajah, as absolute lords and owners of it, and to treat any claims upon it of his widows, and relations, and dependants, not as rights to be dealt with upon legal principles, but as appeals to the consideration and liberality of the Company.

The further proceedings were of the same character.

On the 10th of July, 1856, the Government of Madras wrote to the Governor-General in Council, and after giving an account of different portions of the property of the late Rajah, and pointing out various difficulties and questions which might arise out of it, they suggested that some person should be specially sent as a Commissioner to Tanjore, who should be “ directed to investigate and report upon the various important questions above enumerated, and any others that may hereafter occur, to this Government, as demanding inquiry in connection with the general subject.”

By a letter of the 8th of September, 1856, the [535] Governor-General in Council approves of the suggestion of appointing a Commissioner, and of the selection of Mr. Forbes for the purpose. He points out certain matters; amongst others, the abolition of the Rajah's Courts, which he leaves to the disposal of the Government of Madras. “ But the mode in which it may be proposed to deal with the Rajah's debts, and with the State jewels, library, and armoury, should be reported to the Governor of India, before any measures are taken, as also the apportionment of pensions and gratuities to the family and dependants of the Rajah. Upon the last point it will be necessary to lay down rules by which the Government of Madras should be guided.”

Mr. Forbes was accordingly appointed to discharge this duty, and written instructions for that purpose were given to him by the Government of Madras, on the 25th of September, 1856. He was directed not to make any general announcement of the orders of the Government of India; but to possess the Durbar generally with the purport of those instructions, informing them that it had been decided by the home authorities that the Raj of Tanjore had become extinct, but that all liberality would be shown to the members of the family, servants, and dependants. He was also, should such caution appear called for, to warn them of the consequences that would certainly ensue from any factious opposition to the policy that had been decided on in the case of the Tanjore Raj.

In what manner Mr. Forbes executed the powers conferred upon him, appears in his evidence and by the documents proved in the cause.

On the 29th of September, 1856, he caused an order to be made on the Sirkele, an officer of the late Rajah, directing him to make out a list of the property [536] belonging to the Raj. No attention having been paid to this order, Mr. Forbes soon afterwards went himself to Tanjore, and took up his abode at the Residency, and on the 17th of October, 1856, sent a letter to the Sirkele, in which he informs him of his intention to take possession of the public property of the State for the British Government, and to place it in safe keeping. He informs the Sirkele that he intends to take charge of the public property within the fort, early the next morning, and to place it in charge of a detachment of the British troops, and he requests that the Sirkele will meet him at the east gate of the fort at half-past 5 o'clock, in company with the Murdeshuns of the Tashackdera, the arsenal, and the various other departments.

On the following morning, accordingly, taking advantage, as he says, of the presence of the 25th Regiment of Infantry, he goes to the palace. He takes possession of the property which is found in it. He has it placed in rooms, sealed with his seal, and stations sentries at the different doors.

It is clear from Mr. Forbes's report to the Madras Government of what took place on the occasion, that though no resistance was offered by the family of the Rajah, or the inhabitants of the fort, to the seizure of the Raj, and of the palace and property of the Rajah, it was regarded on both sides as a mere act of power not resisted, because resistance would have been vain. "Much sorrow," he says, "was expressed, and much grief was shown; but all submitted at once to the authority of the Government, and placed themselves in its hands."

It is by these acts of Mr. Forbes that the East India Company is in possession of whatever property it holds now claimed by the Respondent. The acts of [537] Mr. Forbes were approved by the Governor of Madras by a minute, dated the 21st of October, 1856; and they are adopted and ratified by the East India Company in their answer in this suit.

What property of the Rajah was within the authority given to Mr. Forbes, and what may be the consequence of any seizure in excess of that authority, we will consider under the next head; but that the seizure was an exercise of Sovereign power effected at the arbitrary discretion of the Company, by the aid of military force, can hardly admit of doubt.

But then, it is contended, that there is a distinction between the public and private property of a Hindoo Sovereign, and that although during his life, if he be an absolute Monarch, he may dispose of all alike, yet on his death some portions of his property, termed his private property, will go to one set of heirs, and the Raj with that portion of the property which is called public, will go to the succeeding Rajah.

It is very probable that this may be so: the general rule of Hindoo inheritance is partibility, the succession of one heir, as in the case of a Raj, is the exception. But assuming this, if the Company, in the exercise of their Sovereign power, have thought fit to seize the whole property of the late Rajah, private as well as public, does that circumstance give any jurisdiction over their acts to the Court at Madras? If the Court cannot inquire into the act at all because it is an act of State, how can it inquire into any part of it, or afford relief on the ground that the Sovereign power has been exercised to an extent which Municipal law will not sanction?

It is said, however, that it was not the intention of [538] the East India Company that the private property of the Rajah should be the subject of seizure, and it is observed in the judgment of the Court below, that the letter of Mr. Forbes to the Sirkele of the 17th of October, 1856, shows that he knew there was private property amongst that about to be seized; and that he expressly states that all property to which a claim can be established shall be restored to its owner.

But it appears to their Lordships that in this passage the Chief Justice has not quite accurately collected the meaning of Mr. Forbes's letter; the distinction there made between private and public property seems to apply, not to property of the Rajah, but to property which might be seized by the officers as in the possession of, or apparently belonging to, the Rajah, while in fact it belonged to, or was subject to, the claims of other persons. All claims which might be advanced to any part of the property seized, by institutions or individuals, were to be carefully investigated, and all to which a claim might be substantiated would be restored to the owner.

But, whatever may be the meaning of this letter, it affords no argument in favour of the judgment of the Court: but rather an argument against it. It shows that the Government intended to seize all the property which actually was seized, whether public or private, subject to an assurance that all which, upon investigation, should be found to have been improperly seized, would be restored. But, even with respect to property not belonging to the Rajah, it is difficult to suppose that the Government intended to give a legal right of redress to those who might think themselves wronged, and to submit the conduct of their officers, in the execution of a political measure, to the judgment of a legal tribunal. They intended only to declare the course which a sense of justice and humanity would induce them to adopt.

With respect to the property of the Rajah, whether public or private, it is clear that the Government intended to seize the whole, for the purposes which they had in view required the application of the whole. They declared their intention to make provision for the payment of his debts, for the proper maintenance of his widows, his daughters, his relations and dependants; but they intended to do this according to their own notions of what was just and reasonable, and not according to any rules of law to be enforced against them by their own Courts. In the letter already referred to of the 8th of September, 1856, from the Secretary of the Government in India to the Government of Madras, it is distinctly stated:—"The relations whom the Rajah of Tanjore has left are in this position: they are without any rights of inheritance;" and it then proceeds to enumerate those relations who are thus without any rights of inheritance, and mentions as the first amongst them the Queen Dowager, the Respondent in this appeal; and it proceeds to speak of all those relations as claimants upon the consideration of the Government, and to describe in what manner those claims are to be met. How is it possible, in the face of this declaration, to hold that it was the intention of the Government to recognize the right of inheritance of the Respondent, and to exclude from seizure, and to subject to process of law, any portion of the property of the deceased Sovereign? If there had been any doubt upon the original intention of the Government, it has clearly ratified and adopted the acts of its agent, which [540] according to the principle of the decision in Baron v. Druman, is equivalent to a previous authority.

The result, in their Lordships' opinion, is, that the property now claimed by the Respondent has been seized by the British Government, acting as a Sovereign power, through its delegate the East India Company; and that the act so done, with its consequences, is an act of State over which the Supreme Court of Madras has no jurisdiction.

Of the propriety or justice of that act, neither the Court below nor the Judicial Committee have the means of forming, or the right of expressing, if they had formed, any opinion. It may have been just or unjust, politic or impolitic, beneficial or injurious, taken as a whole, to those whose interests are affected. These are considerations into which their Lordships cannot enter. It is sufficient to say that, even if a wrong has been done, it is a wrong for which no Municipal Court of justice can afford a remedy.

They must advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree complained of, and to dismiss the Plaintiff's Bill; but they will recommend that no costs should be given of the proceedings either in the Court below or in this appeal.

The following proceedings took place in India upon the receipt of the above judgment, as appeared recorded in the minute by the Honourable the President, Sir Charles E. Trevelyan, dated the 8th of November, 1859.

"1. The Lords of the Committee of the Privy Council, conclude their judgment on the appeal of The East India Company v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba as follows:—"The result, in their Lordships' [541] opinion, is, that the property now claimed by the Respondent has been seized by the British Government, acting as a Sovereign power, through its delegate, the East India Company; and that the act so done, with its consequences, is an act of State over which the Supreme Court of Madras has no jurisdiction.

"Of the propriety or justice of that act, neither the Court below nor the Judicial Committee have the means of forming, or the right of expressing, if they had formed, any opinion. It may have been just or unjust, politic or impolitic, beneficial or injurious, taken as a whole, to those whose interests are affected. These are considerations into which their Lordships cannot enter. It is sufficient to say that, even if a wrong has been done, it is a wrong for which no Municipal Court of justice can afford a remedy.'

" 2. While, on the one hand, the Government is left, by this decision, free to take whatever course it considers best; on the other, a serious responsibility has been cast upon it. The Government is declared to be sole arbiter, unrestrained by the ordinary obligations of Municipal law; and it is, therefore, peculiarly incumbent upon us to show that we are prepared to act in the spirit of those principles of equity and liberality which are the foundation of all law.

" 3. The original proceeding by which the Raj of Tanjore was declared to have escheated to the Government of India on the death of the late Raja has often been described as an act of spoliation. I cannot see it in that light. I have always been opposed to what has of late years been called 'The policy of annexation.' It has always appeared to me that well-constituted Native States are an essential element of the [542] Anglo-Indian Empire; and this view has been amply confirmed by the experience acquired during the late convulsion. But Tanjore was not a Native State. The Rajah had neither people nor territory beyond the walls of his palace. He had no duties of Government to perform. He and his numerous dependents were a heavy charge upon the industrious portion of the population, without rendering any return. So far as any political effect was produced, it was decidedly injurious, because the arrangement kept alive pretensions which circumstances might at any time quicken into open hostility, as lately happened at Delhi. The entire community is interested in the growth of a feeling of loyalty to the Sovereign, and there ought to be nothing to interfere with the undivided allegiance of the Queen's own subjects in Her own dominions. It has also been proved by numerous examples, that there is no condition so demoralising as that of a society which, while it is elevated above public opinion, has no appropriate duties to engage in.

" 4. The Rajah had died leaving no legitimate or adopted son. The only claimant is his senior surviving widow. My first twelve years of public service were passed in the Indian Diplomatic department, and I have as extensive a knowledge of the customs and practice of Native Chiefs as most people. I mention this as my justification for offering a confident opinion, that the succession of females forms no part of the constitution of Native States or Chiefships. It may occasionally have taken place, as in the instance of Holkar's widow, Arhalaya Bhai, and the Begum Sumroo, but the special nature of the circumstances in those cases, shows that it was a deviation from an established rule. No well-informed and im-[543]-partial native would maintain the right of succession of a female to a Hindoo Raj.

" 5. I, therefore, consider that, whether regard be had to the customs of the country or to the public good, this is a true escheat. The so-called Tanjore Raj has lapsed to the Government of India. That Government stands in the place of the late Rajah. While we are bound to fulfil his just obligations, it is our duty to secure, on behalf of the public, everything belonging to the Raj nor required for that purpose.

" 6. A great deal of discussion has taken place about what ought to be considered public or private property. This seems to me to proceed upon a mistaken view of the nature of the case. The Raj has merged in the Government of India. Everything which belonged to the late Rajah at the time of his death, therefore, now belongs, by right, to the Government. If, previously to his decease, he had made a bona fide alienation of any property acquired out of his savings, that property has passed into the condition of private property. Otherwise, all that he left would have descended to his heir, if he had had one; and not having had one, it has lapsed to the paramount authority representing the general public. We have to pay the late Rajah's debts, and to provide for his numerous relations and dependants as ultimus haeres; and we are entitled, in the same character, to all that remained of his property. It would not have been possible for any one except the successor to the Raj to have undertaken these obligations. To any other, the loss would have greatly exceeded the advantage. The view taken in this paragraph is the same which is maintained by the Advocate-Generals at Calcutta and Madras.

[544] "7. Assuming the correctness of these principles, I will consider the several points requiring decision.

"First, the late Rajah's debts must be ascertained with a view to their early liquidation. Experience shows that more than ordinary care should be taken, in such cases, in order to shut out fictitious claims.

"Secondly, the Supreme Government laid down as long ago as the 8th of September, 1856, rules for the grant of pensions to the family and dependants. These are divided into three classes: viz., first, the immediate members of the Rajah's family; secondly, his relations; and thirdly, his servants and pensioners. In the case of the third class, these rules have already been acted on, and the pensions awarded have for some time been paid. The pensions of the chief members of the family only are heritable. In the case of a man, they may pass for two generations, a moiety lapsing on each succession; while, in the case of a woman, they may descend with the same deduction for one generation only. The case of those belonging to the second class, who are not nearly allied to the late Rajah, was considered to be fully met by the grant of a pension for a single life, which may be commuted for a gratuity.

"8. Mr. Phillips, the late Commissioner of Tanjore, proposed to place 103 persons in the first class, as follows:—1 The mother of the late Rajah. 2. His senior widow. 3. His fifteen junior widows. 4. His daughter. 5. His two elder sisters. 6. His niece, her husband and children. 7. His son-in-law. 8. Three nephews and their families. 9. The late Rajah Sevajee's seraglio, in number 59 persons; including, apparently, 6 natural sons and 11 natural daughters of the Rajah. 10. The Rajah Sarabhoji's seraglio, 18 persons. 11. The descendants, four in [545] number, of Tukuji Sahib, fourth Rajah of Tanjore.'

"9. As far as the eighth head, no objection can be made; but I cannot think that the 59 persons belonging to the late Rajah's seraglio, or the persons who claim through former Rajahs, are entitled to heritable pensions. This advantage may, however, be conceded to the natural sons and daughters of the late Rajah.

"10. Not long before his death, the late Rajah married sixteen wives in one day. These ladies and their families came from the Deccan; and every facility should be given, by commuting their pensions, or making the payments elsewhere, for their returning to their original homes.

"11. The pensions should be in full of every personal claim. No establishment should be kept up for any one; and the old system of procuring supplies through the Collector should come to an end. Any additional allowance should be made which may be required to compensate for the loss of these advantages; and the agent should continue to protect the interests of the ladies and assist them by his advice.

"12. Sukharam, the late Rajah's son-in-law, ought not, I think, to be subjected to any deduction of his stipend, on account of his inheriting his late wife's settlement; and the Rajah's only surviving legitimate daughter should be allowed an additional Rs. 6000 a year on her marriage, as proposed by Mr. Phillips. No difference should be made between those who supported and those who stood aloof from the senior widow in the late litigation.

"13. The contents of the library, armoury, and jewel rooms should be carefully examined; and while such articles as were exclusively State property should [546] be held at the disposal of the Government, the most liberal consideration should be given to any claim that may be made on behalf of the Ranee or others connected with the late Rajah.

"14. The only remaining point is the landed property. The bulk was retained by the Rajah, contrary to the provisions of the Treaty by which the Province was ceded to the East India Company in 1779; but, according to my view, as expressed in the early part of this minute, it matters not in what manner property came into the possession of the Rajah. Whatever actually belonged to the Rajah at the time of his death is included in the escheat, and now belongs to the Government.

"15. Fourteen villages are claimed on behalf of the mother of the late Rajah as having been granted to her by her late husband, Rajah Sarabhoji; such a grant is undoubtedly extant, but if her possession was ever more than nominal, it altogether ceased in 1827, after which the Rajah dealt with the property entirely as his own. Our Advocate-General is, therefore, rightly of opinion that these villages must be considered as belonging to the Raj. Mr. Phillips, while he admits that the Dowager Rancee has no claim, proposes that she should have the enjoyment of these villages during the remainder of her life. I do not concur in this. The aged lady should have a pension allowed her, sufficiently liberal to enable her to spend the remainder of her days with all possible ease and comfort; but more than this is not required; and it is not desirable that she should have the management of villages. There are three villages, the Mirasi rights in which were originally purchased by the widow of Tulasiji, the adoptive father of Sarabhoji. They descended to the late mother of the Rajah's [547] only surviving daughter, to whom they should now be made over, together with the arrears which have accumulated since her father's death. Alienations from the landed property, which are of the nature of Enam, should be dealt with under the Enam rules.

" 16. If my colleagues concur in these views, I propose that Mr. Phillips, who is well acquainted with the whole subject, should be specially appointed as Commissioner, to give effect to the arrangements that may be finally approved by the Supreme Government.

" 17. There is no reason to doubt the correctness of the data upon which Mr. Phillips calculated the pensions proposed by him for the several classes of claimants; but if my views are adopted, some modification will be required in particular cases; and if Mr. Phillips should think, on the review he will now have to take of the subject, that his first proposals should in any other instance be amended, we shall be ready to reconsider them with him.—C. E. Trevelyan."

" Minute by the Honourable the President, dated 23rd of November, 1859.

" On the first point, it must be observed, that the villages were not only managed, but their proceeds were appropriated by the Rajah. In short, they were treated after 1827, entirely as his own property. This has been reported by our Commissioner, and has been argued upon as a fact by the Law Officers.

" As regards the objection to Mr. Phillips on the ground of his connection with the Sudder Court, this case has been expressly declared by the Privy Council to be beyond the limits of any Municipal jurisdiction.

" C. E. Trevelyan."

[548] BABOO GOPAL LALL THAKOOR.—Appellant: TELUK CHUNDER RAI
Respondent * [Feb. 8, 1860].

On petition from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

Five separate suits were brought by the same Plaintiff against the same Defendants, in which the same question of law was raised. The amount involved in each suit was under Rs. 10,000, the appealable value, although in the aggregate the amounts claimed exceeded that sum. Leave to appeal in the five suits granted, upon the undertaking that the parties consented within two months, by a proceeding before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, to abide by the decision of the Privy Council in the first appeal, as governing the four other appeals, when the Registrar of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut was to transmit only the transcript of the first suit; otherwise, the five transcripts to be remitted in the ordinary course.

This was an application for special leave to appeal. Five suits had been instituted between the same parties in India; each suit was in respect to the same Talook, and involved the same question of law.

The petition set forth that the suit was brought by the petitioner in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of the Zillah Backergunge, to have rent or jumma assessed upon a Talook, held at a variable rent. That four other separate suits between the same parties were brought for the purpose of obtaining decrees to assess each of the Talooks. That the amount of the claims involved in the five suits, were respectively as follows: in the first suit, Rs. 3815; in [549] the second, Rs. 1990; the third, Rs. 3799; the fourth, Rs. 945; and in the fifth, Rs. 950. That the pleadings were distinct, but that the same defence was set up by the Defendant in each suit, in respect of the Talook. That on the 20th of January, 1858, one judgment and decree was pronounced in all the suits by the Principal Sudder Ameen. That the Defendant appealed to the Zillah Judge, who pronounced a judgment and decree in the first suit and appeal only, stating, at the same time, that a copy of his decree would be filed with the four other appeals, and that the decree in the first suit governed the four other suits on appeal. That the Appellant appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, filing a separate petition of special appeal against that decree, and also a petition in each of the four other appeals, according to the practice of the Court. That, at the hearing of the first of the appeals, the Sudder Court refused to allow a special appeal, which order the Court declared applicable to the four other appeals. And the Petitioner submitted, that though the aggregate amount of the claim in the five suits exceeded Rs. 10,000, the prescribed limit, under which the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut had no power to grant leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, yet the amount or value of the claim stated in each of the plaints, was below that sum, being respectively, Rs. 3815, Rs. 1990, Rs. 3799, Rs. 945, and Rs. 950; and that, therefore, the Petitioner did not apply to the Sudder Dewanny Court for leave to appeal, as, according to the practice of that Court, leave to appeal to England could not be granted in any one of the appeals. And the petition prayed for special leave to appeal against the Order of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, of [550] the 25th of February, 1859, in all five appeals from the judgment and decree of the Zillah Court, of the 17th of July, 1858, and from the judgment and decree of the Zillah Judge, made in all the five separate appeals.

The petition was ex parte.

Mr. Leith in support of the petition.—Important questions of Hindoo law arise in these suits to justify an indulgence, by admitting the appeals, though each suit is under the prescribed appeal value of Rs. 10,000, provided by the Order in Council, of the 10th April, 1838. If, however, leave to appeal be granted in the first suit, the decision of your Lordships will govern the other four cases, and it will save expense, if only the first transcript be sent to England, as it will not be necessary to transmit the records of the proceedings in the four other suits. The Respondent cannot be prejudiced by this course, as the decree of the Courts below was in his favour, and no steps can be taken on the other judgments which can interfere with any decision to be pronounced here upon the appeal.

Their Lordships granted the application, upon the terms contained in the following report :—“ That leave ought to be granted to Gopal Lall Thakoor, to enter and prosecute his appeal from the order, judgment or decree of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta, of the 26th of February, 1859, in all the five special appeals from the judgment, order or decree of the Zillah Judge of the 17th of July, 1858, and also to enter and pro-[551]-secute his appeal from the last-mentioned judgment, order or decree of the Zillah Judge, made in all the five suits in which such special appeals arose, upon depositing in the Registry of the Privy Council the sum of £500 sterling, as security for the costs of the Respondent, in case the appeal should be dismissed, but with liberty to the parties in these suits and appeals respectively to agree and consent, if they should be disposed of by a proceeding in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, that the appeal should be entered and prosecuted in the first of such suits for the sum of Rs. 3815 only, and that in the special appeal in that suit only, the parties agreeing and undertaking that the four other suits and of the four other appeals therein respectively, should abide the result of this appeal; that the parties should be bound therein respectively by the judgment, order and decree of Her Majesty in Council, to be hereafter made on this appeal, and in all respects as if such judgment, order and decree had been made and pronounced in each of the four suits and special appeals respectively aforesaid, and, as if an appeal had been entered and prosecuted in respect of each of them; and that the parties should have two calendar months from the date of the filing of Her Majesty's Order on this report in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, so to agree and consent as aforesaid. And their Lordships do further report to your Majesty, that the Registrar of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut ought to be directed to transmit to the Registrar of the Privy Council, without delay, authenticated copies under the seal of the Court of the record, pleadings, proceedings and evidence proper to be laid before Her Majesty on the hearing of this appeal, upon payment by [552] the Appellant of the usual fees for the same, and that if the parties should agree and consent as aforesaid, then that the record and evidence, in or relating to the first suit and appeal therein respectively only, should be transmitted, with the judgments, orders and decrees of the Principal Sudder Ameen, Zillah Judge, and Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, with such other documents and papers as the parties may require to have transmitted to the Registrar of the Privy Council; but that in the event of the parties not agreeing, and consenting in manner and within the time aforesaid, then and in that case that all the records, evidence and papers in each of the suits and appeals respectively in all the Courts below, should be immediately, on the expiration of the two months, or as soon after as possible, transmitted to the Registrar.”

This report was approved by Her Majesty.

[553] PRANNATH ROY CHOWDRY.—Appellant; RANEE SURNOMOYEE,—Respondent * [Dec. 7, 1859].

On petition from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Calcutta.

The value of the subject-matter in dispute, though laid in the plaint at a sum exceeding the minimum amount, Rs. 10,000, provided by the Order in Council of the 10th of April, 1836, was reduced on calculation by the Zillah Judge to an amount under that sum, and the finding upon the merits was for the Plaintiff for such reduced sum. Upon a cross appeal, the Sudder Court dismissed the entire claim; and on the ground that the matter in dispute was under the appealable value, refused leave to appeal to England. Upon special petition, leave to appeal allowed, the Appellant claiming to open the question of the value of the subject-matter in question, calculated by the Zillah Judge.

This was a petition for leave to appeal, which had been refused by the Sudder Court at Calcutta, as the amount in suit was under Rs. 10,000, the appealable value prescribed by the Order in Council of the 10th of April, 1836.

The suit was instituted in the Zillah Court of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs by the Petitioner, Prannath Roy Chowdry, the owner of lands held under a Putnee tenure against the Respondent, for the remission of Putnee rents, on account of certain lands resumed by the Government, and paid by him to Government, amounting as alleged in the plaint, with arrears and interest, to Rs. 11,692. 4s. 13p. The Judge of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs by his decree of the 6th of August, 1855, declared the Petitioner entitled to the deductions claimed by him as to the jumma on thirty-five beegahs and ten cottahs, and, as a matter of calculation reduced the claim of the Petitioner to Rs. 5767 for principal, and Rs. 3133 for interest, and then upon the merits allowed the claim for that principal sum, disallowing the Petitioner's claim to interest. Cross appeals were presented by both parties to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and that Court, on the 13th of April, 1858, dismissed the appeal of the Petitioner, and allowed the appeal of the Defendant. Application was made for leave to appeal to England, which the Court refused. The Petitioner now presented a petition for leave to appeal from the Sudder Court's decree and the Order refusing leave to appeal.

Mr. Rolt, Q.C., for the Petitioner.—It was an error on the part of the Zillah Judge in calculating the amount of the claim to make the deduction he did. The Court was bound by the amount laid in the plaint. We seek to reopen the question of value.

Mr. Leith, opposed.—As the Petitioner did not appeal to the Sudder Court from that part of the decree of the Zillah Court which calculated the value, it must be taken for granted that the sum in dispute is conceded to be under Rs. 10,000, the minimum appealable sum. There are no peculiar circumstances to justify the exercise of an indulgence.

The Right Hon. Lord Cranworth.—We think, in the circumstances, liberty to appeal ought to be allowed.

[555] THE EAST INDIA COMPANY,—Appellant: SYED ALLY, HABIBOON NISSA BEGUM, SYED AHMED, SYED YAHYAH, and NAGABOON NISSA BEGUM,—Respondents (a) [June 23, 1827].

On appeal from the Supreme Court at Madras.

By the Treaty of the 31st of July, 1801, made between the then Nawab of the

(a) This case having been frequently referred to, and not having been reported, the Editor thinks, as it relates to the important questions, first of the power of the Indian Government to resume Jaghires in the Carnatic; and secondly, as to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Madras to entertain a suit impeaching the right of resumption, that a report of it will be acceptable to the Profession. The report has been prepared from the papers in the appeal, and the short-hand writers' notes taken at the hearing before the Council.

Carnatic and the Governor in Council at Madras, the sovereign rights of the Nawab in the Carnatic were vested in the East India Company.

Held, that a resumption by the Madras Government of a Jaghire granted by former Nawabs, as Altanghah enam, before the date of the Treaty, and a regrant by the Madras Government to another for a life estate only, was such an act of Sovereign power by the East India Company, as precluded the Supreme Court at Madras from taking cognizance of a suit by the heirs of the original grantee in respect of such resumption.

The Supreme Court at Madras admitted an appeal to the King in Council after the expiration of six months from an original decree. Held, that the Court was not authorized by the Madras Charter of 1800, creating the Supreme Court, to grant leave to appeal.

Upon a special application to the King in Council, founded upon the fact that the previous uniform practice of the Supreme Court at Madras, though upon an erroneous construction of the Charter, was to admit only appeals upon a final decree; leave to appeal was granted by the Privy Council.

This was an appeal from two decrees of the Supreme Court at Madras bearing date the 22nd of May, 1820, and the 28th of July, 1821, in a suit instituted in that Court by the Respondents as co-heirs, according to the Mahomedan law, of their father, Assim Khan, [556] deceased, against the East India Company, and Kullee Moolah Khan, the eldest son of Assim Khan; Ally Moon Nissa Begum, the widow of Assim Khan; Syed Ahmed; Syed Yahyah; Nagaboon Nissa Begum, the other children of Assim Khan, as Defendants, for obtaining a partition of a Jaghire consisting of lands and villages, with an account of the rents and profits, in the Province of Arcot in the Carnatic, originally granted to Assim Khan by the Nawab Wallajah, and re-granted, on certain conditions, by the Appellants to the Defendant, Kullee Moolah Khan, and of which, previous to such re-grant, the Appellants had taken possession, on their general assumption by the Government of the Carnatic in 1801, followed by a Treaty of cession of the territory from the Nawab of the Carnatic to the Appellants.

The suit arose under the following circumstances:—

Wallajah, the Nawab of the Carnatic, on the 29th of July, 1789, granted to Syed Mahomed Assim Khan Behander Moobaranza Jung, hereinafter called Assim Khan, an officer of high rank in the Nawab's service, and at the date of the grants one of his ministers, a Jaghire, or assignment of the Government share of the produce of the land, comprising one hundred and seventy-three villages of the yearly value of 37,216 pagodas, situate in the Province of Arcot, within the Carnatic.

Assim Khan entered into the possession of the Jaghire under the grant, continued in the receipt and enjoyment of the revenues and profits thereof, until the time of the assumption of the Carnatic by the East India Company.

The Nawab Wallajah died on the 30th of November, 1795, and was succeeded by Omdut ul Omrah, who by another grant under his seal, and dated the 30th of August, 1797, confirmed the grant made by the Wallajah to the Assim Khan and his descendants, in perpetuity.

Omdut ul Omrah died on the 1st of July, 1801, when the Governor-General in Council of Madras, for political considerations, under Treaties of subsidy and alliance previously entered into by the Government with the then Sovereign of the Carnatic, took possession of the territories, and assumed, provisionally, the Government of the Carnatic, until the successors of the Government, then in negotiation, was settled.

On the assumption of the Carnatic by the East India Company, a proclamation was issued by the then Governor in Council, Lord Clive, calling upon the subjects of Arcot to pay obedience to the British Government, and stating that all persons in charge of [557] religious establishments, relations, Jaghiredars, pensioners, and other dependants on the bounty of the deceased Nawab should sustain no injury from the temporary arrangement by the British Government.

A negotiation was immediately opened by the Governor in Council with the succeeding Nawab, Azeem ul Dolah, and on the 31st of July, 1801, a Treaty was concluded between the Nawab of the one part, and the Governor in Council, with the sanction of the Governor-General in India on behalf of the East India Company, on the other part. By this Treaty it was stipulated and agreed, that the sole and exclusive administration of the civil and military Government of all the territories and dependencies of the Carnatic Payen Ghauts, together with the full and exclusive right to the revenues thereof, with the exception of such portion of the revenues as should be appropriated for the maintenance of the Nawab, and for the support of his dignity, should be for ever vested in the Appellants, who had accordingly possessed the sole power and authority of constituting and appointing, without any interference on the part of the Nawab, all officers for the collection of the revenues, and of establishing Courts for the administration of civil and criminal judicature. The East India Company engaged to pay one-fifth of the revenue of the territory for the support of the Nawab and his family; it was also further stipulated, that the entire defence of the Carnatic against foreign enemies, and the maintenance of the internal tranquillity and policy of the country, being thereby transferred to the British Government, his Highness should not entertain or employ in his service any armed men without the consent of the East India Company; and it was further provided that the Appellants should enter on the exclusive administration of Government on the 31st of July, 1801.

By virtue of this Treaty, the East India Company remained in possession of the Government territory and revenue of the Carnatic, including the revenues of the Jaghire lands; and, in pursuance of the above proclamation, the Governor in Council of Madras, on the 5th of August, 1801, caused a letter to be written to the Board of Revenue, directing the Collectors to prepare a list of the Jaghires actually enjoyed at the period when the territory was transferred to the East India Company, with the names of the original grantees, the actual occupants, and an account of the revenues of each Jaghire accompanying the original sunnuds or grants. The letter stated that Jaghires not being Altamghah, were held by tenures dependant [558] on the pleasure of the governing powers, and that the Governor in Council had, therefore, resolved that all Jaghires held by temporary tenures should be brought under the immediate authority of the East India Company until it should be examined and confirmed, but that it was the intention of the British Government as soon as the necessary information was received, to restore all such Jaghires as had been held by tenures sufficiently valid.

In accordance with the above requirements, Assim Khan, for the purpose of establishing his title to the Jaghire in question, submitted for investigation, the sunnuds or grants under which he held possession of the Jaghire: but before a report had been made by the Board of Revenue to the Governor in Council on the validity of his title, and on the 27th of October, 1801, Assim Khan died, leaving Ally Moon Nissa Begum, his widow, and four sons, Kullee Moolah Khan, Syed Ahmed, the Respondents, Syed Ally and Syed Yahyah, and three daughters, Ariffoon Nissa Begum, the Respondent, Nagaboon Nissa Begum, and Habiboon Nissa Begum, him surviving. Without having been restored to the possession of the Jaghire, and on the 30th of November following, the Board of Revenue reported to the Governor in Council that they had, in pursuance of the Government's orders, examined the Perwannahs or grants in Altamghah before mentioned, made to Assim Khan, deceased, by the two Nawabs, Wallajah and Omdut ul Omrah, and the Board intimated (in the event of the Jaghire being confirmed by the Governor in Council), the resolution of the Government to reserve the Sayer (customs) throughout the country as the exclusive right of the Sovereign.

Previously to this report, and shortly after the death of Assim Khan, Syed Kullee Moolah Khan, his son, made an application to the Board of Revenue, petitioning, as a matter of favour and indulgence, to have the Jaghire granted to him. The Governor in Council, taking into consideration the character of the late Khan, determined that Syed Kullee Moolah Khan was a fit object for a re-grant of the Jaghire; and accordingly, on the 16th of January, 1802, the Governor in Council caused a letter to be sent to the Board of Revenue, stating that the Government was satisfied with the authenticity of the sunnuds granted to Assim Khan by the two Nawabs for the lands held in Jaghire from the Nawab of the Carnatic; but that a tenure of that description differed materially from that of Altamghah, stated in the letter of the Board; that the claim of Assim Khan to the continuance of his Jaghire was not founded on any right independent of the Sovereign of the Car-[559]-natic, but as the Jaghire had been current for a considerable period of time antecedent to that when the territorial possessions of the Nawab of Arcot became more immediately pledged for the security of His Highness's engagements to the East India Company by the Treaty of 1792, the Governor in Council deemed it expedient, and resolved to restore the lands to Syed Kullee Moolah Khan, to be held in Jaghire, dependent on the British Government. The Governor in Council further resolved that the sumrud of confirmation and investiture should contain specific clauses for that purpose. A Perwannah was accordingly issued, dated 27th of March, 1802, which renewed by that instrument the Jaghire, but without the Sayer, salt or saltpetre duties. And it was by the grant required of Syed Kullee Mollah Khan that, in taking possession of the Jaghire, he should not consider any power or authority whatever over the rights, privileges, liberty, or property of the inhabitants residing within the Jaghire to be thereby conveyed to him, and that he was in like manner, with all the other subjects of the British Government, to be answerable to the jurisdiction and control of the Laws and Regulations existing, or that might be established.

Under this grant, Kullee Moolah Khan entered into possession of the revenues of the Jaghire, and held the same for fourteen years.

In the year 1813, the Respondents commenced litigation in the Courts in India, respecting their father's Will.

On the 24th of July, 1817, the present suit was commenced by a Bill filed in the Supreme Court at Madras by the Respondents, in which the East India Company were, with others, made Defendants. The claim of the Respondents at first rested principally on the ground of alleged fraud and misrepresentation by Kullee Moolah Khan in obtaining the grant from the Governor in Council by concealment of the real state of his father's family. To this Bill the East India Company demurred for the want of equity, and the demurrer came on to be argued on the 26th and 27th days of September, 1817, when the demurrer was overruled. The other Defendants then appeared, and by the answer denied the imputed fraud and concealment alleged by the Bill. The Respondents amended their Bill, renouncing all claim to any benefit under the Perwannah, or re-grant, by the East India Company to Kullee Moolah Khan, which they prayed might be delivered up and cancelled; and afterwards, by their amended Bill, rested their case upon the validity and effect of the original grants by the Nawabs, Wallajah and Omdut [560] ul Omrah, alleging that the late Assim Khan was, at the time of his death, seised of the Jaghire, as held in Altamghali enam to him and his posterity for ever; and the Bill charged, that the grants of the Nawabs not only granted the revenue, or the Government share in the produce of the lands and villages, but also all rights and privileges, powers, advantages, and immunities which the Government had in the lands and villages, upon those lands and villages for the purpose of disposing of, and re-letting, improving and cultivating such lands and villages, or for any other purpose as the Government might have done, saving and excepting the sovereignty thereof, and also saving and excepting the rights and interests the cultivators and inhabitants had or might have by law, in the soil and produce of the lands and villages; and that even if the grants were merely the revenue or Government share, that in that case the Government would not have been justified in the resumption of the lands and villages by reason of any pretended right existing in the Mahomedan Government, for that such grants had always been considered by the Mahomedan Government to be and were treated as perpetual grants, and not resumable at the pleasure of the Government, or on the change of the reigning Sovereign; and that the Government of Fort St. George, on such resumption, used a power which they were not lawfully possessed of, and which had not resided in, or at any time been exercised by, the Mahomedan Government towards their faithful subjects, and which the Government, by the proclamation aforesaid, had disclaimed all intention of exercising. And the Bill prayed, that it might be declared, either that the original Perwannahs, or grants of the Nawabs, Wallajah and Omdut ul Omrah, to Assim Khan were and had been in force ever since the assumption of the civil and military authority of the Carnatic by the East India Company, and that Syed Alley, Bucka Sultan and Habiboon Nissa Begum might be declared entitled to their several and respective shares of the Jaghire lands and villages included under the same, namely, Syed Alley to an equal share with his other brothers, and Bucka Sultan, in right of Habiboon Nissa Begum his wife, to an equal share with his sisters, which was half the share of the brothers, in the whole of the lands and villages, and that they might be respectively declared entitled to like shares of the rents, issues and profits thereof which had been received by or by the order of the Kullee Mollah Khan since the death of Assim Khan, and for that purpose the usual accounts might be taken, [561] with short rests for the calculating of interest, and that the Perwannah, or regrant of the Jaghire lands and villages made by the East India Company to Kullee Moolah Khan, might be ordered to be delivered up and cancelled, and that the East India Company might be decreed to make and execute a new grant or Perwannah of the Jaghire lands and villages in favour of Respondents and the widow and other children of Assim Khan, according to their several and respective interests as representatives to Assim Khan, according to the Mahomedan law, usages, and customs, in Altumghah or perpetually; or in case the Court should not see cause to maintain the validity of the original Perwannah, then that Kullee Moolah Khan might be decreed, in respect of the several fraudulent proceedings and concealments, to come to a just and particular account of all the profits of the Jaghire lands received by him, or any other person for his use, since the 27th of October, 1801, the day of the death of Assim Khan, and that half yearly and other frequent rests might be made in taking such account, and that the interest found due might be carried forward as principal, and that Kullee Moolah Khan might also be decreed, in respect of such alleged fraudulent proceedings and concealments, to have been and then to be a trustee of the Jaghire lands and villages for the benefit of the Respondents, to the extent of their respective shares in the same, according to the Mahomedan Law, and that the East India Company might be declared to have been, during all the time of the assumption, seised of the lands and villages and the rents and revenues thereof, in trust for Assim Khan during his life, and since his death for the Respondents and his family; and that the East India Company might be decreed to account before the Master for all the rents and revenues thereof, which during the assumption came to their hands, or which they had received since the period of the grant to Kullee Moolah Khan, or which were by them, under and by that grant, received and retained for their own use; and in case that Kullee Moolah Khan should be liable to make good to the Respondents the several amounts which might be found to have come to his hands under and by virtue of the grants, then that the East India Company might be made to make good to the Respondents such deficiencies as might arise or have arisen by reason of any of their acts in the premises, and that Kullee Moolah Khan might also be decreed to account in future with the Respondents, half-yearly or otherwise, as might be most convenient, in respect of their respective shares of the rents and profits.

[562] The East India Company by their answer insisted, that the right of property of Assim Khan in the Jaghire was broken into and upon by the act of assumption by the Government, and that the Jaghire was assumed in their name and behalf, under and by virtue of the terms and stipulations contained in the Treaty made by them with the late Nawab of the Carnatic. And they further stated, that by the Treaty they had the right and power to assume and seize the property of every individual who held the same under the Jaghire grants from the late Nabob Wallajah, and his son, Omdut ul Omrah, and submitted that the Government had not by any act, expressly or otherwise, disclaimed or renounced such right with regard to any Jaghire lands, held under Perwannah from those several Nawabs, whether the same were held under Altumghah enams, or any other description of Perwannahs, and that they were well justified in so doing by reason of the nature of such property, the same being merely revenue, or the Government share in the produce of the villages comprised in the Jaghire grants; and that, according to the Mahomedan Law, and according to the constant usage of the Mahomedan Government, such grants were always resumable at the pleasure of the Government on the death or change of the reigning Government, on whatever terms the grants were expressed, unless the same were afterwards confirmed by the successor, and that, therefore, the Appellants on such resumption as aforesaid, only exercised the same power which had been constantly exercised by the former Mahomedan Governments of the Carnatic. And they submitted, whether the Bill contained any matter of equity whereon the Supreme Court could ground any jurisdiction to pronounce a decree, or give the Respondents relief as against them, as the matters of the suit, so far as they related to the Appellents, were of a political nature, and not cognizable by any Municipal Court of Justice.

On the 22nd of May, 1820, the Supreme Court pronounced a decree, whereby it was declared and decreed that the original Perwannahs, or grants, granted by the Nawabs, Wallajah and Omdut ul Omrah, to Assim Khan and his posterity for ever, of the Jaghire lands and villages were valid and subsisting Perwannahs or grants, and that the same were, and had been, in force ever since the assumption of the Carnatic by the Appellants; and the Respondents were under the same entitled to their several and respective shares in the Jaghire lands and villages, according to the Mahomedan Law; the Respondent, Syed Alley, to an equal [563] share with the brothers, and the Respondent, Bucka Sultan in right of his wife the Respondent, and Habiboon Nissa Begum to an equal share with her sisters. And it was further declared, that the Plaintiffs were also respectively entitled to like shares of the rents, issues and profits of such Jaghire lands and villages. And it was decreed, that the Defendant, Kullee Moolah Khan, should account before the Master touching the Jaghire lands and villages, and the rents and profits, and revenues, and of all arrears of rents and profits thereof which had accrued during the time of the assumption of the Government of Fort St. George, or which had been received by Kullee Moolah Khan since the death of Assim Khan, and that the Master should make half-yearly rents, and compute interest and make just allowances. And the Court further declared that Kullee Moolah Khan had been, and then was, a trustee of the Jaghire lands and villages, and of the rents and profits thereof, for the benefit of the Respondents to the extent of their respective shares and interest in the same, according to the Mahomedan Law; and all further directions and costs were reserved until after the Master should have made his report.

The Master having made his report, the cause came on to be heard on further directions on the 28th of July, 1821, when the Court ordered and decreed that the Defendant, Kullee Moolah Khan, should forthwith pay to the Respondents, Syed Ally, and the other children, their shares in the rents and profits of the Jaghire; and also that Kullee Moolah Khan should pay interest to the respective parties on the several sums of money at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from the 21st day of February, 1821; and the Court further ordered that, until the same should have been fully paid and satisfied, the share and proportion of the Defendant, Kullee Moolah Khan, of and in the Jaghire, should be held and be liable to the payment thereof to the several parties rateably and in proportion, according to the amount due to them respectively; and that the parties were respectively entitled to have and possess the Jaghire and the rents and revenues thereof to themselves and their heirs in perpetuity, the same to be divided amongst them in the shares and proportions authorized by the Mahomedan Law, and that upon applications for that purpose, the parties should be entitled to have a partition thereof accordingly, and to have possession of their several and respective shares, subject to the subsisting rights and interests of the tenants and occupiers thereof.

On the 20th of January, 1822, the East India Company pre-[564]-sented a petition to the Supreme Court, and obtained an order for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decrees of the 22nd of May, 1820, and the 28th of July, 1821, and afterwards lodged a petition of appeal against both decrees in the Privy Council Office.

The Respondents afterwards presented a petition, praying that the petition of appeal from the above decrees, so far as it sought to reverse the original decree pronounced by the Supreme Court of Madras on the 22nd of May, 1820, might be dismissed, the appeal not having been brought within six months, the time limited by the Madras Charter.

The petition now came on for hearing (Feb. 2, 1825).

Mr. Horne, K.C., Dr. Lushington (Mr. H. Brougham, K.C., and Mr. Teed, with them), for the Respondents, the Petitioners.

This application is founded upon the provisions of the Madras Charter, which provides that no appeal shall be allowed by the Supreme Court unless the petition for that purpose be preferred within six months from the day of pronouncing the judgment or determination complained of, and unless the value of the matter in dispute exceed the sum of one thousand Pagodas. The first decree, now appealed from, was pronounced by the Supreme Court on the 22nd of May, 1820, and the decree on further directions on the 28th of July, 1821: it was not until the latter decree was pronounced, that the Appellants preferred their petition of appeal to England, which the Supreme Court of Madras allowed. We contend, that it was not in the power of the Supreme Court to admit the East India Company to appeal from the original decree of the 22nd of May, 1820, and in granting them liberty to appeal, they exceeded their jurisdiction. The provisions of the Madras Charter were never complied with, as it is admitted that it was not until after the decree on further directions was pronounced; more than six months, that the Appellants applied for leave to appeal. The Supreme Court of Madras had no power by the Charter under which that Court was constituted, to relax the restriction to the time for appealing contained in that Charter.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Nicholas Tindal), Mr. Serjeant Bosanquet (Mr. Serjeant Spankie with them), for the East India Company.

The appeal from the Supreme Court of Madras was interposed, [565] according to the terms of the Madras Charter, within six months after the 28th of July, 1821, the date of the decree on further directions. The objection now raised for the first time, that the appeal should have been preferred within six months after the original decree of the 22nd of May, 1820, we submit is untenable, inasmuch so much of the matter complained of is comprised in the decree on further directions, which although not equally important to the declaration of rights between the parties to the suit, as in the original decree, nevertheless embraced the fruit growing out of the declaration of such right. It is, moreover, strictly conformable to the practice of the Supreme Court at Madras, in which Court it has been the uniform practice that when a decree is made, which is to be followed up by further directions, to consider the two decrees as a joint and several one, and no appeal was ever allowed to England until the decree on further directions was made. But, assuming that the Appellants are wrong in their construction of the Charter in consequence of their reliance upon the construction put by the Supreme Court at Madras and on the practice there, still power is reserved by the Madras Charter to His Majesty in Council to admit the appeal; for if the Appellants are beyond the time prescribed by the Charter, it arose from following the practice of the Supreme Court, upon that Court's construction of the Charter.

The Master of the Rolls (Lord Gifford).—The petition of appeal has been presented as a matter of course, founded upon the liberty to appeal granted by the Supreme Court of Madras. The objection now is, that although that permission has been granted, yet that with respect to the ground of it, the Court below had no power to grant that permission, and that as to the first decree pronounced in May, 1820, the present Appellants had no right to impeach that decree. The Charter which gives the liberty to appeal against the decision of the Supreme Court has provided that, where the appeal is grounded upon a permission granted by that Court, that the appeal must be made to that Court; and then it provides that no appeal shall be allowed by that Court unless the petition for that purpose shall be preferred within six months from the day of pronouncing the judgment or determination complained of, and unless the value of the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum of 1000 Pagodas. Now, the first decree in this case is one that was pronounced in May, 1820, and pronounced [566] considerably more than six months before the application for leave to appeal. It has been fairly admitted that it was a judgment against which an appeal might have been fairly brought: it is a decree pronounced upon the rights of the parties directing further proceedings and inquiries, and an account to be taken, but that was to be done as consequential upon the decision of the Court upon the rights of the parties. A reference was made; the Master made his report upon that reference some time in the year 1821, and a further decree upon further directions was pronounced in July 1821, and within six months from that period the East India Company had full power to appeal; they had leave to appeal granted, and if they chose to prosecute their appeal against it, there can be no objection to that; but the question is, whether the Court below had any right to grant the leave to appeal against the first decree; the Board have no doubt in thinking they had no such right.

Then, there is another clause in the Charter, giving power to the King in Council to grant an appeal upon such terms, and under such limitations, restrictions, and regulations as he should think fit: but as it has been urged in argument, there must be a special application, stating a strong case to the Board for permitting that indulgence, and accounting for the negligence in not having appealed in due time. It is unnecessary to say what the opinion of the Board would be upon that application, because it is not before them: the only appeal before them is one stated as a matter of course, founded upon the permission given the Appellants by the Supreme Court: the Board are of opinion, that that permission could only be given to them as to the decree upon further directions, and that so much of the prayer of the petition must be granted as prays to restrict the appeal to the last decree. We pronounce nothing upon the question of costs at present.

(Feb. 1, 1826.) The East India Company, in conformity to the suggestions of the Board, presented a special petition praying for the indulgence of the Board to permit them to appeal from the decree pronounced by the Supreme Court of Madras on the 22nd of May, 1820; and in support of their application filed an affidavit of Sir Thomas Strange, Knt., formerly Recorder of the Supreme Court at Madras, the material parts of which were as follows:—"That he was appointed the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Madras in 1801, and exercised that office from that time until the year 1816, when he resigned; that during the time whilst he so held that office, [567] an established practice existed (founded on a prevailing understanding of the intention and construction of the Letters Patent creating the Court) of granting leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from judgments or determinations of the Court only on the ultimate conclusion of a suit, when the whole suit and everything regarding it, save only execution, had attained maturity, and when, the party dissatisfied might have the benefit of such right of appeal to the extent of every part of the proceedings on which error might be assignable."

Mr. Serjeant Bosanquet, and Mr. Serjeant Spankie, for the East India Company. We are now in a state to account satisfactorily for not coming before your Lordships in the regular time and manner as provided for by the Madras Charter: although we were wrong in the construction of that Charter, still we were misled by an error founded on the prevailing practice of the Supreme Court of Madras. The affidavit of Sir Thomas Strange shows that no appeal could have been interposed during the progress of the cause: we were governed by the practice of the Supreme Court, which seems to have been settled by a decision pronounced by that Court in the case of Johnston v. The East India Company (1 Strange's Madras Cases, 21). In that case a petition was presented for leave to appeal against an interlocutory order, which was refused, the Court being of opinion, upon the construction of the Madras Charter, that there could be no appeal while the suit was in progress, and declaring that the suit must have reached its end, and then, and not before, the party aggrieved might object to any order by which he could show that he had been finally aggrieved. This has been the basis of the practice from that time to the present, and acting upon this authority and construction of the Charter, the East India Company did not present their petition of appeal till the decree on further directions was pronounced.

Mr. Horne, K.C., and Dr. Lushington, for the Respondents, resisted the motion, contending that no general rule of practice in the Supreme Court at Madras could overrule the express words of the Charter, by which they insisted, the Appellants were absolutely precluded from their right to appeal from the original decree pronounced by the Supreme Court on the 20th of May, 1820.

[568] The Master of the Rolls (Lord Gifford).—This is an application to the indulgence of the Board by the Petitioners, the East India Company, who pray that they may be permitted to appeal against a decree made by the Supreme Court of Madras in 1820; and, considering the power and weight of this Company, the Board will look very narrowly into any indulgence they ask. It appears that twelve months ago an appeal having been lodged, as a matter of course, by them, not only against the decree upon further directions, but the original decree, an application was made by the Respondents that that appeal, so far as it regarded the original decree, should be dismissed, inasmuch as the Appellants had not presented it in due time. It appears that a suit was instituted by the Respondents so long ago as the year 1820, against the Company and other parties; and one great question respected the validity of a certain grant of a Jaghire, made so long ago as the year 1789, which had been confirmed afterwards in the year 1797; and the question between the East India Company and the Plaintiffs in that suit related to the validity of that grant. A decree was pronounced in the year 1820 by the Supreme Court of Madras, and, as I understand the decree, it did declaratively pronounce on the validity of that grant, and thereby pronounced its final decision upon that question in which the East India Company were interested. Having made the declaration which that decree contains, respecting the validity of the grant, the Court went on to direct certain accounts to be rendered by other parties in the cause, and, those accounts having been taken, the cause came on upon the Master's report. An order, upon further directions, was made upon that report, but the East India Company were only affected by the original decree pronounced in 1820, because the other proceedings related to the account between other parties, and did not affect them: they had permission to appeal, not only against the decree upon further directions, but from the original decree. The Board were of opinion that, looking at the terms of the Charter, in which it is provided "that no appeal shall be allowed by the Court unless the petition for that purpose shall be preferred within six months from the day of pronouncing the judgment or determination complained of, and unless the value of the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum of one thousand Pagodas," that the judgment and determination complained of, was the decree originally pronounced upon the hearing of the cause, the decree pronouncing declaratively upon the great question existing in the cause between the East India Company and the Respondents: [569] and they were of opinion that the East India Company were out of time, so far as regarded that decree, but that they were still in time to appeal against the decree upon further directions. The Appellants have now presented a very long petition to the Board, praying for the indulgence of the Board to admit them to appeal, upon the ground that a certain error has existed in the proceedings of the Supreme Court of Madras since the granting of its Charter in 1800, up to the present period; and they have produced an affidavit of a most eminent Judge of that Court, holding the highest judicial situation for a great number of years, who deposes "that during the whole time whilst he so held and exercised the said office, an established practice existed (founded upon a prevailing understanding of the intention and construction of the said Letters Patent), of granting leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from judgments or determinations of the said Court of Judicature only on the ultimate conclusion of a suit, when the whole suit and everything regarding it, save only execution, had attained maturity, and when the party dissatisfied might have the benefit of such right of appeal to the extent of every part of the proceeding on which error might be assignable." He states that to have been the practice; and a case has also been produced before us, determined so long ago as the year 1799, before the granting of this Charter, though the words of the Charter that then existed appear to be very similar to those in the present Charter: and upon that occasion the Recorder determined that it was not competent to the party to appeal against an interlocutory judgment, but that he must wait till the final judgment of the cause to appeal. It appears that the Court at Madras has considered that to be the practice by allowing the appeal in this particular case, because no doubt seems to have been felt when the Appellants applied for leave to appeal. Now, under these circumstances, the question is, whether this error, which has prevailed up to the period when this appeal was presented, is such an error as shall induce the Board to grant the Appellants the indulgence they now ask.

It has been urged before us that this case ought to be determined, not as if a powerful body like the East India Company were the parties, but like the case of an humble individual; and we think the Board would perhaps look with still greater jealousy to a case in which a Company so powerful as the East India Company were concerned. We think, however, as an error has existed in the mind of the Supreme Court, it would be too much to shut out the party from the right of appeal: we, therefore, with great reluctance, are [570] disposed to grant the right; but considering that the Company have not been so alert in prosecuting this petition as they ought to have been, because our decision was pronounced on the 2nd of February, and it is not till October that they take any steps to procure the indulgence they ask, and that in the meantime orders have been pronounced by this Board to lodge their case upon the appeal then laying before the Board, and no notice was taken of those orders, nor any application made for the indulgence they ask; under these circumstances, it is impossible to grant this indulgence, but upon the terms of their paying not only the costs of this application, but any costs that may have been incurred since February, 1825, and which may in the event have been incurred unnecessarily. I mean as to the printing of their cases in the present form, which, I dare say, are directed only to the decree upon further directions, and, therefore, further expense must be incurred in preparing additional cases applicable to this point, which appears of the greatest importance in the case, namely, the validity of the Jaghire. I suppose there can be no question as to the part of the costs they ought to pay; the parties ought to be fully indemnified for all the costs that have been incurred in consequence of the delay that has taken place, and the costs of this application.

The appeal from both decrees being admitted, Appellants, in their case submitted that the same ought to be reversed, and relied upon for the following reasons:—

First.—That the assumption of the Government of the Carnatic in 1801, was entirely a political measure, carried into effect by the Governor in Council of Madras, for enforcing Treaties made with the Nawabs as reigning Sovereigns, by the Appellants, in exercise of the powers of Government delegated to them by Royal Charters and Acts of Legislature; and that the dispossession of Assim Khan, and the other Jaghiredars and grantees of the public revenues of the Carnatic, formed part of such assumption; and they submitted that Assim Khan, under whom the Respondents claimed, never was possessed of the Jaghire after the assumption of the Carnatic by the Governor in Council of Madras; that the acts of resuming the Jaghires of the Carnatic, and of re-granting to Kullee Moolah Khan the Jaghire in question, being political acts, had been sanctioned and confirmed by the department of the British Government expressly appointed by the Legislature for the superintendence and control of all political acts of the Governors in Council of [571] the Appellants in India—namely, the Commissioners for the affairs of India. That by the 53rd Geo. III., c. 155, the British Legislature vested in the East India Company all the territorial acquisitions then under their Government, with the revenues thereof, for a term then unexpired, and thereby confirmed the acquisition and occupation by the East India Company of the Carnatic, and the disposition of the Jaghires of that country made by the Appellants; and that the acts of resumption and re-grant of the Jaghire not being transactions of the Appellants in their character of a commercial Company, but being such political acts as aforesaid, carried into effect by the authorities legally constituted in that behalf, and sanctioned as aforesaid, were matters wholly foreign to the jurisdiction of a Municipal Court, erected for deciding causes between subjects of the British Crown, in cases of ordinary right within its jurisdiction.

Second.—That without examining how far the extensive powers vested in the Appellants, by their Charters from Charles II., William III., and Queen Anne, and recognized by various Acts of Parliaments, were virtually abridged and modified by the enactments of the Statute, 13th Geo. III., c. 63, which Statute commenced a system of Parliamentary regulation of the Government of India, or by the Act of 24th Geo. III., c. 25, and subsequent Acts constituting the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India, it was beyond question that the power of concluding Treaties with Native Princes on behalf of the Appellants was vested in the Governor in Council of Madras, with the approbation of the Governor-General of India, in the year 1801, when the Governor in Council, with the sanction of the Governor-General at Fort William in Bengal, concluded the Treaty with the Nawab, ceding the Carnatic to the Appellants. That the Treaty of 1801, transferred to the Appellants, without any exception whatever, the sole and exclusive administration of the Government of the Carnatic, together with the full exclusive right to the revenues thereof, subject to a provision of one-fifth for the maintenance of the Nawabs; the Appellants by Article 9, engaging to take into consideration the situation of the families of the late Nawab, and of the principal officers of the Government, and to provide them a suitable maintenance; a stipulation which would have been nugatory if the Jaghires had been considered as private property, or had been intended to be secured to the Jaghiredars. That the treating powers, in concluding the Treaty of 1801, obviously intended to include in its operation the Jaghires of the Carnatic, as would manifestly appear from a comparison between the [572] language of that Treaty, and that of former Treaties between the Nawab and the Appellants. That, in the Treaty of 1787, forming the basis of arrangements for the joint defence of the Carnatic, between the Appellants and the Nawab in the event of war, the 9th Article stipulated that the Nawab should pay four-fifths of his revenue to the Appellants, which four-fifths were to be taken after deducting from his whole revenue 2,13,131 pagodas annually, for Jaghires to the family of His Highness, and 21,366 pagodas annually for charities; a deduction evincing that the Jaghires granted to the family were still considered part of the public revenue, and would have entered into the amount thereof, had they not been expressly excepted. And that the next Treaty of 1792, between the Nawab and the Appellants, instead of providing a war subsidy from the Nawab, provided that in the event of war, the Appellants should enter into full authority over the Carnatic, and collect the revenues during the war, except the Jaghires of the Nawab's family of the amount of 2,13,911 pagodas, which on the condition of the good behaviour of the Jaghiredars, and of their fidelity to the Nawab, should be continued to them, subject to the pleasure of the Nawabs. And the Appellants submitted, that the last-mentioned Treaty being made three years subsequently to the Nawab Wallajah's grant to Assim Khan, clearly manifested not only that without the exception, Jaghires of all kinds (including even those of the Nawab's family) would have been subject to the occupation of the Appellants in the event of war; but also, by the limited terms of the exception, it must be inferred that the treating powers never intended to except or protect the Jaghire of Assim Khan, or any other Jaghiredars, except the members of the reigning family. And it was further submitted by the Appellants as manifest, that the cession made by the Treaty of 1801, contained no exception (while the former Treaties contained such exceptions as aforesaid) and was unlimited and unqualified, that the Jaghires of the Carnatic were intended to pass with the general revenues to the Appellants, while the family and the Jaghiredars, and officers of the Nawab, were to look for provisions to the Appellant's engagement under the 9th article of the Treaty.

Third.—That the Supreme Court at Madras, in making the decrees, exceeded its jurisdiction, as the same was prescribed and defined by the Acts of 37th Geo. III., c. 142, and 39th and 40th Geo. III., c. 79, and by the Letters Patent constituting the Court. That the 37th of Geo. III., c. 142, sec. ii., recited in the 39th and 40th Geo. III., c. 79, and Letters Patent, expressly provided [573] that the Recorder's Court of Madras “shall not have or exercise any jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue under the management of the Governor in Council respectively, either within or beyond the limits of the said town of Madras, or the forts or factories subordinate thereto, or concerning any act done of the Governor or Council.” That by the Act, 39th and 60th Geo. III., c. 97, sec. 2, His Majesty was empowered to erect the present Supreme Court at Madras, to consist of such persons, and to be invested with such power and authorities, privileges and immunities, for the better administration of the same, and subject to the same limitations, restrictions and control within Fort St. George, the town of Madras, and factories subordinate thereto, and within the territories which now are, or hereafter may be, subject to, or dependent on, the Government of Madras, as the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, by virtue of any law now in force and unrepealed, or by that Act did consist of, is invested with, or subject to, within Fort William, or the kingdoms or provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa. That the Act of the 21st Geo. III., c. 70, which was passed for the purpose of amending and explaining the 13th Geo. III., c. 63, under the authority of which the Supreme Court at Fort William was erected, and for regulating the jurisdiction of that Court, contained a clause (sec. 8) similar to the above-mentioned clause of the 37th Geo. III., c. 142, sec. 11, and the Letters Patent of the 26th December (41st Geo. III.), establishing the Supreme Court at Madras, contained a clause precisely in the same words as the last-mentioned clause of the 37th Geo. III., c. 142, regulating the jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court. That neither Assim Khan, nor Kullee Moolah Khan, either under the Government of the Nawab, or of the Appellants, was ever possessed of or entitled to any land whatever by virtue of the Jaghire in question. That the Jaghire consisted of the Government share of the produce of the Jaghire lands, and consequently passed to the Appellants as part of the public revenues of the Carnatic, and became public revenue of the Appellant's Government, under the management of the Governor in Council of Madras. That the Appellant's grant to Kullee Moolah Khan was a grant of a part of such public revenues to him as Jaghiredar, and the Jaghire remained public revenue in the hands of the grantee, and exempt from all taxes and charges to the State, in the same manner as when the revenue was in the hands of the Government itself. That the Appellants upon the re-grant to Kullee Moolah Khan reserved [574] to themselves their present interest in part of the revenues which had not been excepted in the grants to Assim Khan: namely, the Sayer, salt and saltpetre. That the Appellants by the terms of such re-grant, gave to Kullee Moolah Khan an interest in the Jaghire of an ordinary Jaghiredar only, without any term of perpetuity, and were, therefore, entitled to the terms of such re-grant (whatever might be the construction of the Perwannahs of the Nawabs), to resume such Jaghire as part of the public revenues under all the circumstances in which an ordinary Jaghire is resumable. That the Appellants, therefore, submitted, that the decrees had been made upon matters concerning the revenues under the management of the Governor in Council at Fort St. George, which were expressly excluded from the jurisdiction of that Court, and that the Court had no authority to decree that the Perwannahs of the Nawabs were valid and subsisting after the assumption of the Carnatic, or to decree a partition of the Jaghire, or to appoint a receiver of the rents or profits thereof. That if the Appellants' Government had altogether refused to renew the grant of the Nawabs, either to Assim Khan, or to Kullee Moolah Khan, after his death, it could hardly have been contended that the Appellants would be compellable so to do by a suit in the Supreme Court: and yet the decrees proceeded upon the principle of establishing the Perwannah of the Nawabs as perpetual grants, and of invalidating the limited re-grant of the Appellants. That if the authority of the Supreme Court to make these decrees could be maintained, it might by parity of reasoning be contended, that the whole settlement of the Carnatic, after its assumption by the British Government, might be revised by the Supreme Court, and that suits might be entertained upon the complaints of all the former subjects, or the representatives of former subjects, of the Nawabs, who might be dissatisfied with the arrangements then made, though sanctioned by the executive and controlling authorities appointed by the Legislature. That the field of litigation which would thus be opened upon every accession of territory to the several Presidencies in India, might easily be imagined, but from entering upon which, the Appellants submitted that the Supreme Courts at those Presidencies were equally excluded by principle and the provisions of the Legislature.

Fourth,—That if the Supreme Court at Madras was authorized to take cognizance of the subject-matter in dispute relating to the Jaghire, the case did not justify the decrees which had been made, [575] by which effect and validity have been given to the Perwannahs of the Nawabs, as grants in perpetuity, notwithstanding the transfer of the Carnatic to the Appellants, and their resumption of the Jaghire. That notwithstanding the language of the Perwannahs expressive of perpetuity, such grants according to their general acceptance in India, the known and constant usage and practice of the Carnatic and other Indian States, and also from the nature of the subject-matter granted, were resumable upon a change of sovereignty, and could be deemed perpetual. That although the language of the grants might seem to convey a proprietary interest in the soil, yet the grantees confessedly possessed no such interest, the subject-matter of the grant being a mere Jaghire, or portion of public land revenue, together with the Government powers of collecting the same, and that as Assim Khan never entered into possession of anything beyond such Government portion of revenue, the Ryots or land owners remained in possession as before. That the grants, therefore, being of the nature above mentioned, must, according to the character and usage of the Indian Governments, be determinable, if not at pleasure, at least upon the death of the granting Sovereign, or the change of dynasty. That such grants being in Enam, namely, gratuitous, and not subject to any payment or other render to the State, being the ordinary mode of conferring stipends on the officers and dependants of the native Princes; from their nature could not extend beyond the life of the granting Prince without often leaving his successor deprived of the revenues necessary for the purposes of Government, and without often leaving individuals hostile to the existing Government in possession of the large portions of its revenues. That when the executive and legislative powers were united in the Sovereign Prince, as they always were in India, there were no means by which the State could be protected from extravagant grants by the reigning Sovereign, and the resumption of such grants by the successor, and the resumable nature of the grants in question further appeared from the actual regrant upon the death of Wallajah, the first granting Nawab, to Assim Khan, by Omdut ul Omrah, the succeeding Sovereign.

Fifth,—That the laws and usages of Mahomedan States respecting grants of Jaghires, the nature of Altumghah grants, the precise estate and interest conveyed by such grants, and the powers of resumption or revocation belonging to the Sovereign grantors, were matters respecting which there was no sufficient evidence on which the Court below could make the decrees appealed against, and that [576] the Court ought to have directed issues, in order to ascertain the facts, and especially the laws and usages of the Carnatic, and ought not to have decided a question of such magnitude and of so much novelty and perplexity without granting such issues. That certain questions relating to the Mahomedan law propounded to persons in Bengal, with the answers of such persons thereto, which had been annexed to the proceedings transmitted by the Supreme Court, formed no part of the proceedings in the suit appealed from, nor were such questions propounded by any party in that suit, nor was any opportunity afforded to the Appellants to discuss, by argument, the effect of the answers thereto; consequently, that nothing contained in those answers ought in any degree to have influenced the judgment of the Court in pronouncing the decrees, nor ought the same to affect the judgment of the Court of appeal.

Sixth,—That the right of the Appellants to object to the decrees of the Court by appeal could not be resisted upon the ground that the Appellants had no interest in the same, and that the question therein merely regarded the relative rights and interests of Kullee Moolah Khan, and his brothers and sisters; since the Appellants' Government, which, previously to the regrant by Kullee Moolah Khan, had actually resumed the Jaghire, and received the revenues thereof for several months from the time of the assumption of the Government, only gave to Kullee Moolah Khan a portion of the subject-matter of the Nawab's grants, reserving to the Appellants the important articles of Sayer, salt and saltpetre duties and also limited the grant of the grantee to the interest of an ordinary Jaghiredar, without any expressions of perpetuity (such as were contained in the Nawab's grants), and also granting such limited interest to Kullee Moolah Khan alone, as the mere object of the Appellants' favour, to the exclusion of the coheirs of Assim Khan; whereas, by the decrees of the Supreme Court, the coheirs were holden, according to the Mahomedan law, to be entitled to shares in the Jaghire, and the Appellants were actually deprived of the Sayer duties reserved to them by the regrant, and of the right of resumption of the Jaghire, either at pleasure or on the decease of Kullee Moolah Khan.

The Respondents contended, that the decree appealed from ought to be affirmed, for the following reasons:—

First,—Because the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras was a Court of competent jurisdiction to decide the matters in dispute [577] between all the parties to the cause touching their rights to the Jaghire in question.

Second,—Because the grant made by the Nawabs, Wallajah and Omdut ul Omrah, to Assim Khan, were satisfactorily proved by the evidence to be grants in Altumghah enam; and it was established that, according to the law and usage of the Carnatic, such grants conveyed to the grantee an indefeasible interest in perpetuity in the subject of the grant, and that upon his death, it became devisable amongst the members of his family, in the shares and proportions declared by the decree of the 22nd of May, 1820.

The appeal was argued by The Solicitor-General (Sir N. Tindal), Mr. Serjeant Bosanquet, and Mr. Serjeant Spankie, for the Appellants; and by Mr. Horne, K.C., Dr. Lushington, and Mr. H. Brougham, K.C., for the Respondents.

Upon the case being opened the Board directed the argument to be confined to the question of jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Madras to entertain the suit, independent of the merits.

It was argued upon this point that it was a question upon the construction of Treaties between two absolute Governments, and not of contract between subjects of two States, and that in such circumstances, a Municipal Court had no jurisdiction; it being a question of international law. That the assumption of the Government of the Carnatic in 1801, by the East India Company, was entirely a political measure, carried into effect by the Governor in Council at Madras, for enforcing Treaties made with the Nawabs of the Carnatic, as reigning Sovereigns, with the East India Company, in exercise of their powers or Government delegated to them by the Charters and Acts of Parliament referred to in the reasons of appeal, and that the act of resumption of the Jaghire by the East India Company was an act of Government not to be questioned in a Municipal Court. The cases of The Nabob of the Carnatic v. The East India Company (2 Ves. Jun. 56. S.C. 4 Bro. C.C. 180), Le Caur v. Eden (Doug. 594), and Lindo v. Rodney (Ib. 612, n.) were cited.

The judgment of the Board was delivered by

The Master of the Rolls (Sir John Leach).—Their Lordships are of opinion, that the Treaty in question did [578] vest the rights of Sovereignty in the East India Company, and that the East India Company, in the exercise of what they considered their right of Sovereignty, resumed the Jaghire in question, and granted it to Kullee Moolah Khan, not in the form of the original grant to his father, but in terms totally different, being for life only; and that they reserved to themselves the Sayer and other revenue duties. It is in effect the same thing, as an act of Sovereignty, as if it had been granted to a mere stranger, and no further confirmation of the title of Assim Khan than such a grant had been made. Their Lordships are of opinion, therefore, that the Supreme Court of Madras had no authority to question an act of Sovereignty exercised on the part of the East India Company, and they are confident that the motives as they appear upon the papers here were motives strictly just, and that the effect of the law as it prevailed under the Nawab of the Carnatic, could not be examined into by the Supreme Court: they must, therefore, reverse the judgment complained of (see the case of Sparrow v. Tanajee Rao Raja Sirke, 2 Borr. Bom. Cases, 458; and also Gleig's Life of Sir Thomas Monro, vol. ii. p. 314).

REPORTS OF CASES heard and determined
by the Judicial Committee and the Lords
of the Privy Council, on Appeal from the Supreme and the Sudder Dewanny Courts in the East Indies, 1859-61. By EDMUND
F. MOORE, Barrister-at-Law. Vol. VIII.

SUMBHOO LALL GIRDHURLALL,—Appellant: THE COLLECTOR OF SURAT
AND NUSSERWANJEE PESTONJEE,—Respondents * [July 13, 16, 19, and 20, 1859].

On appeal from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Bombay.

Tora gasas, an annual fixed money payment in the nature of black mail, is alienable, and subject to sale or mortgage like other property.

Under an execution sale in satisfaction of a decree, Tora gasas was sold. The purchaser paid the money into Court, which was paid out to the judgment creditor, and the purchaser had a conveyance of the Tora gasas executed by the Court. The Government in the first instance acquiesced in the sale, but afterwards refused to register the name of the purchaser in their books as alienee, on the ground that Tora gasas was, from its nature, and on public policy, inalienable; nevertheless they received and applied the accruing payments to their own use. In a suit brought by the purchaser against the Government and the judgment creditor, the Sudder Court in the first place held the sale illegal, on the ground of the inalienable character of Tora gasas; and secondly, acting upon the maxim, "caveat emptor," refused to order the judgment creditor to return the purchase-money. Upon appeal such decree reversed by the Judicial Committee by reason,—

First, that Tora gasas was alienable, and capable of being attached and sold in satisfaction of a decree [8 Moo. Ind. App. 40, 41]; and

Secondly, that the decree was erroneous, as it would be manifestly unjust to deprive the purchaser of the purchase-money in the event of the sale being treated as a nullity [8 Moo. Ind. App. 39].

Although the amount at issue was under Rs. 5000, the appealable value, a special appeal was admitted by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut from a decree of the Zillah Court. The sitting Judge upon the appeal, acting under the Act, No. III. of 1843, then in force, amended the certificate of the points at issue in the proceedings before the Zillah Judge by adding further points. Upon the proceedings coming before the full Court of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut that Court ordered the certificate to be further amended. After these proceedings had taken place, Act No. XVI. of 1853, was passed, whereby the Act, No. III. of 1813, relating to special appeals, was repealed. By section 3 of the Act No. XVI. of 1853, power was given to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to determine appeals without reference to the points certified. Held, that under that Act, the whole subject at issue at the last hearing upon appeal was open to the Sudder Court's consideration.

Decree appealed from reversed with all the costs the purchaser had been put to in the proceedings in India and upon appeal. The costs of the execution creditor ordered to be paid by the purchaser, and charged by him in his costs against the Government.

The purchaser was kept out of the annual payment for upwards of twenty years, the Government being in receipt of the Tora garas. Held further (in the absence of evidence that such annual payments had been paid into Court) that the purchaser was entitled to simple interest at the rate allowed by the Courts in India on the arrears due when the suit was brought, and on each subsequent payment when it accrued due [8 Moo. Ind. App. 42].

In this case the question at issue related to the claim of the Appellant to a certain interest in land in [2]Guzerat in Bombay, called Tora garas huk (a), which he had purchased at an execution sale by the Sheriff, [3] made under a decree of Court of Surat: or, in the alternative, if the sale could not be sustained, a further question arose, whether the purchase-money paid by him into Court ought not to be refunded.

The principal points raised in the Court below and at issue in the appeal were, first, whether a Tora garas huk (a species of hereditary local tenure in Bombay) was subject to attachment and sale by the Sheriff, like other species of property, in execution of a decree of a Civil Court; secondly, whether the Government Collector, who received from the villagers and paid to the proprietors of the Tora garas periodically the money in respect thereof, was justified in refusing to register the name of the Appellant as purchaser and transferee, and to pay him the money received: and, thirdly, whether in the event of the first question being decided in the negative, and the second in the affirmative, the Appellant as purchaser at the Sheriff's sale of the Tora garas huk, had any claim for reimbursement against the Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, the execution creditor, out of the nett proceeds of the sale paid to him by the Sheriff in satisfaction of the decree passed in his favour in a suit brought by him against the then Grassia.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

The Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, having in the year 1839, obtained a decree against one Bharmulsungjee Kooversungjee, in the Court of the [4] Principal Sudder Ameen of Surat, for the sum of Rs. 12,145, applied, pursuant to the provisions of Reg. IV. of 1827, ch. xiv. of the Bombay Code of Procedure, sec. lxiii., clauses 1, 2, for the attachment and sale of certain Tora garas, of the Pergunnah of Orpad, amounting to Rs. 347 13a., which belonged to Bharmulsungjee Kooversungjee. An application was afterwards made to the Court by Bharmulsungjee Kooversungjee

(a) In Guzerat, in the Presidency of Bombay, before that Province came, at the beginning of the present century, under the dominion of the British Government in India, predatory marauders were in the habit of plundering the villages; and, as the ruling power was not strong enough to afford protection against such attacks, the villagers entered into agreements with the robbers to pay them a species of black mail, as the price of their refraining from plunder, and also as the purchase of their assistance in case the villages were attacked by other depredators. These payments were called "Tora garas," and the recipients were styled Grassias. Garas is defined in Wilson's Glossary to be "a hereditary claim to a small portion (a mouthful) of the produce of a village or villages by various Rajpoot chiefs, granted them by the local Government in remuneration of military service, and commuted for a pecuniary payment out of the revenue paid by the villagers." A fixed payment made to military and predatory chiefs in Guzerat and Malwa, especially in lieu of lands held by them, or in purchase of their refraining from plunder.

to stay the sale for six months, to enable him to make an arrangement to discharge the decree, but the Court declined to make any order. The property was accordingly attached, and proclamation having been made, without any adverse claim having been preferred, the Tora garas was sold by auction to the Appellant, for the sum of Rs. 3,430, which amount he paid into Court. The Judge of the Court thereupon executed the usual instrument of sale, dated the 23rd of January, 1840, assigning the Tora garas to the Appellant, and the Nazir of the Court paid over the purchase-money to the Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, in accordance with the ordinary practice.

The Collector of Surat being in receipt of the revenue of the Pergannah of Orpad, out of which the Tora garas was payable, the Appellant to complete his purchase and enable him to receive the Tora garas, applied to him to order the Maulutdar to enter the Appellant's name as the owner of the Tora garas, and to pay the same to him yearly. Upon this, an order was issued by the Collector as requested; but the Maulutdar having made a report to the Collector that the Tora garas, ought not to have been taken from Bharnulsingjee, the Appellant's [5] name was not entered, as owner, nor was the Tora garas paid over to him, the amount being paid into the Government treasury.

The Appellant, on the 22nd of July, 1840, presented a petition to the Judge of the Zilla Court of Surat, for redress, upon which the Judge ordered a communication to be addressed to the Collector to enter the Appellant's name as the owner thereof, and to pay the same to him accordingly. The Collector, however, reported to the Revenue Commissioners that the Appellant's purchase-money should be refunded to him, with interest, out of the public treasury, and that the Tora garas should be appropriated to Government, or that the Appellant's name should be entered as the owner of it. The Appellant then applied to the Revenue Commissioners, when he was informed, in reply, that a reference had been made to the Government on the subject, and that an answer would be communicated on receipt of the final orders of Government. The Appellant having been at last informed by the Collector of Surat that his remedy was to file a suit to substantiate his claim, appealed to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Bombay for redress; but on the 28th of February, 1843, that Court likewise left it to the Appellant to file a suit on the civil side of the Court to establish his right.

Accordingly, on the 16th of October, 1843, the Appellant filed a plaint in the Zillah Court of Surat, against the Respondents, insisting that Tora garas had been repeatedly sold, and that the purchasers were in the enjoyment of the produce thereof, and praying that the Collector might be ordered to enter the Tora garas purchased by the Appellant, amounting to the yearly sum of Rs. 347 13a., in his [6] name, according to the Bill of sale, and to pay him the arrears accrued for the preceding four years, amounting to Rs. 1,391 4a., or that if it should appear to the Court, that the Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, caused the Tora garas to be improperly sold, then that he might be ordered to refund to the Appellant the sum of Rs. 4,821 4a., being the amount of the purchase-money and interest for four years.

The Collector of Surat by his answer alleged, that from the origin of Tora garas, the Grassias people used to levy certain Huks and necessities from the cultivators, in order that they should not oppress the villagers by plundering, etc.; and that it was the pleasure of the cultivators whether they paid the same or not; that they did not receive that Huk by means of an order on the part of Government, or by means of any sunnuds. That after the English Government took the country, an agreement was entered into that the Grassias were to receive the Huk from the Government treasury and not from the villagers, in order that the villagers should not suffer any oppression; and that the custom had hitherto been to pay the Huk to the Grassias alone. That the Government had not agreed to pay the Huk to any one else, for, by so doing, the agreement made by the Government would be broken; because, if the Grassias got nothing to eat, they would again begin to plunder; that the Government would then suffer loss, and the villagers would suffer oppression. That the Government had settled the personal property of the Grassias, and, if that property did not reach them, the claim of the Government to the same existed; that, even if Tora garas had been sold as alleged in the plaint, the right [7] of the Government was not done away with, because it was agreed to pay the Huk to the Grassias alone.

The Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, by his answer admitted the material facts stated in the plaint, and submitted that he was improperly made a party to the suit, and that it was contrary to the Regulations to sue him; for as the Appellant had admitted that the Tora gasas was regularly sold, he should have sued the Collector alone to recover the amount of it which had been paid into the Government treasury.

The Appellant replied to both answers, stating that if any objections to the sale had appeared to the Collector, he should have filed a suit as soon as the property was attached, and have caused the sale to be stayed according to the provisions of the Regulation; and that not having done so, the objection that the Tora gasas was not saleable ought not now to be entertained; and, in answer to the objection of the Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, stated that so long as the Appellant's name was not entered in the books of the Collector, the Appellant's claim against the Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, was valid, as he had caused the Tora gasas to be sold, and had received the purchase-money, and that when judicial sales were avoided, the Court always directed the purchase-money to be refunded to the purchaser, whereupon the decree, for the satisfaction of which the property was sold, remained in force.

Evidence was adduced on behalf of the Appellant, which established that judicial sales had been made of other Tora gasas in the Pergunnah of Orpad, one of which had been enforced in a suit in the civil Court of Surat, and that other sales had been recognised [8] and ordered by the Collector of Surat. The Court having, at the request of the Respondent, the Collector, transmitted interrogatories to the Collectors of the neighbouring Zillahs of Ahmedabad and Broach, to ascertain the nature of the gasas tenure in those Zillahs, the Collectors replied, that special arrangements had been entered into respecting gasas rights, under which they would not be saleable. It, however, appeared in evidence, from a certificate of Mr. Sutherland, a former Judge of the Court of Surat, dated the 20th of December, 1836, to the Assistant Judge of Broach, in reply to a reference which had been made respecting the nature of Tora gasas in the Zillah of Surat, that there were then very few instances of the attachment and sale of Tora gasas, but that there was no doubt that where such description of property was possessed, a party having a decree against the property might attach and sell in satisfaction thereof Tora gasas, in like manner as any other description of property, and that purchasers had been in enjoyment of the produce, receiving the same as it became due from Government; that Tora gasas, like every other description of gasas, was Wuttun, but was entirely unconnected with hereditary or any other office, and was a money payment of a fixed nature on a village.

The cause was heard on the 19th of September, 1845, when the acting Assistant Judge, Mr. A. B. Warden, by his decree, decided that a Garas Huk could not be enjoyed by any one but by the Grassia himself, for Garas were money payments made to Grassias to purchase the forbearance of plundering parties; therefore, if the Huks were sold and the money paid to the purchaser, then the Government had no hold [9] whatever on the Grassias, in case of their again resorting to acts of violence, and that the Court was not, therefore, justified in ordering the Respondent, the Collector, to enter the name of the Appellant in the Government books, or in causing him to pay the amount claimed by the Appellant; and with regard to the Appellant's claim on the Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, the acting Assistant Judge held that the Respondent could not be made responsible, as the Appellant, previous to purchasing the Huk, ought to have made particular inquiries as to whether it was saleable or not.

From this decision the Appellant appealed, and Mr. R. Keays, the acting Judge of the Court of Surat, concurring in the views of Mr. Warden, the Assistant Judge, on the 4th of April, 1846, confirmed that decree.

The matter in dispute being under Rs. 5000, the Appellant on the 15th of June, 1846, presented a petition of special appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut against the decree of the Zillah Court, alleging that he was entitled to redress under secs. 26 and 30 of Bom. Reg. IV., of 1827. The petition came on to be heard on the 8th of December, 1847, before Mr. Simson, the sitting Judge, who granted, under the Act, No. III. of 1843, a certificate of admission of a special appeal, and recorded the following judgment:—"This is a very peculiar case: the Appellant, Sumbhoolall, applies for one of two modes of redress, either that the Collector be ordered to instal him in certain Tora garas huks, with arrears for four years, now in the Treasury, or that Nusserwanjee Pestonjee be made to refund the money paid at auction for the Huks, sold by order of the Adawlut, with interest for [10] the use of the money since the sale. The arguments stated in the decrees of the lower Courts against the transfer of such Huks to ordinary individuals seem to the sitting Judge to be conclusive; such Huks cannot be diverted from the purpose of their original institution, namely, remuneration for the maintenance of the public peace of the District; but it seems irreconcilable with equity that Sumbhoolall should be made to lose both the Huks and the money also, paid for them at public auction, held by direction of the Adawlut, and with the sanction of the officer of Government. Either the Huks should be transferred or the money paid for them refunded; but the former course is not practicable. The sitting Judge does not think the maxim 'caveat emptor' is fairly applied here by the lower Courts. A sale or deed by a Court of Justice, and allowed by the revenue authorities, must be presumed by a purchaser to be proper and legal, and the purchaser must not suffer through the error of the Court in directing the sale, in satisfaction of a decree, of Tora garas huks, which, from their very nature, are not saleable; and on the ground that the Order for the sale was a departure from practice."

On the 24th August, 1849, the special appeal was brought on for hearing before Mr. Le Geyt, the then sitting Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, when he made the following Order:—"The point to be tried in this case is not very clearly certified in the proceeding of the sitting Judge, Mr. Simson; and the Court, under the provisions of sect. 8 of the Act, No. III. of 1843, accordingly amend it as follows:—Whether Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, in procuring the sale of certain Tora garas huks, in satisfaction of a decree held by him against the owner of such [11] Huks, and which have been declared to be inalienable and unsaleable, is not liable to the purchaser in the amount of the purchase-money paid by him on the faith of an auction sale by the judicial authorities of the Zillah."

The case was again brought on for hearing before the full Court on the 6th of September, 1849, when the Court, consisting of Mr. John Warden, Mr. Le Geyt, and Mr. Grant, ordered the certificate to be further amended, as follows:—"To determine first, whether Tora garas huks are saleable by the Courts of Adawlut, and if so, to what extent; second, whether the Collector was justified in this case in refusing to register the transfer and act upon the sale; third, whether, in the event of the first question being decided wholly or partially in the negative, and the second wholly or partially in the affirmative, the purchaser has any, and what, claim against the execution creditor, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee."

The Court having remitted the case to be heard before a single Judge, it came on again to be heard before Mr. Le Geyt, but that Judge not being prepared to confirm the decision of the Zillah Court, referred the case back to the full Court, which Court, on the 19th of December, 1849, having heard the appeal, the Judges recorded their opinions separately; that of Mr. Bell was as follows:—"The points on which we are required to decide are, first, whether Tora garas huks are saleable by the Courts of Adawlut, and if so, to what extent; second, whether the Collector was justified in this case in refusing to register the transfer and act upon the sale; third, whether, in the event of the first question being decided wholly or partially in the negative, [12] and the second wholly or partially in the affirmative, the purchaser has any, and what, claim against the execution creditor, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee. I would answer the first query wholly in the negative, and the two last in the affirmative. I concur with the Zillah Judge, that Tora garas is a Chakreat huk, having been originally given as black mail to the Grassias, to abstain from pillaged and other acts of violence to the Ryots, and receiving such Huks as Wuttun. I am of opinion they can only be alienated to the extent of the life interest of the party in possession of the same, in accordance with the spirit of the Court's interpretation, dated the 23rd of February, 1831, on sec. 20, of Reg. XVI. of 1827, but which are not saleable; and, under the above view, I hold that the Collector was fully justified in refusing to register the transfer; and, as the other Respondent, Nusser-wanjee Pestonjee, was the means of the illegal sale taking place, he must be held responsible for the claim preferred by the Appellant, namely, the purchase-money, together with interest thereon at 9 per cent., and the whole of the costs incurred in all the Courts, with the exception of the Collector's, who, having made no objection within the term of the proclamation, should bear his own costs. Having given my opinion on the amended certificate, for I find the certificate has been amended, both before the single Judge and also the full Court, I beg to record my dissent against the procedure adopted, the same being opposed to sec. 8 of Act, No. III. of 1843, which declares, that in amending a certificate it is not lawful for the Court to receive or add any new point or points. This has, however, been done in the present instance. As the admitting authority, Mr. [13] Simson entertained no doubt in regard to the Huks in question being not saleable: this point, consequently, should not have been entered in the extract."

Mr. Warden's opinion was as follows:—"I concur in the view taken in this case by Mr. Le Geyt. When the British Government succeeded to this country, the local officers addressed themselves to the task of obtaining information on the distinctive character of each of the tenures of the country. In this way we have reached definitions of 'Ehant,' 'Surinjam,' 'Meeras,' etc., in the Deccan, which are generally acknowledged to be correct; and in like manner it may be presumed that the nature of the Tora garas possession was made the subject of inquiry before it was included in the 'List of tenures' which the law recognized, and particularly specified as tenures recognized by the custom of the country; and so far from its having been shown that there is any peculiarity in this tenure, divesting it of the usual incidents of property, the weight of evidence on the record, supported by the published opinions of such men as Mr. Elphinstone and Sir John Malcolm, is, as it appears to me, against the decisions of the lower Courts, that this tenure is not saleable. I am of opinion, therefore, that the decree of the lower Court should be set aside."

Mr. Le Geyt also recorded his opinion in these terms:—"In respect to the first point, whether Tora garas are saleable or not, I am of opinion, that there is no evidence on the record to show that the Tora garas property, the subject-matter of this suit, is held on any tenure which takes it out of the nature of private property. There is evidence to show that such property has been sold. Unless it can be clearly shown that property is held on a tenure in which [14] the alienation by the holder is guarded against by a special provision, I think no Court of Justice can declare such property not alienable for the purpose of paying the debts of the holder, on the principle that as the possession gave him a credit, so it would be manifestly unjust, without sufficient cause and undoubted authority, to declare it not so available. The authorities cited, in support of the property being in the nature of private and prohibited property, are opinions of Mr. Elphinstone, 'Parliamentary Papers Review,' 1832, pp. 605, 625 and 627; Sir John Malcolm's 'Central India,' vol. 1, pp. 508 and 509, and Mr. Sutherland (vide Letter recorded, Nos. 89, 65), which must be regarded with the utmost respect. The Collector has cited neither a decision of Court, nor any authority of more than ordinary weight, than the official opinions of the neighbouring Collectors in support of his position. Therefore, I consider, that in this case it has not been proved that the Tora garas of Bharmulsungjee is exempt from the process of attachment to which all personal and real property, is liable. I, therefore, do not consider the Collector justified in refusing to register the transfer, which he should be directed to do; nor do I consider that any claim can be sustained against Nusserwanjee Pestonjee. All costs are to be borne by the Respondent, the Collector of Surat."

In accordance with the opinion of the majority of the Judges, a decree was made reversing the decisions of the Zillah Court, with costs in all the Courts, which were directed to be borne by the Respondent, the Collector of Surat.

On the 17th of October, 1851, the Judges of the Sudder Court having been changed, the Collector of Surat presented a petition of review to [15] the Sudder Adawlut, when a review was granted, without any reasons for so doing being recorded by the Court.

After some further proceedings, the Sudder Court, on the 20th of April, 1853, recorded the following resolution:—"The point referred to the full Court, on the 24th of August, 1849, was, whether the rule 'caveat emptor' was to be applied in all strictness to Sumbhoolall's purchase. The full Court were of opinion that they could not decide that point until it was decided whether Tora garas was alienable or not; and they, therefore, amended the certificate, and added that question as another point for decision. This they had no power to do, under sec. 8 of Act, No. III. of 1843. Moreover, the very essence of the point referred showed that it had already been decided by competent authority, that Tora garas was inalienable. The decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, of the 19th of December, 1849, is therefore, annulled, and the case is returned to a full Court, to determine the point referred to them by Mr. Le Geyt, on the 24th of August, 1849. All costs incurred by the Collector of Surat are to be borne by the original Appellant, Sumbhoolall Girdhurlall. The remainder of the costs are to be awarded on final decision."

The appeal was reheard on the 16th of February, 1857, when the Sudder Court, consisting of Mr. W. E. Frere, Mr. J. D. Inverarity, and Mr. H. Hebbert, recorded the following resolution:—"The Court is of opinion, and decide that Tora garas is not alienable, and that, therefore, Sumbhoolall took nothing by his purchase, and that his claim against the Collector must be thrown out. That Nusserwanjee Pestonjee guaranteed nothing, and, therefore, Sumbhoolall cannot come upon [16] him to be reimbursed the amount of his purchase-money, and that his claim against Nusserwanjee Pestonjee must also be rejected. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed, with all costs on Appellant."

(Nov. 26, 1857.*) The value of the subject matter in dispute being under Rs. 10,000, the prescribed appealable value, a petition was presented to Her Majesty in Council by the Appellant for special leave to appeal. The Appellant submitted, that the proceedings and decisions of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, on the 20th of April, 1853, and the 16th of February, 1857, were contrary to law, as the certificate admitting the appeal in the first instance did not embrace the question, whether the Tora garas was saleable, and that the amendment made in the first instance in the certificate admitting the appeal was erroneous; that the amendment subsequently made was not only correct, but was necessary to raise the only points involved in the appeal; that the Sudder Adawlut, in ultimately deciding, in 1857, not on the question stated in the certificate as originally granted, but on that stated in the first amended certificate, recognised the right of the Judge to amend his certificate admitting a special appeal, and that, therefore, the mere fact of a second amendment being made, afforded no ground for reversing the judgment of the full Court after such amendment; and the Appellant submitted, that it was competent to the Sudder Court to decide upon any question of law necessarily involved in the appeal; [17] but that, if it were not competent to the Sudder Court to decide on hearing the cause on the 19th of December, 1847, that Tora garas was alienable, neither was it competent to the Sudder Court to decide on the hearing of the cause on the 10th of February, 1857, that the Tora garas was not alienable, and that the Appellant took nothing by his purchase. And it was further submitted, that the last-mentioned decision was contrary to the evidence, and the law and usage respecting Tora garas tenure.

Mr. Ayrton, in support of the petition.—Although the subject-matter in dispute, the Tora garas huk, is under Rs. 10,000, the sum limited by the Order in Council of the 10th of April, 1838, yet the suit raises a question of great public importance in Bombay, respecting the right of alienation of Tora garas, which entitles the Petitioner to indulgence. Spooner v. Juddoo (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 353). Another suit is also pending respecting the purchase of the other Huk, which will be governed by this appeal.

Mr. Wigram, Q.C., and Mr. W. H. Melvill, for the Respondent, the Collector of Surat, resisted the application.

No question of a public character arises, special leave, therefore, ought not to be granted. Upon this principle the Court acted in the cases of Re Harvey (3 Moore's P.C. Cases, 148) and Re Sherwin (4 Moore's P.C. Cases, 311).

The application was granted upon the terms embodied in the following report of their Lordships. That leave be granted to the Appellant to enter and [18] prosecute his appeal against the Order of the Assistant Judge of the Zillah Court of Surat, dated the 17th of September, 1845, and against the Order of the Zillah Judge of the Court of Surat, of the 8th of April, 1846, and against the Orders and certificates of the Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of Bombay, of the 8th of December, 1847, and of the 24th of August, 1849; and against the Orders of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, made on the 20th of April, 1853, and on the 16th of February, 1857, upon depositing, within four months from the date of the report, in the Registry of the Privy Council, the sum of £500, sterling, to meet the costs of the Respondents in the appeal, and to abide Her Majesty's decision in the cause; and the Appellant was directed to serve notice of the appeal on the Collector of Surat, and on Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, the Respondents; but their Lordships were of opinion, that the leave to appeal granted to the Appellant by Her Majesty on the above terms, was to be without prejudice to any question, whether the Orders and the certificates of the 17th of September, 1845, and the 8th of April, 1846, and the 8th of December, 1847, and the 24th of August, 1849, or any of them, were to be deemed and taken as final.

The above conditions having been complied with, the appeal now came on for hearing.

Mr. R. Palmer, Q.C., and Mr. Ayrton, for the Appellant.—It is impossible to maintain the decree of the Sudder Court as it now stands, as it would be contrary to the fundamental principles of justice to hold, that if Tora gasas is a tenure of such a nature as not to be saleable, the Appellant is to be deprived of [19] his purchase by treating the sale as a nullity, yet that he is not to be reimbursed the amount of his purchase-money, with interest, by the Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee. We submit, that the decree of the Court ought to have directed the Collector of Surat to enter the name of the Appellant as the owner of the Tora gasas huk in question, and to pay him the arrears: or, in the alternative, if the Court was of opinion that the Tora gasas huk was inalienable, then that the Respondent, Nusserwanjee Pestonjee, ought to have been decreed to refund the purchase-money with interest. In the first place, we contend, that a Tora gasas huk is alienable like other emoluments issuing out of land, Act, No. IV., of 1837, and, therefore, liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree. Reg. V. of 1827, sec. 1, Bombay Code of Procedure, ch. I. Tora gasas is a species of quit-rent or annual payment made to Grassias. The nature of this tenure was fully investigated in the case of The Collector of Surat v. Pestonjee Ruttonjee (2 Morris's Bom. Sud. Dew. Reps. 291), where Mr. W. E. Frere, the then Zillah Judge of Surat, in his judgment, expresses his clear opinion, that Tora gasas is not a service huk, but was alienable and could be sold, and that so long as Government collected the gasas from a village it was obligatory on Government to pay it to the alienee (ib. 305).

Secondly, we submit, that the Appellant's special appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Bombay was admissible under the Bombay Code, irrespective of the Act, No. III. of 1843. Even if it be determined that the provisions of the Code in that respect were repealed by the Act, No. III. of 1843, still it was competent to the Court, under the Act, No. XVI. of 1853, after having admitted the special appeal, to amend the [20] certificate of the Judge, so as to raise the real points involved in the appeal. But further, we contend that, in no circumstances, can the legislative Acts of the Government of India limit or restrain the power of the Queen in Council specially to admit an appeal from a decree and proceedings of the Sudder Dewanny, or Zillah Courts. Statutes, 3rd and 4th Will. IV., c. 41, 7th and 8th Vict., c. 69, sec. 1. Spooner v. Juddoo (4 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 353), as the Acts, No. III., of 1843 and No. XVI. of 1853 are only binding on the Courts in India. In the present instance leave has been specially granted.

Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and Mr. W. H. Melvill, for the Respondent, the Collector of Surat.—As the Tora gasas huk purchased by the Appellant is not, as we contend, alienable, no obligation existed on the Collector to enter the purchaser's name as owner in the Government books, or to pay him the rent in question. This is apparent from the very nature of the tenure, Tora gasas being in its origin a kind of black mail, or forced contribution, to induce the Grassias to abstain from plundering the Ryots. It is very similar in its character to what formerly existed in Scotland. Bell's Dict. of the Law of Scotland, tit. "Black Mail," and authorities there collected. Report of General Wade. Misc. of the Spalding Club, p. 37. The origin of Tora garas and its illegal nature is explained in the minute of Mr. Elphinstone, dated the 15th of August, 1821 (Par. Papers, 1832, E. I. Co.'s affairs rev. Vol. 2, pp. 605, 625, 7); and also by Sir John Malcolm, in his work on Central India, vol. 1, pp. 508-9. Wilson's Glossary, voce "Grassa," and the case of The Collector of Surat v. Pestonjee Rutoonjee (2 Morris' Bom. Sud. Dew. Reps. pp. 291, 319, 334, 5), where, [21] as in this case, the Sudder Court at Bombay held Tora garas to be inalienable, on the ground that there is an implied condition of the tenure that services should be rendered, if required, as well also as to abstain from plundering. It is admitted to be hereditary. Now, considering the nature of the tenure and its origin, it would be manifestly contrary to public policy to permit such a tax as constitutes Tora garas to be sold in satisfaction of a judgment debt, or even to be alienated. Lord Kingsdown: In the case of Raja Lalanund Sing v. The Government of Bengal (6 Moore's Ind. App. Cases, 101), a Gwatwally tenure, or guarding the Ghats or passes, was upheld.—Yes; but that case essentially differed from the present. No question there arose, as in this case, as to alienation. It was confined to a question of the right of descent to a male heir, as Gwatwal. But the sale must be treated as being founded upon an illegal consideration, and would, therefore, on that ground be void, ab initio, at common law. Collins v. Blantern (2 Wils. 341; and see 1 Smith's Leading Cases 154 (2nd Edit.) So by the Civil law. Just. Inst. lib. iii. tit. 20, sec. 23, "De turpi causa." Again, as the tenure involved military and public services to be performed, and the holder could be called upon to perform them, a Tora garas huk was clearly not assignable. It is similar to the retiring pension of a military officer, or compensation granted to a public civil officer. Wells v. Foster (8 Mee. and Wels. 149), Gibson v. The East India Company (5 Bingham N.C. 262; S.C. 7 Scott, 74), Lidderdale v. Duke of Montrose (4 Term. Rep. 248).
